The president is having a sort of triumphal procession through the south. Wherever he has gone he has been greeted by multitudes of enthusiasic people. The civil authorities in the various cities and states he has visited have extended to him a genuinely cordial welcome. He has discussed great national issues in the various cities with a frankness and fearlessness characteristic of the man. No incident of his tour has touched the public heart more than his visit to the old home of his grandparents, on his mother's ide, in Roswell, Ga. His speech on that occasion was a model of good taste and howed a deep and genuine love for the outhern people. His claim of a share in he honor of such men as General Lee and Stonewall Jackson was Websterian in the breadth of its patriotic sentiment and can not fail to bind in closer bonds of unity the wo sections of our common country. This, ndeed, is the great end accomplished by hese presidential tours, serving, as they do, o cement the bonds of unity between the different sections of the nation. No previous president of the United States, perhaps, has visited so many of the states of he union as President Roosevelt, and cerainly no one has received a more cordial and enthusiastic welcome from all classes of people, regardless of party, sect, or naionality.

Railroad Rate Regulation.

Those who had come to the conclusion hat the President had retreated from his former utterances concerning the necessity of railroad rate regulation have found out by his recent address at Raleigh, N. C., that they were mistaken. He reiterates his views on that subject with ncreased emphasis, and he defines a little more definitely, perhaps, his idea of how hat regulation is to be effected. "What we need," he says, "is to have some adminstrative body with ample power to forbid combination that is hurtful to the public, and to prevent favoritism to one individual at the expense of another. We want an administrative body with power to secure fair and just treatment among all shippers who use the railroads—and all shippers have he right to use them." He further pointed out the impossibility of the department of justice doing this administrative work, but says this department must stand behind he administrative body to pass on the legalty of its proceedings when they are called n question. The President does not favor any war upon the railroads, but he does believe in such legislation as will compel hem to give a "square deal" to small shippers and large shippers alike. It is difficult to see why the railroads themselves can object to a law of this kind, which simply means justice to all parties concerned.

Official Crookedness.

The recent shortage in the accounts of the cashier of the St. Louis post office, the failure of a bank in Allegheny through the loaning of funds, as it would seem, to Republican officials in Pennsylvania, in addition to all the previous revelations that have been made by the investigations now in progress, show that there is a vast amount of official crookedness which needs straightening out in this country. It is reassuring, in view of these facts, to quote here the latest words of the president on this subject, uttered in his speech at Mobile, Ala. Responding to the addresses of welcome which had been made, the president said: "Now, of all things said about me today in the more than kind, in the over-kind, allusion to me, perhaps, I am especially pleased by what Colonel Russell said as to my attitude toward crooked public officials. I will take advice about appointing men; if I find they are crooked, I do not take any advice at all about removing them. We have Scriptural authority for saying that offenses must come, and the good book says woe to them through whom they come. I can not guarantee, and no human being can, that there will not be an occasional man of an improper kind appointed, or an occasion well-meaning man, who, after being appointed, goes wrong. But I can say that every effort within the power of the government will be made to hunt such a man out of the public service and to punish him to the fullest extent of the law."

Governor Folk in the East.

It is not often that one of our eastern cities sends to Missouri for a speaker to help them in a campaign for civic righteousness. The city of Philadelphia, however, or that part of the city represented by the reform party, extended to Governor Folk, of Missouri, an invitation to visit that city and address the people on the subject of municipal reform. Governor Folk received an ovation from the people of Philadelphia, who have just been undergoing one of the most remarkable political revolutions in the history of this country. He spoke twice while there, and his addresses were received with enthusiasm by the people of that city. Governor Folk has justly earned the reputation of being a champion of civic righteousness and Missourians are glad to know that he is recognized as such by the people of the entire country, regardless of party. His enforcement of law in the cities of Missouri has made him some enemies among that element of the population which places its business interests above law enforcement, but the great mass of the people are with him in his efforts to enforce law and to punish all classes of law breakers.

A Civil Service Order.

President Roosevelt has issued an order which has the appearance, superficially, of opening the way to abuses in the service. It is an order permitting, in some cases, the removal of employes in the classified service without specified and proved charges against them. The order reads: "When the president or head of an executive department is satisfied that an officer or employe in the classified service is inefficient or incapable, and that the public service will be materially improved by his removal, such removal will be made without a hearing; but the cause for removal shall be stated in writing and filed. When misconduct is committed in the view and presence of the president or head of an executive department, removal may be made summarily and without notice." Experience has constantly demonstrated the wisdom of the "merit system" and of the policy of removing positions in the civil service from the realm of arbitrary appointment. But it can not be claimed that the whole problem is solved by making appointments depend solely upon examination and removals upon proved charges. One defect which has often been pointed out is that there is no provision for retiring incumbents whose advancing age brings diminishing efficiency. Another is that many careless and incompetent employes are sheltered under the provision that dismissal must be based on charges formally preferred and proved, just as many known criminals are sheltered under the provision that no man may be punished, though his crime may be a matter of common knowledge, until his guilt shall be technically and formally proved. In the latter case, the difficulty is inevitable, for every man has a right to be treated as innocent until proved guilty. But the enjoyment of public office is not a "natural right" of man. It may be better for a hundred guilty men to escape than for one innocent man to be punished, as the common saying has it; but it is not better for the public service to be sacrificed by the retention of a hundred incompetents than for one good man to lose his place. Under any system there is always a chance that good men will be undeservedly removed. The president's new order will undoubtedly increase this chance. But much more will it decrease the chance that incompetent men will escape removal. We ought to be able to assume that the president and the heads of executive departments will not, under cover of this order, be influenced by political or personal motives in making removals. The temptation in that direction will be minimized if it is required that the new appointee must in every case be the highest name on the eligible list.

Peaceable Dissolution.

The complete separation between Sweden and Norway by treaty is one of the most notable modern triumphs of arbitration. In spite of much hot feeling on both sides and many threats of violence, when the time for action came both parties to the dispute carried themselves with most admirable moderation and restraint. The terms of the treaty of dissolution, which were lately made public, contain specifications as to the destruction of some of the fortifications on the boundary and the limitation of the garrisons at others, the treatment of the nomadic Lapps and other items which were anticipated. But the notable thing is the provision that any future dispute, arising from interpretation of the treaty or otherwise, which does not involve the honor, integrity or vital interests of either nation, shall be referred to the Hague arbitration tribunal for settlement. Not only so, but the two governments agree to let the Hague tribunal decide whether any given controversy does involve the honor or vital interests of either country. In other words, under the new treaty war between Norway and Sweden is impossible unless there arises some dispute involving matters so vitally related to the honor of one country or the other that the arbitration tribunal itself declares it to be at present not a suitable subject for arbitration. The world is greatly indebted to these two nations of the north for this conspicuous exhibition of the truly modern and Christian way of dealing with a difficult international problem. The indebtedness will extend still farther if Norway will seize this opportunity to establish a republic. These modern Norsemen are of one blood with those branches of the Anglo-Saxon race who led the world in working out the problems of popular self-government. The cause of liberty in Great Britain and American has had for its foundation, in large part, the spirit of the old Norsemen. There is every reason to believe that Norway is proper ground for the establishment of a republic. Of course it is not likely that this step will be taken. The conservative influences of the other European governments will be too strong. But it will be a great opportunity lost.

The Boys and the Farm.

It is a matter of common observation and frequent lament that the sons of farmers do not stick to the farm. Perhaps it is more in keeping with our American social ideals that the son should not be held too closely to the father's footsteps, but, with the world before him, should be allowed to choose the work which he finds most congenial. But, however that may be, there is no doubt but that a great many of the country boys who go to the city would be better off if they stayed on the farm. Mr. L. H. Bailey, who, as professor of agriculture in Cornell, editor of "Country Life in America" and author of several books on farming, may be expected to know something about the matter, places the blame less on the boy than on the farmer. The farmer's boy, he says in substance, takes advantage of the schools, perhaps of the college, and becomes an educated young man imbued with the spirit of progress. He has no special objection to farming as an occupation, but he does not relish the sort of farming which means mere routine and intellectual stagnation. "It has never occurred to father and mother, remaining at home with the daily round," says Professor Bailey, "that John would have a new outlook when he came home. He had been remaking, with a larger horizon, quickened ambition, higher ideals. The old place may not be of a kind to satisfy him. He has outgrown it. The buildings are shabby; the grounds are bare; the fences are down; the yards are foul with weeds and litter; the cattle stand in the mud; the land is hard run; the roads are poor; the inside of the house is austere and comfortless. If the young man has a somewhat free hand to correct and renovate, he may be content to remain and work out the problem. But often the parents resent innovations and frequently the case is hopeless." Of course, this unflattering description can not be taken as a picture of the average farm, nor this accusation of unprogressiveness brought against the better class of farmers. In general, as we all know, they are quick to accept improvements and they know how to conduct their business profitably and properly quite as well as the average city man knows how to conduct his. Nevertheless, we give Professor Bailey's comment for what it may be worth.

Work More; Eat Less.

Mr. Thomas A. Edison, whose example as an enthusiastic hard worker has been only less valuable than his contributions to applied science, has made a statement telling us how to be healthy and happl and wise. We should eat less, sleep less and work more. He says: "Men eat and sleep themselves stupid. Sometimes they eat and sleep themselves into the grave. They talk about working too hard. That is absolute nonsense. Generally speaking, a man can not work too hard. Work does him good." Mr. Edison says that in his own practice he has found that twelve ounces of food a day is sufficient and keeps him in better physical condition than a larger quantity. Of course, Mr. Edison is an exceptional man. No man can invent phonographs, incandescent lights and all the other things he has invented, and then set himself up as an average man. Perhaps it is part of Mr. Edison's exceptional endowment to be able to get along with less food and sleep and more work than other people. Or, again, perhaps it is his exceptional sagacity which has led him to discover that any one may do the same. At any rate, we are convinced that the talk about overwork is, for the most part, one of the great American humbugs. We dissipate our energies, foolishly and immorally, and excuse ourselves by talking about "overwork" and the "tremendous pace of our American commercial and industrial life."

A Preacher-Playwright.

Thomas Dixon, preacher, lecturer, novelist and playwright, is reported by the daily press to have had a narrow escape in a southern city recently. His play, "The Clansman," which is a dramatization of his novel of the same name, had been performed at Columbia, S. C., and after the play a mob tried to get at him to express graphically its disapproval of the piece. We are glad that Mr. Dixon escaped violence. We are not even sure that his peril has not been a good deal exaggerated in the dispatches. But if the published story is not true, it ought to be. The book is vulgar, gross, unhistorical and generally unjustifiable. As a play, it would certainly be worse. The purpose of it (aside from the great purpose of making money for the author) is to defend the southern people, who do not need defense, and to arraign the process of reconstruction, which scarcely needs arraignment. It is a pleasure to see that the southern people are disgusted with Mr. Dixon's kind of defense.

Journalism and Reform.

One can scarcely overlook the intimate relation between journalism and the wave of reform—or at least of publicity and the demand for reform—which is sweeping the country. Some of the publications have rendered a great service to the cause of reform, and it is not to be denied that the cause of reform has simultaneously rendered a great service to the periodicals. A series of good, exciting reform articles, revealing the iniquity of sundry persons and institutions which had hitherto been deemed respectable, is a great help to the subscription department, and that, in turn, helps the advertising department. We mean to cast no cynical doubt upon the earnest purpose of the several editors. But the other aspect of the matter, while of course entirely incidental, is quite real. "The Critic" for October has the following happy verses under the sad title, "The Editor's Lament":

Alone, alone, all, all alone,
  Alone on a pitchy sea,
'Mid scuttled graft and sinking craft,
  But not a raft for me.

No new trust looms for me to hit
  That has not been exposed;
No state corruption hides unwrit,
  No grafter undisclosed.

Tom Lawson's drum to kingdom come
  Has smashed the great oil can.
Russell lays bare the beef roast rare
  And carves the butcher man.

The Baptist John is Tarbell's right
  (Herself monopolist!),
And every naughty town in sight
  To Steffens' mill is grist.

Now "Collier's" Hapgood draws his pen;
  With style aflame and pure
He cries the ill of dopes that kill
  And advertise to cure.

And I, a sore competitor,
  Am driven to the wall.
I can not find a sin to score—
  Our rivals have them all.

I pray tomorrow's sun may see
  A brand-new scandal burst,
That for reform my pen may warm
  And stab the monster first—

That our subscription may ascend
  A million every day.
I long my country's wrongs to mend
  And make my paper pay.

Centennial Aims and Plans.

Some time before our national convention in Minneapolis, in 1901, we called attention in The Christian-Evangelist to the approaching centennial of the inauguration of our religious movement and suggested the propriety and value of a suitable celebration of that event. The matter was taken up by our enterprising corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, Benj. L. Smith, and incorporated as a recommendation in the annual report of the board to that convention. The report was unanimously adopted and a committee, for which it provided, was appointed to consider and report to the next annual convention, to be held at Omaha, as to the advisability of such celebration and the form it should take.

The committee made its report to the convention at Omaha in 1902; it was unanimously adopted, and the committee was made a standing committee, with instructions to report annually to the conventions the progress of plans proposed to suitably commemorate the completion of a century of history. This report was printed in tract form by the American Christian Missionary Society, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and copies of the same can no doubt be secured on application to either one of these boards. Attention is hereby called to the special features of the proposed celebration as embodied in that report, viz.: To increase the endowments and equipments of our institutions of learning; to make an effort to raise our missionary offerings—home and foreign—to one million dollars annually by 1909, and to swell the combined contributions for religious, benevolent and educational purposes, local and general, to ten million dollars by that time; that our benevolent work should be widened in the range of its beneficent activities, and deepened in the hearts of the brotherhood; that churches contemplating building new houses of worship should secure special centennial offerings to this end, enabling them to erect buildings which shall be worthy monuments of the event which they commemorate, and that church debts, as far as possible, be liquidated; that we inaugurate and carry forward a deeper and wider evangelism, both for the conversion of sinners and the deepening of the spiritual life of our churches; that our religious journals be more largely patronized in order that the brotherhood may thus be brought in closer touch with all our advance movements; that at the national convention next preceding that of the centennial year a committee of representative brethren be appointed to prepare and publish in connection with the proceedings of our centennial convention a memorial to the Christian world, urging the importance of Christian unity in order to the world's evangelization and the extirpation of those evils which curse our Christian civilization; and, finally, recommending that our ministers and public teachers and our religious papers call our people to a truer exemplification of our high claims as restorers of a purer Christianity.

During the three years past the committee has been able to report substantial and encouraging progress along all these lines. Our colleges have received, in the way of increased endowment and for buildings since then, about $900,000; our missionary offerings—foreign, home and state—have increased from $624,753 in 1902, to $875,527 in 1905, making a gain of $250,774. We believe it safe to say that the circulation of our religious journals has increased on an average of not less than 35 per cent. Many splendid church buildings have been erected and an indebtedness of hundreds of thousands of dollars on church property has been paid. The evangelistic zeal among us has been intensified, a bureau of evangelism organized, and large numbers of souls have been brought into the kingdom of God, and last, but not least, we believe there has been a corresponding deepening of the spiritual life of our members.

In the committee's report at San Francisco it was recommended that a local committee of seven members be appointed in and around Pittsburg to co-operate with the centennial committee in carrying out its plans. It was also recommended that an agent be put into the field to devote his whole time for the next four years to the work of stimulating liberality among the churches for all our general enterprises and to secure bequests and special donations for the benefit of the same. It was recommended, further, that the business men of our churches, through our Business Men's Association, provide the funds for this centennial propaganda. Since the San Francisco convention these two committees have been in correspondence and are planning for a joint meeting at Pittsburg at an early day. The executive committee of the Business Men's Association has been in consultation, and plans are being matured for an aggressive forward movement, which will be published to the brotherhood very soon. The centennial committee is looking to the business men of the brotherhood—the men of affairs and public spirit, who love our cause and believe that we have a great mission in the world—to stand behind this centennial movement in a solid phalanx and see that it is carried forward to a triumphant conclusion. The ministers will, of course, co-operate in every possible way in carrying out these centennial plans and aims, but without the hearty co-operation of the business men of our churches we shall certainly fail of any worthy achievement to mark the completion of a century of wonderful history.

We have but four years more in which to carry out our plans and realize our aims. These years should be crowded with earnest activity, sanctified and guided by earnest prayer and made strenuous with wise planning and heroic efforts to achieve results worthy of the cause we plead and worthy of him whom we call our Lord and Master. The ministers in all our churches should lay this great enterprise before their members and seek to enlist them in all possible ways in making a memorable celebration of the historic event which it is designed to commemorate. In a short time the committee will make a more definite announcement of plans, and then action, prompt and vigorous, will be in order.

Harnack on Baptism.

Historical criticism is doing much for a better understanding of the Bible. It did not require the aid of the modern historian to make three facts perfectly plain with respect to baptism. First, that baptism in the primitive Church was an immersion; second, that it was administered to penitent believers only; third, that it was everywhere recognized for the remission of past sins. Nevertheless, such testimony as Professor Harnack gives in his "Expansion of Christianity" shows conclusively that the candid modern historian is compelled to agree with ancient ecclesiastical writers. Professor Harnack does not hesitate to declare that the universal practice of the ancient Church was immersion, and that infant baptism came out of a misconception of what baptism is for, on account of its association with remission of sins. He declares that Paul, "like his fellows, recognized it to be simply indispensable," and that in the primitive days of the Church "baptism was essentially the act by which past sins were entirely canceled."

Now this design of baptism was perverted to an improper use by associating baptism with mystery. This was easily done. It was only a step back to the paganism of the patristic Church period. This paganism had its government and life in mysteries, and it was precisely at this point where infant baptism originated and found its main support. Baptismal regeneration in the mysterious sense furnished the starting point for infant baptism, and is undoubtedly fundamental as regards that practice. This much Professor Harnack distinctly and emphatically affirms; and in so doing he only reaffirms what Neander and other church historians have declared in equally emphatic language. But it is well to have such a scholar as Harnack go over the whole ground and re-examine the case in the light of modern criticism, and this he has done in a masterly manner.

But what are we to think of scholars who still practice infant sprinkling in the light of all the facts of the case? Undoubtedly we must think charitably of them, notwithstanding the conclusive facts which are against them. Have those who see the unscripturalness of infant baptism and how it originated ever taken into account the persistency of established institutions? It is easy enough to say that infant baptism was not practiced by the apostles, and had its origin in a mysterious conception of baptism with respect to the remission of sins, but it is another thing altogether to discontinue a practice which has become the warp and woof of the Christian development of many hundreds of years. It is probable that those who accept only believer's baptism have little or no conception of the difficulties in the way of pedobaptists reconstructing both their theology and life on a matter involving nearly all the traditions of the fathers. Truly may it be said that an error which has the support of ages can not be eradicated at once by simply stating the truth in the case.

Nevertheless, the truth mentioned above ought to be stated and ought to rest heavily on the consciences of our Pedobaptist brethren who, no less than we, desire to honor Christ in his appointments.

State Mission Day.

We are giving a good deal of space this week to the interest of state missions. We do so believing that their success is fundamental to our success in all our national enterprises. If this be a fact—and whoever stops to think about it will see that it is a fact—no other reason need be stated why all our churches that believe in world-wide missions, in the evangelization of our own country, in the building up of our educational and benevolent institutions, and in making our power felt as a religious factor in the life of the nation and of the world, should see to it that the first Lord's day in November be observed, conscientiously and generously, as the day for an offering for state missions.

Read the messages from our various state secretaries and see the virgin soil waiting for the seed of the sower and the ripening fields ready for the sickle of the reaper. One who wishes a comprehensive view of the great field should read all these articles. Whether one studies the condition and needs of the states in the far north, or those in the great west, or those of the teeming populations of the east, or of the sunnier lands of the south, he can not fail to be impressed with the imperative demand for both men and means to push forward the interests of the Master's kingdom. How many and how urgent are the Macedonian calls that reach our ears!

It argues no lack of interest in the general field, at home or abroad, for a church to feel and to manifest a special interest in the needs of its own state. Indeed, the churches can best serve the wider interests of the kingdom by faithful devotion to the welfare of the cause in their several states. If one's heart does not respond to the needs which he sees near home, it is not apt to make a very generous response to the needs of fields further away.

If we have heretofore neglected the cause of state missions it is high time now that we give special emphasis to their value and importance to our whole work. We sincerely trust that the forthcoming offering in November, in the several states, will give unmistakable evidence of the growing interest and liberality in behalf of state missions.

There should be a generous rivalry among the several states as to which can outstrip the other in its zeal for state missions. This rivalry can not, of course, relate to the amount of money contributed, absolutely, for the states are not equal in their ability; but it may relate to the amount contributed per capita, and to the relative number of churches contributing. We should feel inclined to offer a special prize of honor to any state that could report all its churches in line, and contributing to the work of missions. This work of enlisting noncontributing churches in the ranks of the churches which do, conscientiously and regularly, make offerings to the mission work, is one of the most important tasks that each state board has to accomplish. It is more and more coming to be understood that only those churches that contribute to missions are living churches. There can be no truer test of life in a church than its willingness to join with sister churches in extending to others the spiritual blessings which have come to it.

"That They All May be One."[*]

Such is the title of a remarkable book which has just come from the press. It is from the pen of that keen, incisive, catholic-spirited writer so widely known in Christian Endeavor circles—Amos R. Wells. It is a strong and vigorous plea for Christian union, and one that is sure to attract attention. It is likely to be characterized as utopian and impractical by many denominational champions just as the plea for Christian union has always been regarded by ardent sectaries. That is a question, however, that does not especially concern one whose supreme aim is to know and do the will of his Master. With such an one the question is not, Is it practical? but, Is it the will of Jesus Christ? If that question be settled in the affirmative we may safely advocate it, and leave the question of practicability to him whose will we are seeking to carry out. Naturally enough, the author of this book deals with the practical side of the question, that is, the evils resulting from our divisions and the benefits that would result from union and co-operation. No one, so far as we know, has stated this phase of the subject more strongly and convincingly than it is stated in this work. The answers to some of the threadbare excuses for our divisions are so complete that we do not see how they can ever be presented again from the platform before an intelligent audience. In that field, our author has made a most valuable contribution to the subject of Christian union.

As to the basis of union, our author does not pretend to state it. He does not claim to know exactly what it is. But of one thing he is profoundly convinced: Most of the things which divide us are insignificant and petty when compared with the things which are held in common, and with the motives for a completer unity. He does not hold to the theory of a spiritual and invisible union that nobody can see or know anything about, but favors a real, organic union, such as will place the united forces of the Church universal at the disposal of Christ to be used by him in carrying out his great purpose in the world. Sometimes, it is true, one gets the impression that the author's ideal would be satisfied if the denominations would learn to love each other and help each other in their denominational undertakings, and quit envying and fighting each other. For instance, he pictures the following future millennium among the denominations:

"Nevertheless, mad or not, I believe that some glad day, when the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society faces a deficit, the Methodists will take special collections in all their churches to make that deficit good. When the Presbyterians hear of a Methodist home mission school out in Idaho that is likely to be abandoned for lack of funds, they will make an appropriation for it. When the Episcopalians learn that the denominational newspaper of the Quakers is inadequately supported, they will get up clubs for it. When the Baptists see that a Congregational college needs an endowment, they will furnish it. When statistics show a falling off in additions to Presbyterian churches, the Disciples will institute a canvass on their behalf."

But is it not likely that before such a period of reciprocity dawns we shall have learned a more excellent way, and shall be working together as members of the same body, and followers of the same Lord? This our author himself seems to believe. Christian comity is better than warfare between Christians, but it does not meet the New Testament idea of unity. The Father and the Son are "one" in a vastly deeper and higher sense than that of comity. The author believes that we ought to meet together and discuss our differences in the spirit of truth-seeking, and in that we are sure he is right, for, after all, there can be no real unity until we come to see some things alike. There are a great many things concerning which we may differ, and still be one in the New Testament sense, but we should sit at the feet of Christ and learn of him and of each other, until we can all say with Paul: "There is one body, one Spirit, one hope of our calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all." He does not say, let it be noticed, "There is one opinion, one method of church organization, one way of doing mission work, and one method of worshiping the true God." The unity of the New Testament is entirely consistent with all necessary variety of individual temperament, taste, etc.

There is, then, common ground in the New Testament, on which all Christians can be one. It was the earnest effort of the leaders in our own religious movement in the beginning, and is yet, to occupy this common ground, and not to ask others to unite with us, but to come to that common, catholic basis of the New Testament. And we have believed and contended that the only way to a realization of Christ's prayer for unity is to come to Christ's basis of unity. We may be mistaken, in some respects, as to what that basis of unity is, but we stand now, as always, ready to be corrected, and eager to know just what the Lord would have us do in order to be one. We feel that we can pledge our whole brotherhood to this program of unity.

We desire most heartily to thank the talented author of this book for his important contribution to the vital subject of Christian unity. When all Christians come to his spirit, and his desire to see the fulfillment of our Lord's prayer, the way to union will not be hard to find. It is a beautifully printed volume of 209 pages, every page of which bristles with cogent arguments for the unity of the people of God. It is certain, we predict, to have a large reading among the Disciples of Christ, whose special plea is for the union of Christians. In the main, they will give the book hearty endorsement and will be profited by it. We could wish that it might have a wide reading throughout the Christian world as a means of hastening the sublime consummation for which our divine Lord prayed, and for which many earnest souls are praying today.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair has had an unusually hard and toilsome week, and, like all the rest of the toiling world it is glad that Saturday evening is here. It means a cessation of the daily grind. It means more of the home atmosphere and less of the office and shop. It means, to the Editor, the shutting off of the shafts of criticism and the perplexities which come through his daily mail, for at least one day. It means a little time for quiet thought and reflection, and a glimpse through the rifted clouds into the infinite and eternal. Yes, we join with all the grimy sons of toil throughout the world in welcoming the day of rest. Let us shut out the world, with its noise, and bluster, and hurry, and secularism, and seek to bathe our spirits in the atmosphere of heaven. So shall we be girded with high moral purposes and inspired by lofty ideals to resume the toils of another week. Infinite wisdom and infinite goodness alike shine forth in the weekly rest-day. Whoever or whatever perverts this day from its divine meaning and intention is, wittingly or unwittingly, a foe to man for whom it was made. The Lord's day is one of the three great monumental institutions which have come down to us from the early days of Christianity. The other two are the Lord's supper and Christian baptism. Each of these institutions testifies of Christ—his death, his burial, and his resurrection from the dead. And Christ is man's best Friend.

October, after a little flurry of stormy weather that doesn't belong to it properly, has resumed its normal course. Today is one of those ideal autumn days which makes a lover of nature long to take to the woods. The falling leaves, the carpeted earth, the bare limbs of the trees standing out against the blue sky, the songless birds yet remaining, flitting silently from tree to tree, an occasional provident squirrel gathering in his winter store—all this forms a picture which artists can imitate, but can not equal. Some of the trees have parted with their leaves almost entirely, while others hold on to them. It is so with the trees, even those of the same species, which stand in our lawn at Rose Hill. We were questioned about the cause of that this morning by the angel of our household. We replied: "That, my dear, is because some trees hold their leaves with greater tenacity than others"! What could be more lucid and self-evident than that? We might have said: "Some trees are more generous than others, willing to surrender their summer foliage to carpet the earth and to enrich the soil, while a few stingy old oaks hold on to their leaves until they are compelled to give them up by the rising sap of spring, just as certain covetous people hold on to their riches until compelled to part with them, while others give freely and readily to make the world better." But that would have been more figurative and less scientific.

"The day is past and gone." This was the first line of an old hymn which we often heard sung in boyhood, at the evening worship, by quavering voices which have long since joined the choir invisible. And so this bright autumn Lord's day, with its meetings, songs, sermons and prayers, is "past and gone." How bright the stars shine out tonight from the clear, October sky, as if they were angel eyes looking down with delight upon a worshiping world! It has been a day of high privileges in the house of God. We sat together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. The great congregation sang old "Coronation" as if the people really wanted to place the crown of universal dominion on the brow of Him who wore the crown of thorns "for us men and our salvation." How tenderly the shepherd of the flock presented its manifold needs to the great Bishop and Shepherd of our souls in his prayer, and how wisely he led it in his sermon into the green pastures of living truth! Then came the memorial supper, which the first Christians called "the eucharist," because of the thanksgivings associated with it. It is here the worship seems to reach its proper climax, and all hearts are fused into a blessed unity before the vision of the uplifted Christ. And when the benediction is pronounced and the people scatter to their homes, they must carry with them holy impressions, higher resolves and a firmer grasp of things spiritual. Multiply such a scene by ten thousand and thousands of thousands and we may form some faint conception of what the Lord's day means for the spiritual uplifting of the race.

"The kingdom of God cometh not with observation." Did the people of Christ's time think the kingdom of God was going to come with a roll of drums, a blare of trumpets, and the shouts of the multitude? This seems probable. Other kingdoms had come that way, and why not this promised kingdom of the Messiah? But Jesus told his disciples it would not come in that way, and history tells us that it did not come, and does not come today, in that way. As the leaven works in the meal, as the principle of life works in the vegetable world, with quiet and unseen forces, so comes the kingdom of God. This was the lesson which God taught Elijah at Horeb. Jehovah was not in the strong wind that rent the mountains, nor in the earthquake, nor yet in the fire, but "in the still small voice." There is danger of our becoming infatuated with the clatter of eclestiastical machinery, and identifying the noise of outward forces with the real power of God. It is as true now as it was in the days of Zerubbabel that it is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord," that the Lord's work is to be carried forward. But this does not mean idleness or passivity on our part. We are to be active and zealous in planning and executing measures for the advancement of God's kingdom in the world, but we are not to identify this outward activity with the movements of the Spirit, without which our activities are "as sounding brass and a clanging cymbal." The recognition of this fact will keep us humble in the sight of God, and will prevent that spirit of pride or of boasting which, in religious work especially, must be most displeasing to God. It will drive us to our knees, also, that we may keep in touch with the source of all power.

It may be doubted if any of us have learned the value of silence in God's presence. Even in our very prayers we are so clamorous with our petitions that we seldom pause to receive God's message to us. God speaks to us in our silences, when our souls are attuned to the infinite and when we are waiting to hear his voice. Sometimes we seem to even begrudge the moments of reverential silence during the communion, when every soul should be on its knees before God. On every weekly bulletin or program of church services there should be printed the passage, "The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silent before him." The recognition of the presence of God is essential to all true worship and to all successful work in the kingdom of God. To omit the divine factor in our lives and in our religious work is fatal to reverence, to spiritual development, and to permanent results. This factor duly recognized and our own obligations fully performed, we may safely anticipate the largest and most enduring results in our Christian work.

Notes and Comments.

Another great gift. This time it is for the Benevolent Association. See Brother Snively's notice elsewhere. Ten thousand dollars to care for homeless, orphan children. Surely God's Spirit is moving upon the hearts of the people. As we said recently, it is a new era of giving upon which we are entering. Brethren are beginning to give "as the Lord has prospered them." That means that we shall have a large number of princely gifts for our great benevolent, educational and missionary interests. Benevolence, the youngest of our national enterprises, is coming to the front by leaps and bounds. But as the board of benevolence is continually planning larger things, there is no fear that the money will come faster than it can be used wisely in this Christlike work. Who will be the next?

In the opinion of some people the majority of men of science are not of the Christian faith. It is perhaps newspaper sensationalism that is responsible for this opinion, which we believe to be ill-founded. Rev. W. L. Watkinson, in a notable address upon present-day conditions favorable to gospel preaching, called attention to the fact that the last five presidents of the British Association for the Advancement of Science were all Christian men. This kind of light on the question is not always seen in the newspapers.

A prominent London Jewish writer and scholar, Mr. C. J. Montefiore, has just given a very remarkable testimony to the value of Christianity. He contrasts the Talmudic principle of strict justice, "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," with that benevolence of the gospel expressed in "forgive your enemies." It is, he says, "one distinctive glory of Christianity, the yearning to redeem; and a second, that it will not believe any soul incapable of salvation." This Jewish writer sets down Jesus' denunciation of cold formalism and his approval of the publican's humble confession of unworthiness as "new and permanent contributions to morality and religion."

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

The homiletical value of the Old Testament seems self-evident. The preacher is to declare the whole counsel of God. The command, "Search the Scriptures," refers to the Old Testament. We read: "The Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron," and Peter declares: "Prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." "The Scriptures," "the Holy Scriptures," "the Oracles of God" are names applied to these writings and our Lord constantly in his preaching quotes or refers to them and bases their truth upon the authority of God. The apostles, also, follow their Master's example, and declare, "God spake," the "Holy Spirit saith," "God who at sundry times and in divers portions spake," and proceed to apply these things. Is it not a point forever settled with us that what Christ says is truth must be truth? That what the apostles declare under the Spirit's guidance is authoritative must be authoritative?

How shall we use the Old Testament? As a volume of history. We begin with the beginning. What a wonder that a little child can open this book and read how the Creator of the heavens and of the earth did his work thousands upon thousands of years ago, read it in such simple terms that though a child, he can understand it—though a philosopher, he could never exhaust its meaning! What an unspeakable marvel is a volume which has held a thousand nations spellbound for thrice a thousand years! What a miracle are these words, written for thousands of years, often by illiterate men, upon whose principles states have been founded, from whose inspiration greatest hymns and prayers and poems and painting and sculpture and music have come; whose translations have fixed the languages of nations, which have made the ignorant peasant and the negro slave familiar with matters which the greatest philosophers never knew, and taught men the history of Babylon, Nineveh, Jerusalem, and the first things in the kingdom of nature, of sin, of the world, and of grace far better than they knew the beginnings of their own nation or even of their own lives! No history so thrilling, no record the world holds so ancient, no chronicles like these of the old Hebrews. How vast the scope of the preacher here! Of what untold value the biographical material! Dr. Lord has no such Beacon Lights; Plutarch no such characters. Here is history: its chronicle, narrative, and philosophy.

Then as a system of law the preacher should use the Old Testament. Some think the higher critics have not left enough of this part of the Bible to supply materials for Christian preaching. I am sure the book will survive all its critics whether higher or lower. In our emphasis upon the New Testament as the constitution of the Church I have felt there was danger of depreciating the Old. In the very broad and charitable proclamation of the love of God which belongs to this age, I have feared sufficient prominence was not given to the law of God. We are not under Moses but under Christ and we are not to make a law book out of the Gospel, but forever and ever is it true that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom and a good understanding have all they that keep his commandments."

What a fine subject for a series of sermons on practical up-to-date Christian living for example the Ten Commandments! Take them this way: 1. Whom to worship—the living God versus the gods of today. Our American gods. Our duty to the heathen. 2. How to worship—ritualism and image worship—spiritual worship—the restoration of New Testament worship. 3. Profanity and perjury—the idle word—the decay of reverence. 4. The Sabbath—the seventh day or the first—Sunday traveling and trading—Sunday newspapers and excursions—a holy day or a holiday. 5. Young America and his parents—what has become of parental authority—perils of the home. 6. Murder and suicide—lynching and lawlessness—death in the heart—the murder of the soul. 7. Personal purity—marriage and divorce—social sin—the chambers of death—without holiness what? 8. Stealing and graft. The duty of restitution—robbing God. 9. Lying—lies black and white—gossip and scandal mongering—the Father of lies—living the truth. 10. Covetousness which is idolatry—"frenzied finance"—the respectable vice—the greedy man's epitaph—materialism.

As a revelation of doctrine also the Old Testament has its place. Take the great prophets—the twelve minor prophets—all messages from God. Has the world ever known such venerable and wise teachers as these Hebrew seers? They had special communication with Jehovah. They were minsters of the promised King. They upheld religion and piety in most trying times and at greatest peril. They left to all ages visions of the Holy One, characters consecrated by holiness, and a literature sublime and beautiful. For more than a thousand years they taught in their wonderful way, were the oracles of God, harbingers and types of the greater Prophet foretold as the ultimate Teacher of mankind. Where is the man who can claim the glory of educated mind who has never sat down to commune with Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel? Where is the preacher who can preach Christ without Old Testament types, promises, prophecies concerning the Christ? Take the lesson of the sacrifices, the mediation of the priesthood, the passover, Melchizedek, the prevision of Messiah's birth and birth place, teaching and passion, the center of the battle ground of Old Testament Christology, Isaiah 53. What did Philip do with the eunuch when he found him reading Isaiah? He opened his mouth and preached unto him Jesus.

Then as a manual of worship the Old Testament is the preacher's treasure house. One of the preacher's most important functions is "to lead in prayer," that is, to lead the assembly of God's people at the mercy seat. He is to voice their adoration, thanksgiving, confession, entreaty. He is their representative, agent, organ, proxy, spokesman. The people must feel it is their prayer, that while in preaching the preacher is the minister of God to the people, in prayer he is the minister of the people to God. Speaking to men for God or speaking to God for men—which is the greater? Yet how little thought do we take of our public prayers? Whole volumes on sermonizing—the responsibility of the deliverance of the message to men—hardly a volume in any preacher's library on the responsibility of public prayer—the deliverance of the preacher's message to God! Too often we speak carelessly of "the preliminary exercises," and conduct them with little reverence as a disorderly meaningless perfunctory performance, while the Scripture lesson in which God speaks is a thousand times more important than anything which we can speak; and the pulpit prayer in which we address the Lord God of Hosts is a thousand times more vital than any preachment we may make to the people. Yet your preacher prepares laboriously his message for the ears of the people and makes an extemporaneous effusion answer for the ear of God!

Let the preacher turn here to Old Testament models; let him study the prayers of Abraham, Eleazar, Jacob, Moses, David, Solomon, Elijah, Hezekiah; let him above all saturate mind and heart with the Psalms; and we shall be saved from much of the paganism of the pulpit seen in long prayers and vain repetitions and abominable profanations. "God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few."

THE SECRET OF YOUTH.

De Soto looked for the secret of youth in a spring of gushing, life-giving waters, which he was sure he would find in the New World. Alchemists and sages (thousands of them), have spent their lives in quest for it, but it is only found by those happy people who can digest and assimilate the right food which keeps the physical body perfect that peace and comfort are the sure results.

A remarkable man of 94 says: "For many long years I suffered more or less with chronic costiveness and painful indigestion. This condition made life a great burden to me, as you may well imagine.

"Two years ago I began to use Grape-Nuts as food, and am thankful that I did. It has been a blessing to me in every way. I first noticed that it had restored my digestion. This was a great gain but was nothing to compare in importance with the fact that in a short time my bowels were restored to free and normal action.

"The cure seemed to be complete; for two years I have had none of the old trouble. I use the Grape-Nuts food every morning for breakfast and frequently eat nothing else. The use has made me comfortable and happy, and although I will be 94 years old next fall, I have become strong and supple again, erect in figure and can walk with any body and enjoy it." Over-Systematized Religion

By William Durban

What I have long expected has begun. The Committee of the Sunday School International Lessons have for years had their way, and nobody has ventured to criticise their methods. At last loud murmurings are heard from very authoritative quarters. Professor Peake, the most learned living theologian connected with the primitive Methodist denomination, has recently been writing for the "Primitive Methodist Leader" a series of articles on "Sunday School Reform." Now, of these articles I might scarcely have taken notice in writing for American readers, simply because American Sunday schools are the finest in the world, excepting those in Wales, where practically the whole population, including old men and women, may be found in the Sunday schools throughout the dear little principality. But the Sunday schools of England, while very numerous and very largely attended, sadly need to be conducted in a more progressive spirit. Above all, they need more attention and more generous help from the churches, such as I know from observation that they receive in the United States. I am not at all proud of the average British Sunday school. It is a poor little extra institution, compelled to make shift and to apologize for its existence. But when we come to consider the International Lesson system we soon begin to feel that there is something lacking which affects America as well as England.

PROFESSOR PEAKE'S CRITICISM.

Professor Peake, in his latest article, handles the committee having charge of the selection of the International Lessons somewhat severely in his review of the chapters, or portions of chapters, given for study during the last five years. He condones the omission of any selection from the book of Job on the ground that "it does not lend itself to the kind of treatment favored by the committee." But he expresses surprise that only once in two years is the book of Proverbs drawn upon. This he considers "a neglect that is somewhat surprising in the training of young people." More surprising still is the fact that during six years only three selections are made from the book of Psalms. "What are we to think of a system," asks the Professor, "which can make no more of the Psalms than select three of them and select these as a mere appendix to the history of David?"

The same merciless criticism is applied to the selection from the New Testament. "The Epistles are almost entirely excluded. The chronological order is entirely ignored. In the first two quarters of 1903 we have the story of the Acts, from the experiences of Paul and Silas at Philippi. This particular incident is followed by an extract from the Epistle to the Philippians, one of Paul's latest Epistles. Then we are brought to Thessalonica and Berea, and this lesson is followed by an extract from 1 Thessalonians, which is one of Paul's earliest Epistles."

STRANGE OMISSIONS.

"The chronological order of the letters is again deserted in order to secure an extract from Romans, though strangely enough the passage chosen is 14:7-14. Romans 8:1-14, which comes on a little later, seemed to be a Whitsuntide leson, and one is glad to get it on these terms; but of all the great doctrinal discussions of Romans, apart from these fourteen verses, there is not a word." The Professor reconciles himself to the omission of any lesson from the Pastoral Epistles, but says: "Even on the committee's own principles I cannot understand why some of the autobiographical matter in Galatians, or the catalog of labors and sufferings in 2 Corinthians should be omitted. No number of lessons from the Acts can possibly give the same intimate and vivid impression of Paul as we get from these passages in his own Epistles." The Professor's summing up of this part of his criticism is that, "Even if the method were right, the execution is vicious, the omissions are glaring and inexcusable, and the habit of dropping a subject when it is half through, whether there is a natural break or not, to resume it again six months later, is educationally disastrous." In succeeding articles Professor Peake will devote himself to an examination of the filling in of this general plan of selection which already he has found to be so faulty.

CHRISTIANITY IN A MOLD.

Christianity was never meant to be cast in any mold. No committee can ever fully succeed in the attempt to crystallize Sunday school teaching. But the plan of suggesting subjects and of indicating a method of consecutive teaching is in itself calculated to be of much value. Only, it is singular that a committee of learned men should slip into a rut and feel satisfied to keep to it. The whole system is far too elementary. The plan seems to be to avoid all but the simpler portions of the Bible, adopting the historical sections almost exclusively. But, after all, is not sectarian Christianity getting itself into terrible trouble on the same plan of casting everything in prescribed molds? Near me lives a bright young Wesleyan minister who is likely to be a star in his denomination. But he has confided to me his restless dissatisfaction with things as they are in Methodism. He considers the system despotic. I know several Methodists of great ability who have vaulted over into the Congregational ministry because of the fancied freedom they would enjoy. But in England, at any rate in the inner circles of Congregationalism, the dissatisfaction in many minds is very great because of the growth of a central officialism which tends to stifle freedom. And amongst the Baptists the tendency to central bureaucracy is causing much revulsion of feeling. The Anglican Church is one vast system of ministerial bondage, and the bishops are now aspiring to become real autocrats, so much so that very angry letters are appearing from impatient and alarmed Episcopalians. I mention these things because we seem to be drifting into an age not only of federations, which might be capable of splendid achievements in the accomplishment of unity, but because my fear is very great that such federations are not going after all to be used so much to promote the desired Christian fraternity as to create more molds for the practice of formalism. The temptation to grasp at power, to use any and every possible instrument for usurping authority, is always very dangerous. Trust deeds prescribing doctrine are proving a terrible snare, as Scotland has been showing all the world. But the most surprising phenomenon is that common sense seems to be little used, as Professor Peake so powerfully points out, when good men undertake to create fresh molds into which they ask people collectively to run their brains.

THE YOUNG LIONS OF HIGH CHURCH.

I must point to another phenomenon. We are listening to a set of roaring young lions whom Canon Scott Holland, of St. Paul's Cathedral, has gathered about him as contributors to his monthly magazine, the "Commonwealth." These young fellows are university men of fine standing and they are very High Churchmen. But they are seeking to push a new propaganda, that of High Church Socialism. They dream that thus they will catch the working men—which is certainly a mere dream and nothing more. But there is this to their credit, that they are bitterly dissatisfied with things as they are in the

WORK A PLEASURE

It Is One of the Real Joys Given Us.

"Postum Food Coffee has done more for me in two years," writes a Wisconsin young lady student, "than all the medicines and treatments I had employed to overcome the effects of the coffee poisoning that was killing me by degrees.

"I had all the familiar symptoms and suffered all the well-known tortures. My stomach was wrecked and I could not eat, my head ached almost continually, I became the nervous victim of insomnia, and the capacity for study deserted me. Of course this came on gradually, and without suspicion, for a long time, as to the cause.

"Two years ago a friend enthusiastically urged me to quit using the old kind of coffee and to drink Postum Food Coffee. I have never regretted acting upon the advice. As soon as the coffee poison was eliminated, the strengthening and nourishing properties of Postum began to build me up.

"Each day I gained a little, the color crept back to my cheeks, my limbs rounded out with new flesh, my complexion grew fair and clear again, my digestion improved, and now I can eat anything at any time, the nervous insomnia has left me and I sleep soundly at night and wake up refreshed. I have no more headaches, and mental work has become a pleasure to me." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

mighty, majestic, massive Church of England. It is the very proud Church of the rich, the fashionable, the arrogant. The poor have little to do with it excepting if they get doles from it. All its system is molded most rigidly on tradition, prescription and legend. The young men of ability and learning are growing daily more conscious that something is wrong, and they are experimenting. Their present fad is to dally with socialism. They are willing to try anything but a simple and humble reversion to the primitive faith. So they may roar like Boreas or rave like Euroclydon for this and that to be altered. The Church of England is a glaring and astounding example of the over-systematization of Christianity.

Growth in the Knowledge of Christ

Matthew 26:74 and 2 Peter 3:18

By J. M. Philputt

Here are two passages in striking contrast. One shows Peter at the low water mark of his Christian experience. After having been with Jesus for three years, after having made the noble confession at Cesarea Philippi that he is the Son of God, now, because of the sneer of a maid, he declares with an oath that he knows not the man. Over against this put the exhortation that came many years later—an exhortation that gains emphasis from the fact that it is the very last word we have from him, the closing verse of his last epistle. Here, as if giving us the sum of his long and eventful experience, he exhorts us to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Through what struggles and strivings, what prayers and tears, what defeats and victories, he had passed from the one stage to the other! If it could be unfolded before us in one long panorama, if we could see all his heart experiences, we would look upon the path which each one of us must tread in our growth into the knowledge of Christ.

Progress is written upon all of God's works. We read that the world was made in six days, but there is a sense in which the world is still being made, for changes are constantly taking place and it is being subdued and better fitted for the habitation of man. We are familiar with the idea of progress in the revelation which God has made of himself in the Bible. He has had to adapt this revelation to the mind of man. In the earliest records we have the kindergarten period. Only the most rudimentary elements of knowledge could God then give to the race. Then came the period of the law, when the race was under tutors and governors. This was the period of youth and it was not until the fulness of time that God could give to the world a complete revelation of himself in the person of Jesus Christ, his Son. This law of development is written everywhere in God's universe—it is the sign of life—it is the glory of all existence, as Tennyson sings:

"Glory of warrior, glory of orator, glory of song,
Paid, with a voice, flying by, to be lost on an endless sea;
Glory of virtue, to fight and struggle, to right the wrong;
Nay, but she aimed not at glory, no lover of glory she,
Give her the glory of going on and still to be."

There are many ways in which this thought of progress will apply to our work, but I want to get deeper than all the work, to that which lies behind the work, which determines it—the growth of each individual soul in the knowledge of Christ. For if we can only come to some rich knowledge of Christ, our blessed Lord and Master, we shall find in this increased knowledge the driving force for better service.

All of us, except the very lowest, are ambitious along certain lines. Most of these ambitions are praiseworthy; at bottom they are the desire to come to some richer manhood, to some greater power, to some wider usefulness. We pity the man who has no ambition, for we know how low he must ever remain in the scale of life because he lacks the motive to lift himself higher.

Now that we are ambitious, why shall we not be ambitious in the highest sense? Shall we be ambitious for the body only and not for the soul? Ambitious for physical and temporal well-being and not for the spiritual and eternal? What is the greatest desire that can surge up out of the human soul? Saint Augustine has expressed it in this way: "Oh, God, thou hast made us for thyself and we are hot and restless until we rest in thee." One of the great creeds declares that the chief end of man is to "glorify God and to enjoy him forever." Our Savior in his great intercessory prayer expresses the thought still more clearly when he says: "This is life eternal, that they may know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." The knowledge of God, then, which leads to fellowship with God, is the highest desire of a human spirit, and this knowledge comes to us through our Lord, Jesus Christ. Here, then, we are on the same ground as Peter would have us: "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ."

Three Greek words are used in the New Testament for knowledge: 1. "Oida"—this is to know a thing simply as a fact. In this way I know that Cromwell lived and wrought in England in the seventeenth century. 2. "Gnosis"—this is the knowledge which comes from study and reflection, as if I were to read of the life and times of Cromwell and become familiar with the strong points in his career. 3. But there is a stronger Greek word for knowledge: "epignosis"—this is the knowledge of intimate, personal fellowship, as a man knows his wife, as a mother knows her child. This knowledge is perfect fellowship. You do not fear each other—"perfect love casteth out fear." You are not afraid lest you will offend each other or be misunderstood. Time never hangs heavy on your hands when you are together. You do not even have to speak to each other in order to enjoy the fellowship. It is enough to know that the loved one is near. This is "epignosis."

Now, there are these three stages in the knowledge of Christ: 1. We may know him, as Paul says, "after the flesh." We may know the historic Christ, the Christ who lived and wrought in Galilee and suffered under Pontius Pilate. 2. There is the fuller acquaintance and deeper sympathy with Christ. We listen to his marvelous words; we follow him as he went about doing good; we are touched with the feeling of compassion which he had upon the multitude; we come to have great admiration and even reverence for the Carpenter of Nazareth. Many Christian people never get any farther than this. Christ is to them, always, a far-off figure—one who lived and wrought nineteen hundred years ago. 3. There is a knowledge of Christ deeper than these two, a knowledge which is experimental, subjective. This knowledge comes from walking with Christ day by day; from opening our hearts so that he may abide within us. The Holy Spirit takes of the things of Christ and shows them unto us and he becomes our intimate friend and we can say, with Paul: "I live, and yet not I, Christ lives within me." This is not historic knowledge; it is not the knowledge which comes from boods. It is the knowledge which comes from intimate, personal, constant fellowship with the living Christ. Oh, how wonderful are the revelations he makes of himself to those who thus walk with him! This is the blessed knowledge which Paul yearns for when he says: "I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord." He longs to know him and the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his sufferings. This is the knowledge into which the apostle Peter would have us come. It is the knowledge of Christ as a real presence, a constant inspiration.

What is shutting you out of this knowledge of Christ? What are you weighing over against it? Stop for a moment and think. Is it the fear of man? Thou fool, to let poor, frail man shut your soul out of the highest blessedness! Is it the love of money? Are you ambitious to have a million, so ambitious that you sacrifice everything, even your conscience and your character, in order to obtain it? Again I say, thou fool, for that is what you will say of yourself when your eyes have been opened. "Naked we came into the world and naked we go out of it." A millionaire died the other day and they even stripped the ring from his finger before they put him under the sod. Do not be deceived, money never can make you happy. Listen to the Lord of life: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Are the lusts of the flesh shutting you out of this blessedness? Do you allow this filth to run through your mind until you become a saturated solution of uncleanliness? This sin is all the more dangerous because we can entertain it and yet keep a respectable place in society, but nothing is more deadening to spiritual growth or more dangerous to all that is highest and best. "Reckon yourselves to be dead, indeed, unto sin," thunders Paul.

Is it perfunctoriness in your religious duties that is shutting you out of this intimate knowledge of Christ? Are you coming to church always with the thought of getting good and never of doing good? Can any selfishness be more refined, and yet more hideous, than that of the man who is always seeking to get something and never passes on to that high stage of service where he can be used of God for the salvation of others?

Let nothing come between you and the growth of the soul into the highest knowledge of Christ, and remember that this knowledge is in Christ Jesus, that it comes only to those who obey him. "Hereby we do know that we know him, when we keep his commandments."

Reminiscences of a Debater

By John S. Sweeney

[The following is a report of a talk given at the weekly meeting of St Louis ministers by one who was for many years probably the most noted debater in the ranks of the Christian ministry.]

I have been quite a while in the service, as most of you know. If I had not had to leave off preaching about four or five years ago I would have been a half century in the service. I began to preach fifty years ago. I remember very distinctly hearing, a year or two before I began, a distinguished Presbyterian preacher make a statement that there were only about 25,000 "Campbellites," he called them—he wasn't very well raised—in the United States at the time I first became identified with the Church. There were only 25,000 in the United States! I don't believe Brother Hoffmann could have made more out of it than that. But he wasn't there then. I began to preach in Illinois. I came to Illinois to practice law. I was boarding with the county judge of Greene county over in Illinois and he told me one day he was going to a meeting out in the country on Sunday, and that Brother Somebody was going to review Campbellism. Said I, "What is that?" He said, "I don't know." I suppose I had kept my light a little under a bushel; he didn't know what I was. Said he, "I would like to have you go out and hear this brother on Campbellism." Said I, "I never heard anybody preach on Campbellism, and I will go." So on Sunday morning the old man rigged up and we set out.

There were, I think, about four men and five or six women in the neighborhood where this preaching was that were "Campbellites," and this is what stirred this Methodist brother up. He gave us a general currying and along toward the close of his speech I could tell who were "Campbellites" by the way they looked, and he made a statement about what Mr. Campbell had said about salvation; I don't know what it was, but I could not stand it any longer—my mouth just went off. I said, "Where do you find that Mr. Campbell made that statement?" Said he, "What Church do you belong to?" Said I, "It doesn't make any difference about that." Said he, "You want to break up the meeting." The judge that I boarded with said, "That is a fair question. Where will we find that statement from Mr. Campbell? We'd like to know." He said he had the book with him and after dinner would give the book and page. After dinner came and he went on, and about the close I said, "You didn't give us the book and page where Mr. Campbell made that extraordinary statement about the water of salvation." He said he looked and could not find it and would have to have a little more time. Said he, "You don't look like you believe what I said about Mr. Campbell." Said I, "I don't believe it; I am certain he never said it." He finally gave out that he would make another speech on Campbellism. After the speech an old fellow came around and said, "You belong to the Christian Church." He said, "There isn't a man in the county that talks in public and I am glad that you are here today."

Mr. Campbell never said anything of the sort. It was a very extravagant misrepresentation of him. That man came on to make his speech and the first thing I knew they worked me in for a review, and

THAT WAS MY CALL.

That was the beginning of my ministry. Somehow I never could rid myself of the notion entirely that I had to be a preacher. My mother had taught me that, and I thought I had to be a preacher. I let them make the announcement that I would review his speech, and I reviewed it about as a lawyer would review a speech, and I told what Mr. Campbell had said. Well, from that on, every once in a while I would have to "talk in meeting." Sometimes I would have to go five or six miles to where there was a Christian church and I would have to talk in meeting, and after a while I came to Whitehall; it has grown to be quite a town and we have a good church there. While I was at Whitehall there was a preacher living in St. Louis who was a Cumberland Presbyterian, and he had an evening appointment at a school house where a few of our people had a meeting occasionally. He gave us a terrible scaling out there, from all I could learn, and I got it on good authority. The only man I ever challenged for a debate was that man who was living here in St. Louis and reviewed us out there. I wrote him a challenge that I would like to discuss that Scripture with him in Whitehall, and he accepted it, and we had a debate in Whitehall. There began my career as a debater. I never sought and I never challenged any man for a debate after that, but the brethren would send for me when they got in trouble of that kind. It was in that debate that a brother who lived in Winchester—N. M. Knapp—came down there and was a moderator in the debate. He said, "I am older than you are and the thing to do is in some way to knock this man out right at the start," and I had the opportunity. It was over pretty soon. We were discussing the action of baptism. He was for sprinkling, and he made a statement that he never knew of but one case of immersion in the Scriptures. He said there was one clear case, and that was the case of the swine. He said when the devil got into the swine they ran down into the sea and were immersed. I kind o' skirmished around for a little while before I finally hit him. They certainly went down into the sea, I admitted, and I went on to say that the word "drowned" could be otherwise translated and showed how I could work out of that as he did out of passages relating to immersion. I had read several books on the origin of sprinkling, but my mind had never been exactly clear until now, so I just said that and therefore changed the mode and "ever since he has been practicing sprinkling." The man was cowed from that on. He fretted at the audience and fretted at the moderators; he didn't do himself justice.

I believe I'll tell a little incident about Brother Burgess. O. A. Burgess was a strong man and a brave sort. You don't know what we had to do in those days. We had to debate to get people to hear us. There was no other way to do. We had to fight. Old as I am I would do it yet before I would allow the flag to trail. Burgess would go into a debate and send for me and when I got into a debate I would send for him and we would fight it out together. Burgess got into one with one of those regular spiritualists, Dr. Burroughs, who was quite a popular lecturer in central Illinois at that time. He wrote to me and I went. There were four or five old fellows, and about half of them were doctors that were sustaining this man Burroughs. They were old reprobates and each one of them, I learned, had killed his man and was considered dangerous. Burroughs took occasion in the debate to make a very unnecessary and uncalled-for sort of disparaging statement in regard to the mother of Jesus, and it aroused Burgess. There was a story afloat, and there was some truth in it, that there was a society in this place and that they got together and had all kinds of fun and went in the river bathing together, men and women, and they got out some scandalous reports about it. Burgess got hold of it and he rapped him all along the line in reply to his disparaging statement about Mary and it got them mad. Oh, they were hot! As we went to dinner—Burgess and I roomed and dined together—we had to cross a little bridge over the railroad. At the far end of the bridge I met a gentleman and he asked me to step aside with him. I did so, and it turned out to be one of those doctors. He said that Mr. Burgess had referred in his closing speech to an old scandal in the community and that if he did not retract or apologize for that statement there would be trouble. He said, "I suppose it would —State Missions to the front!

Our Budget.

—The Christian-Evangelist offers a helping hand to all our state corresponding secretaries.

—Read closely the reports from the various states and see how your own state compares with others.

—Write your corresponding secretary a letter, and pledge him your help and cooperation.

—No class of men among us is carrying heavier burdens and greater responsibilities than our state secretaries, and none is more deserving of the sympathy and cooperation of the brethren.

—H. F. Barstow, of Wisconsin, writes: "A church house is nearly completed at New Rome. Plans are laid for one at Big Flats. Readstown is wor[illegible] new church. Willard McCar[illegible]ing up a co-operation of the ch[illegible]uthwest Wisconsin."

—Brother Kreidler closes his pastorate at Milwaukee, Wis., November 1.

—C. W. Dean, of Colfax, Ill., has removed to Grand Rapids, Wis., and has begun his work with the young church in that city.

—Percy G. Cross, of Pine Bluff, Ark., has accepted a call to the church at Hope, Ark., and was to begin work there October 15. He leaves the church at Pine Bluff in excellent condition.

—J. W. Utter has accepted a call for the tenth year to the church at Covina, Cal. Long pastorates are on the increase.

—A. B. Moore sends the following annual report from the church at Alliance, O.: "Increase in membership, 97; decrease, 9; money raised for all purposes, $4,525.26; missions, $197.25; church debt reduced, $1,615." He began his fourth year in October.

—The island of Guam, an important naval station of the United States in the Pacific, is to have the Gospels and Acts in their own language—the Chamorro. The translation will be made by the Rev. Mr. Price, missionary of the American Board, and will be printed in Japan.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Canton, O., October 22.—Eighteen added today. There have been 285 in nineteen days. Meeting continues.—Welshimer and Kendall.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Lincoln, Ill., October 22.—Closed with 187 additions, 30 at last service. Blessed be the name of the Lord. Pittsburg next—Wilson and Lintt, Evangelists.

—Clark Braden has been delivering a series of lectures against Mormonism in the Christian churth at Seiling, Okla.

—Don't forget to give the exercise for boys' and girls' rally day—November 26, 1905.

—W. J. Grinstead, minister, conducted the conference on evangelism at the Harriman convention, in the absence of J. Lem Keevil.

—Harold E. Monser and Charles E. McVay, singer, will conduct a revival meeting for the church at Petersburg, Ill., in January.

—F. F. Walters, of Grand Junction, Col., has accepted a call to the church at Neosho, Mo., and will enter upon his work some time in November.

—The church at Jellico, Tenn., has organized a branch Sunday school at Tannery Hollow, a mining camp, with an attendance of about forty-five.

—O. F. Jordan, pastor of the church at Rockford, Ill., having served the people continuously for five years, recently had the agreeable experience of having his salary raised. The church is in a prosperous condition, now numbering 176 members.

—F. D. Power, our staff correspondent from the Dome, will celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of his pastorate at the nation's capital, Friday evening, October 27.

—W. A. Chapman has resigned his work at Rosendale, Mo., after a service of almost fifteen years as pastor, and is ready to take work elsewhere at the beginning of the year.

—Jacob Walters will enter upon his ninth year as pastor of the church at Ocean View, Del., January 1. He has established a mission at Dagsboro, and will preach there every two weeks.

—Thomas Martin will begin a meeting at Beeler Station, W. Va., November 13. Those desiring him for meetings beyond that date should address him at Sandy Lake, Pa., for the present.

—E. M. Richmond, who is in the meeting at New London, Mo., writes: "The Christian-Evangelist is being more generally [illegible]d in this congregation, and is greatly liked and appreciated."

—Last week the Foreign Society received two gifts on the annuity plan, one of $500 and one of $300. Besides, a friend at Medina, O., made a direct gift of $200 for the Bible college at Jubbulpore, India.

—O. P. Spiegel, of Birmingham, Ala., general evangelist of the home board, will assist E. A. Cole, Washington, Pa., in the Pittsburg district simultaneous revival campaign, which begins October 29.

—Harry Hazel, of Santa Cruz, Cal., goes to Everett, Wash., to begin a series of revival meetings October 29 with the pastor, O. W. McGaughey. The music will be conducted by S. M. Doughty, of Oregon.

—The church at Flora, Ill., has extended a call to Rollin C. Ogburn to remain with it another year. He reports 67 additions during the past year, with a missionary offering nearly double that of any previous year.

—G. B. Townsend is just closing his sixth year with the church at Troy, N. Y. He writes: "They have been years of hard work, but years of sweet fellowship with some of as noble people as are to be found anywhere."

—Bro. H. G. Hill was the speaker at the men's banquet given recently by T. W. Grafton to 165 men of his congregation. Brother Hill spoke on the subject, "The Ordinary Man." The banquet will be followed by similar occasions.

—Geo. L. Snively, of St. Louis, begins a protracted meeting at Plattsburg, Mo., October 22. The minister, J. P. Pinkerton, has succeeded in working up a great interest, which is spreading through the community, promising great results.

—B. D. Chesnut, an earnest soloist and leader of song, can be secured for evangelistic services during the coming winter. He is now engaged in a revival with Chas. G. Stout, state evangelist, at Knoxville, Ia. Address him at 1325 Washington street, Des Moines, Ia.

—J. W. Ellis, Plattsburg, Mo., has received a unanimous call from the church at Bentonville, Ark., and has accepted the work there, to begin November 1. The church at Bentonville is completing a handsome building and is said to be enthusiastic and harmonious.

—"The Bluffs Christian," the local paper of the Council Bluffs (Iowa) Christian Church (W. B. Clemmer, pastor), reports a good year's work for the church in that city, showing a net gain of 51 and the largest missionary offering for the year in the history of the church.

—Wm. G. McColley, Pontiac, Ill., calls attention, as pastor of that church, with a view of locating brethren there, to the following business openings: 1. A good weekly newspaper and job office; 2. A bakery and confectionery; 3. Shoe store; 4. Clothing and shoes; 5. Restaurant.

—Claris Yeuell's work in Minnesota was closed with the organization of an Endeavor Society. His work in Maryland opens up with one. In the gigantic task he has undertaken in Baltimore in practically raising from the dead the Randall street work he will rely much on the Endeavorers.

—Dr. J. W. Ellis having been called to take charge of the church at Bentonville, Ark., as announced elsewhere, the family will move there the first of November. The friends of the Advance Society are requested to address all communications to J. Breckenridge Ellis, Bentonville, Ark.

—The Antisaloon League of Illinois is already actively at work, preparing for the coming primaries and the legislative election. It proposes to follow up the advantage gained and carry forward the option bill to victory and protect the men who voted with it.

—D. H. Bays, Woodward, Ia., is obliged to change climate to recuperate his health. A farewell reception was given in honor of Brother and Sister Bays, at which over one hundred members and friends of his congregation showed their appreciation of his labor among them by presenting him with a well-filled purse.

—The latest word from the two Nimrods in northern Minnesota is that the muskallonges are suffering a severe mortality and that quails are coming down. The cold weather, however, will probably put a stop to this mortality among the game of the north, even as it has checked the ravages of the yellow fever at the south.

—News has just reached this office of the death of Sister Mohorter, wife of Bro. J. H. Mohorter, of Pueblo, Colorado. It will be remembered that Brother Mohorter was compelled to remove from Boston on account of the condition of his wife's health, as she has been an invalid for some time. Our brother has our sincere sympathy.

—T. N. Kincaid, Hot Springs, Ark., recently returned from a tour among some of the churches in the interest of the new church in that city. He was absent three weeks, visited sixteen places, made twelve addresses and received $400 in pledges and $83 in cash offerings. Other churches have promised offerings in behalf of this enterprise.

—"Seed Time and Harvest," the beautiful exercise for use in the Sunday schools in celebrating boys' and girls' rally day, is voted the best of all. We advise all our schools to try it. Boys' and girls' rally day is not far away now; November 26 will soon be here. We hope there will be a more general observance of the day than has ever been known.

—Arthur Braden, who has ministered for the last two years at Deerfield, O., has resigned to take up the work of the First Church at Auburn, N. Y. He leaves for his new field so that he can take charge of the work on November 5. Deerfield will need a new man after November 1. Address all communications to Alvin Regal, Deerfield, O.

—J. H. Hárdin, superintendent of our Missouri Sunday school work, reports that Horace Siberell, of Fredericktown, Mo., has accepted the work of Bible school evangelist for southeast Missouri, and will enter upon his work as soon as he can close his pastorate at Fredericktown. Brother Siberell has experience, knows the field, and will devote himself wholly to the work.

—Bro. B. B. Tyler writes: "The audiences and contributions in the South Broadway Church, Denver, Col., are unprecedented. There are seven preachers in this congregation, viz.: B. B. Tyler, J. B. Johnson, J. K. Hester, A. Jay Garrison, F. W. Henry, Leon S. Dudley and Leonard G. Thompson." And still the church is in peace and harmony!

—We are reminded that boys' and girls' rally day is almost upon us. There is little time remaining for preparation. November 26 is the day for the Bible school offering for home missions. We ought to have not less than $15,000 this year from the children. Every superintendent and every teacher is interested in this matter. Let it be urged without delay.

—W. J. Lockhart has resigned the pastorate at Ottumwa, Ia., for the purpose of resuming his evangelistic work. A petition signed by 250 of the working members of the church was presented asking him to reconsider the resignation and remain indefinitely, but he felt himself called to the other line of work.

—The first Lord's day in October was the first anniversary of the work of J. T. Hawkins with the church in South McAlester. The reports from the different departments show encouraging progress. Financially, the report showed that the church had contributed $22 per member. Brother Hawkins hopes to accomplish greater things in the year to come.

—Simpson Ely, writing us from the midst of a meeting at Minden Mines, Mo., 15 days old with 51 additions, sends us a copy of a protest against the Sunday law which is being circulated by the friends of the saloons and breweries, and suggests that the "law-abiding people of the state ought to enter upon a concerted action and circulate a petition that will serve as an antidote to this poison."

—October 22 is the day set for the opening service in the new house of Central Christian Church, Sherman, Tex. The building costs $18,000 and is spoken of as one of the most beautiful edifices in the state. R. R. Hamlin, of the First Christian Church, Fort Worth, will deliver the opening sermon and Leonard Dougherty, of Louisville, Ky., will have charge of the music.

—L. T. Van Cleave, Atlanta, Ind., will preach at any point in southern Florida, Texas or California, during December, January, February and March, at the direction of any person or church that will furnish him room and board. His object is to escape the Hoosier winter, owing to rheumatism, and aid some mission point. Write him at once. References: F. M. Rains and B. L. Smith, Cincinnati, Ohio.

—And so the $100,000 mark in home missions has been reached. See Bro. B. L. Smith's note elsewhere. We can all join in his prayer that the total may never drop below these figures again, but may rise steadily to a sum commensurate with our ability if not with the full needs of the field. From $20,000 to $100,000 is a great stride forward and this splendid advance has been made under Brother Smith's administration.

—It ought to be the aim of every Bible school to make boys' and girls' rally day for home missions one of the happiest and best days of the year. We fear this day has been overlooked in many quarters. We are glad to know from headquarters that the promise is bright for the very best offering ever yet sent in from the schools. We hope the Bible school superintendents who read The Christian-Evangelist will be found among the faithful.

—"The Christian," the local paper of the church at Allegheny City, Pa., of which Wallace Tharp is pastor, in its October number contains a cut of the building, pictures of the official board, of the evangelist, Charles Reign Scoville, of the pastor, the choir, and a number of other prominent workers in the church, all of whom are busy preparing for the great simultaneous campaign in which Brother Scoville is to be one of the evangelists.

—And now comes Judge Durham, of Irvington, Cal., extending that hearty handgrip of his across the intervening space to congratulate us on our illustrated Christian-Evangelist number, showing our new building, etc. He reminds us of what we already knew, that he has been a reader of the paper from the days of the old "Gospel Echo" down to the present time. It is the old readers of the paper that rejoice most at its growth and prosperity.

—An agent of The Christian-Evangelist writes: "The brethren would allow no public notice given of any of our religious papers, so little was done." And yet when these dear brethren have a meeting, a funeral, a picnic, a marriage, a dedication, or call or dismiss a preacher they will hasten to send a report of it to our religious papers and would be offended if the report should not appear. Where does the reciprocity come in, in this sort of thing?

—T. T. Roberts, Morganfield, Ky., speaks of the meeting recently closed there by the Brooks brothers as "the greatest in the history of the church." "Not only," he says, "was the church strengthened in numbers (68 being added), but every department of the work was made stronger. The C. W. B. M. doubled its membership, the Sunday school increased and the pastor will devote full time next year, instead of two and a half Sundays per month." That was, indeed, a profitable meeting.

—That is a good point which J. Breckenridge Ellis, the founder of the Advance Society, makes in his department, "With the Children," this week, namely, that he is continually being addressed as a preacher because he is trying to do some good in the world! That speaks very well for the preachers, of course, but it speaks very poorly for the rest of the church. Every one of us ought to be engaged in some good work, and it ought to be no evidence that one is a preacher because he is trying to benefit his fellow man.

—The old organ in Richmond Avenue Church of Christ, Buffalo, has been replaced by one of fine appearance and splendid power. Arrangements are perfected for union evangelistic meetings throughout the entire city, beginning November 5, from which great things are expected. The city is divided into districts and the pastors of the various churches are working in unison. Bro. J. H. O. Smith, of Valparaiso, Ind., begins a meeting with the Richmond Avenue Church November 15.—Anson G. Chester.

—W. O. Moore writes that President Rowlison, of Hiram College, has recently visited Indianapolis and while there "he received an ovation from those of Indianapolis who have been students of Hiram College." Over twenty were present at the banquet given in his honor and others were unavoidably absent. There was not only a feast of good material things, but a "feast of reason and a flow of soul." President Rowlison's speech, Brother Moore reports, "was highly pleasing to the Hiram fraternity of Indanapolis, who," he says, "having been attendants at Hiram and having acquired its spirit, are in hearty accord with President Rowlison and bid him Godspeed."

—The Foreign Society will make an effort this year to secure a special fund of $50,000 in personal offerings to provide necessary buildings in our foreign mission fields. Ten homes are most urgently needed for the new missionaries. This will require $2,000 each, or $20,000, including the land. Four hospitals are called for by the missionaries. These will cost about $2,500 each, or a total of $10,000. Also eight school buildings at a cost of $1,000 and twelve chapels at $1,000 each, or $12,000, making a grand total of $50,000. This seems like a large undertaking, but our brotherhood is equal to it. Send gifts to F. M. Rains, secretary, Box 884, Cincinnati, O. It may be that some friend would like to provide one of these buildings as a memorial. It must be remembered that a successful work costs money. As the work grows larger demands must be made for it. We have sent out thirty-three new missionaries in the past two years and the question of buildings is becoming a serious problem.

—"The Daily Arkansas Democrat," of Little Rock, brings us a report of the seventh anniversary of the pastorate of Bro. J. N. Jessup with the First Christian Church of that city. It was a happy day for the church in that city when Brother Jessup began his pastorate there. These seven years have been fruitful in splendid results. Following immediately after one of those stormy periods which the best of churches sometimes pass through, his ministry has borne the blessed fruits of peace and unity. Here is what he says of his relation with his people during his ministry: "What of these seven years? They have been years of peace and harmony. No strife, or contention, or bitterness, or jealousy has disturbed the quiet and peaceful life of the church. There is an entire absence of the 'rule or ruin' spirit, and there is a desire everywhere to fulfill the apostle's injunction, 'in honor preferring one another.' These have been years of peace because they have been years of positive affection. Love is the greatest thing in the world. A church's life is measured by it. Why should we not speak of our love today? You have loved me, I have loved you, and together we have loved our Savior and one another. 'By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another.'" Referring to what has been already achieved in the way of additions, etc., he adds: "If this condition of unity and spirit of fraternity continues, nothing can prevent the church from going on to yet greater things. What triumphs lie before us the future alone can measure, but we believe that the momentum already acquired will make future conquests comparatively easy. When another annual report is made it is our hope and expectation that it will contain an account of the actual progress and near consummation of our

A Princely Gift.

Man may prayerfully make plans, but God reserves the right of overruling them for the enhancement of the good they purpose and his own glory.

Last July the general secretary of the National Benevolent Association started to preach for Bro. E. B. Richey's congregation at Blandinsville, Ill. He felt greatly defeated when floods prevented his going further than Keokuk, Ia. But there Bro. J. W. Kilbourne (one of our "in-as-much" preachers) asked him to speak to his people about the gospel of the helping hand. Among the auditors on that rainy day was Bro. J. H. Parker. He seemed greatly interested, but left immediately after the benediction, without so much as speaking to the preacher. Though he said nothing, he was thinking much. He considered the necessity of a ministry of this character to the fulfillment of our plea for the restoration of apostolic Christianity; he believed Christian benevolence to be the best antidote for lodgeism, Christian Science and other cults diverting men from the Church of Christ; he saw these practical tender ministries would crimson what to myriads seem colorless theories of religion with the very heart's blood of Christ. He communicated these views to friends who effected a more personal meeting between the representative of the association and Brother Parker, with the result that on October 17, he gave $10,000 on the annuity plan.

Surely God overruled even the floods to sanctify this fortune for the relief of the poor and the extension of his kingdom.

Brother Parker is not widely known among the brethren; he has never attended a national convention nor been a church office bearer, but he reads our church papers and studies his Bible and reflects much on all things pertaining to the kingdom. His belief is that Christian benevolence is the most dynamic factor for overcoming the sentiment that Christianity is a mere theory of righteousness, but not a practical solution of this old world's weight of woe. His beliefs are not fetiches for cherishment merely, but are valued only for what they will do. His money followed his belief and his prayers.

This money will insure the erection of the new administration building for the St. Louis orphanage early in the spring. Its inspirational value will greatly assist in the establishment of the new homes in Georgia and California, and the opening of a new hospital in Cincinnati or some eastern city. We pray the Father to reveal to us more men of the spiritual grace of humble minded, noble souled J. H. Parker.

"The George Darsie Memorial Fund."

A Beautiful Tribute.

The church at Frankfort, Ky., has established a church extension memorial fund in memory of George Darsie, who was their pastor for more than a score of years. This is most fitting. Brother Darsie was, without doubt, the greatest friend that church extension had among our preachers. His church at Frankfort was the first among the churches to create a named loan fund in our church extension work. He made speeches for the Board of Church Extension at national and state conventions, in local churches and at our colleges. His last convention speech was at the Missouri state convention in Carrollton, June, 1904. J. A. Lord, editor of "The Christian Standard," and others who attend our national and state conventions, said it was the greatest speech they had heard during the last twenty-five years at any of our conventions. The subject was "The Good Sense of Church Extension." The address was given the middle of June, 1904. One month later, on Monday morning of July 17, he died. His death greatly shocked our entire brotherhood, and the sense of loss was universal. His voice had been heard in the noblest pleas for missions of every character at our national conventions for years and that voice was now silent. Silent! Not so. George Darsie's words shall live in the hearts of his brethren. This $5,000 memorial fund will answer "The Plea of the Homeless" and George Darsie will be housing our homeless brethren everywhere.

The Frankfort church might erect a marble shaft in the historic cemetery on the hill above their city "To the Memory of George Darsie," but in the creation of "The George Darsie Memorial Fund" in our church extension work they have done a nobler thing and one that would please him more if he could again speak to his church. Every ten years this fund will build from thirty to forty churches—monuments all to the memory of a man who pleaded for larger things for our homeless missions.

GEORGE DARSIE.

It is fitting to say here that the "Frankfort, Kentucky, Church Fund," established in our extension work in September, 1891, has built thirty-eight churches and has done the work of over $17,000. All this in fourteen years. This memorial fund is the second named fund created by the Frankfort church.

A named fund in church extension amounts to $5,000 and is created by an individual agreeing to pay $500 a year for ten years or a church paying not less than $300 a year. The Frankfort church started the memorial fund in October with an offering of $370. Their pastor is C. R. Hudson, a worthy successor of Brother Darsie.

be proper to approach him through you. I should like to have you call on him and have him make an apology about certain doctors and women." "Well," said I, "I don't think he will retract. I know him pretty well and I don't think he will apologize." "Well, you tell him what I said." "If it happens to come up I will tell him then," said I. "I suppose you're ready to fight. We don't fight, but we have the privilege. He won't retract. Dr. Burroughs deserved it and he got it and I approve."

While in the east our good Brother William Newcomer gave me $1,000 for the American Christian Missionary Society with the statement that he desired we should receive the full $100,000 for home missions. By this help the total receipts for home missions last year were $100,323.03. It is my prayer that the amount given for home missions may never again go below this line, but rather we must plan for larger things.

The appeals for help are the most earnest and pathetic we have ever read, and if our brethren knew the great opportunities before us they certainly would see to it that this work took no second place.

To this end I want to commend to all Sunday schools the observance of boys' and girls' rally day for home missions on the Lord's day before Thanksgiving. We have had prepared a delightful exercise which we will gladly send to all schools free of cost. Order at once.

DO GOOD

With your money and enjoy an income from it while you live by giving to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society on the ANNUITY PLAN. The income is large, uninterrupted, and certain for life. Interest is paid according to age of donor. There is no expense for repairs or taxes. A bond is given to insure prompt payment of interest, semi-annually. It is better than a government bond. Over two hundred gifts have been made, amounting to about $250,000. This plan is especially adapted to those fifty years of age, or older. Full particulars given upon request. Let us send you our illustrated booklet, free of charge.

Ministerial Exchange.

Churches or evangelists who desire the services of first-class song evangelists may address H. S. Saxton and wife at Troy, Ohio. They can be secured any time after Feb. 4, 1906.

THE CALL OF THE STATES

The State Mission Work as Related to the Foreign Society.

BY A. M'LEAN.

The state missionary societies are an integral and indispensable part of our missionary machinery. They are closer to the churches than the national societies can be. Because of this, they can do for the churches and for the work as a whole what the national societies can not do. The state secretary and his associates can visit most of the churches in the state in the year. On these visits information is imparted and objections answered. The claims of the missionary enterprise are pressed home to the hearts and consciences of the believers. As a result, churches that stood aloof are brought into sympahty and led to co-operate. Whatever helps one department of the work is bound to help every department. Let a church begin to pray for missions and to give for missions at home, and it will very soon be praying and giving for missions in the regions beyond.

In the state and district conventions the work as a whole is presented and emphasized. The secretaries realize that, while in one sense their field is their state, in another very important sense their field is the world. Their own work can not be prosecuted most effectively unless it has the whole creation as its background. The state secretaries feel that no program is symmetrical and complete that does not sound the note of universality. It could hardly be otherwise, seeing that all the great missionary texts have a world-wide significance. They contemplate nothing less than "the earth," "the whole world," "all nations." Christ's gracious and eternal purpose embraced the entire human family. The state secretaries understand that if they should attempt to confine their thought and sympathy and effort exclusively to their own states they would run directly counter to the intention of God and hinder and destroy the very work they are engaged to promote. They can do their own work best only when they are in fullest sympathy with Christ's program for humanity, and when they do what is in their power that his program may be realized.

Moreover, churches planted and assisted by the state societies will be missionary churches through and through. It will be almost impossible for them to be either opposed or indifferent. Having tasted of the Word of God and the power of the world to come, they can but be anxious that all men elsewhere should share with them in their privileges and joys. Such churches know the value of help in time of need, and they will be disposed to render aid to the extent of their ability.

The state societies have done very much for the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. Without their generous assistance the work abroad could not have attained its present proportions. The good Lord bless every state secretary and abundantly prosper the work of the different state societies.

California.

California has a population of 1,500,000, scattered over an area equal in extent to that of New York, New Jersey, Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut and Ohio. Unless all signs fail, here upon this coast is to be a great empire. If the present rate of immigration continues, our wisest men are predicting that California will have a population of ten millions in the next twenty-five years. And who knows but what this will be the terminus of our civilization for the next thousand or fifteen hundred years. Yea, who knows but that the "course of empire" will pause here in this beautiful land to test the efficiency of our religion in the final adjustment of those problems that have hitherto baffled the race?

Now is the time to plant the kingdom of God in this state. Already we have ninety churches, with an aggregate membership of about ten thousand. But there are still twenty counties north of Tehachapi without a single church bearing the name of Christ. These have a population of about one hundred thousand. First and last we are not reaching more than one out of every fifteen of our population. Think of it! Fourteen hundred thousand people in Californa we can not reach with our present equipment.

Our state board has started out this year to raise five thousand dollars. Our annual offering comes on the first Lord's day in November. Let the song, "California for Christ," ring as never before; and when the time of the offering comes, let every one of our ten thousand members come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

Florida.

In spite of yellow fever and prostrating heat, three evangelists have been kept in the field by the state board, two mission points supplied and a number of new congregations organized. Now that danger from fever is about passed, and cooler days have come, there will be added zeal displayed.

Pensacola: There are two congregations here. One of them, the strong one, opposes organized mission work. The weaker one is only waiting for yellow fever to get out of the way to begin a campaign with O. P. Spiegel as evangelist, through which it is hoped a permanent footing may be gained. There are few more important fields in Florida.

Miami: Our young Chrysostom, Andrew M. Chisolm, has just concluded a meeting in this growing city, resulting in the organization of a congregation that gives promise of aggressive work. Professors, doctors, etc., those trained to lead, are among the members. Let the tourists who flock to Miami this winter identify themselves with this congregation.

Lakeland: Under the preaching of Evangelist T. A. Cox, a splendid nucleus has been brought together, and a formal organization will be entered into some time in November. Brother Cox and the writer will follow the organization with a meeting.

Kissimmee: Pastor Rayner has returned from a successful soliciting tour in the north and east, and now has the money needed to complete the Kissimmee building. They will dedicate November 5, and Bro. B. Q. Denham, now of Auburndale, will lead the forces in a meeting.

St. Petersburg: Through the kindness of a wealthy brother in Tennessee, who spends his winters in St. Petersburg, they will be enabled to double the seating capacity of their building at once. New seats have been ordered and Pastor Montgomery enters upon the second year of his work with sanguine anticipations.

Ocala and McPherson: Evangelist White quits the field to locate with these congregations. Both are points of much importance and need the care Brother White is capable of giving them. He will be succeeded as evangelist by Brother Simpson, of Lexington, Ky, who comes from the Bible College and is strongly endorsed by J. W. McGarvey.

Tampa: A great town and a rapidly growing congregation. The pastor is just concluding his second year's work. Tourists need no longer look for the unpainted frame building in which the congregation formerly met, but for the handsome brick building on Sixth and Florida avenues, where they will be given just the same hearty welcome formerly received in the old building.

Jacksonville: J. T. Boone is still at the helm. His beautiful stone building and 600 earnest workers show what can be done in Florida by persistent, prayerful effort.

Georgia.

Georgia has 2,325,000 inhabitants. The Disciples have not over 140 organizations that can be called churches, or about one church to each county in the state. We have about 14,000 members, or about one to each 166 of the population. Georgia has 60,000 homes without a Bible, 165 towns of from 500 to 15,000 people where we have no church after the New Testament pattern. More than half of her counties are as yet unreached by our plea for the restoration of the primitive gospel.

She is truly the "empire state of the south." Her material wealth is vast and increasing. Her culture is a power. Her spiritual potentiality is almost unlimited. Her worldly enterprise in every way is noticeable. To lay these under tribute for the spread of the pure gospel is the object of organized mission work in this state. To this end the Georgia Missionary Society, incorporated under the laws of the state, is doing all that it can for the conversion of her thousands.

The policy of our board of missions has been for two years that of strengthening the weak and saving the dying churches. Of these we have many. They are, indeed, shepherdless flocks. Until they rally, aggressive work will be seriously hindered. We are helping this year: Monroe, Howells, Tallapoosa, Green Valley, Franklin Field, and the middle Georgia, south Georgia, Savannah, western, north Georgia and Griffin districts.

Our state evangelist, W. J. Cocke, has been working hard all the year. His work has been that of educating and agitating along missionary lines; raising money, holding meetings and institutes. Besides, we have employed nine other men for all or part of their time in the various fields. We hope to make fine reports at our coming convention, Athens, Ga., November 6. Prominence has been given to all our regular missionary days.

Last year we raised $3,106.81 and had 534 additions. This is most excellent in this conservative field. Twenty-two protracted meetings were held and each addition cost us $5.82. We are assisting the "Southern Evangelist" to the extent of $300, in order that we may have a state paper.

In addition to the regular state society, we have the C. W. B. M. doing a splendid work at several points in the state. The Georgia Educational Society is gathering money to send young men to college, preparing them for the ministry. We have some eight at Lexington and had twenty-seven at Kimberlin Heights before the fire. The W. S. G. M., a state organization of the women, is also doing good work.

Our state board has taken charge of and turned over to the National Benevolent Association the Baldwin property of several buildings and some fifty acres of land. While we are not doing all we can, yet we feel that we are making some progress and the Lord is blessing us.

Our board will recommend to the state convention the employment of a regular financial secretary for the coming year. They will also suggest that we take hold of the centers of population, locating men there, and that we evangelize the rural districts in the summer months. They will also recommend the selection of some permanent place for the holding of our annual conventions each year.

We are hoping great things for Georgia and we believe God will give them.

W. J. Cocke, Cor. Sec.

Idaho.

About three months ago I arrived in the capital city of Idaho—Boise. Away back in my schoolboy days, as in my days of pedagogy, we pronounced it "Boy*see*," but out here, at least, whatever the books and pedagogues may say, it is universally pronounced Boise—hard s and short e—and the term city has fallen into "innocuous desuetude."

For years I have longed to cross the Rockies and see what lay on the other side. "To ascend in graceful curves" these mountains in a cushioned chair on a palace sleeper, while traveling at the rate of thirty miles an hour, wherein one can hold in his hand a glass "filled to the brim" without spilling, may be a trip devoutly to be desired. But to rock along in a caboose, to be jerked and thumped and bumped, slapped in the face by window casings when you are very desirous to see Pike's Peak, or some other peak; to be suddenly thrown clear off the seat onto a hot stove, or have bread, meat, potatoes or hash "red hot" or hot coffee thrown all over you—well, I believe even old Job would have lost his reputation for patience under such circumstances. From Boise to Knox is about 110 miles, and the road is rough and rugged. On this road, north by a little east from Boise, about seventy miles, is where Mr. Bennett, of W. J. Bryan fame, was dashed to death much quicker than it takes to tell it. The very snag against which he was crushed is pointed out to the passers-by. It is said on reaching the top of the mountains many passengers were disposed to complain of the awful roughness of the trip and the carelessness of the driver. Mr. Bennett pleasantly remarked, "The trip is worth a lifetime." In less than fifteen minutes he was dead. Well, "I have traveled about a bit in my time" and thought I had seen some rough country in the east, north and south, but I now give it up. It looks to me just like nature saved all her rough remnants in creation and "dumped" them en masse in Colorado, Wyoming and Idaho. To describe these mountains and canyons would tax the genius of Henry Watterson or Murat Halstead. A few miles out from Boise the huge "pine forests" begin and continue about three or four hundred miles. The hills and hillsides are covered thick with yellow hard pine, and the valleys are covered with what they call "Black Jack pine." These, beginning at the ground, are from about four inches to 12 inches think, and the larger rear their lofty heads one hundred or more feet in the air, and until near the top they are without limbs, save a few dead ones; and like the Kansas "big sunflower," they "nod and bend in the breezes." To a man who sees only outward appearances, the people who occupy these "rocks and hills and brooks and vales" seem as rough and rugged as the face of the country they occupy. In fact, many of their habits are not commendable. It seems likely that that Chinaman who said or wrote (or the citizen who did it for him), "Me chew, me smoke, me spit, me swear, just like Melican man," got his idea by going over the road from Boise to "Thunder Mountain" or Roosevelt, the mountain and "city of gold." And yet away down deep in their hearts, in spite of this rough exterior, they are as sociable, as clever, as generous a set as ever breathed the pure air "in the land of the free and the home of the brave."

Boise is a city of some pretensions, with a population, I should think, of 20,000. It has buildings that would be creditable in Wichita or Oklahoma City, if not in Kansas City. It has a hotel which must have cost $200,000 or more, and the M. E. church house is one of the most magnificent buildings of the kind I have seen anywhere. It cost over $50,000.

The Boiseites are now clearing the ground for a new state house, which is to be in keeping with the environments. The old building is hardly so magnificent as one would wish or expect to see in such a thriving city as Boise.

This is the country of sheep raising and mining especially, with little attention paid to agriculture, so far as I have seen. The season is entirely too short and cold for corn, hence I have not seen a sign of the "golden ear" in the state. Nor have I seen any wheat growing. Oats and grasses for hay and pasture are the staple products. As for mines and miners, sheep and sheepmen, "the woods are full of them."

It is about sixty miles from here to Roosevelt and during most of the year everything is freighted there by pack horses and mules; this owing to the snow. It frosted three times the last week in June and several times in July.

This is not only a state of magnificent mountain scenery, but also of magnificent rivers and small streams. I think the railroad follows Snake river about 300 miles from Montpelier to near Boise and then come Boise and Payette, and still farther north the Salmon river. Knox (alias Transfer) is on or near the head waters of the south fork of Salmon. In all these and all their tributaries the water is clear as crystal and cold as ice. This last statement is especially true of the small mountain streams. Ice would add little, or nothing, to their temperature.

I have found a good many Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma people out here and they all like it, or else they do a great deal of "whistling to keep their courage up." So far as I am concerned it will take considerable "whistling" for a while yet, at least.

So far as churches are concerned there are none between here and Boise, save at Ola, sixty miles south, and at Thunder City, twenty-five miles from here. The M. E.'s have churches at both places. But our people and the Baptists are absolutely unknown in all these regions.

Knox, Idaho. H. W. Robertson.

Illinois Notes.

At the beautiful little city of Polo, in Northern Illinois, the first district established a church about a year and a half ago. It numbers about sixty members of splendid people. B. H. Sealock, a graduate of Eureka College, is the devoted pastor. F. G. Tyrrell, of Chicago, was holding a meeting. He was delivering great sermons, but the people were not yielding to the claims of the gospel. We are occupying the Baptist church, a commodious building well suited to our wants for the present. All special days for our great enterprises are faithfully observed and liberal offerings are made. The various auxiliaries are introduced as rapidly as possible, and all seem happy in the Lord's work. Brother Sealock has shown his wisdom in selecting one of Eureka's noblest daughters for his wife, in the person of Miss Irene Ridgley, who has served so efficiently as superintendent of Junior work in our state. Her scholarship, experience and Christian spirit eminently fit her for her new and responsible position. The preacher's wife has much to do in his success or failure.

At Dixon we found J. F. Stone busy in the King's business. He is successfully planning and carrying forward the financial work of the church, which is often such a difficult task. He expects to have Brother Harlow with him in a meeting soon, which, if we mistake not, will wake Dixon up to the religious and spiritual possibilities before it. The church is harmonious and consecrated and has, we believe, a great future in that growing city.

After some six months' residence in Sterling, Bro. J. W. Johnson is getting well into the work. This is a splendid church, with all departments in full force. It is unusually blessed with young people, several of whom attend Eureka College. The church has sent out several preachers, among whom are S. H. Zendt, now minister at Oskaloosa, Ia., and L. O. Lehman, our preacher at Havana, Ill, both graduates of Eureka College. If churches generally patronized our own colleges they would be stronger, and far more men would enter the Christian ministry.

UNDERWEAR FOR WINTER.

The "Vellastic" Marks a Revolution in the Comfort and Cost of Underwear.

Men and women who are accustomed to regard winter as a period of colds, rheumatism and discomfort, will appreciate the new kind of underwear that is fast coming into use. It is known as Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleece Underwear, and unites low price with high value.

This underwear is exactly what its name implies—rib and fleece. That is, the rib runs lengthwise and the fleece is knitted in crosswise, thus combining warmth and elasticity.

No ordinary washing will shrink Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleece in form or size. Its soft down and elastic nature remain uninjured.

Outdoor men especially appreciate the snug-fitting protection of Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleece, preferring it to any other. Men's and women's garment's 50c each.

Boys', girls' and children's separate garments are 25c, union suits 50c.

At Walnut F. A. Sword was in a good meeting. J. W. Marshall had been helping him some three weeks. After he left Brother Sword was continuing night after night, as the people were still making confession. About thirty had been added to the church. This is a most excellent public-spirited church, with a live, energetic pastor. Here W. F. Shaw, now of Chicago, labored five years, and J. R. Golden, of Gibson, two years, besides other able men. The church was organized in 1892 and has about 275 members, with 150 enrolled in the Sunday school.

At New Bedford, also in Bureau county, Bro. J. Fred Smith is about closing a very successful pastorate of two years. He left Eureka College after graduating in 1896. He has held pastorates at Carlock and Arrowsmith. He found a church at New Bedford of sixty-five members, and leaves 160. The church property has been improved to the amount of about $4,000, all of which is provided except some $400. There is a good aid society of thirty-five, Christian Endeavor of forty, Junior of twenty-five, and Sunday school enrolling 130. This is a fine record and he will not long wait for a location.

At Yorktown we have an excellent country church. It numbers eighty-six substantial members, with a Sunday school enrollment of 100. The C. W. B. M. is active and the Christian Endeavor faithful. Miss Myrtle Verry is preaching for the church and leading it in spiritual work. This is another example of how a church in the country can live and do good work for the Master if there be the right spirit and purpose.

At Putnam, D. J. Howe, a college student, is preaching for the church half time. He is giving excellent satisfaction. The day I was there he baptized a man 78 years old. He is getting all departments of the work into good order. This church is unconscious of its great power. When it gets hold of the great enterprises of the Church with a consecration to our Lord and his work according to ability its influence will be felt far and wide for good.

The faithful little church at Henry is doing well under half preaching by Brother Nichols, an energeic and efficient student of Eureka College. It is a difficult field, but we have a good house and a number of faithful families. Faithfulness and sacrifice will win here as well as elsewhere.

New students are enrolling still in the college, and classes are getting well under way. A fine lecture course is being provided for the fall and winter. Several workmen are busy about the college buildings making repairs and improvements.

Prof. Wm. L. Tomlins, director of the Tomlins School of Music, Chicago, spent a day in Eureka recently, greatly to the delight of students and citizens. He gave a special lesson to the public in the daytime and lectured on "The Philosophy of Music" at night. It is the purpose of the college to have frequent visits of eminent men to Eureka, that our young people may know them and be profited by their knowledge.

Indiana.

Out of the 970 churches in our state only 490 have given to missions and 480 have not given to missions at all. Where is the effective missionary preacher to come from, who will be able to teach them, except the state society send him? And how can we send men without money to support them? Where are the offerings to come from for all the other enterprises of the Church, except they come from these churches planted and made self-sustaining by the state missionary society? Do we want to see the offerings to ministerial relief, church extension, education, benevolence, C. W. B. M., American missions and foreign missions increased? How shall we accomplish it better than to make these o-missionary or anti-missionary churches—490 of them in Indiana—co-operative in world-wide evangelism.

Every state mission church, as soon as it becomes self-supporting, becomes a world-wide missionary church. Hence it is potentially three churches—one in Indiana, one in America and one in the foreign field. This can not be said of other fields as it can be said of our state work in America. No other fields are so rich and so ripe.

We can judge the tree by its fruits. Last year for each $1.53 expended from our Indiana treasury in the work of evangelism and sustaining missionaries, a soul was won to Christ. There were 1,326 added to the churches under the direction of our state workers last year in Indiana. When Ohio raises $18,000, Kentucky $24,000, Illinois $11,000 and Indiana only $3,400 for state missions, do you not see that we are asking our state workers to "make bricks without straw," and are shamefully and sinfully neglecting the ripest mission field in the world?

FIELDS, FACTS AND FORCES IN INDIANA.

1. On an average, four towns of from 300 to 1,000 inhabitants in each of the ninety-two counties, or 368 towns, are without the Church for which we plead.

2. On an average, one city of from 1,000 to 20,000 inhabitants in each county, or ninety-two cities, are without a church of Christ.

3. There are fourteen county seats without a church of Christ. In all of these there are "scattered" Disciples of Christ sending to the state secretary Macedonian calls.

4. In the 2,500,000 population in Indiana there are 132,000 members in the churches of Christ, or one-nineteenth of the population is in our membership.

5. There are now 970 churches in the state. Of these 490 gave to missions somewhere in the world last year, and 480 did not give.

6. One of the greatest works that could be done for world-wide missions in Indiana would be to redeem these churches from the o-missionary or the anti-missionary spirit and enlist them in co-operative evangelism.

7. Last year 307 churches in Indiana gave to foreign missions $17,571.62, 203 churches gave to American missions $7,977.97 and only 133 churches give $3,445.75 to Indiana missions.

8. There are now 881 Sunday schools in Indiana. Last year 399 of these gave to foreign missions $5,477.25, 96 Sunday schools gave to American missions $991.82, and three Sunday schools gave to state missions $15!

9. There were 475 Senior and 265 Junior Societies of Christian Endeavor, last year, which gave to foreign missions in Indiana $1,037.67, and 34 societies gave to American missions $203.99, and three societies gave to Indiana missions $23!

If we fail to cultivate the state fields we will fail to increase our seed-wheat with which to sow the fields beyond.

Let every church remember November day (November 5) with the greatest offering in our history, where every dollar will do the greatest possible good to the greatest possible number.

J. O. Rose, State Cor. Sec.

Indian Territory.

A. J. Bush, for fifteen years state evangelist of Texas, said at our last annual convention that he had never known more work to be accomplished with an equal amount of money. The past summer has been the most remarkable in our history. More than one hundred have been added by baptism and more than a hundred otherwise at mission points. Two churches have been organized since our convention and several fields have been supplied with preachers.

Bro. T. F. Richardson, of Hope, Ark., goes to the Duncan-Ninnekah field; Bro. T. R. Campbell and wife, of Missouri, have already begun work at Holdenville; and Bro. K. A. Williams, of Illinois, has begun work at Tishomingo. The Davis work was revived during July by a great meeting held by A. C. Parker, resulting in seventy added and Brother Harris, of Texas, located at that point.

Ardmore, for several months pastorless, has just extended a welcome to Bro. S. H. Holmes and family. Poteau has called Brother Mitchell from Mississippi, and we understand he has accepted. R. E. Rosenstein recently took hold of the work at Bartlesville; Geo. H. Farley began to serve the Muskogee church the first of July, while S. Hawkins, of Pryor Creek, and A. J. Williams, of Vinita, have been in their respective fields only a few months.

Randolph Cook changed from Vinita to Tulsa the first of August, and A. M. Harrol from Weleetka to Sapulpa, and Broken Arrow a little later. Of the above named preachers, nine have been added to our Indian Territory forces, while we lost only five from the territory, thus making a net gain of four, or nearly fifty per cent above our loss in this matter.

These brethren came to us highly recommended and are making fine impressions in their respective fields. Our ministry in Indian Territory has increased a hundred per cent in the past eighteen months, in numbers, and probably three hundred per cent in efficiency.

Everything at this writing points to this as by all means the most successful year's work we have ever witnessed in this territory. It is wonderful what God hath wrought in this strange but fascinating land. As I write these lines here in the capital of the Seminole nation, the last national council is being held. History is being born; changes are taking place that mean much to this land; the future is full of promise.

S. R. Hawkins, Cor. Sec.

Iowa.

State missions should receive the sympathy and loyal support of every minister of the gospel and every man and woman interested in the local or general interests of the church, for the reason that state missions touch our Christian activities as does no other division of our co-operative church work. It matters not how well our home land is evangelized there will always be a great opportunity and need for state missions. Weak congregations, like the poor, we will always have with us to rightfully claim our sympathy and our support. State missions is the strong arm of our work that supplies this need, without which many of our weak churches would languish and die. The ceaseless changing of people from place to place, the lack of competent leadership and the sharp competition with the denominations make it necessary to give some kind of assistance to about one-tenth of our congregations each year. Again, the cause of New Testament Christianity has suffered at our hands on account of the ultra congregational spirit that has characterized too many of our churches. State missions endeavors to link the churches together in a co-operative effort that will be mutually helpful to both weak and strong.

HOW ONE OF OUR READERS MADE $131.40 IN TWO MONTHS.

Dear Editor:—I thought I would write and tell you how I cleared for myself $131.40 in two months. I had such fine success in using Mother's Non-Alcoholic Flavoring Extracts in my cooking that all my friends began to inquire how it was my cakes and desserts generally had such a delicate flavor. Upon my telling them about these new extracts, many insisted that I should get them some. The superior results these flavoring powders bring about, for they come in a powder form and are therefore non-alcoholic, so increased the demand for the goods that no other extracts are now used in this town. I wrote the makers, A. Gross & Co., 910 Bailey Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa., and they gave me the exclusive agency for their goods here. I wrote my sister Martha, who lives in Lakeville, about the easy money I was making and she tells me that since she started introducing the powders, she has made $10.00 a week extra right along and it only took about an hour a day to do the work. I believe any woman can do as well if she will only try and I wish you would advise any of your subscribers who want to make a little extra money to write Gross & Co. about their proposition and learn how easy it is to make a few extra dollars occasionally.

Yours very truly,
Mary R.

Conditions are such that it is almost out of the question to establish a new congregation without the financial assistance and prestige of state missions. When a new field is entered with the assistance of state missions it focalizes the power of the brotherhood of the state in such a way as to stimulate the brethren to their best efforts and win the confidence of the people.

State missions provides the base of supplies for all our missionary, benevolent and educational interests. It is our missionary

Dr. Blosser, the noted catarrh specialist of Atlanta, Ga., is the discoverer of a wonderful remedy for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrhal Deafness. He has decided to send free a trial package of his remedy to any sufferer who will write him.

This remedy is a harmless, pleasant vegetable compound, which is burned on a plate, or smoked in a pipe or cigarette. It contains no tobacco. The medicated smoke vapor being inhaled, reaches directly the mucous membranes lining the head, nose, throat and lungs, making a radical and permanent cure.

Kansas.

Keokuk, from whom the city of Keokuk, Ia., takes its name, was a famous Indian chieftain. He and his tribe were forced westward by the irresistible march of the white man, finally settling in the limits of what is now Kansas. Chafing under the encroachments of the paleface, and nursing the delusion that they were able to regain the territory lost beyond the Father of Waters, they urged the old chief to lead them forth to battle, as in former days. Keokuk, who knew too well the hopelessness of such an excursion, gave his consent in the following language: "You know, my braves, it is my duty to lead you forth to battle wherever you desire to go, and if you wish to cross the Father of Waters and engage the paleface in battle to regain the land of our fathers, I will lead you, but before we go, let us kill our wives and children, our fathers and mothers, all those who are dependent upon us for support, for when we cross the Great River we shall never return."

The wise old chieftain knew the task was a hopeless one. It was never undertaken. Keokuk died and was buried in this same territory, near where the town of Chase now stands. Afterward his bones were removed to Keokuk, Iowa, where a marble shaft, standing on a high bluff overlooking the "Father of Waters," marked their resting place. As the light fades out of the western sky after the setting of the sun, so the red man is fading from the land of his nativity, for the sun of his power and glory has gone down, to rise no more. Everywhere the sad lament is heard. Could the waters speak, as they flow softly past the base of the cliff on which repose the ashes of Keokuk; could the hills of Missouri and the plains of Kansas be given the power of speech; could the sighing winds in their restless sweep be given a voice—all would repeat the prophetic words of Keokuk, "We shall never return."

But the cry of defeat has been changed to the shout of victory. Where the red man failed the white man has succeeded. The red man has given place to a race more worthy —more worthy because of having received the things of God and used them aright, a more intelligent worship, and a truer service. The white race is being led forth to engage in a battle—a battle where the weapons are not carnal but spiritual. Nevertheless, the conflict is real. The Leader in this conflict is one who has never sounded the note of retreat. Those who follow him shall wear the victor's crown. The power of this Leader is realized by all classes of men as never before.

In the Sunflower state the Disciples of Christ are pressing on to victory. The army is equipped and is being marshaled for the campaign this fall. The captains are drilling their companies for the hand-to-hand conflict which is to begin on November 5 and continue throughout the month, or until the victory is won. This is to be in the form of a rally for the purpose of rousing the membership of the churches to the support of state missions. The indications are that this will be the greatest year yet, and the preachers of the state are taking hold as never before. The rally cry is: "Eight Thousand Dollars and Eight Thousand Souls this Missionary Year." As stewards of the Lord's bounty we should be ashamed to raise a less sum than this. The supplies for Kansas day, such as leaflets, pastoral letters and collection envelopes, will be furnished free by addressing the state office. Our net gain in membership last year was 5,000.

And now the campaign is opened. Let it not cease with the raising of a few dollars for state work. Let the preachers preach; let the singers sing; let the people pray; let the multitudes rejoice in the mercy of God. May we labor night and day for the saving of the Sunflower state. Let the stragglers fall into line, let the ranks fill up, let every one gird himself for the fray, and let the entire army move in a mighty phalanx upon the strongholds of sin, and never cease until the walls shall fall down flat.

Kentucky.

Our sixty-fifth annual convention at Maysville took such action with reference to our future work as, if carried out, will enable us to speak of our state work as "greater Kentucky missions."

Aside from all the special mission stations, more than twenty in number, and our present evangelistic force, we are to support a strong evangelist who can be used in any field. We are instructed to lend help in sustaining a minister of the Word at both Hazel Green and Morehead, the educational work of our National Christian Woman's Board of Missions. The entire contribution of the Louisville churches is to be used for the much-needed and important work in south Louisville. Two additional evangelists are to be employed for mountain work. A strong and tactful man is to be employed to solicit large gifts for state work, to be used as an endowment fund. These plans for new work mean the expenditure of about as much as our churches have been giving for this work. This does not make any provision for the important work and useful men already being supported. It is evident, therefore, that the only thing to be done is to raise about double the amount of money we have been giving, for the old work demands about the same expenditure as the new that has been outlined. There is nothing impossible about this. The same generosity towards this that we showed last year to the great work of foreign missions will accomplish this. The demands of our field are great, the doors of opportunity are wide open, the cry for help comes up from almost every section of our state and we must be hard of heart indeed if we do not respond when our starving neighbors beg for bread, the bread of life. We plead with the Kentucky brotherhood to make "greater Kentucky missions" a reality by coming up mightily to its help November 5, 1905.

Michigan.

"The evangelization of Michigan in this generation" is the motto I would write over the pulpit of every church of Christ in Michigan, and upon the heart of every Christian in Michigan. There are more than two and one-half millions of people in Michigan, but only nine thousand that are Christians only. There are ten thousand saloon keepers in Michigan, but only sixty-five men who are giving themselves to preaching "the faith once for all delivered to the saints." Satan has his temples in every city, village, hamlet and country place, where he does business seven days in the week, day and night, their number is legion, but in all the state of Michigan there are but 111 places where the simple and unadulterated gospel of Christ is preached, and in many of these only at rare intervals. There are hundreds of cities and villages in Michigan where the plea of the Church of Christ has never been heard; there are millions of people in Michigan who have never heard a full gospel preached; and more than this, a million people die in Michigan every generation without hope in Christ. We need twelve hundred more churches and one thousand more preachers than we have to reap the harvest in Michigan and save it from eternal loss. Our forces are entirely inadequate to the demands. Men of Israel, help. If there is a man that can be spared from any other field come over into Michigan and help us. Truly the harvest is great and the laborers are few.

SPECTACLES ABANDONED

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures Afflictions of the Eye Without Cutting or Drugging

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. There is no risk or experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. Below we print extracts from testimonials—such as are received by us daily:

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 73 years old, I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kan., writes: "My honest opinion of Actina is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It cured my eyes, and cured my wife of asthma."

Hundreds of other testimonials can be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial, postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 203B, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Disease in General.

We are expecting the churches of Michigan to rally to this work as they have never done before. The first Lord's day in November should be made a high day by our Michigan churches. No other missionary day in the whole year means so much to Michigan Disciples as this day. The greatest contribution that Michigan Disciples can make to the salvation of the world is to save Michigan—save Michigan, not for Michigan's sake alone, but save Michigan for the world's sake. Let every church fall into line, and let every member of every church make an offering for this work. Then will the deserts be made to blossom, the dead will be brought to life, the sick will be healed, the weak will be made strong and the command of our Master to "preach the gospel to every creature" will be obeyed.

We are working for 2,000 additions to our churches this year. We hope to finish paying the debt that has been hanging about our necks like a millstone. We hope to have at least fifty churches on the roll of honor. A church is placed on the roll of honor when it pays its apportionment in full. We must raise our standard of giving for Michigan missions. Last year Michigan Disciples gave an agerage of $1.49 for all missions and an average of $12.92 for all purposes. This is greater than the average of any other state in the union. But last year Michigan Disciples gave an average of but 13 cents for Michigan missions. Our aim this year is to make our offering average 50 cents per member for Michigan missions.

Do not fail to take the offering in No-

Mississippi.

We have in Mississippi nearly 2,000,000 souls, each one known to God and precious in his sight. For a score of years our state evangelist has had before him the impossible task of evangelizing this vast number. Our churches are few and weak, often over 100 miles apart, in the southern and western part of the state.

The Mississippi Valley Railroad traverses the entire state from Tennessee to Louisiana, crossing the famous "Delta," and in a distance of 400 miles there are only two churches with any regular services, one having a minister for full time and the other for one-fourth time. What a pity these cotton kings of the Delta don't belong to the King of kings, and that their kingly estates are not consecrated to rebuilding the shattered walls of his Jerusalem! We could take the Delta if we had the money and the men.

Then there is the Northeastern Railroad, from New Orleans to Meridian, over 200 miles. Only one church in all this distance and it has no preacher. The greatest pine lumber mills on earth are in this belt. In the whole state we have about twenty active white preachers. A hundred churches exist only by struggle, and a less liberal people than we have in Mississippi would hardly keep these churches living by a struggle. I know whereof I speak. Churches in the states further north of us can learn much from Mississippi on the subject of giving.

So much for the dark side of the picture. Don't look at it too long. The evangelist looked at it till his eyes refused to see, his heart ached, his body wasted and he laid himself down to die. God has raised him up and he hopes to help change it from "darkness unto light." Now for the bright side: We have, perhaps, the grandest body of preachers Mississippi ever had—strong, able, self-sacrificing fellows. We have the most liberal people on earth. The people have a mind to work; they need leaders. The state board will go to Water Valley convention, November 6, out of debt, with a few hundred in the treasury to begin the new year with, and with a goodly number of additions to report.

We are planning for a simultaneous campaign next spring and confidently expect a thousand additions as a result of this.

H. W. Phares, Cor. Sec.
McComb, Miss.

Missouri.

1. To raise $10,000 for the regular work for this year.

2. To raise $10,000 for the permanent fund, thus making sure of the $5,000 offered by Bro. R. A. Long, on the condition that $15,000 is raised by the board for this fund for July 1, 1906. Nearly $6,000 of the $15,000 has been raised. A failure to succeed in this would be Missouri's disgrace.

3. To secure a net increase of 10,000 additions to the churches in the state from June 1, 1905, to June 1, 1906. This is a glorious desire. Help us to realize it.

4. To continue the missionary pastors already at work and largely increase their number. Many strategic points have either no church at all or one so weak as to be utterly unworthy to stand for so great a people. St. Charles is a sample of the one and Cape Girardeau of the other. Both places are calling loudly for the help which only the state board can give, and it can give it only as its treasury is enlarged.

5. The state has been districted into seven divisions, St. Louis and Kansas City one each, three on the south of the river and two on the north. The board wishes to place a first-class evangelist in each of these districts outside the cities and to co-operate with the city mission boards of St. Louis and Kansas City in the employment of such a man, or such men, as their fields require. Two of these men, Alfred Munyon in the north, and Joseph Gaylor in the southeast part of the state, are now at work; but the territory is utterly beyond their power to cover. Alfred Munyon now has a list of thirty places which are begging and pleading for him to come to their assistance and Brother Gaylor is alike overwhelmed.

6. To organize the counties and through these organizations to effect such a grouping of churches as shall bring all under pastoral care with the least expense and travel to the preacher in charge and thus secure for the churches that care and oversight without which they must either perish or else eke out a miserable existence that will bring shame to the cause we love.

7. Through these county organizations to do very much evangelistic work. Money is now being raised in the county conventions by which a man is put in charge of one or two weak churches and the rest of his time he gives to holding meetings where needed and planting such missions as in the judgment of the county board may seem wise.

8. Hundreds of miles of new railroad have been built in the last few years; new towns are springing up, and these must have the gospel preached within them. Your board needs some pioneers, minute men, emergency men. We want to employ them that this much needed work may be done. A greatly increased offering will help us do this; indifference on the part of preachers or churches will make it impossible.

We hope some day to see the same unity prevail in our mission work in Missouri as prevails in other states. Every mission organization in the state, whether city, county or district, should be an integral part of the state mission work. This is true in every other state. If this were true Missouri would be making such a showing as would make our hearts rejoice.

We call upon every congregation in the state to join with us in this effort now by raising the largest offering for state missions ever taken. We submit that it is unfair, in the highest degree, at the state convention to pass resolutions demanding that the work be enlarged and then when the means for this enlargement are called for, they are withheld. It is not possible for our state board to make bricks without straw, and it is unjust to demand it.

Does the program laid down suit you? Are you anxious to see it carried out? Does it rest upon your heart as a heavy burden? Will you pray that we may succeed? Will you co-operate with us in this effort we are making to do a work worthy of so great a people with so noble a cause and so glorious a leader?

Nebraska.

This name once stood in the minds of people farther east for hard times, blizzards and grasshoppers. Now it is synonymous with prosperity, growth and progress. Cities have replaced the villages of twenty years ago. Fine residences and large public buildings are the rule rather than the exception. It is a question whether the churches are keeping abreast of the advance in other things. For the Disciples of Christ it may be said that we are growing steadily, but at no unusual rate. We are making up for time lost years ago, when our towns were small and young. Neglect, then, has cost and is costing us thousands of dollars.

We are just now at the door of another opportunity, which, if lost, means more work of the same kind that we are now doing. In the western part of the state, in Sioux and Scotts Bluff counties, a great irrigation system is being worked out by the government. This, when in operation, will make thousands of acres of now unsettled country as rich as any in the state. The inevitable result is that a large number of settlers are taking up this land, and among them are known to be many Disciples from the eastern portion of Nebraska, and doubtless there will be others from other sections. We have two small houses and one living congregation in that region. We have scattered brethren there also. It remains for us to be with the advance on these new fields, so that our work may be done at the time of the formation of the life of the community, rather than after it has been formed. We ought to plant several churches to take care of our own people who are going there this fall.

Note a few of the open doors that have appealed to us for the assistance needed: Big Springs, on the U. P. Railroad, has a number of brethren that would be glad to be organized. At North Platte a struggling mission church has about completed a neat house. They must have help for a few years to sustain preaching. This is a town of over 4,000 population. Attention has been called to Sutton, a town of 1,500 in Clay county, as a hopeful field for our work. At Norfolk, a considerable town and junction point, we have a goodly number of brethren. We must reorganize there this winter. An appeal comes from Pender, in Thurston county, a town of 1,100 people and a county seat. We have a few members here waiting for the coming of the evangelist. We have some staunch people at Genoa, and also at Fullerton, in Nance county. The church at Tekamah has lost its building and ceased to meet. We could get the house back on easy terms, and the work ought to be redeemed. The rapidly growing suburb of Omaha, Florence, has a house and recently the North Side Church of Omaha has started a mission there. This place will need strengthening right away. We could organize a little congregation at Strang, where a short meeting was held last winter by a near by preacher. There is not a living congregation in thirty-four of the counties of the state. We could organize a score of churches in six months with comparative ease. We need more men to care for them after they are established.

State Evangelist Whiston and wife just closed a meeting at Vesta in the state tent. An organization of twenty-five members was effected of some of the best people in the community. An unused house in the country was donated, and $400 raised to move it in and repair it. This same evangelist labored last year twenty-nine and a half weeks; had 106 additions, at a net cost to the society of $2.71 each. Four other evangelists averaged $2.85 each per addition. Nothing is shown by these figures of the help given in other ways to struggling congregations. And these places were all weak.

Note the suggestive figures: During the last missionary year, 90 churches, 79 Bible schools and 43 Christian Endeavor Societies gave to state missions; 22 churches, with 40 or more members each, gave nothing; 10 others, with 100 or more members each, gave nothing. Not a single congregation in the state gave as much as $100 as a church. These figures are simply to show that we are using only part of our resources. We are as well off proportionately as other religious bodies. We are able enough to give four times as much as we do for work in Nebraska, and still keep up all other missions and home work. We are growing, but we can grow faster if we will.

Our state convention enrolled 2,077 at its last meeting. It has every promise of reaching 3,000 next August. We have enlarged the apportionments in view of enlarged work. W. A. BALDWIN.

North Carolina.

October 4 and 5, the writer spent in fellowship with the brethren at Hagerstown, Md., who were assembled in the annual convention of the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia. For twelve years I have assembled with them in these joyous gatherings, and for seven of these years had the honor of serving them as their corresponding secretary. My predecessor for a number of years was W. S. Hoye, of Beaver Creek, Md., who also is my successor. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, is president for the year, and J. Irwin Bitner continues the capable and accommodating treasurer. The vice-presidents are: F. D. Power and H. S. Welch, of Washington, and C. M. Kreidler, of Baltimore.

During the past twelve years in this district twenty new missions have been started and twenty-three houses of worship secured, nineteen of them new ones. The reports of the missionaries assisted by the state society and the A. C. M. S. and the C. W. B. M. at one point reported over 300 additions in the year. A number of the missions were without a regular minister for part of the year. Good men have been secured for a number of these points.

The society is doing a good work in assisting young men to the ministry. Some prominent men on foreign mission fields and ministering to churches were helped by the educational committee. Altogether eighteen young men have been assisted and four are now in college.

The preachers' day program was a good one. Geo. L. Snively represented the work of the National Benevolent Association; B. L. Smith, home missions; S. J. Corey, foreign missions; Miss Mattie Burgess, the C. W. B. M., and H. E. Moninger gave an address on the graded Sunday school. F. D. Power spoke with his usual vigor on Christian union. The writer spoke on church music. C. C. Jones and Miss Effie Long told in an interesting manner of the great national convention and the trip of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST special. There were other good features, one of the best being the prominence given to the devotional services, which added much to the spirituality of the convention. Professor F. D. Kershner, who has taken the place of his brother at Martinsburg, W. Va., becoming minister there, gave a strong Bible reading at one of the sessions.

I hope to attend the North Carolina state convention at Lagrange, beginning Tuesday, October 24. I have received an invitation and cordial welcome to the state from J. Boyd Jones, of Wilson, the secretary for North Carolina. This is much appreciated and I hope soon to meet Brother Jones face to face.

The district co-operation meeting meets with our congregation at this place from October 27-29. We hope for a good meeting. Dr. B. T. Bitting, of Spray, informs us the program is prepared. Dr. Bitting, I learn, has been for five years simply a Disciple. Having studied his Bible and seen the simplicity of the gospel, he was about to start a congregation simply Christian when he learned there was already such a people, and he began to co-operate with them.

Our work is opening up here. The C. W. B. M. is organized, the Sunday school class is growing slowly and there is a good increase in the Sunday night audiences. We hope to begin our meeting in November. J. A. HOPKINS.

The time for the offering for state work by the churches is at hand. The rush of people into the state brings increased responsibilities to the churches of Christ. The present work must be sustained and work in new fields undertaken. The Disciples coming to the state should be gathered in, and the new and promising fields springing up should have the attention of our evangelist. The state board is looking to the November offering for the means to enable it to carry on to a successful issue the work now on hand and to enter new fields. If every preacher will co-operate with the state board and distribute the envelopes sent out by the secretary, preach a sermon on state work and take the offering the first Lord's day in November, we shall have the best offering in the history of the state work. We will be able to come up to the convention at "Turner in 1906 with 1,500 souls saved and every obligation fully met." Shall we do it? Remember the time, the first Lord's day in November. "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Every man as he purposeth in his heart so let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver. And God is able to make all grace abound toward you, that ye always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work."

J. W. JENKINS, State President.

Athena, Ore.

The prospects for a large offering for state missions in November are very bright. Of the thirty churches visited to date I do not think one will fail to be on hand with its gift. Our $10 debt fund pledge has now twenty-eight signatures; and several new life members have been secured.

The work is shaping up nicely for a successful year. Several of the churches have their meetings already planned and others are arranging for the fall campaign. Our pastor-evangelists will figure largely in our evangelistic work this year. Churches desiring meetings by these men should write at once, as they can not be had at just any time, since they have their own fields to tend.

Four district conventions have been planned for this month. One of these is now in session at Grant's Pass. The others are to be held at Pendleton, Coburg and Brownsville, respectively. There should also be a meeting of the churches of the northwestern counties this fall.

Above all, brethren, remember our motto, and let us show the Disciples of other states what we can do when we have "a mind to work" for Christ. "Turner, 1906, with 1,500 souls for Christ and no debts."

Let each Disciple do his best on November 5. Let your offering be "as the Lord has prospered" the giver. An offering from every church, a gift from every member and an average of at least 50 cents for each Disciple in Oregon. I hear one great chorus say, "It shall be so." F. E. BILLINGTON.

Tennessee.

We closed the sixteenth annual state convention of Tennessee at Harriman on October 5. It was the best in the history of our work, as the past year was the most fruitful. Our permanent fund, created five years ago, amounts now to $13,500; $1,800 has been secured in the last year, our first bequest, bringing to the board $1,400, was paid. Including gifts to the permanent fund, our missionary offerings for Tennessee amounted to about $7,500 the past year. Offerings to missions, outside the state, last year gained fifty per cent over 1904. Our progress has been equally great in other lines. One hundred and twenty months' work was done, with about 700 additions to the churches. Our plans for the coming year are to hold at least fifty meetings, using, as far as possible, the pastors of Tennessee, and securing other specialists for five or ten of these meetings at points where we now assist in sustaining the regular ministers. This is done to bring these missionary points into a condition of self-support. We also intend to organize congregations in several important towns where now we are not represented. Our plans contemplate the expenditure of about $7,500 for the coming year.

We have rare opportunities in Tennessee, as will be seen when it is understood that only 300,000 of our population can be reached with the gospel by our regular ministers. Thus 1,850,000 remain to be evangelized by missionaries. Co-operation is the only practical method. In thirteen counties of the ninety-six we are not represented at all. Of 151 incorporated towns and cities we are represented in eighty-five. The annual value of the mineral, manufactured and farm products of Tennessee is $565,000,000; the value of the taxable property is $350,000,000. These facts indicate the natural resources of the state and will inevitably lead to the incoming of a large population to which, as well as to those already here, the gospel must be preached. Doing this work adequately is the practical problem before us.

Sixteen years ago, when our co-operative work was organized, five churches had ministers employed for their whole time; now there are about forty such churches employing ministers. Then $1,000 was given for all missions annually; this year about $14,000 was given for all missions. Since the inauguration of this work 102 churches have been organized and helped, eighty per cent of which are living and doing well. About 10,500 additions have been secured to the churches and about $260,000 secured for religious work. We regard this work as eminently successful. The sentiment in its favor is constantly growing and the outlook is bright and hopeful.

Texas.

Texas missions means world-wide missions. We have here the heathen at our door. Germans, Bohemians, Italians are to be found in large and growing numbers in many places in Texas. At Lagrange, a prosperous town in south Texas, where we once had a good congregation, the Germans have bought out the former citizens until now we have but one family left there. We have a good church building rented to the Lutherans because we have so few people there. We need very much a German minister who is willing to labor and sacrifice for the salvation of his fellows. (Send the address of such a one to the undersigned.)

Our first Mexican mission was at Juarez, just across the Rio Grande from El Paso. Bro. M. L. Hoblit and Miss Bertha C. Mason were our missionaries. It was probably a wise thing to open the mission after one year's effort at Monterey. There is, however, evidence of the good influence of this initial effort and over a year ago J. M. Martinez was encouraged to take up the work in Juarez and El Paso. He has given his time and labor with but little remuneration to this work until those who are on the ground, men of good judgment, appeal to our state board for help to put this mission in working shape. Brother Martinez was formerly a Methodist minister. More than two years ago he learned the way of the Lord more perfectly and his devotion to this mission under trying conditions has amply proved him a worthy and faithful man. Bro. L. C. Brite, who lives at Marfa, where Brother Martinez formerly labored, and who has known him and his work, offers to give one-fourth of the amount necessary to support this mission. To pay rent for the building and give a very modest support to Brother Martinez will require $1,000 per annum. We have appealed to our home board and also to the C. W. B. M., but both, like the Texas board, have felt that they could not now undertake this new work. With the tried man on the ground and at work endorsed by the elders of the church at El Paso and E. M. Waits, minister, also T. D. Secrest, of Marfa, and with Brother Brite's offer of one-fourth of the necessary amount to support the mission before us, we feel that we can not close our ears to this appeal. Hence we beg the readers of this paper to pray for this mission that the way may be opened to continue this good and well-begun work.

Here is a Macedonian cry at our door—no traveling expenses, no waiting to learn the language. My brethren, shall we turn away from this faithful man and his family and his mission?

The Texas board asks for not less than $5,000 as a November offering. We must have this amount or beat a retreat. We can not afford to retreat. The Lord has marvelously blessed our Texas work. The past year has given us bountiful crops. As we have been blessed, let us be a blessing. In a ministry of more than three score years the writer has never seen a riper, more promising field for the sowing of the seed of the kingdom of Christ.

What shall our response be to this the Lord's leading? What cheering news from the field, home and foreign? Texas Disciples must keep well to the front. Prayerfully, loyally, liberally, cheerfully, aye, victoriously, let us go forward. Take the offering promptly and remit to—

J. C. Mason, Secretary,

Virginia.

Virginia has just closed a great year in her missionary work. The total receipts for the year were $7,310.37. The total number of accessions from all sources was 1,011. Six new congregations and six new Sunday schools were organized, and seven new buildings were secured by our workers. Twenty-two men were employed, who worked 3,696 days, preached 2,268 sermons and helped 70 places, not counting scattered missions where a few sermons were preached. In addition to the above our financial secretary visited 150 places.

Our special work last year was a great meeting in Portsmouth, a city of 25,000 people, where the plea of the Disciples had never been heard. A great tent, seating 1,400 people, was secured and Herbert Yeuell sent there as evangelist. The result was that thousands heard the primitive truth for the first time, and the organization of a congregation with 84 members, and a good Sunday school.

H. D. Coffey finished a meeting in a suburb of Lynchburg, organized a church with 300 members, erecting and paying for a good house, and calling a preacher for all time. He did the same thing three times besides this in this year, but did not in any other case secure so many members.

Our board will make a strenuous effort to continue at its present mission points, and its present corps of efficient evangelists. We hope to employ one or two more evangelists for general work, and also some evangelists for a few meetings in our larger cities where we are either not represented or are very weak. We want very soon to be able to say that every city in Virginia has a church of Christians only. That is just now our chiefest concern. We have also set before us the hope that this good year may see every church in the state supplied with regular pastoral work.

Our Virginia work has one special feature which might be of value to other states. It is this: The salary of the secretary is paid by individual subscriptions made for this purpose alone. We have tried the plan five or six years and find that it works remarkably well. Our financial agent can now go to the churches presenting the claim of the work, and no man can say, "He is just raising his own salary." This has been a decided gain in our work.

Our Virginia brethren are becoming more thoroughly imbued with the spirit of state missions with each passing year. The hearts of the preachers are stirred in this matter and on every side the people are saying, "Virginia must go forward."

Virginia day will be November 5, and some churches are already planning to make their offering double the amount asked for. Our new watchword suggested and voted by the convention is: "Ten thousand dollars for Virginia missions this year." We confidently expect our greatest November offering and our greatest year. Let every Virginia Disciple do his duty.

Washington.

Here is a state 400 miles long and 200 miles wide, with limitless resources, and a population of only 850,000 people. Its wheat fields produce fifty bushels per acre. Its timber fields are so vast that one county has timber enough contracted to run their immense mills for forty years. What do these facts mean? Simply that thousands will flock to seize the splendid opportunities here offered, which will necessitate a mighty demand upon our home missionary boards. The rapid growth of our work in Oklahoma can be duplicated in Washington if we are awake to the demands of the hour. This can be done only by every follower of Christ helping in the work. The state boards can see, as the local congregation can not, the most strategeic points. I say state boards because it was the concensus of opinion at our last state meeting at Pullman that we should divide the state into east and west Washington. The east side [illegible] already organized as "The [illegible]ire Christian Missionary Socie- [illegible] W. S. Lemmon, of Spokane, as [illegible]ing secretary.

The west side brethren will meet in Seattle, October 25, 26, to perfect their organization. When this is accomplished the state organization will dissolve into the two, as soon as the legal phase of the question can be adjusted.

Already plans are being laid for advanced missionary work, and two missionaries are to be employed on the east side.

Three new organizations were created this year, and 976 souls added, making our number 5,824, or one member to every 125 of our population.

Oh, the mighty work before us! God give us power and give us men!

Western Pennsylvania.

Western Pennsylvania is one of the large mission fields of the United States. There is a population of two million three hundred thousand, which is exceeded in number by only eight states of the union. Most of the Disciples are in the ten southern counties—over sixteen thousand of the members—and less than one thousand in the other fifteen counties. This being the region in which the gospel restoration was

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

CALIFORNIA.

Covina, Oct. 13.—Our church was never so prosperous. Eight additions since September 1; 6 by confession and baptism—J. W. Utter.

COLORADO.

Loveland, Oct. 16.—Four additions yesterday: 2 on October 8.—A. O. Walker, Pastor.

DELAWARE.

Ocean View, Oct. 15.—I have just closed a two weeks' meeting at Ocean View, resulting in 10 additions.—Jacob Walters.

IDAHO.

Payette, Oct. 8.—The Lake City, Iowa, meeting closed with 30 added, C. L. Organ, minister. Had to reach beyond immediate field, as 150 had been added in last 18 months. Meeting here 7 days old with 18 added. Frank McCray sings.—O. E. Hamilton, evangelist.

ILLINOIS.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Lincoln, Oct. 15.—One hundred and twenty-three to date; Episcopal rector spoke on "Holy Baptism" one night. Answered next night, "Baptism and New Testament Church." Great interest.—Wilson and Lintt.

Ludlow, Oct. 14.—Our meeting closed last night; 15 additions—10 by confession, 4 reclaimed, 1 by statement. E. E. Nelms, of Edinburg, conducted the singing. We can make engagements after January 1.—Lew D. Hill and Wife.

Toluca, Oct. 19.—One more addition last Sunday by statement.—S. P. Telford, pastor.

Joliet, Oct. 17.—One confession at First Church last Lord's day.—Ben N. Mitchell.

Paris.—I am holding a meeting at Bell Ridge, 10 miles from Paris; 62 additions in 15 days. H. M. Brooks is singer.—Finis Idleman.

Fairfield, Oct. 18.—One addition last Lord's day—from the U. B. church. The Christian Endeavor Society is taking on new life and all departments are forging ahead. We are planning to hold a revival, beginning November 5.—Allen T. Shaw, pastor.

Heyworth.—Our meeting closed Oct. 15, with 67 additions; 41 baptisms, 3 from the Presbyterian, 1 each from the Baptist, the M. E., and the U. B. churches. The church is greatly edified and strengthened by the meeting. Brother Monser was the evangelist. During the latter half of the meeting we were greatly blessed in song by Mrs. J. E. Powell, of Bloomington.—J. P. Givens, Pastor.

INDIANA.

Columbus, Oct. 16.—I began here October 1. Work starts off well. Sixteen have been added.—W. H. Book.

Knightstown, Oct. 25.—At Shiloh, Hancock county, we have just concluded a two weeks' meeting with my father, James W. Conner, as pastor. There were 18 additions—16 by baptism and 2 by statement.—E. S. Conner.

Indianapolis, Oct. 10.—I closed a 10 days' meeting at Plum Creek, Rush county, with 22 additions—17 baptisms, 2 from Baptists, 3 by statement. Two baptisms at Sandborn last month not reported.—L. E. Murray.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Davis. Oct. 16.—One confession last night. The attendance is increasing every week.—O. M. Thomason.

IOWA.

Prairie City, Oct. 21.—Eight added recently—7 by baptism and 1 by statement.—C. H. Strawn.

Ottumwa, Oct. 18.—Since last report there have been 24 additions to the First Church; 18 of these came in a short rally held by our retiring pastor, Wm. J. Lockhart.—C. S. Miller.

KANSAS.

Clay Center, Oct. 15.—Fourteen additions today; 9 by confession, 5 by letter and statement.—Otho Moomaw, Minister.

Winfield, Oct. 19.—Our meeting has been in progress 5 days, with 10 additions. H. A. Northcutt, evangelist.—Albert Nichols, pastor.

Pardee, Oct. 16.—E. J. Wright, of Leavenworth, closed a three weeks' meeting here last night, resulting in 11 additions—8 by confession, 2 by statement, 1 restored.—J. A. Miller.

Manhattan, Oct. 13.—Our meeting began Oct. 6, with the Wright brothers as evangelists.—J. Edward Cresmer, pastor.

Pardee, Oct. 9.—I am in a good meeting with this church; 10 accessions to date. J. S. Spears, of Hamlin, is the pastor.—E. J. Wright, evangelist.

Galena, Oct. 16.—Our meeting is two weeks old, with 13 additions. Interest increasing.—J. P. Haner.

Lincoln.—I preached for my brother, J. G. Engle, at Delavan, October 1; baptized two men at Lincoln October 16; begin a meeting at Dwight October 18. Lincoln needs a pastor.—N. Ferd Engle.

Council Grove, Oct. 17.—I am in a big tent meeting. The present pastor, John Wesley, has been here but a short time and is not yet acquainted with the field or the people. Last night 185 persons confessed Christ. Brother Webb is the song leader.—J. V. Updike.

KENTUCKY.

Latonia, Oct. 17.—One added by letter last Sunday.—Harlan Runyan.

LOUISIANA.

Lake Charles, Oct. 17.—One addition from the Congregationalists on Oct. 15. B. B. Sanders begins a meeting with us Oct. 20.—Roy Linton Porter, Minister.

MISSOURI.

Springfield, Oct. 22.—I am in a meeting, resulting in 19 additions in three weeks: 14 by confession, 3 by letter and 2 by statement.—D. W. Moore.

New London, Oct. 21.—Our pastor, E. M. Richmond, closed a two and one-half weeks' meeting last night with 57 additions—42 by confession, 1 from the Baptists, 3 restored and 11 by letter. This is the largest meeting that has been held in New London since 1892, and in many respects surpasses that one. The board of officers extended a call to Brother Richmond for half his time with an increase in salary and two weeks' vacation.—Benton B. Megown, Clerk.

Butler, Oct. 18.—We have had 10 additions within the last month, 9 by relation and 1 baptized. All lines of work are vigorous and active. The future is very bright.—H. Jas. Crockett.

Windsor.—The Leonard-Mundell meeting in progress at Cloverdale is growing in interest. Brother Mundell goes from here to Lincoln to assist Brother Allen.

Kirksville, Oct. 16.—Thirty-eight have been added the past six Sundays at regular services.—D. A. Wickizer, pastor.

Brunswick, Oct. 18.—Six confessions since revival closed, October 8, and 1 by statement. We are much pleased over the interest the young men are taking in the Master's work.—E. H. Williamson.

Lebanon, Oct. 10.—Two confessions here and 4 at Hazel Green during the summer.—G. T. Smith.

New London, Oct. 13.—Our meeting continues another week; 47 additions.—E. M. Richmond.

Elvins, Oct. 10.—Having good meeting here; C. E. Dunkleberger, the pastor, is doing the preaching. Sixteen additions and good interest. The meeting will continue a few days longer.—John S. Zeran.

Hager's Grove, Oct. 15.—I just closed a meeting resulting in 22 additions; 14 confessions, 5 by letter and 3 reclaimed. A church was reorganized with 85 members and money raised for a preacher.—R. B. Havener.

Weaubleau, Oct. 16.—I just closed a two weeks' meeting at Wheatland with 14 additions—10 baptisms, 2 by statement, 1 reclaimed and 1 from the Methodists. J. D. Babb and I will begin a meeting October 23 at Hermitage. We hope to make them self-sustaining.—S. E. Hendrickson.

Kansas City, Oct. 16.—I began work for Hyde Park Church October 8. There were 6 added by letter that day and 3 on October 15. We will enter the simultaneous campaign with the churches of greater Kansas City October 22, conducting our meeting with home forces.—Louis S. Cupp.

Flat River, Oct. 15.—Our meeting at Elvins is 16 days old, with 10 confessions and 6 from the denominations. J. S. Zeran and wife, of Farmington, Mo., have charge of the singing. C. E. Dunkleberger, the pastor, is doing the preaching.

Isadora, Oct. 16.—I just closed a two weeks' meeting, resulting in 26 additions—17 by confession, 6 by statement, 2 from M. E. and 1 from U. B.—Challie E. Graham, Minister.

Eldon, Oct. 18.—I am assisting S. O. Burks in a two weeks' meeting with the Pleasant Mount church; 24 additions, 16 confessions. Churches needing my services either for meetings or as regular minister, write me at Eldon, Mo., R. F. D. No. 1.—W. H. Scott.

St. Louis, Oct. 16.—Seven additions to the Liberty church, Audrain county, October 15.—W. H. Kerns.

Carrollton, Oct. 17.—Four confessions at Cyclone.—J. J. Limerick.

Bowling Green, Oct. 12.—In the last month I have baptized 27 at Louisiana. Twenty-two made the good confession last Lord's day; 5 took membership by letter, making in all 32 additions. The "Oliver meeting" closed there October 6.—E. J. Lampton.

Grayson, Oct. 20.—Earl M. Todd, recently pastor for West London Tabernacle, London, England, has been here for nearly three weeks. Result thus far, 9 confessions. Brother Todd is a son of Marion Todd, of blessed memory. After twelve years in England he returns to labor for the Master in his native land. Brother Todd is able, scholarly, devoted, consecrated. He is approximately an ideal man, preacher and pastor. Brother Todd has won all hearts without once resorting to the common practice of "telling funny anecdotes." His sister, with a thoroughly trained voice of great sweetness, compass and power, has greatly helped in the work. We look for still greater results.—W. A. Oldham.

Warrensburg, Oct. 17.—There have been 7 additions at Lone Jack since last report—5 by confession, 2 by statement. Also 2 by statement and 1 by confession at Rich Hill.—King Stark.

OHIO.

Hamilton, Oct. 16.—One confession and 1 addition by letter October 15 at the Lindenwald church.—W. H. Hedges.

Canton, Oct. 18.—The meeting is a great success; 246 additions in 14 days.—J. D. Johnson.

Athens, Oct. 16.—Three added October 15—1 confession and 2 from the Baptists.—T. L. Lowe.

Greenville, Oct. 1.—My meeting at Herrick, Ill., resulted in 19 additions—10 by immersion, 1 from the Baptists, 1 restored and 7 by statement. W. W. Jacobs, the minister, was with me three nights. I began a meeting here October 15.—R. W. Stancell.

Columbus, Oct. 13.—The work at Chicago avenue is progressing nicely; 12 accessions—6 by confession, 1 by baptism, 3 by statement, 2 by letter. We are planning for larger things.—D. Jay Good.

OKLAHOMA.

Moore, Oct. 18.—I recently held a ten days' meeting resulting in four additions, making 180 during the last seven months.—C. P. Kelly.

Oklahoma City, Oct. 16.—Four additions yesterday and 6 on October 8.—Sherman B. Moore.

PENNSYLVANIA.

California, Oct. 20.—I closed a three weeks' meeting last night. Nine were added—5 by baptism, 2 by letter and 2 by statement. H. L. Atkinson is the minister. Our next meeting is at Squirrel Hill, Pittsburg.—F. A. Bright, Evangelist.

Daley.—Evangelist Harvey S. Stoner, of Massillon, O., has just closed a good meeting, resulting in 6 additions, 5 baptisms. The audiences were large, some coming 14 miles over the mountains.—David C. Lambert.

TEXAS.

Pioneer School House, Oct. 10.—On September 10 it was our privilege to preach the first sermon by a minister of our church at this place. There were 6 additions; 2 baptized, 3 by statement, 1 reclaimed. On October 8 I organized a band of 10 into a mission church to be under the care of the Jom church until they are strong enough to stand alone. I will preach for them once a month.—Harold Baldwin, Woodson, Tex.

Jom Church, Oct. 10.—We began work here September 3 and I will preach for them once a month. Jom church received into fellowship 30 members from the harvest reaped by our great northwest Texas camp meeting. — Harold Baldwin, Woodson, Tex.

Commerce, Oct. 14. — The Sanders-Douthitt meeting is a great success; 67 additions to date—27 baptisms. Steps were taken October 8 for the rebuilding and enlarging of our church building. Brothers Sanders and Douthitt are "workmen that need not be ashamed." They are God's noblemen.—W. A. Wherry, minister.

Garland, Oct. 18.—I closed a two weeks' meeting at Alvarado last Sunday night with 13 additions. The church wants a good live man for a pastor.—Chas. Chasteen.

Denison, Oct. 16.—I have been with the First Christian Church two months, during which time we have had 24 additions to the church from all sources, and the Sunday school, Christian Endeavor and prayer meeting are well attended.—Geo. W. Lee.

McKinney, Oct. 17.—Elder Jno. M. McKinney and the writer recently closed a short meeting at our East McKinney mission, with 31 additions. A church was organized with 47 members, and a ladies' aid with 26 members. A building will be erected at once.—G. L. Bush.

WISCONSIN.

Ladysmith, Oct. 16.—One baptism yesterday at Ladysmith; 2 baptisms recently at Moro.—H. F. Barstow.

inaugurated, it can be said that mighty works have been done. But we believe that the day of larger things is dawning. There is preparation for a great gathering of Disciples from all lands at the centennial in Pittsburg in 1909.

The simultaneous evangelistic campaign, beginning October 29, is a harbinger. The hearts of the people are stirred, the whitened fields are a Macedonian call, and they will respond with a liberal offering. There is much to do in strengthening the cause in the ten stronger counties and this work will be continued; but an urgent appeal is being made for more funds to enter the fifteen counties where the cause is weak and start new mission churches and help support them, that a solid front may be ready to welcome the great company of 1909. Every county must be represented. There are seven counties in which there has been no work done as yet towards planting the cause. Twelve county seats are among the unchurched cities. There are sixty-five cities of over three thousand population. Eighteen of these have come into existence since 1880. Thirty-four have multiplied in population three times in the same period. There are churches in only twenty-eight, leaving thirty-seven to be entered by the gospel. In many of these there are splendid nuclei of Disciples waiting and ready to help establish the cause. We are trying to raise $5,000 and double the work of last year. The work that has been done is a guarantee of greater possibilities.

J. A. Joyce, Cor. and Fin. Sec.

West Virginia.

The state offering should be observed by the churches, and sermons should be preached indicating the needs of state work. All state corresponding secretaries should have "days of opportunity" printed on their letter heads, commencing with November 5. All our churches need is more education on our obligations to God and the cause of missions. The four great offerings ought to be emphasized in all our congregations, that is, state work, general home, foreign and church extension. And these days of opportunity ought to be kept before our people.

Moundville, W. Va. A. Linkletter.

Wisconsin.

Her Forces—She has 1,787 members; 12 ministers preaching all the time; 7 ministers preaching part of the time; 31 churches, some of which are strong, and some very weak.

What She Did Last Year—Made a new increase of 353 members, or 24 per cent; added 4 churches to the list; contributed $1,600 to missions.

Her Needs—A more rapid going on unto perfection; every missionary day observed by every church; boys' and girls' rally day observed by every Sunday school; an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. in 31 churches; a strenuous effort on the part of every individual Disciple; to have a church wherever there is a family of "scattered Disciples"; $2,500 for state missions; $1,000 besides for Scandinavian missions.

Missions in the Provinces.

The home mission work in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia during the present year has been progressing steadily and with some encouraging features. The receipts per annum for this particular work amount in all to less than $800, nearly half of which is expended in annual grants to four of our weak churches. With the remaining portion an evangelist is kept continually in the field and other special work done.

Since the beginning of the current year at special meetings held by the evangelist there have been eighty additions made to the churches and one church that was receiving aid from the board has been made self-sustaining. This is sufficient to encourage us and we are further buoyed up by evidences of a growing interest among our brethren in home missions and indications of a greater loyalty to the board in its efforts to carry on the work. The particular aim of the board at present is to make our weak churches, of which there is a large percentage, self-sustaining, and the particular church we have in view for the current year is the one at Pictou.

It is scarcely possible for any one in the progressive west to conceive of the well-nigh impenetrable wall of opposition to the progress of our work made by a people of intensely conservative minds, religiously saturated with ultra-denominationalism. No speedy results can be expected, but only such progress as may be made by battering the wall continually and breaking it down crumb by crumb. Under these circumstances such results as are named above, meager though they may appear by the side of those given by some of the state boards, give us courage and stiffen us for more strenuous work in the future, for which we have a large field.

There is only one member of our brotherhood in each four hundred of the population in these provinces. We have 26 churches and only, at the present time, nine preachers. There are a number of openings for godly preachers who may be looking for hard work and small pay, and we can promise them plenty of work of a character calculated to make them mental and spiritual athletes.

PREMATURE EFFORTS AND LIFE'S FAILURES.—Gen. 3:16; Ex. 2:11-15; Acts 7:25; Matt. 20:20-28.

There is a time for everything that is right. See Eccl. 3:1-8. God is never in a hurry, yet ever hastens toward the accomplishment of his purposes. He who would wait for thousands of years, till the fullness of time was come, before sending his Son to save a lost world, would have us regard the fitness of time for doing our work in the world (Gal. 4:4, 5). Many of life's failures have arisen from men's efforts to do life's work before they were prepared for it, or to accomplish the end of life by other than the divinely appointed means. The Scriptures assigned for our lesson afford three instructive examples.

1. To know is as essential to man's happiness as to be. His first temptation came to him in the guise of offered wisdom. "You shall be as gods, knowing good and evil," said the tempter to Eve. She forgot that the way of true wisdom was already opened to the children of God, through daily obedience to and communion with him. It was the privilege of her consort and herself to learn in the quiet and holy school of God's daily presence and love. But she coveted a short road to wisdom; to find some one act or experience in which the labor of years might be avoided, and infinite knowledge flash in one transcendent beam upon her sight. Her haste led to disobedience, and her disobedience to ruin; while the dark cloud of shame and conscious sin obscured the very light she had before enjoyed. The failure of our first parents was due to premature and self-conceived attempts to reach what they were not content to arrive at by the divinely ordered way.

2. Moses had been reared with the purpose ever before him to deliver his people. All the circumstances of his infancy and childhood were shaped by providence to this end. He delayed the divine purpose, or at least made for himself the way more difficult, by his unseemly haste. God did not intend to deliver his people by the arm of man. When, therefore, Moses assaulted the Egyptian and slew him, hoping that his people would rise and fight for their freedom, he met with sorest disappointment. The chosen people were not yet ready to follow his leadership; and it was not God's intention to bring them out through the victories of the battle field. His arm alone was to have the glory of the deliverance, so that Egypt might know Jehovah's supremacy in earth and heaven. Forty years of lonely sojourning in the wilderness must atone for the error of Moses, ere he should return to follow more humbly the leading of the divine hand.

3. In the last passage from the gospel of Matthew, we have the story of the impulsive request of James and John for preferment in the kingdom which they expected Jesus soon to establish on the earth. They, too, were unfitted for such exaltation, and only a baptism of suffering could prepare their brows for crowns, and their hands for sceptres. So bold to assert their readiness to rule over their fellow men, they were cowardly in the presence of their first real danger, and when their Master was arrested in Gethsemane, "they all forsook him and fled." We may well pray to be delivered from presumption, and to be given patience to wait for the divine indication of duty, ere we hasten to choose for ourselves a way that may lead to shameful defeat.

Christian Endeavor.

By H. A. Denton.

November 5, 1905.

AM I KEEPING MY CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR COVENANT?—Mal. 2:5, 6; Ps. 51:6; 2 Cor. 8:21.

For the Leader.

We have come to another consecration meeting. The time was in many societies when this was the one feature of Christian Endeavor that was looked upon with some fear and misgiving. There were those who had suffered a reaction from the overdone experience meetings where one always had the same stereotyped speech to make. They had no thought of going back to this. So they dropped the consecration feature out of Christian Endeavor.

Now this was a mistake. This feature of Christian Endeavor was not meant to be a repetition of the old thread-worn experience meeting. It was meant to be, like the features of Christian Endeavor, a real, live, earnest work. Upon this day we come together to renew our covenant. We do this in secret. But it is a great help to us to do so in public. It commits us. Then it is a help to others. We help one another by thus telling out in the meeting of the desire to live more fully up to the good way in Christ. Let us not shrink from this opportunity. Rich and sweet will be our fellowship in this meeting if we do all we may tonight.

For the Members.

1. The covenant is at the heart of the good service we give. This is true in all relations. Of little use is the service that is no deeper than the outward parts. It may be argued that if one keeps it up continually it is just as good to the one to whom we render such service. This I do not concede. But if I did, there would be the one who renders the service. What of the effect it would have upon him? Would it do him just as much good? Would he get the same enjoyment? It would be stretching the truth to say he was getting any pleasure out of a service that was not from the heart. We must be in earnest.

2. If I make a covenant and do not keep it, what effect does it have upon me? It makes me unhappy. No one is truly happy when he is living the life of broken promises. Then it affects him in a general way. Not alone in the one thing in which he broke faith, but in all other matters of honor or promise he becomes careless, unreliable, and worthless. This demoralizing of the whole by the lapsing of one of the parts is a law that is true in every observation. Some one may think he has found an exception, but he will find the appearance of such is due to an observation that has overlooked some of the facts. If I break my covenant in one particular, I am on the way to the ruin of my ability to keep any part of any covenant.

3. There may be some one who will think within himself that he has had more peace since he seared over his conscience and quit trying to keep his promises than when he had a keen conscience on the matter. He may be escaping a certain unpleasantness; the hurting of a good conscience that has been outraged. But let him not think he is not suffering injury because he does not feel the pricking of his conscience. He has only suffered sin to destroy the delicate apparatus with which God provided him to detect self-injury. If he gets no signals from within, he feels no pain. This, however, does not mean that injury is not going on all the time. The absence of pain does not mean the absence of injury. In fact, the condition of the seared conscience is the most serious, and should be the most alarming, condition we can sustain.

4. This much has been said of covenant keeping in a general way. How, now, should we feel about the keeping of our Endeavor covenant? Will not the same law hold good with reference to this as to all other covenants? Certainly it will! If one is not prepared to accept this, let him put the statement to the test. Let him take the case of one who begins to treat certain parts of the covenant—the pledge—lightly. Let us say that he will neglect Bible reading. Does he not become indifferent in the things the Bible commands? Does he not come to a place where he can say he does not care much for what the Bible says? He will care little for its society, and may it not be said that he cares little for his Master? The fountains of his ciety, and may it not be said that he cares little for his Master? The fountains of his soul will dry up. He can think of nothing to say. If he could, he would lack the spirituality to say it. He can no longer parry with fervor. He is a dead member. After a time he begins to absent himself from the society. He soon quits coming. Let us sound the trumpet! Let us call the faithful to the mount of fasting and prayer! We must light the old fires once more.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Do I make the keeping of the pledge a matter of the deepest convictions and emotions of the heart?

ESTHER PLEADING FOR HER PEOPLE. —Esther 4:10-5:3.

Memory Verses, 13, 14.

Golden Text.—The Lord preserveth all them that love him.—Psa. 145:20.

The book of Esther is one of the least religious books in the Bible. Indeed, if we should find it in a collection of miscellaneous literature it would never occur to us that it had any claim to be considered a religious book at all. Not only is the name of God not found in the book, but it is devoid of religious teaching and of spiritual ideas generally. The virtue which it aims chiefly to inculcate is loyalty to the nation rather than loyalty to Jehovah. As Daniel is represented as one who remained faithful to God at peril of his life in the midst of temptations to idolatry, so Esther is depicted as one who was faithful to her own people, not ashamed of her race, and who risked her life in their behalf. The story thus points to a form of national pride which was wholly secular, so far as this statement of it is concerned, and quite different in tone from Israel's earlier pride in being the chosen people of Jehovah.

The book is probably of late date—one of the latest in the Bible. It is anonymous, and the writer does not claim to be contemporary with the events described. The book was certainly one of the last to be received into the canon. Its claim to a place in the sacred collection was long disputed by many Jews, and the early Church was not unanimous in accepting it. Athanasius, for example, put it in the doubtful list. Luther said that he wished it had never been written. In its retention, however, the common wisdom of the Church has outweighed the opinions of those who were against it. We may well be glad that it has survived, for it is a beautiful story and illustrates forcibly some important truths, both of morals and of manners.

The chief purpose of the book was, first, to rouse the patriotic pride and loyalty of the people; and second, to recount the origin of the feast of Purim. It has been much disputed whether the book is history or fiction. As history, it contains some elements of improbability. The events, some of them of great importance, are not recorded or referred to in any contemporary historical writing, Biblical or non-Biblical. The king's first proclamation (1:22) is utter folly; while his second (3:13) orders a wholesale massacre on a ground too trivial to have weight even with an oriental despot. It seems incredible that any ruler should with equanimity give the land over to civil war issuing in the loss of seventy-five thousand lives (9:16); and equally incredible that a relatively small number of Jews scattered through the empire should have been able, without special divine aid (which is not claimed), to play such havoc with their overwhelmingly more numerous opponents. Moreover, the poetic justice of the Haman and Mordecai episode works out in a way almost too good to be true, and suggests, in the absence of proof to the contrary, creative literature rather than a mere record of events.

On the other hand, the argument from the silence of other histories is not conclusive, for our knowledge of the times is by no means complete and the Persian historians would have little desire to record an event in which their people figured so ingloriously. The king's first edict, issuing from a six months' revel (1:4) would naturally be maudlin folly, and the second could be explained by his blind confidence in his court favorite. Moreover, the feast of Purim actually existed, and if this narrative is unhistorical the origin of the feast is wholly unaccounted for.

The great value of the book—which is not in the least affected by the question of its historicity—lies in its illustration of certain moral principles: That haughtiness and pride often prepare the way for their own destruction; that spite is suicidal; that the plotter of evil sets a trap for his own feet; that faithfulness to one's friends and family is always admirable, even when those friends are objects of general ridicule or hatred—these are some of the lessons with which the names of Esther, Haman and Mordecai have become permanently associated.

How May We Know?

MOUND CITY, MO., October 12, 1905.

Dear Brother Garrison—I have read with interest and profit your recent book, "The Holy Spirit." It is stimulating and helpful. I realize that in a brief treatise it is not possible to give full scope to all phases of so vast a subject. For this reason several questions have been raised in my mind, one, only, of which I mention, and which I wish might be more fully set forth. On pages 157 to 162, discussing the conversion of the Samaritans, in which you take the view that they did not receive the gift of the Holy Spirit which is promised to all Christians, until Peter and John laid their hands on them, you continue, "It might be pertinent to ask, however, why is it today that many who believe and are baptized do not immediately receive the Holy Spirit? Many sincere Christians testify that the reception of the Holy Spirit, in such measure as to make them distinctly conscious of his gracious influence and help, was an experience subsequent to baptism by weeks, months and sometimes years." This view raises at once the question: If we can not extend to sinners the definite promise of the presence of the Holy Spirit from the moment of their obedience in baptism, as a helper in times of temptation, a presence of which they may be conscious, what encouragement can we give to tempest-tossed men who know they are powerless to overcome in their own strength? If, also, the promised Spirit is withheld in some cases, as in the case of the Samaritans, for a time, by what means may men know that he has or has not been withheld in their cases? And when and how may they know that they have received him? These are questions which, it seems to me, are raised by the view which you have taken, and which vitally concern the success of the gospel which we preach to lost men. I am fully conscious of the fact that many church members give very little evidence of the possession of the Holy Spirit, even after years of service; nevertheless, is it not true that whatever of Christian virtues they possess is due to the presence and power of the Spirit in their lives?

May your treatise stimulate us all to a closer study of this most vital subject.

Sincerely yours,

GEO. L. PETERS.

[We welcome such truth-seeking letters as the foregoing. The question which Brother Peters raises is a very natural and proper one. In referring to the statements concerning the Samaritans who did not receive the Holy Spirit until the visit of the apostles and to our statement that "many sincere Christians testify that the reception of the Holy Spirit, in such measure as to make them distinctly conscious of his gracious influence and help, was an experience subsequent to baptism by weeks, months, and sometimes years," our brother says: "This view raises at once the question: If we can not extend to sinners the definite promise of the presence of the Holy Spirit from the moment of their obedience in baptism as a helper in times of temptation, a presence of which they may be conscious, what encouragement can we give to tempest-tossed men who know they are powerless to overcome in their own strength?"

This is not a question raised, we think, by "the view" which we expressed, but by the indisputable facts we stated, namely: The facts in relation to the Samaritans, the disciples at Ephesus, and many other disciples in modern times who testify as we have stated above. In answer to the question we would say, we may extend to sinners the definite promise of the gift of the Holy Spirit from the moment of their complete surrender to the Lord Jesus. The measure in which they receive the Holy Spirit will be determined by the strength of their faith and the completeness of their surrender to Christ. We believe, as stated in the work to which our brother refers, that the Holy Spirit is not a fixed and unchangeable quantity in the lives of Christians, but that it depends upon the measure of our faith and obedience. Every one may feel assured that, to the extent which he yields himself to God, he will receive divine strength in overcoming his temptations and in living a worthy life.

Our thoughtful brother asks further that, "If, also, the promised Spirit is withheld in some cases, as in the case of the Samaritans, for a time, by what means may men know that he has or has not been withheld in their cases? And when and how may they know that they have received him?" These questions, we repeat, are raised by the New Testament teaching concerning the Holy Spirit and the facts of human experience. We believe also that the New Testament furnishes the answer to both questions. The fruit of the Spirit in the hearts and lives of believers is the best evidence of the possession of the Spirit. We can not have "love, joy, peace," etc., in our hearts and not be distinctly conscious of their presence. Most of us are conscious both of the presence of these fruits of the Spirit and our need of them in a much larger measure; hence our brother is correct in saying that though "many church members give very little evidence of the possession of the Holy Spirit, even after years of service; nevertheless, is it not true that whatever of Christian virtues they possess is due to the presence and power of the Spirit in their lives?" Manifestly, this is true. No one can be a Christian, indeed, without possessing, in some measure, the spirit of Christ, which is the Holy Spirit; but there are weak Christians and strong Christians, and too many of us belong to the first class. It is our privilege and our duty to seek and possess the fulness of the Spirit, that we may be "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might."—EDITOR.

Extravagant Statements.

Are extravagant statements necessary in presenting mighty themes such as foreign missions? Will not such statements as "the Moravians are more apostolic than we," found in Walter S. Goode's most excellent article in the September 7 issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST do harm? In what respect are the Moravians more apostolic than the Disciples? Is it in name? Is it in doctrine? Is it in church government? Is it in soul winning? Is it in life? Is it not a fact that the Moravians, called also the United Brethren (Unitas Fratrum), arose in Bohemia and Moravia among the followers of John Huss about 1400 A. D., and by 1617 they numbered only 200,000? Is it not true also that the Moravian emigrants went to Georgia in 1735—at least 75 years prior to the restoration movement—and that according to statistics compiled in 1902, the American provinces reported 15,873 communicants and a total membership of only 23,896? Whereas the Disciples of Christ have grown to immense proportions—say one million—in less than one hundred years. What has caused this unprecedented growth? If we answer, "apostolic teaching," the lack of it has numbered the Moravians with the small denominations of the earth. I know what Brother Goode said, if THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST reports him correctly; but I do not know what he meant. It is possible, however, that he meant to say: That the Moravians are spending more money—in proportion to strength—in getting a Moravian Christian missionary to the foreign field, hampered by his Moravian doctrines, than the American Christian Missionary Society in getting a Christian missionary to the foreign field, helped by the disposition and ability to preach Christ. If that is what he meant to say he meant well.

HERBERT J. CORWINE.

[That is no doubt just what Brother Goode meant. He was speaking about liberality and did not stop to qualify. Let us not hesitate to give honor to whom honor is due. We ought to lose no opportunity to approve others when we can. It will give weight to our criticisms where we can't approve.—EDITOR.]

Family Circle

Big Pete Finds Himself.

BY BESS VAN BOSKIRK.

Big Pete sat cross-legged on his blanket in front of the fire, and whistled softly. His hands, long and flexible, were still, locked loosely in front of him; and Binks nudged the Yankee furtively. Those hands had been the subject of ridicule which the owner took passively, and usually whittled straight through. The quiescence was too much for Binks' peace of mind.

"Say, Pete! anything loose?" he asked. "How's the Kid a-comin'? Goin' ter be Santy Claus this yere? I'll lay my spurs to yore ole hat ye done fergit it plumb!"

Big Pete flashed a tolerant smile at the questioner. It never angered him to be teased about the "Kid," a waif that had been left at the N Bar sidetrack, and that Big Pete had carried home on his saddle. He had let the child be the pet of the "bunch" until on one memorable day an energetic little missionary held a Sunday school in the big mess room. The Kid was there, and the cowboys, too, interestedly watching the "circus," as one after the other the few small folk were catechised. When it came the Kid's turn the question was startling.

"What is Sunday for, Tommy?"

Tommy looked puzzled, then sorry, then hopeless. At last inspiration came into his rotund face.

"I'll tell yer; I know—it's the day when the men shave and—and—brand calves!" he added, explosively.

That was more than Big Pete could stand. He left suddenly, and Binks found him later sitting on the gate of the corral, whittling desperately.

"It ain't fair! It's a derned shame! The Kid can't help it; he ain't had no chance. Poor little kid!"

This was somewhat enigmatic to Binks, who considered that the Kid had been treated like the Boss of the Ranch; but next day, when the missionary left, ardent and happy, he took the reluctant Kid with him, and Big Pete's wallet as well. The boy was to be put in a "respectable family and learned to grow up like a kid ort ter."

Thereafter, at various times, Big Pete disappeared for a few days, and after each return would whittle furiously for a week, until he had settled into the old monotonous routine. Each disappearance was foretold by two or three nights of most oppressive calm, and long hours of silent gazing into the fire. Each period of absence was becoming longer and longer, and he always came back without a cent left in his long, limp pockets.

But now Big Pete picked up his stick and looked over at his pards across the fire, then waved his hands comprehensively out towards the wind and the night.

"This yere's a cemetery, ain't it? How long since you began to plant in here?"

"Oh, 'bout five year, more or less. Why? 'Feared they'll walk?"

"Naw!" Pete responded curtly. "Did ye ever hev a sarmon said over 'em?"

Binks stared.

"Wal, that's a blamed-fool question. Whar 'ud we git the white-tie, do ye reckon?"

"I dunno, only——" Big Pete cleared his throat and spoke half apologetically, "——only they ain't responsible after they're dead. An' mebbe their souls ain't easy now, goin' off without any—well, preachings, like, or words, to sorter smooth the way."

Binks vainly tried to blow a ring of smoke up into the air before he said:

"Putty late now. Reckon they've gotten their baking by this time."

But Big Pete was persistent.

"I'm goin' to the ole sidetrack in the mornin' an' send a tellygram ter Cheyenne. We might just as well hev a bang up man, seein' there's so many of these yere departed brethren. We'll meet him with all the fellers. You kin go over to the N Bar and stir up the bunch, while I'm a-gettin' news to the preacher."

Next day Binks galloped off to the N Bar through the early twilight, and Pete set out for the sidetrack. The agent was not a tenderfoot, so he sent the message as it was given him.

"To any big preacher in Cheyenne:

"You are sent for to come out to the N Bar to preach a round-up funeral sermon. Come as soon as yer kin. Pete Armstrong."

The agent at Cheyenne handed the transcribed message to his superior with an amused laugh. The superior told the messenger to take it to "that tall, white-haired Dr. Gray."

Dr. Gray read the yellow slip standing bareheaded in his hall door, with a curious girl looking over his shoulder.

"Yes, there's an answer. Here," and he started to write on the back of the telegram. Then he stopped and ran his pencil through his hair.

"Where is this N Bar?"

"Sidetrack up the road a piece," responded the omniscient messenger boy.

"But what's a 'round-up' funeral sermon, father? Cows?" questioned the girl.

"I don't know," the doctor said slowly. "This looks interesting. I'll go up to-morrow," and he scribbled an answer to that effect.

Pete hung around the box car that served for a station until his reply came. Next day, bringing two cayuses with him, he was back again, an hour too early for the train, lounging on the two chairs and one keg that served for station furnishings. When the big Overland steamed in, with a rumbling that shook the prairie and made the little ponies dance kittenishly, Big Pete sauntered up to the platform to meet the big "white-tie." Instead of the vaguely pictured divine he expected, a tall girl in a dark suit stepped down, a girl with sweet, serious eyes. Behind her a white-haired, weather-beaten man, stalwart and rugged, whose face lightened as he saw Big Pete.

"Is this Mr. Armstrong?" he asked. "My daughter, Mr. Armstrong. She came with me to sing. An accident on the ranch, is it? I'm sorry." The voice was deep and vibrant, and the cowboy felt relieved. He bowed constrainedly to Miss Gray, and wondered if the knotted handkerchief at his throat struck her as odd, and how "in thunder" he was going to get a girl to the ranch. But Dr. Gray was looking at him, and he said:

"Noer, not egsactly. It's this way; I—we—there's a lot of fellers hev died out here, and we 'lowed we'd better have one fer all on 'em."

"Oh, a stampede? and a number killed? How awful!" and Miss Gray shuddered.

"Why, no. They've been dead, an' they're buried. We just wanted some words like, ter seem—more—better!" Pete ended helplessly. The girl was looking at him, and her father was puzzled. The cowboy could not express himself in such amazing and amazed company.

He led the way around the box-car to the ponies. "Can you ride?" he asked of the girl.

"Yes, a horse," she said slowly, as though the cayuse were another species.

"Wal, a cayuse is a horse," Pete said, dryly.

"I—I know, but you'll have to walk; there are only two horses. Father, I'd better stay here in the depot, I think."

But her father was firm; she could not stay, although inwardly he much regretted that he had let her tease him into consent to her coming.

"We'll take turns walking," he said to Pete, who shrugged his shoulders.

The big mess room, where, it seemed, funeral ceremoies as well as Sunday schools were held, was full; gaunt, rough old-timers; tall, strong men in their prime; slight, wiry bronco-busters; even a few boyish-looking fellows, new to the life. They were exchanging glances and inaudible comments when the two entered, but they turned to listen, many contemptuous at first, all earnest and sober before Dr. Gray was done. And Helen sang "Face to Face," and finally "Rock of Ages," with its infinite yearning. A haggard fellow, with a cough, who sat near the door, went out on noisy tiptoes. There were no sidelong glances now. Each man was thinking of himself, alone, for Dr. Gray had somehow forgotten those dead, and was speaking to these living, men.

Then he prayed, prayed to the Mighty God of the prairies, who knew the temptations of men, their passions, their loneli-

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and can not compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

ness; prayed that their strength might be manly strength, that their firm, hard muscles might be worthily used, that their life in God's own wilds might be a life unto him. Then he spoke of their homes, of the mother, the wife, the sweetheart; and at last Helen sang again, softly, all the time seeing the burning eyes, the quivering nostrils, the close-pressed lips of the man who had met them that day. When the rest poured out, Big Pete stayed, and the girl spoke quietly to her father, that the cowboy might have opportunity to recover himself. If he had had less reserve, he might have—but wisely enough he merely brought the horses.

It was much colder, but the moon was clear, and they rode rapidly, silently, two in the trail, one beside it, until the outside horse stumbled into a prairie dog hole, the force of the fall throwing Dr. Gray over his head onto the ground. Big Pete bit an oath off short between his teeth, and was on his knees by the minister in a moment. Helen had not even cried out, but she felt her heart stop beating until Pete said:

"Broken leg; unconscious. I'll gallop back to the ranch for a wagon and a doctor. No use goin' to the station. No one there but the agent. Are you afraid to stay?"

She shook her head, and he lifted her out of the saddle.

"Here's this," he said briefly, and handed her a revolver from his belt. "It's loaded." She feared it, but she knew it was safer, and she took it without a word and ran to her father. Pete helped her ease his position, then was out of sight in a breath.

It seemed ages before he returned. Dr. Gray's pitiable groaning, the moving horses, the queer night sounds of the prairie, the white moonlight, she never forgot. She could have screamed, would have, probably, but she heard the wagon coming. Even then she marveled at the speed Pete must have made, though when he asked her if it had seemed long she sighed, "An eternity." At the ranch there was a surgeon waiting for them, and he refused to let the minster be moved again.

"You'll have to stay here. These cowboys will do all you ask, and I'll send my old housekeeper over," he told Helen.

That night she watched until Big Pete made her let him take her place, long before day. He somehow seemed so authoritative. And the next afternoon he came to her with a plea to take a little rest.

"I dunno's I like to ask yer to ride, seein's that's how your father was hurt, but it would make yer feel fresh and rested. If you'd——" And Helen went with him. He talked of the clouds with a knowledge that was new to the girl, though he seemed to consider himself merely her bodyguard. After that they went daily and he brought her the mail; even fruit and magazines, though she wondered where they came from, how he got them. Twice she left her father with the housekeeper, and on business journeys for him went to Cheyenne. At these times Pete went with her to the station, and brought her home. They came to love the long rides together, silent, some of them; others full of rambling talk about prairie lore and prairie life. On the last ride before the minister and Helen left for home—it was only a week before Christmas—Big Pete told her of the Kid, and of all he hoped for him.

"I ain't much myself, but I know what good is. I—wal—I'm an Armstrong, if I am a cowboy. The Kid's to go to school. I wish he could know you. He loves singing. He's like me in that. Sometimes I wonder 'bout his folks. Pore little chap, only, 'tain't any worse not to have folks than it is—to leave 'em." His voice was very low, and she pulled her pony nearer to hear.

"Are you the——" she started to ask, but he broke in gently, as he always had, with:

"Look at that, now! Did you ever see such a flurry o' clouds? Like the down off a goose's breast, all touched ter gold." And Helen was baffled again.

MRS. M. SUMMERS, BOX 183, NOTRE DAME, IND., U. S. A.

But one point she finally won. She was going to stop for the Kid and take him home with her for Christmas, and Big Pete was to come and play Santa Claus for the boy.

He stood looking after the train that bore the old man and his daughter away, for a long wistful while, then he loosened the reins and went off into the darkness.

"A feller's that a cowboy ain't nothin' really, but she treats him as though he was a man as good as her. If—but Jerry did lie! If I'd go back he'd hev to own up—I can't do it! Oh, God, I want her—I want to do right. I'll——"

Helen found the Kid full of reminiscences of the splendid "unkleman" who came to visit him. She probably led the boy to tell far more than he naturally would. And all day Christmas she watched for the cowboy, and he came not. There had been a storm, and an accident. A man had been hurt, was dying, and as he died he told of a crime committed when he was little more than a boy. He had let a cousin suffer, one Armstrong, who was now in the west somewhere. The papers, brutally frank, gave it all.

Helen was frantic. Why didn't Big Pete come? The boy had been sent to bed, half sobbing for the "unkleman" who had not brought him Santa Claus. Helen told him stories till he went to sleep. Then she slipped downstairs to wait. The blizzard was heavier; the trains delayed, blockaded. She thought of all sorts of accident. A man had been hurt, was dying, and if her dream could come true; and she wondered if—but the bell was ringing, and she ran to answer it herself.

A tall, snow-covered man, wearing a sombrero, stepped into the hall with a new self-reliance in the poise of his shoulders, which the anxious girl noticed—but vaguely. When Helen came out from the embrace of those long arms, she laughed softly.

"Now we must tell the Kid there's an Auntie-girl, too, besides his unkleman!" she whispered.—The Evening Post.

Glimpse of a Curious Island.

The streets of Funchal are paved with small cobbles, worn slippery by the runners of the sledge, or carro, that there serves the purpose of a wagon. These sledges, drawn by oxen or mules, are very unpretentious indeed, being little more than rough logs fastened together in some medieval fashion. It is surprising, however, to see the loads of merchandise, corn and so forth, that can be piled on these raft-like transport wagons. The carro we are invited to enter is, however, very different. Gorgeous with crimson cushions, gilded roof and plush curtains, it reminds one of the sedan chair of our great-great-grandmothers, except that it is open at the sides, unless perchance a dark-eyed senorita draws the curtains to protect her from the sun, or maybe from the too ardent gaze of the handsome driver who walks by the side. Steadily, and apparently with little effort, the slow oxen pull us up the narrow, winding streets, passing the cathedral on our way, each turn opening fresh vistas to our delighted eyes, and we long to stay and examine more closely the shops and the streets, and more especially the people themselves, in their quaint headdress, and all wearing the soft, high, leather boots made especially for walking on the slippery cobbles.—Leslie's Weekly.

A Successful Week in Japan.

BY MAUDE W. MADDEN.

My Bible woman, Miss Kiyomi Kawamura, left Sendai on the early morning train to join her father, Evangelist Kawamura, on a little tour during the old style new year's. This is the most favorable time for winter work in the villages, because the farmers are at leisure. The weather was blizzard like; cold winds, with occasional flurries of snow, and a sun scarcely discernible through the lowering gray. Since there seemed no prospect of a change for the better, some of the girls said: "Kiyomi, you'd better postpone your trip a week, it will be bitter cold in the country," and others added: "Country beds are cold; only one pad between you and the floor." But Kiyomi laughed and replied: "You can't frighten me; it would be a great thing, now, wouldn't it, to give in to the weather? As for the beds, country people have no regard for time, so I doubt if I shall need any bed at all, Saponara," and she was gone.

Just a week later she returned with this report:

"I met my father at Ishikoshi, the railroad terminus of our trip, about thirty miles from Sendai. We walked about four miles to our church at Izuno, stopping at Wahanayagi, half way there, to notify the Christians of the meeting. We found thirty children and fifty adults waiting for us. We had a meeting for the children first; then for the older ones. These lingered till near midnight, asking questions about The Way. (Izuno is just a farmers' village. Our church meets in the home of one of them, who is also a county official. Ever since this man became a Christian he has gathered his friends together in his house and taught them as well as he could. He is now in Drake College preparing himself to better guide his neighbors. So these Christians now have preaching but once a month, when Mr. Kawamura goes to them. Practically no work for the women has been done in this district, this being Miss Kawamura's second trip.) Tuesday morning, early, returning to the train we visited the homes of several Christians on the way. Tuesday, after dinner, we reached Sanuma, where one of the Drake College students is stationed temporarily as preacher. He had his Sunday school of sixty children ready for a meeting. Later forty-five adults were taught in the evening meeting, and, as at Izuno, it was nearly midnight before the last ones, leaving, gave us freedom to rest. By special request we went, Wednesday morning, to a village four miles from here, to meet the five resident Christians. They begged pitiably for a preacher. Perhaps the Sanuma man will find time to include it in his work, once or twice a month. We visited other homes of inquirers both here and in Sanuma. Thursday we went to Akozu, my home village, and, though it was night, dark, and I was almost tired out by a severe cold, my heart thrilled with joy and gratitude as I passed our new, neat little chapel on the way home. It is the only church building of our people between Tokyo and Akita, though the one in Sendai will soon be finished. We found fifteen people in my father's home awaiting our arrival, and though it was about eleven o'clock at night, we had a meeting for them. Friday morning we spent in house to house work in Akozu. In the afternoon, in defiance of a splitting headache, I went with my father across the river, where I had taught school two years, and visited four homes to teach the several women in them. When we returned to our own home we found six of my old pupils, now young ladies, waiting to be taught. They have been reading the Bible, so were ready with hard places marked for explanation. Saturday we did more house to house work. In the evening there was a meeting of twenty-two adults at the church. Sunday morning thirty children came to Sunday school, and nine grown people, all Christians, worshiped God. Sunday evening there were 130 children at Sunday school and sixty grown people attended the evening service, and remained with eager questions. So, including those who heard the gospel in their homes, my father and I preached as best we could to over 500 people. May God bless the message to their salvation. We thank him for the joy of the trip."

Telegraph to Jesus.

Several years ago I was traveling on a train in the west. Among the passengers in our car was a young mother traveling alone with her first baby. There was also a fashionably dressed lady with two children, the elder a boy of about twelve years, and the younger a rollicking little chap of four. The latter was so cute and merry and restless that he attracted universal attention.

At noon our train stopped at a station for dinner, and all the passengers left the car except those of us who had lunch with us.

A few minutes later the conductor came through and ordered us to move to the car forward, as the train was to be broken into sections. After some switching about, our train was made up, and the bell began to ring as a signal to the absent passengers.

All at once we were startled by a loud scream, and turned to see the young mother rushing frantically through the car, followed by the conductor and brakeman. She had left her sleeping baby and luggage in the car we had formerly occupied, and had foolishly gone away to dinner without asking any one to watch over the child. Consequently, in the hurried change of cars, it had been unnoticed, and now the car and baby had gone.

Our train was held while the trainmen and passengers hurried about searching for the lost child. Several trains had pulled out of the station, and the chances were that the missing car had been attached to one of them.

He was standing up in one of the foremost seats of the car, his cheeks flushed and his eyes shining with excitement. In an interval of silence his clear baby voice floated down the car:

"Why don't they telegraph to Jesus? That's what I'd do if that baby was mine."

Tears started from my eyes at these words of childish wisdom. His faith had turned to the sure source of help and deliverance; and I do not doubt that many "telegrams" went up at once from that crowded car.

In a few minutes the baby was found and delivered to its mother, the trainmen returned to their posts, and our journey was resumed. But the "seed sown by the wayside" by a baby's hand had surely "sprung up and brought forth fruit" in more than one heart.—Western Christian Advocate.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

The Advance Society.

Here is a letter just received, addressed, "Preacher J. B. Ellis." It seems that some are bound and determined for me to be a preacher, no matter what I say about it. It has got me to thinking—this continual misunderstanding about my business. The Advance Society intends to get its members accustomed to reading good literature, instead of sentimental stuff all the time. Do you know that the majority of grown people never read any kind of a book except a novel? That's why the majority of grown folk are so little account. I mean, of course, mentally. You can't be of any force in the world if you read only fiction. That's why the Advance Society reads history and poetry and the Bible; that's why we memorize a good quotation each week. We want to be of force. When the crowd is counted, every one of us wants to count one. But that isn't all we are doing. We are helping support an orphan in St. Louis and a missionary in China. So the Advance Society is doing great good. And because I got it up some think I must be a preacher! That's what I don't like. I don't mean preachers—I like them, of course. But I think it's a pity that the world jumps at once to the conclusion that anybody who is trying to do good must be a preacher! Are we going to let the preachers have a monopoly on doing good? I'm not a preacher, and I never was. Are you? Here's a note from Flossie Davis, Des Moines, Ia.: "Inclosed find my fifth quarterly report and 50 cents for Drusie. I wish I could send more. I think of Drusie so often and compare her with myself. I guess she's just about my age (she's twenty, isn't she?) and my! how much braver she must be! I am working hard for 'Adnah' (prize for the best four consecutive reports). This is my third successive report, and it gets easier all the time for me to remember."

Beulah Shortridge, Glenwood, Ind.: "I inclose my seventh report. I have not missed keeping the five rules (Read 5 pp. history, thirty lines of poetry and memorize a good quotation each week; Bible verse each day; keep account in a note book) for two years, and they seem almost a part of my life. Why don't you take our quotations from our reports and publish a quotation book from standard authors?" (If you had ever published a book yourself you would know why.)

Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo.: "I send my eighth report. I never read less than a chapter of the Bible each day. I have belonged to the Av. S. two years the first of September. The rules have become a fixed habit. I enjoy being a member very much" (yes, and we enjoy having you) "and read our page with interest. Charlie, our orphan, seems to have had a very pleasant vacation, and is now settled in school at St. Louis. As usual, I inclose my little mite for our orphan and our missionary. May God's richest blessing be with them, is my prayer."

A Mother, Cotulla, Tex.: "I inclose one dollar, and a confession. A year ago last spring while visiting home folks in Missouri our little five-year-old boy gathered a gallon of gooseberries for his grandmother, that he might send a dime to Charlie. (I had told him about little Joe, then Charlie, and how the Orphan Home takes little boys and girls who have no papas and mammas, and cares for them.) He was very proud that he could earn his own money to send. He often asks me when I am going to send Charlie his dime. So I will not wait any longer. This shows the shamefulness of the neglect of little things. But here's that dime, with one from his brother and little sister, and 35 cents each from papa and mamma. The children's dimes are for Charlie, the rest for Drusie, our missionary. May God's blessings ever rest on the good works of the Av. S. and its missionary." (I hope Charlie will study harder and try more to be good and to make those around him happy, when he thinks of the little boy working to earn some money to send him.)

Mrs. F. M. Purviane, Jacksonville, Ill.: "For a number of years I have been interested in the Av. S. It is a fine thing. I am particularly interested in the orphan and missionary. I send 50 cents for each, to help along. May the Lord bless you and keep you."

From Wellsville, Mo., came, last January, 50 cents for Charlie and Drusie. A Friend, Mexico, Mo., writes: "Inclosed is one dollar for Drusie, with prayers for her continued health, happiness and usefulness in that far away land."

M. J. O'Dell, Payette, Idaho (What are you doing 'way up there?): "I send two dollars, one for Drusie Malott, one for Charlie. I wish Charlie could go with me to Snake river some morning and watch the fishermen catch salmon. Tenth quarter finished—hope to report soon."

Nina Stevens, Akita, Japan: "Henry is sending his report for Av. S. work. Our friends tell us that he reads much better than children of his age who are in the Tokyo school for foreign children. I think we owe much of his success to the habit he has formed of reading every day. He is fond of poetry, and it pleases me to hear him say, 'That reminds me'—and then give a quotation. He may offer some objection to other lessons, but he never objects to keeping the Av. S. rules." Bertha Beesley regretted very much that she could not help entertain Charlie last summer. Her mother fell ill and they could not have visitors on that account.

Lois A. Ely, Joplin, Mo.: "A yellow cat has been prowling around our yard. From your description I think it must be Felix. He certainly has a lean and hungry look, as if he had been living on some gentleman's cooking." (You must remember my description of Felix was given to the world when my mother was in Kentucky. Felix is now quite fat. I have a great adventure in store for him, but he doesn't suspect it, or he wouldn't be so contentedly sunning himself this morning. Felix is going to Arkansas to live. Just about next Tuesday he will be placed in a box and taken to a car which will be stored with household furniture of the most elegant description. The car will be hitched on to some snorting, backing and jerking engine, and away goes our cat to the land of wealth and plenty! Having arrived, he will be kept closely confined several days till he gets acclimated, because, being accustomed to our nasty, changeable Missouri weather, it will be hard on him to keep braced up all the time on the air of the Ozarks. We hope, however, that the change of weather will do him good and that he will not sneeze so much in winter. It will be hard on him to leave his many friends and his old haunts, but I reckon there are plenty of cats down in Arkansaw, and if there aren't, he may live to get back to Missouri some day. It grieves us to make him go as a felon, confined in his narrow cell, but you could never get Felix into Arkansaw unless taken by force and craft. I may add, incidentally, that I am going along, too, and all letters should, after this, be addressed to me at Bentonville, Ark.; but I knew you would be more interested to hear about Felix.)

Nannie D. Chambers, Richwood, Ky.: "If you think I have deserted the Av. S. you are mistaken. My twenty-fifth report, lost in the confusion of moving, has at last been found, but now the twenty-sixth is gone. Did you ever hear of such misfortunes? Marie says if you had been here through all the torture and agony of our move, you couldn't have described it better than in 'A Week with the Woodneys.' If you had seen mamma and Marie sitting in the cold kitchen the evening we had our first callers, you would have thought of Mrs. Woodney's retreat to the loft—except for the weather." (Then, where were you and Jean?) "I am always sorry when the Woodneys have to begin a new day, for I suppose the story will end with the seventh day. I hope the remaining days are strung out as long as possible. Of course, you know I am a teacher with a first-class certificate"—her first school.

Mrs. Bettie Treadway, Paynesville, Mo.: "I send a dollar for Drusie. Surely the Lord is with her. Eternity alone will tell the good the Av. S. is doing."

Lillie Fisher, Dunlap, Mo.: "I commenced my second quarter June 11 and did not miss a single rule. I told you I had two cats, Topsy and Bluebird, but Bluebird died, so she is out of Felix's way." (No doubt she is better off.) "I got a good, long letter from Aunt Lizzie Wallace; she saw my letter in the paper. She sat right down and wrote to me. She was very much pleased." (So was I.)

Mr. and Mrs. Marstellar, Albany, Mo.: "We think the Av. S. a good society; we pray it will prosper and grow from day to day. We feel that God will bless so good a work. The orphan boy, Charlie, has our deepest sympathy; we will now send you one dollar as a little mite for him. We were not taking the paper when the 'Green Witch' was printed." (This money was received a long time ago, but we could not come to it until to-day. In the meantime, however, it has done its good work, just as all the money which we have not yet found space to acknowledge.)

Mrs. J. R. Naylor, Parkville, Mo., sends a dollar for Drusie, 50 cents for Charlie and, which we feel are very important, her best wishes and prayers.

Bertha A. Seelinger, Butler, Mo., joined the society last January. "It will be a pleasure to keep the rules," she wrote, "and a privilege to help Charlie and Drusie. I am 13. I live on a farm six miles from town, but we have R. F. D. and a telephone" (and, I hope, an old gold cat). "I have belonged to the church and Endeavor for a year.

Grace Everest, Oklahoma City: "I send my third report. I have at last found a history that interests me."

Mrs. F. A. Potts, who has helped with our work, writes, in regard to our orphan: "This is the kind of work God meant us to do—helping others, and Jesus said of the children, 'Of such is the kingdom of heaven.' There may be others like I was when you first made the proposition to support a child, not able to help then, but not wanting to be left out, who can help now. This is the way to minister unto Christ." I am glad to announce that I am again able to send Drusie $5, which makes our ninth check to her; hurrah! Let's scrape up enough to send her $5 again next month—or even more! And don't forget Charlie; we want to roll up something for the day when he will enter a business school. And remember that Felix now lives at Bentonville, Ark, and all the family with him. Write to me there. This is the last time for many a day that I will write a letter to you from Plattsburg, Mo. Mollie Atchison, of Gower, met me on the street the other day and handed me a quarter (I don't mean a quarterly report) for our work. The collection that Mary B. Bland had taken up for us on her visit at Yellowstone Park was $1.86 for Drusie.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Any book in the market will be supplied with pleasure, but to save time for you, give the name of the publisher or author, or both, and the book will be sent you promptly.

"Mr. World and Miss Church Member" is nothing but good for the "weak-kneed" Christian and will tend to stir such to a proper appreciation of how their conduct appears from a distance. Your one dollar is well spent for it.

Remember, by quietly selecting your "Holiday" presents now, we will add any name in gold on any one dollar book, will enclose any card or words, will give you every preference possible if you will only see to it before the rush.

Our school superintendents can present their pupils a very pretty pin in sterling silver at 35 cents; in rolled gold (guaranteed) at 40 cents, and in solid gold (guaranteed) at 85 cents, with cross and crown and the words "Christian S. S." on them.

"A great book on a tender theme," is what one friend says of "Alone With God," by Brother Garrison. It will help your meditations to read such; it will help your work to read "Heavenward Way"; either of these, 75 cents, postpaid.

We have just received, after some delay, our fall stock of marriage certificates and booklets, one of the largest stocks we have ever purchased, and advise your examination of the advertisements in this week's paper, as we have added many new ones to our supply.

"The Holy Spirit," by J. H. Garrison, and "Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell, are "selling every day in the week" and buyers all seem pleased with them at $1 per copy, postpaid. Nearly 1,000 copies have been sold, and the demand is not slackened, apparently, at all.

Have you seen "The History of the Disciples of Christ," by Errett Gates? It is just from the press, selling at the popular price of $1 net, postage 10 cents. This should be in the library of all wanting a pointed and concise history of the Church of Christ. Order one, and see if it is not so.

"Gloria in Excelsis" is coming into the prominence we predicted for it, and hundreds of them have gone out this past week. W. R. Walker, minister at Killbuck, O., makes the second order, saying: "We are more than pleased with 'Gloria in Excelsis.' It is par excellence the book for church services." The complete book in cloth sells for $9.50 per dozen, not prepaid, or 75 cents each in 100 lots, not prepaid; 50 or more at 100 rate. The abridged editions, with over four hundred pages and all the responsive services, in boards, at 55 cents prepaid; in cloth, 65 cents prepaid; by the dozen, in boards, $5; by the 100, in boards, 40 cents each, not prepaid; in cloth, by the dozen, $6.50; by the 100, at 50 cents each, not prepaid.

By the way, we have some few copies of Johnson's "People's New Testament with Notes," bound in sheep, and some in morocco, and as we are not going to run these bindings longer, we will send what we have in these two bindings at the price of the cloth. There are no complete sets in either one of these two bindings, some being in one and some in the other; but if you prefer sheep, or morocco, you can have them while they last at the price of the cloth—$2 postpaid, for books that ought to bring $3.50. There, now!

Our "Saturday Evening Talks" for boys and girls on Little Kings, Little Queens, Little Generals, Little Orators, Little Statesmen, Little Presidents, make a fine present for your children or pupils, and are so handsomely made, bound and illustrated that they are an ornament in any room. They are filled with the very best along such lines as tend to ennoble the children with pure thought, noble deeds and honorable service. They sell at 40 cents each, or $2.00 for the set, prepaid. Fine for Christmas.

Our run on the "Bethany Books" is wonderful, so much so that it keeps press men and binders busy, and then we are not "out of the woods." But think of "A Guide to Bible Study," by Professor J. W. McGarvey; think of "Concerning the Disciples," by B. B. Tyler; then, of "Bible Doctrine for Young Disciples," by F. D. Power; and, of "Life and Teachings of Jesus," by H. L. Willett; yes, and "Bible Doctrine for Young Disciples," and of "Sketches of Our Pioneers," and of "Prophets of Israel," and of "Hand-book of Missions," and of "Missionary Fields and Forces," and of "Heroes of Modern Missions," and of "Prophets of Israel" selling for 35 cents each, or three for $1, prepaid. And in classes, we will do better than that for the Endeavorers.

Geo. B. Townsend, Troy, N. Y., orders 36 "Normal Instructors," Part Two—"The Christ," and is out for the largest normal class among us this winter. This second part is just the book for winter study, as all our Bible school lessons for 1906 are on "The Life of Christ." This booklet will be giving you the connecting incidents in the lesson study. These booklets, by the dozen, $1.50, are prepaid.

Another number of the "Normal Instructor" very apt at this time is Part Four, on "The Land," over part of which we will travel with the Master every week this coming year.

Still another one of them you will need very much is Part Seven—"The People," with whom the Master had to deal, and of whom we ought to know as much as possible when teaching others the lessons for 1906. Any of these booklets is sent prepaid at 15 cents each, or the seven for $1.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

The Crisis in Russia.

Russia is in the midst of a crisis which is both political and industrial. The rapid spread of the strike has apparently interrupted the Czar's plan to put Count Witte at the head of a new cabinet to reform the government on moderately liberal principles. So serious has the strike become that railway service is paralyzed, the schools are closed, the newspapers have suspended publication, postal service is discontinued, the machinery of government is at a standstill. It is believed that the Social Democrats have planned a universal strike to enforce the demand for a constitutional government and the right of suffrage. At any rate, the strike is directed rather against the government than against the employers of labor, and it is accompanied by the most violently revolutionary demonstrations. Revolutionists and terrorists and all who wish the overthrow of the autocracy, have taken advantage of the occasion to announce and propagate their plans. The policy of repression, which Russia so carefully enforces against all programs of reform and all utterances of discontent, has utterly broken down through the sheer inability of the government to enforce it without a degree of violence which would, in the present excited condition of the people, provoke a reaction and be utterly and instantly fatal to the autocracy. So, for the moment, Russia is a land of free speech. In St. Petersburg the government has even gone so far as to give official permission for the use of certain halls for revolutionary meetings of a character which heretofore have never met with any treatment except absolute prohibition.

Russian Autocracy Gone.

Since the above was written, the Czar has surrendered to the demands of the revolutionists. Russian autocracy is a thing of the past. The Czar has at last decreed constitutional liberty to the people. And so the last autocracy in the civilized world yields to the demands of freedom. The decree grants to the population "the immutable foundations of civic liberty, based on the real inviolability of person, freedom of conscience, speech, union and association." The state douma, or parliament, is to be no longer a dummy for consultation, but is endowed with real legislative power, without whose approval no enactment becomes legal. Further extension of the suffrage is promised. M. Witte is the first premier of the new regime. October 30 will be a great day in Russian history. It remains to be seen how the revolutionists themselves will accept this remarkable concession, but it is to be hoped that they will recognize the value of the victory already won, and will enter into hearty sympathy with the Czar and his ministry under the new regime, in bringing order and peace out of chaos and strife.

Taft as an Independent.

One of the happiest incidents of the past week in the political world was Secretary Taft's speech at Akron, O. He came to participate in the Republican campaign in Ohio, and he spoke in a somewhat special manner, as the representative of the President. But the interest and value of his remarks lay not in his advocacy of the Republican state ticket in Ohio, but in his attack on the Republican machine in Cincinnati. Mr. Taft's home is in Cincinnati, and he declared that if he could get home to vote he would vote against the Republican ticket in the municipal election. When a member of the cabinet representing the President, and himself a prominent candidate for the presidential nomination of his party, advocates the principles of independence from party in local elections, it seems that the despised mugwump should lift up his head and sing for joy. But there are also men who do not want to be mugwumps, who want to be regular and faithful members of their party organizations, who yet wish to feel free in a municipal election to act on the theory that the government of a city is a matter of business and not of politics. All such take great joy in Secretary Taft's utterance. It is of particular interest to have such a bold and forceful statement made just before a series of municipal elections in which, in at least three conspicuous instances—Philadelphia, Cincinnati and Indianapolis—the Republican candidates are trying to round up the party voters under the party banners for the support of programs of graft and corruption. How much easier municipal reform would be if all good Republicans and good Democrats felt as free to oppose the party's candidate for the party's good as does the Secretary of War!

The Machine in Cincinnati.

Some of Mr. Taft's very words, in his characterization of the Republican machine in Cincinnati, ought to be quoted. They are careful words, asserting nothing which can not be proved and evidently asserting much less than the speaker believes to be true; but they are enough to unsettle any honest man's loyalty to his party machine in city elections:

"The Hamilton county [i. e. Cincinnati] machine is the result of from fifteen to twenty years' labor by George B. Cox, a man of great executive talent and political sagacity. Beginning with the politics of the ward he has created a political organization in the city of Cincinnati and the county of Hamilton, founded on the cohesive power of the public patronage, which operates as smoothly to control the nominations and elections in the city and county as a nicely adjusted Corliss engine.

"The whole government of both county and city is absolutely under his control, and every Republican political convention nominates the men whom he dictates. The organization is carried far beyond the mere preparation for conventions, and embraces the strictest discipline among the cohorts in bringing out a full vote on each election day.

"The government under the machine is constantly described as a very corrupt one. Such a government generally begets corruption. But if it exists in Cincinnati it seems difficult to secure legal or practical proof of it sufficient to convince the voter.

"But the power secured by the boss and his assistants under the machine has undoubtedly inured to their pecuniary benefit, and it is seen in the large fortunes which they now have. How their money was made has not been disclosed. The large public utility corporations seem to regard the boss as a conserving influence, and are content to have the control of the machine continue as it is, because they regard themselves as thus insured against disturbance in their franchise.

"The condition is one of absolute helplessness on the part of any independent Republican seeking to take part in politics and to act independently of the machine; and the distressing effect is now seen upon all the young men ambitious politically, as it either drives them out of politics and deprives the public of their probably valuable services, or if they go into politics they must subordinate themselves to the tyranny of the boss.

"It is a condition of affairs—a local despotism—much to be deplored, and if I had thought that by speaking and supporting Governor Herrick tonight I should be doing anything for the perpetuation of the power of the Cox machine in Cincinnati, or if I thought that Governor Herrick had entered into the corrupt bargain with Cox, as charged, I should not be here."

The President's Journey.

It was said that President McKinley captured the hearts of the southern people as no President had done since the civil war; and when, early in his first administration, President Roosevelt entertained one negro at lunch and appointed another to an important post in a southern city, he was charged with undoing all the magnificent work of reconciliation which his predecessor had done. And yet the President, on his present trip through the south, is being received with unprecedented enthusiasm, and not even his visit to Tuskegee served to awaken any slumbering fear of social equality between the races. The day spent at Booker Washington's school at Tuskegee was a fit recognition of the great work of that institution. At Mobile the President spoke of the Panama Canal and the resultant need for a strong navy. Visits were made to Birmingham and Little Rock, and then to New Orleans, where the slight remaining danger of yellow fever was not considered worth taking into account. From that point the return is being made by steamer.

Rate Regulation.

It is getting more and more obvious that good political friends are going to find themselves on opposite sides of the fence when the friends and enemies of the President's program of railroad rate regulation are lined up. The administration is in favor of doing something—as radical as necessary, but at least something effective—to remove from the railroads their present power of making or ruining industries or communities by the manipulation of transportation charges. It is not so much that the average charge for freight transportation is too high, but that the power to make it high here and low there, high for one competitor and low for another, is virtually giving to the railroads the power of "binding and loosing" in the whole realm of commerce and industry. The sentiment of the administration is that this ought to be stopped, and that the lowest price for which it can be stopped is not too high a price to pay. The President has opponents within his party—perhaps more within it than without—who do not deny that there are abuses which should be remedied, but are anxious that nothing radical or "socialistic" or "tyrannical" or "dangerous to the rights of capital" shall be done to remedy them. They criticise the plan of giving increased power to the Interstate Commerce Commision, but propose no other measure by which the end sought can be more effectively accomplished. Mr. Taft, in his Akron speech, presented the administration plan, and Senator Foraker promptly issued a reply to it. In the two attitudes we see at a glance the two parties which will be developed within the party as soon as the matter comes before Congress. It is, as Senator Foraker reminds us, not just to assume that all who oppose the President's plan are hostile to any plan of rate regulation. Some of them are, either on principle or for private interest. Others are of the type of men who are temperamentally disposed rather to anticipate and imagine the incidental dangers of any plan than to take effective measures to get things done.

Interstate Commerce Convention.

The meeting of the Interstate Commerce Law Convention in Chicago last week issued rather futilely in a split between the faction favoring the President's plan of rate regulation and that opposing it—the Taft and Foraker parties, as above—each section adopting resolutions in favor of its own position. The so-called "regulars," who favored the President's plan, got control of the machinery of the convention in advance and admitted only those who would subscribe to a document approving of that plan of dealing with the railroads. Credentials were ignored, and those who refused to sign were barred out. The procedure, judging from the reports, was neither fair nor wise. We know not what ingenious justification there can be for it other than the desire for unanimity of sentiment in the convention—and even unanimity can be too dearly bought. The excluded delegates, under the leadership of Mr. D. M. Parry, organized a rump convention about as large as that of the regulars (about 400 to 450), and the two conventions proceeded with their deliberations in their respective halls. The "regulars" adopted resolutions stating their agreement with the President's plan to amend the interstate commerce act by increasing the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission as "the only constitutional and effective method for the supervision of rates, classification and practices." The "antis" adopted resolution "recognizing the existing evils connected with the transportation interests of the country," including rebates, private car lines, etc., and recognizing also "the great and almost universal dissatisfaction with the interstate commerce laws as now administered or enforced, urging upon Congress the imperative necessity for providing the necessary machinery for relief," but declaring that the signers are "unalterably opposed to conferring upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, or any other appointed agency, the power to prescribe specific rates for transportation." The split at the very outset deprived both sections of the convention of all value as deliberative assemblies. There was too much unanimity, so the upshot of it was that those who favor the President's plan said so, and those who opposed it said so. Little light was shed upon the problem, except perhaps to show how easily the subject may cause divisions. The "regulars" persistently called the other group the "railroad party," and insinuated that their opposition was inspired by devotion to railroads rather than to public interests. This insinuation is not altogether just. Those members of the "anti" faction who are moved by private interests of any sort are probably concerned more about their own profits than those of the railroads. The very basis of the whole agitation is that the railroads practice discrimination among shippers. Some shippers, generally large ones, have benefited by the favoritism. It is natural that these should join forces with the railroads to oppose any sort of regulation which will imperil their special privleges.

Jerome's Campaign.

In the New York municipal campaign the interest centers rather in the election of a district attorney than in the contest for the mayorality. In the latter, the probability of Mayor McClellan's re-election is so overwhelming that the triangular contest with McClellan and Tammany on one corner, McIvins and the Republican machine on another and Hearst and his newspapers on the third, is scarcely interesting. But Mr. Jerome's candidacy for district attorney is interesting to the last degree. Passed over by both the regular parties, in spite of his splendidly effective service in the office (could there have been collusion on this point between Odell and Murphy?), Mr. Jerome announced that he would run as an independent candidate if the necessary number of citizens would sign his petition. Ten times the required number signed. His name became the rallying point for the disaffected of both parties, and for the independent voters. The Republican nominee for the office, Flammer, resigned, and Jerome was unanimously given the Republican nomination. But as we go to press comes the news that the board of elections has divided on the question of accepting this nomination, and the courts will have to render a verdict. Still he is making his canvass as an independent on the principles of independency in local politics, and is hammering the machines at every chance. There is a rumor that the other independent candidate, the one on Hearst's ticket, may also resign in favor of Jerome. McClellan has made a much better mayor than any one expected, and he really deserves the independent votes, most of which he will get, with the exception of those that go to Hearst. So, if the voters are not afraid to split their tickets, the winners ought to be McClellan (Dem.) and Jerome (Rep. and Ind.).

We publish this week the third Special Evangelistic number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST since our Convention number. This week the Pittsburg Century Evangelistic Campaign occupies the center of the stage. We are indebted to Bro. W. R. Warren for able assistance in securing matter for the Pittsburg campaign, and to Bro. W. J. Wright, our Superintendent of Evangelism, for other articles on the general subject of evangelism. We are sure these special numbers will feed the evangelistic fires that are now spreading throughout the brotherhood. In this feature of our work THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST offers its services to the Bureau of Evangelism to further its plans.

The Christian Standard, with characteristic energy, is rallying the brethren to a four years' campaign in evangelism, and has outlined a strenuous program of operations. Many brethren are responding with zeal to its call and promise their co-operation in making the next quadrennium tell for our Centennial Celebration. The only word of caution we would utter is, let us take a pace that we can hold and even intensify as the time of our Centennial approaches, and even this caution may not be needed, as men are more prone to take counsel of their prudence than of their zeal.

The National Business Men's Association, recognizing that evangelism is only one feature of our Centennial work, is planning for an aggressive campaign. The executive committee of the organization has accepted the recommendation of the San Francisco convention that they supply the funds for pushing the Centennial propaganda, and the president of that association, Bro. J. H. Allen, of this city, is himself personally pushing this work to completion. Having led off with a liberal contribution to the $5,000 fund, which it is thought will be needed to support this work for the ensuing year, he is now engaged in personally soliciting donations from other business men for the same purpose. This means that the money will be raised. Let every man who feels an interest in this work write at once to J. H. Allen, 104 S. Main street, as there is not a day to be lost.

Already one of our able men has been selected to take the field as the representative of all our general enterprises—educational, missionary and benevolent—who, if he shall consent to undertake the work, will, we are sure, receive the hearty co-operation of the brotherhood in stimulating liberality and in securing large gifts for every department of our work. This is the main work that lies before us. Let us not think of a big convention at Pittsburg in 1909 as constituting our Centennial Celebration. It will consist rather in liberal college endowments, in a million dollars a year as our missionary offerings, in a million dollars for Church Extension, in a larger provision for the needs of the widow and the orphan and our aged and dependent ministers. Along with this work there should be and will be systematic and earnest efforts to evangelize the unsaved and especially to reach the great neglected masses of our population which seldom, if ever, hear the gospel, and to deepen the spiritual life of the churches.

And so the great Centennial tasks before us are taking definite form in outline, and there is work for every church, every preacher, every business and professional man, and every religious journal that is willing to lend a hand in making memorable these coming four years, culminating in our Centennial Convention at Pittsburg in 1909.

Evangelism—True and False.

This is the age of machinery. We are seldom, if ever, entirely free from the rattle of wheels. Professor Drummond's idea that man is to supply by invention what he lost in the selection of hands rather than wings, is receiving a certain fulfillment in the present reign of mechanism. It is not strange, therefore, that the preaching of the gospel should be influenced by the surrounding atmosphere of the times. Nor is it to be regretted that wise methods should be adopted in evangelizing the world. The world has made progress since the days of the apostles, and the methods which they used may not be entirely suitable to present day evangelization. There is more real activity crowded into a single day during the first decade of the new century than there was in a whole year of the apostolic period. It is also true that methods are not necessarily binding, even when apostolic example may be quoted in their favor. Methods are ever changing; principles only are eternal. It is, therefore, not only the privilege, but it is also the duty, of the modern evangelist to study carefully the environment in which he is to work and adopt such means and methods as will best accomplish the end he has in view.

Yet there is another side to this question. There is danger of carrying even organization too far. No machinery should be used which simply begets machinery. When evangelistic methods usurp principles and machinery is put in front of the gospel the spirit of the age has taken the place of the Spirit of Christ, and the result will be the production of machine-made converts instead of real Christians of a heavenly birth. It is very important to study carefully the spiritual side of this evangelistic question. The gaining of converts should be the controlling end in view; this gaining of converts is the object of the preaching of the gospel—the very soul of the great commission which Jesus gave to his apostles. But it must not be forgotten that there are converts and converts. Is there not danger that modern evangelists deal too much in a kind of mathematical Christianity? Are they not likely to be influenced too much by numbers or quantity rather than quality? They must "make a record," and in doing this do they not sometimes approach perilously near the auctioneer system? Earnestness is undoubtedly an essential condition to evangelistic success, as it is to all kinds of success, but earnestness may manifest itself in very questionable ways. The evangelist may translate his calling into that of a mere hypnotist, and he may use a whole church and community through which to practice his hypnotic power

It is of no avail to say that hypnotic influence is not used by some modern evangelists. It may be to a great extent without intention; but it is easy to believe that in some instances the evangelist is practicing what he knows is an art. We do not say that even in this case he is guilty of any moral wrong. He may feel sure he is using a gift which he has received to fit him for his work. All we claim is that if he possesses this gift he should use it with great caution, lest his converts should be born of the flesh rather than of the Spirit. It may be impossible to eliminate the flesh entirely in anything we do while we are still in the body. Paul had a conflict continually, and can we expect to be more exempt than he was? The record of his life ought to teach us to seek the same help he did in order to obtain deliverance from the flesh. Surely we ought not to cultivate and strengthen a tendency which is certain to get the advantage of us if it is allowed to run riot at will. The fleshly side of evangelistic work needs no emphasis; indeed, it needs constant restraint. But the spiritual side is too much neglected in modern evangelism. W. T. M.

"The Disciples of Christ."*

This volume is one of a series of historical works under the general title of "The Story of the Churches," by the publishers, with a view of furnishing, as they say, "a uniform set of church histories, brief but complete, and designed to instruct the average church member in the origin, development and history of the various denominations." This volume must be judged, therefore, in the light of this general purpose. It is not such a history as would be put forth by one of our own publishing houses for the instruction of our own members and for a statement to the world of the reasons which have influenced the origin and course of our religious movement. Such a history would be written from a somewhat different point of view, and would be more elaborate than this one pretends to be.

The volume entitled as above will fill a useful purpose, along with the series of similar works, in setting forth, in brief form, to the general public the purposes and principles and the chief facts in our history. The author, in a previous work entitled "Early Relation and Separation of Baptists and Disciples," gave evidence of ability as an accurate and unbiased historian, bent only on setting down the facts of history and allowing them, in the main, to tell their own story. It is impossible, however, for any writer to eliminate entirely the personal equation, and his point of view will inevitably manifest itself in his interpretation of the facts he records. This volume furnishes no exception to that general rule.

First of all, we have a very clear setting forth in Chapter I of "The Campbells" in the old world. In Chapter II there is a very satisfactory statement of the "Religious Conditions in Scotland and Ireland." Chapter III gives a sketch of the "Christian Association of Washington." This, the author rightly regards as the real beginning of the movement for the restoration of primitive Christianity. Following this, in Chapter IV, the work deals with "Barton W. Stone and the Springfield Presbytery." While the facts recorded in this chapter antedate those of the former, the author is right, we think, in saying that "the main stream in the historic development of the Disciples of Christ took its rise in the Christian Association of Washington, led by Thomas Campbell and his son, Alexander." The other movement became tributary to that.

"The Union with the Baptists," is treated in Chapter V in about the same manner as the author has treated it in his former work, already referred to. We should say it is a very satisfactory presntation of the subject. And this general topic, including the causes which led to union with the Baptists and the separation of the reformers from the Baptists, is continued to Chapter IX. This part of the work contains a very graphic description of the leaven of the Reformation working in and through Baptist churches, and the ensuing conflicts. The author does not hesitate to set forth certain extreme positions taken by some of the reformers, and even by Mr. Campbell himself, from which there was to come later a reaction to saner and safer ground. Looking back at that period of history from this date, it is easy to see how, with a little more caution and conservatism on the part of the reformers, and a little more open-mindedness and forbearance on the part of the Baptists, the union between these two peoples might not have been severed. But it was not to be so, and, considering the views and the spirit which then prevailed, it was the inevitable which happened when the two peoples separated, each to carry forward, for a time at least, the work to which they believed God had called them.

In subsequent chapters the work deals with "The Union of Reformers as Disciples of Christ"; "The Early Growth and Organization"; "The Rising of Internal Controversy," growing out of the demand for missionary organizations, and then the period of "Missionary Organizations"; then "Evangelism, Journalism, Education, and Church Growth." The closing chapter (XIV) deals with "Recent Tendencies on Problems," in which the author walks on ashes of controversy where the embers are not yet entirely cool. It may be doubted whether some of the smaller and transient controversies among us, mentioned in this chapter, are not too much dignified by finding a place in an historical work like this.

We notice some slight historical inaccuracies, here and there, in statements of fact, and also some interpretations of facts which differ from our own. In connection with the organization of the first church when it was necessary "to fix the terms of Christian fellowship for those seeking entrance," the author says:

"Here emerge two principles which Campbell designed should be co-operative and mutually corrective, the authority of primitive Christianity, and the obligation of Christian unity. The one was means, the other end, while both were equally binding. He did not anticipate that there would be conditions where the principles would be mutually exclusive, and that a difference of emphasis would make them mutually destructive. Here lie the seeds of disagreement and controversy within the movement itself."

The author is certainly right in saying that the Campbells designed that these two principles, namely, Christian unity and New Testament Christianity, should be "co-operative and mutually corrective." Their idea was that Christian unity was to be restored by a return to the simple Christianity of the New Testament. How these two principles can be "mutually exclusive" or "mutually destructive" we do not see. A perversion of either the one or the other might easily make them such, but the very heart of our plea has been, and is today, that the unity of the Church can only be restored by the restoration of its essential constitutional features, as laid down in the New Testament.

There are a few other minor statements to which we might file objections, but, on the whole, we are free to say that the work is a valuable one, evincing earnest historical research, and an honest and sincere effort to deal fairly with historical material. The Index and the Bibliography are valuable features of the work.

Notes and Comments.

What is the matter with the east wind? All nature seems to be at enmity with this wind. The fish will not bite, the birds all keep "close" and man himself goes about shivering with only half his usual energy when an east wind is blowing. Bakers declare that it takes two degrees more of heat to bake bread when an east wind is blowing than at any other time. This wind acts very much upon man and beast as a head wind does in the sailing of a vessel. It takes but little experience to make evident the evil influence of such a wind when sailing on the water. The earth is turning constantly from west to east in its diurnal revolution and an east wind is practically a head wind, and this may account for its disagreeable effect upon man and beast. But after all, is not this east wind an important factor in the affairs of life? If our light affliction works out for us an eternal weight of glory why may not an east wind work out the best results in the development of physical life? Perhaps it is the economy of nature, after all, to send us days sometimes when the fish will not bite and the birds do not even sing, and when the fishermen, like Longfellow's Arabs, may "fold their tents and steal away."

An old question needs a new treatment. Did Christ produce the church, or did the church produce Christ? Suppose it were possible to eliminate all the influence that Christ has had on the modern church, could that church then create a Christ such as we have delineated in the New Testament? The only way to help the modern infidel to answer that question so as to make it possible for his contention to stand is to assume that the modern church is greatly inferior to the primitive church in its perceptions of character. The infidel must assume that the primitive church could have created the Christ, though he is compelled to admit the modern church could not do it. But if we take the New Testament record as historically true, is it not a fact that the primitive churches were, in the very respects necessary to the creation of such a character as Jesus is represented to be, greatly inferior to our modern churches? If this be true, and no one who has all the facts before him can, with reason, doubt it, it follows that Christ created the church, not the church Christ. For the modern church could not create him even with all the light we have received from him, while the primitive church had none of this light, if he did not exist, and the low standard of spiritual development in that age could not have suggested a character in any way approaching the character of the Christ of the New Testament.

We can not personally reply to, nor quote from, the large number of letters we have received endorsing most heartily our position on the Holy Spirit, and expressing delight in seeing this subject receiving renewed emphasis among us. The Editor had reason to believe before the publication of his recent work on the Holy Spirit, that there was need among us for a fresh investigation of that subject, and it was this feeling that led him to prepare the work, but its publication has brought to light a far greater need for more Scriptural light on this subject than we had any knowledge of before, and we are glad to know that its wide reading among the brethren is awakening a fresh interest on this vital question.

Anent the articles on evangelism and the general evangelistic campaign that is now on, we venture to call attention to one fact, namely, the discrepancy between the large number of additions reported in our papers each year and the net increase in our membership reported annually by our statistician. There is a leakage here that ought to be stopped. Pouring water in a basket isn't a very profitable exercise. Of course, it isn't that bad, but there is a leak in the ecclesiastical pail that needs to be stopped. We do not say who is to blame for this, whether evangelist, pastor or human nature, or all of them. What we are concerned about is, that so far as in us lies, we seek to stop that leakage. If it requires deeper probing into the conscience, in conversion, by all means let us have it. It if requires more careful pastoral supervision, let us have that. If it requires a more religious atmosphere in our churches and a better organization by which every member can be assigned to some work, then let us have that. If all three of these things are necessary, and they seem to us to be so, let us have them all. Let us stop that leakage!

Editor's Easy Chair.

There was in the heart of the apostle Paul a great, passionate longing to know Christ. He had never known him in the flesh. It had not been his privilege, as it had been that of the other apostles, to journey with the Master as he "went about doing good," to share his sacred confidences, to watch him in his moments of trial and anguish, to witness his crucifixion and burial. But he had come to know him, in some measure, after the spirit, and he longed to know him more. Speaking to the Philippians in his letter to them about what he had left behind him in the way of fleshly profitings, he exclaims: "Yea verily, and I count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord!" Further on he adds: "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings." As if anticipating the question from some one, "Why, Paul, do you not already know Christ?" he says, "Not that I have already obtained, or am already made perfect." Paul was not satisfied with his knowledge of Christ or with his spiritual attainments. He had found in Christ, what the law could not give him—pardon and peace, but still he longed to know Christ better. He wanted to know him both in the power of his resurrection and in the fellowship of his suffering. Can any one know Christ truly until he knows him in these ways? Not only must one walk with the risen and conquering Christ, sharing in the joy of his triumph and the glorious anticipation of completed victory, but he must needs walk with him in the valley of his humiliation and suffering, and share with him the burden of sorrow and anguish which he bore for the world's sin and sorrow. Only thus can we know Christ in the fullness of his character and power.

We have all come in contact with persons whom we would like to know better. We have felt the power of their personality and the outgoing of strength and confidence through their lives and character, and we would fain come into more intimate association with them, and know them better. After all, how much there remains to find out about our most intimate friends! There is nothing that reveals character and the quality of one's personality more surely than passing through the ordeal of some great trial or sorrow. It brings out strength of character, or it reveals the absence of it. There are people whom we love better, and upon whose character we place a higher estimate, because of the fact that we have been with them through some great trial, or temptation, some overshadowing sorrow, and have noted their courage and unwavering trust in these dark hours. When we can look at this world through the eyes of Jesus Christ, and feel upon our hearts something of the burden of its sin and sorrow which he bore for us, then we shall know him in "the fellowship of his sufferings," and love him as we have never loved him before. No man whose heart has never ached with sorrow for suffering humanity, can know Christ, as Paul desired to know him. No man who has never struggled under some heavy burden which he has borne for Christ and his cause, can enter fully into fellowship with the Christ who bore the cross for us. Why, then, should we complain of hardships, sacrifices, and persecutions borne for Christ's sake, seeing that this is the only way by which we can know him? Why do we shun the difficult tasks, the hard places, the thorny paths of duty, and seek easy places, light tasks and smoother paths, when the former and not the latter will lead us to a knowledge of Christ? Is it not because of the weakness of our faith, or the lack of the strong and earnest desire to get closer to Christ, and to know him better?

We are quoting this example of Paul to rebuke our self-complacency and apparent satisfaction with our present attainments. What a large proportion of Christians there seems to be who have no idea of attaining to a better knowledge of Christ than they have at present, and who seem to be quite satisfied with their spiritual state. Here and there are noble spirits struggling on up the heights, seeking a clearer and broader view of spiritual things, and hungering for a closer communion with God. But these seem to be exceptions to the general rule. Most people are seeking for material things—the things which perish with their using—and have no realization of their spiritual poverty. How is this to be remedied? How can the church convert the world until itself becomes more converted? How can we who preach lead men to Christ until we have walked with him in such close companionship that we have come to know him in the heights and depths of his sympathy and love? Oh, that we might know Christ, for to know him is to know God! "And this is life eternal, that they should know thee, the only true God, and him whom thou didst send, even Jesus Christ." So vital and fundamental is this knowledge of God, in Christ, that the Holy Spirit was sent to the church, after Christ's departure, that he might show to believers "the things of Christ" and glorify him. This is the work which the Holy Spirit will do for us if we open our hearts to him, and invite him in and make him our divine Guest. If we are to be a great evangelistic people, winning men by thousands, not to a creed, but to the personal Christ, to share in his life and to be partakers of the divine nature, we must drink more deeply of the divine Spirit that our lives may be flowing fountains of spiritual blessings for the world. What more glorious consummation could we struggle for, by the time of our Centennial celebration, than to bring all our churches and individual members to long for and seek to be "filled with the Spirit," to the end that they may know Christ and enter into a closer fellowship with him in the great enterprise of converting the world? The highest and best of all the endowments that we can seek is the endowment of the Holy Spirit, by whose fullness of power alone we can accomplish our great mission in the world.

There is a class of Christians, we are sure, who will ask, Why all this struggle and sacrifice and self-crucifixion in order to a better knowledge of Christ? Are not these things too high for us? Why not be content with the simple facts we already know instead of reaching out after a knowledge and experience that are beyond us? It ought to be answer enough to say in reply to such questions, "This is God's will concerning us, even our sanctification." This is the meaning of all the rich provisions of God's grace in our behalf, that we may be brought into fellowship with himself and know the joy that belongs only to such a life. There is a quality of joy, of happiness, and of peace, that can only be known to those who open their hearts for, and struggle toward, the higher things of the spiritual life. A lady friend of ours who has been married several years, in writing to one who is soon to enter the wedded state, said to her, "In a few years hence you will smile at the thought which you once entertained, that you were happy as you then were." So might a Christian, standing on the heights above us, say to those of us who think we have attained the highest happiness possible to a Christian. There are experiences of holy joy, of high inspiration, of sweetness of fellowship, of blessedness of hope, possible to us, which, when we once attain, will make us wonder that we were ever content to abide so long upon the lower levels of the spiritual life. And every such Christian multiplies his power and the influence of his life for good by infinity.

The opponents of the Holy Spirit as a present indwelling helper and comforter in the hearts of Christians have invented a new word to "darken counsel." A writer in one of our exchanges steps into the arena to declare that "since Pentecost and the house of Cornelius no man has received the Holy Spirit as an entity, except by imposition of apostolic hands." Of course, that word, "entity," is one about which brethren can dispute until they grieve the Holy Spirit entirely away. No wonder Paul said to Timothy, "But foolish and ignorant questionings refuse, knowing that they gender strifes." Christians today may pray for and receive the Holy Spirit to strengthen and comfort them, to help their infirmities, to teach them how to pray, and to lead them into an increasing knowledge of Christ. That is the glorious fact which the New Testament makes plain and about which there should be no dispute.

New Testament Evangelism: Its Assured Victory*

By Howard J. Brazelton

The assured victory of New Testament evangelism is a theme not born of pessimism. The two are as foreign to each other as light and darkness. I call your attention to the fact of its victory being assured, not a doubtful or uncertain victory. Its destiny is not left to hazardous circumstance, but is firmly entrenched behind a definite assurance. It is the martial music that thrills, not the dirge that chills; the signal to greater battles, not that of cowardly retreat. It looks upon fields white unto the harvest, prays for more laborers, all the while gathering strength to thrust in the sickle and reap for God.

GROUNDS OF ASSURANCE.

1. Promise and Prophecy—God's promise to Abraham contemplates the blessing of all nations. He declared through Isaiah that his word should not return unto him void, but should accomplish that whereunto he had sent it. God did not bring into the world a power insufficient to cope with every opposition, and gain a signal victory in every conflict.

2. Its Inherent Nature—It is vital and vitalizing. It is seed that will spring into harvest. It is bread that feeds the hungry and water to relieve the thirsty. It is life that begets life, and light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. It is salt that saves, and power that turns men from darkness to light. It is not a cold, lifeless system committed to us with which to convert the world, but a living, pulsating Christ whose words are spirit and life, and whose ability can meet the needs of all people. "I am come that ye might have life and that ye may have it more abundantly."

3. The Words of Jesus—He inspired his disciples with hope. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few." "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to the harvest." He thought of his Church as successfully withstanding the gates of hell. Greater works than his were to be done by his disciples, in that they were to carry to a glorious finish the work begun by him. He leaped beyond the bounds of Jewish exclusiveness and directed their thought to "other sheep" which he should bring. The disciples were to receive power and be witnesses unto the uttermost parts of the earth. To doubt the conquering power of the gospel is to doubt him who led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men.

4. The Records of Victory as Found in Acts—Reading Acts of Apostles is like the records of victories won by a mighty army. From Jerusalem to Samaria; from the prison to the solitary road leading to Gaza; in Cesarea and Antioch; in the dungeon at Philippi or on Mars Hill; at Ephesus, Corinth, Thessalonica; even unto Cesar's household; in all these and more was the evangel heard and witnesses made to its triumphant power. Let us notice a few of them. "They that gladly received his word were baptized, and there were added unto them the same day about three thousand souls." A few days after and another is recorded in the same city. "Many which heard believed, and the number of men was about five thousand." This in the face of the fact that the apostles had been seized and were being imprisoned. The first case of discipline designed to check hypocrisy in the Church caused the people to magnify the apostles and "believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women." After appointing the deacons and quieting the murmurings, "the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly, and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith." Preaching Jesus to him sent the Ethiopian back to the palace of the queen a rejoicing Christian. The voice from heaven and the preaching of Ananias thwarted the evil purpose of Saul of Tarsus, and sent him out straightway preaching Christ. When Paul and Barnabas had finished their first evangelistic tour, they returned to Antioch from whence they had been sent. "And when they had come and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles." "The hand of the Lord was with them and a great number believed and turned to the Lord." "At Thessalonica some of them believed, and of the Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few." At Ephesus, "fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified, and many that believed came and confessed and showed their deeds. Many of them also that used curious arts brought their books together and burned them before all men." Even Paul's enemies were constrained to say, "Moreover ye see and hear that not alone in Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people." In Rome, guarded by soldiers while he preached the unsearchable riches of Christ, Paul could write to the Philippians and send greetings from the saints, "chiefly they that are of Cesar's household." And what shall I say more? As well attempt to sweep back the resistless tide of the Atlantic as to attempt to arrest its progress.

5. The Record of the Current Restoration—During the period of ninety-six years since the Declaration and Address by Thomas Campbell, and the beginning with the handful who formed the Christian Association at Brush Run, the people who plead for New Testament evangelism have grown to a million and a quarter members, an average annual increase of over 13,000, including the years of our obscurity. We have with us men who knew Campbell and Scott and who witnessed their toils and triumphs, for these men were heroes who counted not the cost. They sacrificed, they labored, and thousands were turned to the Lord through their preaching, and we have entered into their labors.

H. O. Breeden, of Des Moines, Iowa, who has passed through ten campaigns in a single city, says: "I want to go on record with this statement: The only successful evangelism I know of is New Testament evangelism. It wins quicker and larger victories than all others combined." Chas. Reign Scoville says: "Figures present the facts, and in a few of scores of meetings ranging from 200 to 1,114 additions here are a dozen with an aggregate of 4,000." Since this reply came, the great meeting at Paris, Ill., with nearly 800 added, has been recorded. W. T. Brooks writes. "There is no more danger of this doctrine becoming obsolete than there is of the multiplication table being discarded. With God's message upon our lips and his Spirit in our hearts we can not fail."

Such meetings as Joplin and Fulton, Mo., Bedford and Huntington, Ind., and Paris, Ill., with their hundreds of conversions, not to speak of those in almost every state, ranging from 50 to 70, held by splendid evangelists and faithful ministers, arouse our enthusiasm and dispel every doubt as to the gospel's continued power. With patient planning, persistent prayer and pregnant preaching, why should we not have [illegible]000 conversions, a Pentecostal ingathering, during a single meeting in a city of a million people?

CHARACTER OF OPPOSITION.

A victory is measured by the strength and character of the foe. It is no man of straw over which the gospel has won its victories, nor mere fleeting shadows that have fallen on its path. Christ foresaw difficulties and prepared the disciples for them. Said he, "They shall put you out of the synagogues; yea, the time cometh when whosoever killeth you will think he doeth God a service."

The most formidable foe encountered in the early days of evangelism was the sectarian spirit. At no time has it ever been manifested in a more violent form than then. The intense prejudice between Jew and Samaritan and the still greater hatred between Jew and Gentile were there. Strongly entrenched behind years of glorious history; convinced that they alone were the people of God and clinging tenaciously to the law, as well as to every jot and tittle of their traditions, the Jews opposed every effort made to supplant the law by the gospel. Prisons, scourging, stoning, infamous abuse and death were expressions of their hatred, and the populace was stirred against the apostles. But none of these things moved the evangelists nor rendered less victorious their work.

The same spirit must be met today, though its intensity may be less strong. What preacher has proclaimed the simple teaching of the New Testament without meeting in some form this spirit? Surely, if, in the face of those things, the apostles could stand undaunted and accomplish their mission, we of today should not despair. "If these things be of God ye can not overthrow them." Sectarianism and superstition, licentiousness and ambition for

Evangelists and Evangelism---A Symposium

W. J. Wright, superintendent of evangelism, sent out the following questions to one hundred brethren. The questions were suggested by the criticism and inquiries which are so frequently heard concerning evangelists and their work. They deal with the most vital and fundamental things, both of the men, their methods and their message. Some of the answers are given in the hope that they may prove useful in righting wrongs on the part of pastors and people as well as evangelists.

1—When is a man qualified to be an evangelist?

2—Should evangelists be self-appointed? If not, by whom should they be appointed and sent forth?

3—While at work, should every evangelist be continually responsible to some congregation or body? Should he report regularly to that church or body, both as to labor and conduct?

4—Is there a widespread prejudice against evangelists as a class? If so, how do you account for it? How may it be removed?

5—We hear much about "sensationalism," "clap-trap" and "hodge-podge" methods of evangelism. What do you understand by any of these terms? Are these methods in general use? Wherein are they hurtful?

6—What truths should the evangelist emphasize?

By Geo. W. Knepper.

1—When he is a thorough Christian as to life, and a successful soul-winner as to work.

2—Our life work should be along the line of least resistance. If a man believes evangelism is his calling and the results confirm his belief, let that be his work.

3—This undoubtedly would be a splendid move. By all means let him keep in touch with the home church, and our bureau of evangelism.

4—Yes, as I see it, there is. Each preacher and evangelist must learn to be "a man in a world of men."

5—Anything that detracts from Jesus and him crucified is sensational and out of place in evangelism.

4—Yes. The superficial work of some evangelists has brought into disrepute the whole class. Raise the standard by sending out only strong, clean men.

5—Sane methods are driving out the objectionable ones. "Clap-trap" is relating horrible scenes of death chambers, voting of audiences on propositions, using mourners' bench, relating experiences, thus deceiving people by making external conditions tests instead of obedience.

6—God's abounding love. Christ's outreaching pardoning service. Man's hopelessness without Christ. The simplicity and power of the gospel. The personality and presence of the Holy Spirit. The reasonableness and certainty of rewards and punishments. The necessity of early and continual preparation.

1—When he is converted and consecrated, and has sufficient knowledge and tact to lead others to know and follow Christ.

2—No, with rare exceptions. By the church or churches through their appointed officers or committees, or such other agencies as occasion may show to be most orderly and wise.

3—Yes.

4—Quite a prejudice. The irresponsible, arbitrary, self-seeking, too independent evangelists of narrow views and training and culture who drift about because they can not long succeed in one place. Let the churches through authorized agencies send forth men of character, wise, humble, efficient, consecrated, and hold them responsible.

5—These expressions set forth superficial, spectacular, mechanical methods of appealing to feelings—without sound teaching or real awakening of the conscience. They are of too common use. They are hurtful because they give base conceptions of Christianity, appeal to low motives, leave the spiritual nature unquickened, disappoint those who are moved or brought into the church by these methods. They give the people stones for bread, and bring Christ and his Church into ill repute.

6—Glory of Jesus' life and teaching—full of grace and truth. The facts of his cross and resurrection as an expression of his love and power. The fact of a living, crowned and coming Christ and his consequent authority. The promise of forgiveness and eternal life. Man's weakness and need, and his divine possibilities. The necessity of the profound change of heart, complete submission. The value and importance of right forms as the expression of the soul's life. The oneness of all believers in Jesus and the sin of permitting anything to separate us.

1—When a man wins souls to Christ and when his life does not contradict his preaching.

2—Most evangelists are self appointed. But the public and the church have a right to protect themselves against the self appointed man. The individual has the right to take the initiative; the public has the right to defend itself against him.

3—Evangelists are supposed to be sent. If every evangelist were a field pastor or worker for some congregation under its direct auspices and subject to its call, all correspondence and all engagements being made through the board of such church or of a state organization, better results would be secured.

4—There is a widespread prejudice, and deap-seated, against them as a class and as individuals. I account for it by their failure to preach a rational faith. Too many appeal to the senses rather than to the sense. The prejudice can be overcome by using men of character and Christian purpose.

5—The sensational and pathetic in evangelistic music and in the methods of arousing individuals to action. It brings about nervous strain and physical excitement without bringing religious results. These methods wear out the evangelist and he is forced to retire early from his work. Any method that kills the worker is unhealthful for the people.

3—Yes, as any other minister of the gospel is responsible. He should be a regular contributor to the support of his church. No man who is not a member of a church is qualified to advise others to become Christians.

4—I think not. Some have been unwise, and perhaps irregular and irresponsible. They have hurt the cause. They should be under the same authority as other Christians.

5—Unusual and unscriptural methods. Evangelists should be after the order of Matthew 10:16.

5—Sensationalism is to the church what stimulants are to the body, and leaves an unhealthy and abnormal condition. Like certain stimulants, it is cumulative in its evil effect, till desire to be startled and entertained is substituted for desire for truth.

6—All truth should be held sacred in order to make any truth prized. Man is a sinner, lost; Christ is the only Savior, and by faith in him and obedience to him the lost are saved. What follows this preaching will depend upon local conditions.

2—They should be recognized or accepted by the community of churches in a given region. The best recognition is by some missionary board that has the co-operation of the churches at large.

3—Positively, yes. For his Christian walk and general effectiveness he should be responsible to his home church, his evangelizing board and the church in which he is temporarily laboring.

4—Yes. The least worthy are conspicuously noisy. Hence the world misjudges the whole class, including the large number who are spiritual, consecrated and Christlike.

5—These methods consist of the self-conceit often named "advertising." Any effort to get "joiners" to swell the number reported, rather than conversions. Wind in place of message. The remedy is the encouragement of worthy evangelists and discouragement of unworthy ones in finding locations. Constant criticism of these methods in our journals even at the expense of being accused by the guilty ones of joining in "dirty slams" at evangelists.

6—The saving power of Christ. The unity of Christians, regardless of theological speculations. The evangelists should live their message by Christlikeness and by cherishing any Christlikeness found in any church, even the mistaken one. They are not sent forth to build up a "we," but to save the world from sin and from a narrow "we-ness," whether in sectarianism or whether within our own borders.

3—I believe that for his good and the encouragement of his home congregation, reports of this kind would be well. The evangelist is responsible, like any other member, to his home congregation.

1—When he realizes it is "Woe unto me if I preach not the gospel." I think no educational standard can be established. The more thorough a man's training is, the more efficient his work, of course. Encourage, rather than discourage, every Christian to bring men to Christ. Germany was converted by the disciples going everywhere preaching the gospel. When an educational standard was raised and the universities made the preachers, then came the lapse into a lifeless formalism.

4—There is much. It can be removed by finding out those who build of "wood, hay and stubble," and refusing them a call. If they begin such work let the officers of the church close the meeting.

5—I consider such methods the advertising of the evangelist as some great one, rather than the exaltation of Christ. A vain effort to please the people, rather than save them. The telling of cheap stories and jests, instead of the supreme story of God's love. This lowers the conception of Christianity.

4—No, there is not. Almost any pastor would have some evangelist hold a meeting for him if he could. It has been quite popular of late in conventions to say harsh things against evangelists, but few pastors would refuse a great meeting if they could get it.

The awfulness of sin.

1—Quite a number of elements enter into his qualification. He ought to be a trained man. He should know men, and the Book. Education, in itself, does not prepare a man to do the work of an evangelist. One might have the most careful professional training and not be competent to do this work. I take it that temperament has much to do in this preparation. A minister may be a good pastor, but not have the evangelistic temper sufficiently to qualify him for this work.

2—I should say, no. We have had enough of this already, and we have been humiliated by the way the work his been done. The church, as a congregation, has been the one to appoint evangelists up to the present. But it strikes me that the board which has this work in hand has the appointing power, as certainly as the American Board selects its missionaries or the Foreign Board its workers. This, I suspect, is revolutionary, but I am convinced that it will follow in the end.

3—Yes. Sometimes we need to be saved. Some one must have the power to do this. Then if we have workers, they should be systematically directed to get the best results. At first this will, with us, have to be put in the form of request; and it may even be left at this point, but if we are to make progress without many hitches and humiliations, this or something similar ought to be considered.

4—It is certain that there is prejudice against some evangelists. I think that the evangelist has failed to get the full sympathy of the pastor. He seems to forget that there are others. He forgets that the field has been worked before he came.

6—We say, preach the gospel. Emphasizs the fact of sin, that Jesus is the only Savior, that men must repent and turn to God and live right lives. There should be a simple statement of the terms of pardon. The sin of sectarianism should be pointed out; the necessity of the union of Christians pressed. All of the important teachings of the Disciples of Christ, but in love and with good sense.

I should wish it understood that I do not consider the answers as expressing fully my views of the questions asked.

2. They should be ordained to the ministry of the Word by some congregation who knows them and with whom they hold membership.

3. Yes, and I believe he should be amenable to the state or national missionary society, according to the sphere of his work.

4. I can not tell how widespread it is, but there is a growing prejudice born of their political methods and attempts to establish "records," and arbitrary manners and commercialism.

5. For instance, the use of such sermon subjects as "A Dead Dog," the injection in the middle of the week of a pay lecture upon "Love, Courtship and Marriage," or similar subject; selling tickets during the closing days of a meeting for a stereopticon show. The "rounding up" of children in the Sunday school. Emotional and fervid exhortations continued frequently for a half hour, wholly mesmeric. These methods are growing in use.

6. The nature and penalty of sin. The need of a Savior. His power to save. The sovereignty of God. The basic truths of religion. The Gospel, a culture as well as a creed. The Spirit in the form. The imperialism of Christ in all matters of conscience and life. Christian unity. The grace of liberality. The responsibility of a Christian. The mutual need of church and individual.

1. When he is thoroughly devoted to Christ's kingdom, and when he has the qualifications necessary to carry this message to others.

2. It would be better to have him appointed by some body, such as a local congregation, a city or district organization, or more general board or society. Church organization in the New Testament was flexible. The office seemed to be the outgrowth of a need. So it should be now. The best organization is that which does the best work; both anarchy and hierarchy should be avoided.

3. Yes, certainly.

4. Hardly, though some prejudice. The reason is that it is easy for irresponsible men to get into evangelistic work, and these bring somewhat of disrepute to all. No one is more respected than the true evangelist.

5. God is a Father. His will should be the will of all men. This will he has revealed. Man is weak, wayward, sinful. He needs divine help to live the good life. Christ is such a help, the Savior of men; through his teachings, atonement and spiritual presence men are illumined, forgiven, made whole, brought to appreciate their sonship and live as for eternity.

Chicago, Ill.

By Wm. Bayard Craig.

Is there a widespread prejudice against evangelists; and how can it be removed? Yes, but not so strong as it has been. Dr. Chapman and men of that stamp have won the public favor again. Evangelists have used uncultured, strained and abnormal methods in the effort to win attention and win converts. This abuse has been a cause of grief to the judicious, and has put clubs into the hands of the enemy. Spirituality has been sacrificed to the sensuous, gain in spiritual life to gain in numbers.

How remove the prejudice? The organization of a committee on evangelism is a move in the right direction. It will help develop a clear-cut idea of what the evangelist should be and what he should not be. The committee, backed by enlightened sentiment, can help repress wrong methods and tendencies; and by giving or withholding indorsement, can build up a company of acceptable evangelists, men full of the Holy Spirit, men with a safe record, men of such standing and repute that they will not be tempted to resort to circus poster methods in order to gain a reputation or secure business. The more of such men the better. We need to hasten the evangelization of the country.

I am not opposed to vigorous, captivating, attention-compelling advertising. The right kind of a man can bill a town until the people can see and talk of nothing else but his coming, and make it count for the building up of Christ's kingdom. He will know how to arrest attention without rudeness or offensive egotism.

We need a board to help select, advise and direct men, a center to which ideas and suggestions can flow and from which they may go out to bless the world.

New Testament Evangelism.

glory were insufficient to overthrow the conquering evangel. And have we not reason to believe that, while these elements are still prominent in human nature, God's power in the gospel is still invincible?

REASONS FOR VICTORY.

The Men and the Message—Those who published the glad tidings of peace were "full of faith and the Holy Spirit." "The people took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." Their message took hold upon the people with a firm grasp. With undaunted courage they proclaimed it even when commanded to keep silent. "We can not but speak the things which we have seen and heard." When further threatened they silenced their persecutors with the declaration: "We ought to obey God rather than men." Paul's faithful deliverance of his message led Agrippa to say, "Almost thou persuadest me," and caused Felix to tremble.

The spirit in which their message was proclaimed had much to do with its success. "The love of Christ constraineth us," was the motive power of Paul's evangelism. And in this spirit all thus engaged conquered.

H. O. Breeden sums up the reason for his success in this way: "It is simple and apostolic; it appeals to the whole man, the conscience, the heart, the will, and captivates all." Chas. Reign Scoville attributes it to "preaching the Lordship of Jesus." In other words, "Preach the Word." Point men to Christ, and, like him, don't spend all the sermon in pointing to sin.

W. T. Brooks says: "Emphasizing the Lordship of Jesus that men may see the need of submission to his authority; presenting the message of salvation with its conditions without compromise. Men are not looking for an easy way, but the right way."

Brethren, the results of our laborers are not in doubt; they are just as sure as the promises of God. The Gospel is just as full of power as when first proclaimed. It meets the needs of the soul now as then. Men are hungering and thirsting for the bread and water of life today. "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," is a promise to those who will teach all nations.

Our forces should be aroused by the greatness of the opportunity. We should go forward until all places and persons have been touched by the gospel. It is not a time for doubt as to results, but for diligent seed sowing. It is not a time for discouragement, but for thrusting in the sickle. I call you to the mountain heights where we may shout, "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

In the departure from the ranks of our ministry of John H. Reese, who was promoted to higher things August 19, the Church in Michigan and throughout the land has met with serious loss. Our good brother was one of the sixteen immortals graduated at Bethany in 1871. He was the Nestor of the class, and I, the homunculus, the Kid. The boys knew him as "Pap Reese." He called the roll in chapel. He was a man above reproach. At that time he was an excellent preacher. Though forty years of age, feeling his deficiencies, he determined to secure preparation for larger usefulness by taking a college course, and spent four years under Pendleton and Loos, and the other strong men who then filled the chairs in the famous seat of learning. We all honored him for this. His Christian influence was felt among the students. Faithful and diligent and always kind, he won the respect and affection of all his associates. A strong, solid and safe preacher, when he entered Bethany, he went forth well equipped for greater service and was a pillar of strength to our cause in Michigan. Born at Glen, in the state of New York, in 1829, he moved to the west in 1850. He planted the church in Bangor, Mich., and was its pastor twenty-five years and eminently successful in his work. No preacher among us was a closer student of the Bible and of Church history. Some twenty years ago he prepared "The Chart of Universal Church History," which required an immense amount of labor and painstaking research, and at 71 years of age he completed his "Solomon's Temple." He preached up to the last. About eight months ago he was stricken with paralysis, but was in the pulpit the day before the stroke which disabled him. The Master found him at the post of duty. For forty-six years he had proclaimed the unsearchable riches, serving not only at Bangor, but Los Angeles, Benton Harbor, Lexington, Ill., the Central Church, Detroit, and other points. Such a life deserves to be held in loving and perpetual remembrance.

The oldest member of the old class has been taken. Others preceded him—Merriman and Kemp. These three were our elders, our three best bearded men—others were struggling with incipient mustaches or sprouting chin whiskers. The whereabouts of but eight of the living members is known to me: G. J. Ellis, of Athens, Ill.; W. S. Errett, of Carbondale, Ill.; George Curtis, of Wellsburg, W. Va.; A. C. Smith, of Atlanta, Ga.; R. T. Walker, of Cedar Keys, Fla.; B. T. Blanpied, of Columbus, O.; R. H. Marling, of Los Angeles, Cal., and the writer. We should hold a reunion at Bethany in June, 1906, our thirty-fifth anniversary. May we all be there. It would be a high privilege, after so long a separation, to sit under the trees of the campus, roam the corridor, take a dip in the Buffalo, dine with Colonel Aleck and gather in the old class rooms, and recall the scenes of Auld Lang Syne. Bethany boys never lose their affection for the kind mother that nourished them; and if in our love for Alma Mater we should come up to her annual festivities in the month of roses we would no doubt sing a little, and pray a little, and laugh a little, and cry a little, and become boys again for a little time; and go out again to our busy life bettered in a great way for this wayside communion and revival of the days of '71. We all need it. Come.

We have just dedicated Kimmel Hall. It is a fine addition to our Whitney Avenue Church. October 7, 1877, I preached the dedicatory sermon in the little chapel. This time, October 22, I preached from the same text at the opening of the hall. President Hayes and wife were at that first dedication and a number of the leading pastors shared in the service, only one of whom is now living. The little church has an interesting history. For twenty-three years it was a union mission and only held a Sunday school. Seeing the need of work in that section of the city, we determined to open a mission somewhere at a proper distance from there so as not to interfere with their parish. The superintendent came to me and said: "Suppose you take our work. Our trustees represent four or five different denominations, each of which has sought to secure the property, and we can not agree on any one of them. Your church has no creed and you have always been our friend. We can agree upon you. We will turn the school over to you, and if you will put some needed repairs on the chapel and put a pastor there, and in a year your work promises permanency, we will deed you the property." He was a Presbyterian elder, and the trustee with him was an Episcopal vestryman. "Certainly, gentlemen," I said, "we will do it." It was done. Ira J. Kimmel was selected. Without a moment's friction the change was made, most of the old workers remaining and finally uniting with the church; and now there is an excellent congregation with a church membership of 200. Kimmel had a strong hold on the community, especially the boys and girls. He managed with consummate tact. In the midst of his usefulness he was stricken down. His ambition was to build a hall where his boys and girls could come together for various exercises and recreations. He would have a reading room and gymnasium and games for his young people, and a place for concerts and lectures and like entertainments to get the people off the streets and from worse resorts. His desire was not met during his lifetime, but the hall has been erected in his memory. It greatly enlarges the facilities of the church for its work and labor of love. The cost was $7,000. It is so arranged that it can be used in connection with the chapel auditorium, has a lower story with all conveniences for institutional work, seats about 400, is well lighted and ventilated, and heated with steam, and is every way attractive and well suited to its purposes. Walter F. Smith, our pastor there, is doing good work, and is ably seconded by our ever faithful W. H. Schell. Their property is now worth $15,000.

Our other churches are doing well. Fifteenth Street is in a meeting with J. E. Gorsuch, with seven added so far. Washington likes the Memphis man and would be glad to keep him. Our taste of Stuart has disposed us favorably toward Tennessee preachers. H Street Church is having special services also, conducted by our city pastors. Ninth Street is ever growing. E. B. Bagby begins a meeting soon with W. E. M. Hackleman as leader of song. He is first booked for a meeting at Scranton, Pa., with his brother Richard. Vermont Avenue is as staid and staying as ever. Ten have been added to her membership the past two Lord's days, eighteen so far for October. Her people remembered the pastor and wife most graciously in commemoration of their thirty years of service on the evening of October 27. It was a memorable evening for us. The pastor exchanged pulpits Sunday, October 29, with Peter Ainslee. Vienna, Va., has employed W. T. Leprade as pastor. D. E. Motley is again with us, and has the largest attendance of any session of his school. There is the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees; bestir thyself.

Curious How Right Food Rebuilds Body.

The benefits of the good, red blood made by Grape-Nuts food are described in a letter from Chicago:

"I was for years sadly afflicted with hemorrhoids caused by constipation, which was the result of impure blood supplied by food not adapted to the needs of the body under certain conditions. My trouble extended to rectal hemorrhoids which greatly reduced my strength. A surgical operation gave me no relief and I was compelled finally to quit business.

"Luckily, just when things were looking the blackest, some one recommended Grape-Nuts food as a desirable article of diet, and I began (Dec. 1903) its use, and in a few months brought my health back to me.

"The action of my bowels is free and regular now, and this has brought relief from the hemorrhoids. At the same time a neurotic trouble which had been growing on me and which the doctors could never do anything with, has also disappeared. All this return to health I am free to say I owe to Grape-Nuts food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. There's a reason.

The Century Simultaneous Campaign By C. L. Thurgood

Where Pittsburg steel speaks, cities flourish as the rose,
Where Pittsburg steel is silent, there lies the desert.

"Pittsburg is the center of greatest population in the United States, outside of New York and Philadelphia. Within a radius of sixty miles around Pittsburg, now being linked up by trolley, reside 1,608,964 people, a greater population than Chicago in a similar radius. The capital, surplus and deposits of the banks, national, state and savings, of Allegheny county (oftentimes called the state of Allegheny, whilst western Pennsylvania is called the empire of west Pennsylvania) exceed the combined banking capital, surplus and deposits of eight southern states. This county produces 47 per cent of all the steel made in the United States, 56 per cent of all steel rails made in the United States, 75 per cent of all plate glass, 27 per cent of all pig iron, 40 per cent of all window glass, 50 per cent of all table glassware, 50 per cent of all harness leather, 25 per cent of all bituminous coal mined in the United States, 33 per cent of all paper sacks, 75 per cent of all wrought iron and steel pipe, 25 per cent of all nails and spikes. Has easily 2,500 mills and manufacturing establishments, with a capital of over $200,000,000, value of annual products $244,525,875, paying out in wages over $60,000,000 annually."

DR. CADWALLADER EVANS,

To carry the traffic coming into and going out of the Pittsburg district during 1904 required 2,600,000 cars, or about 80,000,000 tons, harbor tonnage 10,000,000, a total of 90,000,000 tons, by far the largest of any district in the world.

Pittsburg is the great distributing point for coal in the state, and the total is put at 30,000,000 net tons; something like 15,500,000 tons of this is used locally, and the remainder goes to all parts of the country by rail and water; to New Orleans for steamships going to foreign trade, to the great northwest for the railroads extending into the Rockies. As our own brother, the Honorable W. H. Graham, has said, Pittsburg's achievements, however, are not confined to such productions as the foregoing. It has the finest court house (by Richardson) in the United States, splendid business blocks, miles of costly residences, and magnificent public parks. Its educational and art institutions take high rank. It has probably given more and greater men to scientific research than any other city of its size in the country. Its astronomical observatory is famous the world over. Its wealth has planted over the world libraries, art galleries and music halls. Its art exhibits draw the best critics of New York and Europe and attract some of the finest products of the easels of the Old World. Its new technical schools, it is said, will be the finest in the world—millions are to be devoted to them. Its strategic position, its boundless agricultural and mineral treasures, its inventive genius, grit and grace, have combined to crown the Iron City as "queen of the greatest hive of human industry on the face of the earth." Pittsburg is yet in her swaddling clothes.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Pittsburg, Monday.—Great start for simultaneous campaign. Four thousand persons were in the theater and church at the mass meeting Sunday afternoon and throngs were turned away.—W. J. Wright.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Pittsburg, Monday Afternoon.—The century simultaneous revival opens beyond our great expectations. The churches are overflowing; interest is intense. There was a great noon meeting today. Additions reported: At First Church, Allegheny, seven; Bellevue, five; Beaver Falls, three; Connellsville, thirteen; Homestead, twenty-four; McKeesrocks, one; Meadville, three; First, New Castle, five; Central, Pittsburg, nine; East End, Pittsburg, two; Knoxville, five; Belmar, thirteen; Turtle Creek, four; Wilkinsburg, eight. Total confessions, forty; letters, sixty; four Bible school rallies; Charleroi, 252; Homestead, 662. At the central meeting yesterday the offering was one hundred and seventy-eight dollars.—W. R. Warren.

Dr. Samuel B. McCormick, of the University of Western Pennsylvania, in an address the other day, said: "We do not hesitate to declare our conviction that the future of Pittsburg, in the provision to be made for the education of her youth and in the development of the institutions of learning, will give her fame in the intellectual, equal to that which she worthily enjoys in the industrial and commercial world. The problem is really a very simple one.

W. A. WARREN,
Editor of The Worker, Pittsburg, Pa.

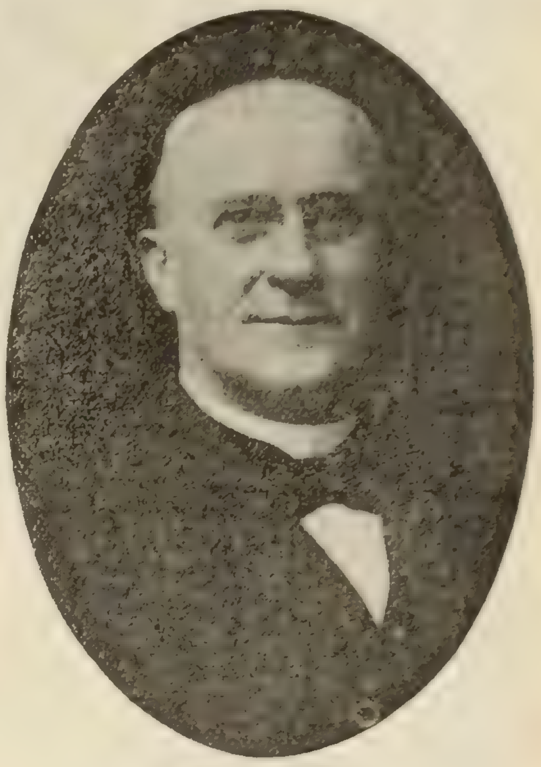
"Given a population in the two cities of practically half a million, with several hundred thousand more in the immediate vicinity;

"Given an accumulation of wealth in manufactory and commerce, in field and bank, in oil and gas and coal, and in every form of business investment and enterprise, almost beyond the possibility of computation and altogether beyond the power of the imagination to conceive;



R. S. LATIMER,
President of the Western Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society.

"Given, on the part of this vast population, possessed of these inexhaustible treasures, a type of character which is famed for its sterling integrity, its moral high purpose, its beneficent generosity and its aspiration for what is best in the realm, both of the intellect and the soul;

"Given all these, and surely we can predict an educational future for such a community, wonderful in its possibilities and in its realization.

"But it is sometimes declared that the material interests of Pittsburg are so varied and so immense and the demand made by these upon her energies, both physical and mental, is so absorbing that it is idle to expect education to divert any considerable part of this energy to her own interests. Then, let us see if this can not be disproved.

"The highest act of the human soul, higher than any operation of mere intellect or feeling or will, because combining all these, and centering upon a perfect being in apprehension, submission, reverence and love, is the act of worship; and the people of Pittsburg have erected nearly four hundred church edifices, scores of which are most costly, in order that they may give expression in worship to their love and adoration of Almighty God. This fact distinguishes any community as the highest."

On one Lord's day, last Easter, in one of the churches there was put upon its offering plates something like $115,000 toward that denomination's work, and in the Sixth U. P. Church one Lord's day, the offering was $17,000 for their work in Egypt. The former one offering was more than was contributed by 1,250,000 Disciples towards national home missions.

In philanthropy, with its one hundred benevolent institutions and fifty homes of various sorts, twenty hospitals and ten helping societies, these tell of the heart of the Pittsburger.

In art, Carnegie Institute's annual world's competition is the cynosure of all Europe, and her medals the source of keenest rivalry.

Is not Pittsburg today recognized as one of the music centers of the world, able to call the finest organist or orchestra director in the realm of the Muses? And what shall I more say? for the time will fail me if I tell how poverty has made a princely hand in philanthropy and that example is inciting others to see fresh fields and pastures new in magnificent beneficences.

Yes, says the Right Honorable John Morley, Gladstone's biographer, "You talk of Pittsburg. I have heard it constantly spoken of as a center of materialism. The speeches we have heard tonight and the responses that you made to those speeches show that all their aspirations are for the highest things after which a man can aspire—all show that though Pittsburg may be material, it is ready for spiritual impressions of the highest order (applause)."

Here is the Jerusalem of 1909, the coming Antioch of a simultaneous evangelistic campaign, the Ephesus of wealthy offerings, the Philippi of splendid Lydian women devoted to his cause, the Corinth whose lakes of the north and whose mighty Mississippi and Panama of the south will soon be linked, thus allowing the argosies of the eastern and western hemisphere to load and unload on her wharves, the Rome towards which and from which we hope to see in the days to come the missionary soldiers of the Cross go forth carrying the Balm of Calvary to the millions at home and abroad. Truly, every Pittsburger can say, I am a citizen of no mean city for evangelistic enterprise. Now we are upon the eve of the greatest evangelistic campaign ever undertaken by our brotherhood. In the city of Pittsburg, on Monday, October 12, 1903, in the Y. M. C. A. rooms at the quarterly ministerial meeting of Allegheny and Pittsburg, there was given an echo of the great Torrey-Alexander campaign in Melbourne. The rough estimate of the fruits of those missions amounted to about 10,000 who agreed to break with sin and to accept Jesus Christ as the Savior and Lord. At once a call was made upon the different ministerial unions to furnish representatives for a committee of deliberation, which committee sent their representatives back to their unions and their churches to at once make preparations for a simultaneous campaign.

Some 361 congregations took part, almost every denomination was enlisted, some seventeen evangelistic centers appointed and thus the work begun in prayer went on with increasing interest during the last two weeks of February, 1903. The newspapers got caught in the pervading religious atmosphere and contributed very largely to the success of the meetings by their generous recognition of the united efforts of all the churches, they forgot about the "dollar space" in their enthusiasm over the widespread revival. The lessons learned from this simultaneous campaign were not lost upon the Disciples of Christ in Pittsburg and Allegheny. So at the annual convention of the Western Pennsylvania Missionary Society, Bro. J. A. Jayne moved that a committee be appointed that should make arrangements for a simultaneous campaign among the Disciples in western Pennsylvania. That committee has been at work for over a year. The committee has since been enlarged. They were most happy in securing Dr. Cadwallader Evans a chairman. He is a member of the Eas End Church, known for its royal gifts t all local and national missionary and benevolent work. His position in the city gav the work a standing and a recognition tha made the work of the committee a ver great pleasure instead of a burden.

His associates on the committee are W. R Warren, O. H. Philips, Wallace Tharp O. M. Waddle, T. J. Allen, W. R. Erret R. S. Latimer, ex officio, C. L. Thurgoo Hon. T. W. Philips, of Newcastle, an A. D. Mornes, of Newcastle; T. D. Brow New Brighton; Hon. W. H. Graha John A. Jayne, W. C. Farr, H. A. Spangler and John S. Miller, Allegheny; Colone S. H. Church, John G. Slayter, W. A. Dinker, J. C. Crawford, G. P. Thurber, Edwi Collins and A. B. Stutz, Pittsburg; John A Woods, Knoxville; J. B. Brooks, Wilkinsburg; John F. McCune, Braddock; Jame Darsie, Homestead; R. W. Williams Battle Creek; Joseph Shaw, Duquesne Louis Lautenslager, McKees Rocks; M. G Hibbs, Crafton; Byron E. Tombaugh Washington; Ward Eicher, Greensburg W. S. Schenck, Connellsville, and F. B Granger, Somerset. Not by might of th men who have been invited to co-operat as evangelists and singers, nor by the power of all the machinery that has been se in motion by the committee and th churches, but by "My Spirit," saith th Lord of Hosts—the spirit of humility, th spirit of prayer, the hunger-spirit for los souls, the culture spirit for folding the los when found, the spirit that will supply u with divine energy to do God's evangelisti will on earth as his will is done in heaven To God be all the glory in the progress an the outcome of this greatest of all campaigns ever undertaken by us.

Our Cause in Pittsburg and Vicinity

On another page C. L. Thurgood has given some account of the material prosperity of Pittsburg and the origin of the evangelistic campaign which our churches of that city and its vicinity have just inaugurated. It is fitting that this account should be supplemented by some statement about our special work in this part of the great home field. For Pennsylvania has a peculiar relationship to our Restoration Movement. Within her borders lived the pioneers of the movement. To Washington, in Western Pennsylvania, came Thomas Campbell in 1808. When his son, Alexander, brought the rest of the family there in the following year, father and son set themselves the task of preparing the way for the union of the divided forces of Christendom. On August 17, 1809, came the formation of the Christian Association, and following this the "Declaration and Address" which had such a great influence in launching the movement for the restoration of the primitive Christianity. It was in a grove near Washington that Alexander Campbell preached his first sermon in 1810. The difficulties of their work may be realized in some measure from the fact that though for nearly twenty years they sought to gain a hearing and favorable reception for their plea, yet until 1850 not more than twenty organizations had been formed in Western Pennsylvania and half of these were struggling country churches. And, largely through a lack of trust in co-operative movements, during the next forty years not twenty new churches were formed. In 1882 the first district was organized and it included five counties. Later it was enlarged to include twenty-five, and in 1888 R. S. Latimer was elected president of this Western Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society, which office he has continued to hold since. From that date began an era of prosperity, and between sixty and seventy new churches have been organized. The policy has been to work from the great center of population outward. The rally cry has been "A mission church for each church now organized."

Among the first churches aligning themselves with the Campbells were a Baptist Church of the Haldane school, in Pittsburg, in 1810; an offshoot from this in Allegheny in 1835; Somerset in 1828; Enon Valley in 1830; Connellsville in 1830; followed a few years later by Fayette City, Braddock, Johnstown and others.

We regret that both the limitations of space and the difficulty of getting photographs prevent us from picturing to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST all our churches engaged in this present evangelistic effort. One of the oldest of the organizations is the First Church, Washington, which dates back to May, 1831, when in the home of R. B. Chaplin, Sr., five brethren and three sisters formed an organization for Christian work and worship. On account of the bitter opposition and desirous of peace, the little band met in a log school house on the farm of Henry Vankirk, four miles from Washington, and alternating in the homes of the members, until 1836 it moved into its own substantial brick house in what is now known as Laboratory, then Williamsburg, still two miles distant from Washington.

Here the church continued to meet until 1867, when it leased a building, which yet stands, across the street from its present home. J. B. Crane was the first settled pastor, in 1867. T. A. Crenshaw came in 1869. F. D. Power, while yet a student in Bethany, supplied from October to December, 1870. Succeeding preachers were A. B. Challener, W. T. Goodloe, L. S. Brown, W. L. Hayden, L. P. Streator, S. W. Brown, R. G. White, A. M. Harvuot, J. M. Kersey, W. H. Hanna, and since 1901, E. A. Cole. After nine years of absence R. G. White moved back to Washington and is now an efficient elder and assistant in the church work besides preaching every Lord's day at Cannonsburg, where a promising church of fift members is beginning its career. Joh Hughes, the oldest living member, will soo have rounded out 65 years of service as member of the First Church. Thomas an Alexander Campbell often preached for th congregation. Walter Scott, T. V. Berry J. T. Smith, Andrew Burns, G. W. Lucy Robert Milligan, W. K. Pendleton, Moses E Lard, O. A. Burgess, Thomas Munnell Isaac Errett, Harrison Jones, David Burnet, Charles Louis Loos, Hugh McDiarmid W. T. Moore, Robert Graham, Jabez Hall T. C. McKeever and Sutton Hayden wer among the number of those who preache for the congregation in that early part o its history, beside those already named a its regular settled ministers. The churc now has a membership of over 650. It ha supported W. P. Bentley on the foreig field two years, has organized and helpe build a house costing $8,000 for the secon congregation and has had 280 accessions t its membership during the present pastorate. The church is preparing for a grea meeting under the leadership of its pasto and O. P. Spiegel.

Another of the older churches is the on at Braddock, dating back to 1833. Th master spirit was then Isaac Mills. Starting in his house, a little band was organized which met for a time at Port Perry Later, through the enterprise of Mr. Mills a house was built, on Frazier street, Braddock. This being burned, another wa erected. Here the congregation worshipe until the present house was built in 1890 Like all pioneer churches, this one ha passed through many trying experiences but today has a substantial membershi and valuable property. Among those wh have served as pastors were James Darsie whose sons and grandsons are known al over the brotherhood; W. D. Lane, E. A Bosworth, F. V. Brown. The present pastor, O. H. Philips, has completed twelve years of service. In that time almost three hundred and fifty have been added to the church. The evangelist pastor who comes to aid the church in the great simultaneous revival is George Webster Moore, Akron, Ohio.

"The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." The heroic devotion of Josephine Merrick, who gleaned the streets and alleys during the dinner hour from the store and after supper in the evenings, for children who did not attend Bible school, bore fruit in a Bible school organized on October 15, 1882, in the Fifth Avenue Bank building, Pittsburg. In 1885 they went to the Forbes Street School building. The church was begun on April 17, 1890, with thirty charter members, entering into the new building on Pride and Colwell streets. The Bible school was the backbone of the work. From 1882 to 1905 the school has had only two superintendents, R. S. Latimer and Edward J. Chesley, who held it for two years. The ministers of the church have been H. W. Talmage, L. C. Cutler, Bruce L. Kershner and, since December 6, 1892, C. L. Thurgood.

The Heron Hill Mission was begun over a vacant grocery store in 1895, and its members now have their own building, with F. D. Dabney as their minister, now enterng upon his second year. The "cobblestone" spiritual condition of the district, writes Brother Thurgood, has proved a fine ield for the development of workers who are now a blessing to the churches. Some hirteen or more churches have "sounded a retreat" from this hill district in the thireen years, but our standard has braved the battle and the storms and is still flying, and long may it wave.

The East End Christian Church, Pittsburg, was established in the spring of 1885. John M. Addy and wife, then members of he First Church of Allegheny, opened their home, and the first meetings were held there. The present church building is located at he corner of Highland and Alder streets, n the very heart of the best residence secion of the city. In the twenty years of its history the congregation has greatly prospered and is now one of the strongest in Western Pennsylvania. T. D. Butler, H. K. Pendleton, T. E. Cramblet, W. J. Russell and J. G. Slayter, the present incumbent, have served the congregation in the order named. The present beautiful building was erected during the ministry of T. E. Cramblet, now president of Bethany College. John G. Slayter, who came to the congregation in August from the great High Street Church of Akron, O., will hold his own meeting, owing to his newness on the ield.

The Knoxville Christian Church is located on the south side of Pittsburg and was organized in 1890. For several years the congregation met in a hall, but in 1895 bought and remodeled an old church buildng on Jucunda street, where they worhiped until last year, when they entered heir new building on Charles street and Knox avenue. In 1900 Fred M. Gordon, graduating from Bethany, took up this work as his first pastorate. During this ime the church has tripled itself and all he work is in splendid condition. Their Bible school rally, held October 22, numbered 628.

The Belmar Church is the outgrowth of a Bible school organized at Rowan avenue y President T. E. Cramblet, of Bethany College, while he was minister of the East End Church. The regular ministers have een R. J. Bamber and A. T. Campbell. The present minister, E. E. Manley, began is labors with this congregation in June, 903. Lots have been purchased and a uilding erected in which the revival servces will be held under the leadership of Allen Wilson, assisted by W. F. Linnt. The new building is in the Belman plan and is about seven blocks from the Rowan avenue site.

The Squirrel Hill Christian Church, located in the 23rd ward of Pittsburg, is a modern, up-to-date, thriving church. Three settled ministers have served since its organization in 1900—W. D. Arnold, now of Elmore, Ohio; W. H. Erskine, now of Akita, Japan; and the present minister, G. W. Watson. During his ministration a new edifice has been erected at a cost of $10,000. They will enter the simultaneous revival with F. A. Bright as evangelist.

The First, or Park Church, of New Castle, Pa., was organized in 1855. The present imposing home was provided through the generosity of the Phillips Brothers and dedicated February 14, 1868, by Isaac Errett. Since that time its pastors have been: B. J. Pinkerton, W. F. Cowden, Dr. I. A. Thayer, Frank Talmage, Earle Wilfley and W. L. Fisher. During Dr. Thayer's pastorate the Long Avenue Mission, now known as the Central Church, was started by W. H. Hanna, Dr. Thayer's assistant. In 1900 a mission was started in Mahoningtown, the 7th ward, New Castle. Its house, the Third Church, was dedicated in 1903, the first preacher, W. S. Chisholm, being Brother Wilfley's assistant. Park Church has also been a fostering mother to the Ellwood City Church and has now started another mission on the East Side of New Castle. She has one thousand names upon her roll and the plant is valued at $150,000.

The Central Christian Church, New Castle, Pa., is situated on the corner of Long avenue and Pennsylvania avenue, in the very heart of the industrial section of the city, where are located the largest tin mills in the world. Begun as a mission of the First Church, about eleven years ago, it grew so rapidly that it soon became a regularly organized congregation, and now numbers 300 members. W. H. Hanna was followed by I. H. Durfee, who was succeeded by W. D. Trumbull, during whose administration the new building was started. After a year and a half he resigned, and the church was cared for temporarily by J. A. Joyce, corresponding secretary Western Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society. January 8, 1905, the new house was dedicated. It is a modern brick building, seating, with the galleries and Bible school room, 1,000 people. In contains eighteen rooms, including class rooms, study, etc., besides kitchen, dining room, and a basement to be fitted up with gymnasium, reading room and baths. On the day of dedication the present minister, Francis M. Biddle, took up the work, and during the past nine months there have been 66 additions at the regular services.

Shady Avenue Church, Allegheny, was a mission some twelve years ago. R. A. Cutler was the first regular pastor. Since then they have had as pastors, Brothers Craig, Futcher, Yeuell and Bates. Grant E. Pike entered upon his ministry last May. The Sunday school and Junior Christian Endeavor are strong features of the church, the latter being the strongest of any of our Western Pennsylvania churches.

The Observatory Hill Christian Church of Allegheny is the outgrowth of a Bible school started in 1893 in the basement of the residence of James B. Grier, of Allegheny, by J. B. Grier and James P. Stewart. The present church building was dedicated October 8, 1902. The pastors have been W. H. Bruff, Bruce Kershner and W. T. Prewett. John A. Jayne has been with the church eight full years. During his pastorate there have been added 278 by confession and baptism, and nearly one hundred by statement and letter. Brother Jayne is a regular contributor to the "Pittsburg Press," furnishing a sermon weekly, which he illustrates. His work is now being syndicated in Chicago and will appear simultaneously in many of the leading Sunday papers of the country. Thus he will reach an immense audience.

The First Christian Church of Carnegie, Pa., was organized in 1887 with fourteen members. For several months Brethren Latimer, Stewart, Green, Chessley and Philips, in turn, preached and ministered to the congregation, which met in a hall. In 1888 O. H. Philips took charge, and after a few months gave himself entirely to the ministry and continued therein till 1893. During his ministry a church building was erected. It was destroyed by fire in 1895, and thereafter services were held in the old Presbyterian Church building until the present house of worship was erected in 1896. Brother Philips was succeeded by W. H. Hanna, who was followed by M. E. Chatley and by Charles C. Cowgil. In May, 1905, the present minister, W. T. Barnes, took charge. The membership at present is 171.

The first beginnings towards materialization of a second congregation of Disciples in Washington was in the purchase of a lot at the corner of Allison and Chelmsford avenues in 1900, during the pastorate of W. H. Hanna. The second step in the crystalization of the work was the organization of an afternoon Bible school in a small store room of D. M. Frazee, one of the brethren. This school enrolled at a few session as many as 130. The third step was a mass meeting held in the First Church, July, 1902, when the day's pledges resulted in raising about $3,500. As soon thereafter as possible work was begun on the present house of worship, which is intended to serve only as a chapel after the main auditorium is built upon the very beautiful corner lot.

The organization of the Second Church was effected December 21, 1903, with 53 charter members. W. B. Reed was the first regular minister. On January 1, 1905, there was a membership of 82, when Oscar W. Riley, then of California, Pa., received a call to serve the church.

Our church at Scottdale, Pa., grew out of a Bible school organized in February, 1896. September 24, 1896, the church at Vanterbilt, Pa., sent her pastor, W. C. Wade, to preach once a month, and in November the church was organized with twelve members. Next year Allen Wilson and F. F. Bullard held a meeting and the Western Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society arranged with A. C. Philips to take up the work, which he did in December, 1897. The following October the church property, valued at $4,000, was dedicated by T. E. Cramblet. In April, 1904, E. J. Barnett, of Jonesboro, Ark., became the minister and closed his work just six months later. On April 1, 1905, M. C. Frick, of Blanchard, Pa., was called to take the work. At this time there were forty-four members, while in October, 1895, there were fifty-five members, and the church is now free from debt.

In November, 1900, H. F. Lutz, under the direction of the American Christian Missionary Society, organized a Bible school in a hall on Penn and Wood streets in Wilkinsburg. A few weeks later, driven from their quarters by fire, they were able to secure the basement of the old Presbytrian Church, but on March 24 the auditorium of the church was also rented and a five weeks' meeting held. Ninety consecrated and earnest Christians formed a splendid nucleus around which to build a useful church, and on the last day of April, 1901, an organization was effected and the history of the First Christian Church of Wilkinsburg began. Later, this little congretion, purchased the property in which they had been meeting and partially remodeled it. In January, 1902, Brother Lutz was called to the city evangelistic work and L. N. D. Wells, of New Cumberland, W. Va., was engaged.

The Simultaneous Campaign in Cincinnati and Vicinity

By W. J. Wright

According to the program published in a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, this campaign began October 8, with meetings in nineteen of the churches. They were scattered over wide territory, the furthest outlying congregations being fully twenty miles apart.

It will be difficult in any campaign to bring together an abler number of men for evangelistic work. There was but one of the number who gives all his time to this work, Bro. James Small, of Columbus, Ind. His meeting with the Fergus Street Church was made a union meeting by the Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians of that part of the city joining in the revival, which, for the first two weeks, was held in the Presbyterian church. The seating capacity of the house was taxed from night to night, and the people were highly pleased and greatly edified by Brother Small's preaching, a goodly share of which was strongly doctrinal in character.

The third week's meetings were held in the Fergus Street Church of Christ, but were identical in character with those preceding. Brother Small's methods were just those which he has used for eighteen years in evangelistic work in the Christian churches, and the confession of faith in Christ was received in exactly the same form which is familiar to all.

This campaign has been simultaneous without in any large sense being union. Each congregation selected its own evangelist and became responsible for his remuneration and for the conduct of its own meeting. A very small fund was raised for preliminary advertising, but there was no joining of forces, in order that they who are strong should bear the infirmities of the weak. The weak churches were compelled to secure and pay their own men or do without.

There was but one union feature to the whole campaign, and that was the Sunday afternoon mass meetings in the Central Church. These meetings were well attended, there not having been one occasion in five years which has drawn such audiences. Some of the congregations did not co-operate heartily in this single union service, but had meetings of their own. The attendance and enthusiasm, however, were such as to show us of what great things we are capable if once we hold a meeting which is truly the union of all our forces.

The preaching throughout the campaign has been of a very high order and has very greatly built up the saints in the various congregations. At most of the meeting places the houses were either well filled or crowded to the doors from night to night, notwithstanding the fact that we have had more rain in three weeks than in the two or three months preceding. The chief disappointment in the campaign is the comparatively small number of additions to the churches, there being but about three hundred at the time of this writing, and fewer than two hundred of these are conversions. Many persons are interested, and not a few deeply convicted of sin and of their need of the Savior, but the meetings will doubtless close and leave many of them outside the kingdom.

This leads us to mention another weakness in the campaign. That is, in most of the congregations, it was planned to have it continued for only three weeks. This is all too short for a great meeting. Who can recall a single great meeting, resulting in hundreds of conversions, and held within the limit of three weeks? Our great meetings, with single congregations, in which as many persons turned to the Lord as have in all these nineteen churches, invariably ran about double the length of time covered by our campaign. This campaign ought to have been planned for and to have continued six weeks.

Some of our churches were not ready for the meetings. They cheerfully agreed to go into the campaign, and secured good men to lead them; they cheerfully contributed all the expenses of the campaign, but there was not enough prayer and preparation in the churches. They expected great things of the evangelist rather than of God. They were willing that the evangelist should attempt great things for God, but they themselves would attempt nothing but the payment of bills and the drinking in of fine preaching. The world will never be converted to the Lord Jesus Christ by what we may term professional preaching; the whole church must be aroused to her sense of duty and opportunity, and every member must so feel the sacredness of his obligation as to be saying continually, "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel." It should be the aim of every preacher to have each new member in his church realize that he has joined a "Win One Society," and that the way to increase the membership of the body of Christ is individual effort at soul winning, persisted in throughout all the years.

We did not plan for large enough things in this campaign. We have sown sparingly and have reaped sparingly. The campaign should have been union, the weaker churches being helped by the stronger. It should have included street preaching and preaching in scores of public places where the people are found, and not merely the proclamation of the Word in the meeting houses, which are frequented only by Christian people. It should have embraced central meetings daily, so that our forces would have been unified. Many persons would thus have been given an opportunity of hearing the Gospel, who were denied the privilege in the separate night meetings in the churches. We should have had Music Hall, in which were held the sessions of the great jubilee convention, at least for our Sunday afternoon mass meetings, and all our congregations should have given this great mass meeting the right of way.

It is easy to see at the end of the campaign where we missed the way and how much better we might have done. We all believe it will be better done the next time; we all thank God and take courage because the campaign has, without question, been of great benefit to our forces.

In the first place, we have agreed and walked together for a season, which is quite a new experience in our history in this vicinity. We began to see how good and how beautiful it is for brethren to walk together, though this is our first effort at it, in spite of our continuous preaching of unity.

Further, the campaign has shown us what a power is at our command if we unite our forces and go into an aggressive work. The latent possibilities of our people are beyond computation. O, that these possibilities were called into daily activity!

Again, this campaign has shown us our real weakness in this vicinity. In consideration of our unusual opportunities we ought to have at least fifty congregations in this vicinity, instead of less than twenty-five; we ought to have a score of as great, strong churches as may be found anywhere in our brotherhood. Instead of that, most of our churches are weak. This revelation of our weakness ought to become a means of strength and growth to us, by making us avoid in the future the things which, in the past, have been our undoing.

Still further, it ought to make us more determined upon the evangelization of this community than ever before. All our congregations hereabouts are warmly and strongly missionary, but they have too generally considered missionary effort as being put forth in China and Africa, or at least in New England or the great northwest. They have not properly considered their own neighborhood as a mission field of practically limitless possibilities They have been too farsighted in their missionary enterprises, and have evidently forgotten that—

> "We may send out the news of salvation,
> To the nations in darkness and sin;
> We may go to the uttermost places
> And gather the straying ones in;
> But God is not pleased with our labors,
> Though heavy the burdens we bore,
> While the field that awaiteth the sickle,
> Lies neglected in front of the door."

This campaign will, in all probability, result in a more effective city organization. We have a right to expect churches to be organized annually here, instead of once or twice in a decade.

Finally, this campaign has been a blessing. It has laid bare our weakness and the reasons therefor. It has revealed still more plainly the great door of opportunity open before us. It has demonstrated to us the fact that we can work, not only simultaneously, but harmoniously and unitedly. It points to the fact that we will be able, and perhaps glad, to plan a campaign for one year or eighteen months hence never equaled in opportunity, in extent, in thoroughness of preparation and in results, by any planned within our brotherhood, or, perhaps, by any other one. In many and important and lasting senses, our simultaneous revival has been a great victory; and to the Father, through Jesus Christ the Son, be kingdom and power and glory now and forever. Amen.

Current Religious Thought.

There is nothing much more mysterious and forbidding in appearance than a page of printed music to a person who knows nothing about it. But to one who has been a lifelong student of music, and who has read and practiced it daily on some instrument, the page is not only decipherable, but is the medium for musical thought and delight. So is the Word of God. He who has been again, and who loves daily to read and to mediate upon and to practice the divine precepts, finds upon its sacred pages a message that goes to his very heart from the Heavenly Father. Yet there are those who, knowing nothing, experimentally, about religious life presume to sit in judgment upon and to criticise the Scriptures. The unmusica dullard who should think to criticise Beethoven or Wagner would be laughed to scorn. How much more so the infide who sneers at religion and at the teachings of the Bible!—Herald and Presbyter.

Iowa Notes.

The Ringgold County Convention met in a three days' session at Delphos. There was a large attendance and addresses were delivered by Miss Annetta Newcomer, state secretary, and Mrs. Laura D. Garst, returned missionary from Japan. Twenty dollars was raised for the new Bible college at Des Moines. Harry Bryan, state Sunday school superintendent, was present, and he has arranged to hold county institutes in every school in the county. A special county manager was elected to supervise the Sunday school, another for the C. W. B. M. and also for the Junior Endeavor and the Senior Endeavor.

The most of the ministers of the county were present and 150 delegates were in attendance. Elder J. S. Coffin gave an excellent talk on our plea, and Elder Thoma Wallace, of Mount Ayr church, told of the dead cities of the Old World. Elder H. A Sheets was re-elected president, Thoma Wallace, secretary.

A Notable Conference

By W. J. Lhamon

The installation of Dr. Edmund Jones James as president of the University of Illinois, which took place on October 18, was an educational event of unusual significance; first, by reason of the aggressively Christian character and faith of this young and magnetic university president; and secondly, by reason of a number of educational conferences held in connection with the event. These conferences were well attended. There were present an unusual array of educational people, representing many of the greater and smaller institutions of the country.

What most interests the writer, and I dare say THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST audience also, was the conference on "Religious Education in State Universities and Colleges." It was a delight to see the interest and enthusiasm with which foremost educators entered upon the discussion of such themes as the following: "What Religious Education May the State University Undertake?" "The State Universities and the Churches"; "Obligations of the Church to Its Adherents in the State Universities"; and "Affiliated Colleges."

Representatives of the University of Illinois, Ohio State University, St. Ignatius College, Indiana University, University of Michigan, Oberlin College, Washington and Jefferson College, Northwestern University, University of North Dakota, University of Oklahoma, University of Missouri, Hiram College, Eureka College, The Bible College of Missouri and a number of other institutions were present.

This conference was held in the University Place Church, a beautiful and commodious building in classic style, erected by our own brethren within the last three years. This building is an instrument of power and an ornament to our cause in this great university center. The young and efficient pastor, Bro. S. E. Fisher, is fully alive to the requirements and opportunities of his position, and is longing for the help of a Bible chair or a Bible college, or some such instrumentality by which the growing army of university men and women, already a body of between 3,000 and 4,000, may be more effectively reached.

When I arrived Jenkins Lloyd Jones, the noted Chicago Unitarian, white bearded and bristling and breezy, was in the midst of a free-lance plea for ethical and spiritual teaching in state universities along lines so religiously broad as to be wholly indistinct. Mr. Jones deprecated the idea of surrounding our state universities with little denominational theological schools engaged in mutual bickerings and rivalry. Of course, if that is to be the character of the affiliated Bible colleges we agree with him. But that is not what the state universities are inviting. University men know that there is now a scholarly and all but cosmopolitan presentation of Biblical and Christian truth, and that the foremost men in the various denominations may be trusted with it.

Professor Francis W. Kelsey, of the University of Michigan, in his address on "The State University and the Churches," advocated the affiliation of Bible colleges with the state universities for the religious effect it would have on university faculties. He declared that such faculties are not anti-Christian or even non-Christian, but that they are made up almost wholly of men who have Christian faith. Their danger is that by pre-occupation and stress of work they become religiously atrophied. The presence of Biblical work of an academic grade side by side with their own would materially obviate this danger. He also felt that such work would greatly help to direct promising students toward the ministry. He raised the following incisive question, which the churches may do well to ponder: "Shall we fear to put the theological faculty beside the university"?

President Henry Churchill King's address bristled with vital points. Our state universities are full of "picked" young men and women. Thousands of them belong to the churches. They need spiritual help and guidance. It is the genius of the university to make leaders, and of Christianity to touch a few lives powerfully. State and civic and citizen conscience is tremendously needed. Democracy depends on unselfish leadership. The civilization of the brotherly man is the only one that can permanently exist. The brotherly man is the Christly man. He advocates in university centers:

1. A strong pulpit.
2. Real, rational, vital religious truth.
3. The presentation of the great figure of Jesus Christ.
4. Well adapted courses of Bible study.

President Webster Merrifield, of the University of North Dakota, in his paper on "The Affiliated College," presented such an array of facts as must have been a revelation even to those who felt themselves well posted on the subject. Five denominational colleges are in affiliation or federation with the University of Toronto in Toronto, Canada. In Winnipeg a similar relation exists with church schools. In Australia such relationship is the rule rather than the exception. In the United States the idea is getting a firm hold, and is represented by a number of Bible chairs, Bible colleges, guild houses and student pastors. An affiliation has been made within the last few months between the University of North Dakota and a Methodist college, by which credits are granted on the part of the university for prescribed courses of Biblical work, and also on the part of the college for university courses. President Merrifield is an ardent advocate of this adjustment of the church college to the state university.

I came away from this conference filled with hope and inspiration. Our state universities are not Godless, and the men who manage them are not infidels. Let those who think so attend such gatherings as this in Urbana. In truth, university officials and instructors are more alive to the situation, and are more concerned for the moral and spiritual welfare of their thousands of young men and women than those who have stood looking askance, and pointing the finger, and crying, "Godless, Godless"! Within the last three weeks I have seen a university official in private conversation grow almost angry at this attitude of inconsiderate and ill-informed critics. He said: "If we are Godless, why don't they come and help us to be Christian? We ought to be as worth saving as the slums! But they treat the slums with a show of reason which they refuse to accord to us."

So far from being Godless, most of our state universities are doing such religious work as they can, and inviting and fostering what they can not do.

The University of Missouri has extended an official invitation to religious bodies to locate their Bible colleges or seminaries in proximity to the campus. Dean J. C. Jones, of the academic department, now acting president of the university, has an appointment to lay the matter before the Presbyterian synod next week.

The University of Illinois by recent action has extended a similar invitation.

The idea of the affiliated Bible college is rapidly getting hold of educators and business men. The economy and advantages of such adjustment are apparent and immense. There will surely be a great development of the plan in the years just at hand.

FUNNY

People Will Drink Coffee When It "Does Such Things."

"I began to use Postum because the old kind of coffee had so poisoned my whole system that I was on the point of breaking down, and the doctor warned me that I must quit it.

"My chief ailment was nervousness and heart trouble.

"Any unexpected noise would cause me the most painful palpitation, make me faint and weak.

"I had heard of Postum and began to drink it when I left off the old coffee. It began to help me just as soon as the old effects of the other kind of coffee passed away. It did not stimulate me for awhile, and then leave me weak and nervous as coffee used to do. Instead of that it built up my strength and supplied a constant vigor to my system which I can always rely on. It enables me to do the biggest kind of a day's work without getting tired. All the heart trouble, etc., has passed away.

"I give it freely to all my children, from the youngest to the oldest, and it keeps them all healthy and hearty." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Our Budget.

—Next Lord's day is State Mission Day in all the states.

—Let it be State Mission Day also in all our churches.

—We are compelled to hold the second installment of J. S. Sweeney's reminiscences until next week.

—In addition to the special telegrams on page 1241 with reference to the opening of the Western Pennsylvania Campaign, our readers will rejoice at this special from Kansas City: Four hundred added in evangelistic campaign in Greater Kansas City to date (Oct. 30).—FRANK L. BOWEN., Sec.

—A. L. West has gone to Carlinville, Ill.

—S. L. Lyon is now located at Rushsylvania, Ohio.

—Chas. A. Cokewell has taken hold at Perry, Ia.

—Edgar Price, of Beatrice, Neb., will return to Iowa.

—The work at Casey, Ill., under A. E. Brown, starts off well.

—A county meeting will be held at Crocker, Mo., November 17-19.

—H. C. Parsons has gone to Rudolph, Ia.

—The church at Mount Vernon, Ill., will be re-dedicated Lord's day by J. Fred Jones.

—W. A. Green, of Rock Falls, Ill., has been called to Kewanee.

—M. M. Davis, of Dallas, Tex., has been elected president of the Pastors' Association of that city.

—W. L. Harris, pastor of the Grant City (Mo.) church, gave an address at Delphos, Ia., at the Iowa district convention.

—A great evangelistic campaign is being planned for the entire western reserve one year from now.

—We are glad to see that P. C. MacFarlane is again able to take charge of his work at Alameda, Cal.

—J. M. Monroe has just dedicated a new church at Carney, Okla., and raised the balance of indebtedness.

—Cleveland is well represented in the Pittsburg evangelistic campaign, three of its city pastors being engaged in it.

—November 1 was the beginning of the pastorate of J. P. Allison at the Dunham Avenue Church, Cleveland.

—The Texas Christian lectureship will be held at Denton, December 11-14, with Dean Hiram Van Kirk as the principal speaker.

—J. Q. Biggs, late of Sumner, Ill., is now in charge of the church at Buffalo, Mo., where the work opens very auspiciously.

—J. M. Monroe will dedicate, on successive Sundays, churches at Tryon, Davenport, Cushing, Texola and Woodward, all being in Oklahoma.

—Harlan Runyan has just received a call for the fifth year from his church at Latonia, Ky. A new furnace has just been installed in the building.

—The Christian Ministers' Association of the Indian Territory will meet at Roff December 5. All who expect to attend should write there to E. S. Allhands.

—A. F. Henry, who has just sailed for Africa, is the living link of the Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, which is in the midst of building.

—This is the year of simultaneous evangelistic campaigns. We now have a great simultaneous missionary offering for state missions in all the states.

—The brethren at Howard, Kan., have extended a call to J. M. Plummer to become their pastor for one year. He began work there November 1.

—Has your school ordered its rally day supplies? If not, send the order at once as it will be necesary to get to work at once if you are to have a good exercise.

—W. T. Hilton and wife had the occasion of the eleventh anniversary of their marriage very pleasantly remembered by the members of the First Church at Atchison, Kan.

—We regret very much to learn that B. E. Utz, pastor of our church at Spokane, Wash., is in the hospital with typhoid fever. Brother Utz was afflicted a year ago with the same disease.

—William D. Ryan, pastor of the Central Church, Syracuse, N. Y., recently lectured before the ministerial students of Syracuse University on "The Management of Church Finances."

—L. D. Andrews, of Leavenworth, Kas., who has very distinct recollections of Elder John H. Reese, whose obituary appeared in our columns October 12, would like the address of his son, Boyd E. Reese.

—The mission church in Paris, Ill., has just been dedicated and the debt of $1,200 on the building raised. Brother Idleman reports that there were 16 additions, 10 of them being confessions, on this occasion.

—Remember boys' and girls' rally day bears the same relation to Home and State Missions that children's day does to Foreign Mission. Can you afford to neglect the home missionary education of the children?

—G. P. Rutledge, pastor of one of our Philadelphia churches, is taking an active part in the political campaign going on in Philadelphia, delivering addresses at various ward meetings in the interest of the city (reform) party.

—"The Gospel According to John—Emphasized Edition," is being published by the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 250 LaSalle avenue, Chicago, for one cent per copy, in lots of one hundred. This is certainly making the Word of God cheap enough.

—The Alabama Christian Missionary Co-operation will hold its twentieth convention at Athens, November 13-16. An admirable program has been arranged, and those expecting to attend should send their names to Mr. Thos. Lenox so that accommodation may be provided.

—Ernest C. Mobley, Weatherford, Tex., was married on Tuesday, the 31st ult., and will leave at once for Southampton, England, where he has been called to become pastor of the First Church. We extend him our double congratulations.

—Dr. W. E. Macklin spoke twice on Lord's day, October 22, at Sterling, Kan. He and his family are spending a few days with relatives there before going on to the coast to sail for China November 4. The church building at Sterling is being papered, shingled and otherwise repaired.

—C. H. DeVoe, who has just held a successful meeting at Wilkesbarre, Pa., reports that the congregation there is in great need of a building, having to work and worship in the Y. M. C. A. lecture hall. Bro. E. E. Cowperthwaite, the pastor, is building up steadily a band of earnest Disciples.

—Our readers will notice that we have been compelled to resort to smaller type, to meet the demand upon our space, and in addition to that we add four extra pages this week, and still we are unable to accommodate all who want to be heard. Condensation is a necessity, in order for all to have a hearing.

—The Jackson Street Christian Church, of Muncie, Ind., has extended a unanimous call to W. H. Allen, of the Chestnut Street Church, Lexington, Ky., to become its pastor, succeeding T. A. Reynolds, who has resigned. Brother Allen has accepted the call and will begin his work at Muncie December 1.

—We very much regret to hear of the death of Captain W. A. Higgins, a brother of Sister Smith, wife of the corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society. He was present at the San Francisco convention, and we just learn he has suddenly died of heart failure.

—This encouraging word comes to us from Bro. J. C. Rose, corresponding secretary of the Missionary Society of the Churches of Christ in Indiana: "You will rejoice to know that there is a general awakening and growth in the substantial elements of loyal interest, intelligent zeal, and cash offerings for our state work in Indiana."

—Bro. W. W. Clarke, Billings, Mont., writes that there is "an exceptionally good opening in Billings for a man with some money to engage in buying and selling all kinds of farm produce." He says they wish they might locate there one of our own people. This may meet the eye of some one who will be interested in the proposition.

—We regret that a number of articles relating to state missions which came in too late for use in last week's paper, are crowded out by the demands of our special evangelistic number. Enough has been said, however, in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to notify all the churches where it circulates that November 5 is State Mission Day, and that each church is expected to "keep step" with the others.

—We very much regret to learn of the death of the wife of Bro. J. M. Mohorter, of Pueblo, Col. Brother Mohorter left his work in Boston some two years ago with the hope that the Colorado climate would prolong the life of Sister Mohorter, who has been a victim of tuberculosis for years. They have made a deep impression on the thriving Colorado city, and this death has aroused a sympathy that is far beyond the bounds of the church walls.

—G. H. C. Stoney writes us that on Lord's day, October 8, Z. T. Sweeney dedicated the new church building at Murray, Ky. Very large audiences were present, and almost $4,000 was raised in cash and pledges. The dedication was a success in every way. Bros. A. B. Reeves, of Paris, Tenn., and R. L. Clark, of Mayfield, attended, besides many brethren from Paris, Tenn., Benton, Ky., and other places, who assisted liberally in the effort to raise the debt.

—A small band of Disciples at Owensville, Ind., is building a house of worship and aims to have it completed in time for B. L. Allen to begin a four weeks' meeting December 10. The brethren feel the need of the co-operation of others outside their particular district, as they are weak financially. It is their desire to dedicate the house without any indebtedness upon it. Those inclined to help may correspond with Luther W. Jones, who is the secretary.

—We regret to learn that W. P. Bentley has been ordered by his physician to leave China at once. The worst of it is that the verdict says that Brother Bentley can not return to his missionary labors. It is a case of general break down, apparently, due to climate. "You can imagine our feelings," writes Brother Bentley. He will locate at Berkeley, Cal., for the winter. We have some articles already in hand from Brother Bentley which our readers will enjoy.

—The Board of Church Extension has just received an annuity of $300 from Mrs. Eliza Fisher Risk, of Canton, Mo. This is the 147th gift to our church extension fund on the annuity plan. Many churches in Oklahoma would be happy to get 6 per cent money to help complete their buildings which are now being threatened for sale because of liens. They built expecting aid from the church extension fund, which has not been able to promise aid because of lack of funds.

—One of our critics writes that we have a "Scriptural warrant" for praying, "Take not thy Holy Spirit from me" (Ps. 51:11), but he thinks we have no such "warrant" for asking God to give us his Spirit. Is not that to be bound with a chain where the Lord has left us free? If God will pardon our sin, when we commit grievous wrongs, and grieve his Holy Spirit, and not take his Holy Spirit from us, "How much more will your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him!"

—The Rev. J. Edward Kirbye, D. D., is to be inaugurated as president of Drury College, Springfield, Mo., on Thursday, November 9. We wish the new president of Drury abundant success as the head of Drury College, an institution that is doing a great work for the southwest. Though a young man, Dr. Kirbye has made a remarkable record, and the friends of the institution are hopeful that the college is to enter upon a new era of prosperity under his energetic administration.

—H. A. DeVoe, brother of the evangelist, is now visiting a few of our churches in the States seeking to raise some money to help pay for the church recently built at Digby, Nova Scotia. He has long borne a heavy burden in his efforts to establish the Cause in that beautiful little city by the sea, and himself became personally responsible for every dollar of the cost of the lot and building. The two brothers have just had a few days together, after twelve years of separation.

—Bro. J. W. Harrison, the gospel-wagon preacher, writes us from a place near Terre Haute and says he will tarry in that city a few days, then his itinerary will lead him on toward St. Louis. He wishes us to state that he would like to fill in the winter months with some church, or churches, "just to supply our wants till fine weather returns." Brother Harrison will render faithful and useful service to any church, or churches, for a time. Those desiring to communicate with him may address him at St. Louis, care general delivery.

—Since the annual election recently held by the life members and other electors in the National Benevolent Association, its officers for the ensuing year are: President, Emily Ivers Meier; vice-presidents, Mesdames Fannie Shedd Ayars, Dr. Sophia Kern; secretary, Mrs. F. M. Wright; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough; treasurer, Lee W. Grant; general secretary, Geo. L. Snively. The executive board consists of these and twenty others, among whom are some of the most prominent Disciples and successful financiers of our brotherhood.

—We devote considerable space this week to the Century Simultaneous Evangelistic Campaign in Pittsburg and Western Pennsylvania, which is the largest simultaneous movement yet undertaken in any of our cities. There is much matter herein that is of special interest to the general evangelistic work in which all our people will be interested, because we are all now coming to be evangelists. The motto suggested by THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a year ago, "EACH ONE WIN ONE," has already become the watchword of many of our churches and should be in all of them.

—C. A. Chasteen, Garland, Tex., on "What Texas Needs," says: "Texas needs more preachers. There is no more inviting field in all America at this time for good, live men that are not hunting easy places, than Texas. Two years ago J. C. Mason, in a letter to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST said: 'We need some good, active men in Texas that are not hunting easy places.' I answered this letter and he located me in a work that has been a bed of roses. If you are alive there is a place for you in Texas. I have evangelized over three counties in Texas this season and can locate some good preachers that can give the right sort of references."

—The Disciples' Union of Greater New York and vicinity will tender a reception to the delegates and visitors at the Interchurch Conference on Federation at the Lenox Avenue Union Church, 41 West 119th street, on Tuesday evening, November 14, at 8:15 o'clock. The occasion is the regular November meeting of the union, and the topic will be "The Disciples of Christ and Interchurch Federation." Dr. Herbert L. Willett will be the chief speaker, and others will join in the discussion. It will be a great meeting, and it is the desire of the union to entertain all the brethren who are to be in New York at that time. Address J. P. Lichtenberger, president, 41 west 119th street, New York.

—We have received a work entitled "Brief Lives of the American Presidents and Selections from Their Words of Wisdom," by W. P. Bentley, M. A., published at Shanghai, China, and of course, in the Chinese language, by the Society for the Diffusion of Christian and General Knowledge Among the Chinese. This comes to us with "the compliments of the author." It contains pictures of the capitol at Washington, the White House, and of the Presidents from Washington to Roosevelt. We have read the pictures, but we have not yet found time to decipher the Chinese characters! We have no doubt it will awaken sentiments of patriotism and a love for America in the hearts of the Chinese readers.

—"I am sure you have rendered the church a real and needed service in your new book, 'The Holy Spirit.' Having read A. J. Gordon's 'The Ministry of the Spirit,' and J. M. Campbell's 'After Pentecost—What?' I was prepared for your work. For several years I have been preaching a series of sermons on 'The Relation of the Holy Spirit to the Christian,' as day sermons in meetings. The people are interested in this subject and sadly in need of teaching."—G. L. BUSH, McKinney, Tex.

Of course they are interested, and do not hear half as much preaching on the Holy Spirit and prayer as they would like to hear. The writer once visiting a church was requested to speak on prayer, and did so. He was told that the request had often been made of their regular preacher, but he had never preached on the subject.

—Irving S. Chenoweth, assistant pastor of the Union Avenue Christian Church, was ordained to the Christian ministry on last Lord's day at the morning service. A strong sermon was preached by the pastor, Dr. J. M. Philputt, on "The Work of the Christian Ministry," and the ordination services which followed were conducted by J. H. Garrison, and participated in by the elders of the church and a visiting elder, Brother Dennis, from Brother Chenoweth's home church, in Mechanicsburg, Ill. Brother Chenoweth has already gained a warm place in the affections of the congregation, and is proving himself a most useful helper to Brother Philputt in carying forward the different departments of the work in so large a church. Many of the congregation had never witnessed an ordination service before, and were profoundly impressed with its solemnity and significance.

—Mrs. E. J. Piatt, writing from the little isle of Vashon, Wash., and from her home, "Fern Acres," says: "Four years ago we came to Washington and settled on Vashon island. Our home is on the east side of the island, on what is called Beal's Point. It is almost half way between Seattle and Tacoma. Had you looked to the left as you took your ride on the 'flyer' from Tacoma to Seattle you could almost have seen our house." She says there are only two families of Disciples on the island, and she is anxious to have others locate there, that they may have the benefit of church privileges. It is certainly an ideal location, as we saw the island from our little steamer, and those who would like to locate there may correspond with our sister, as above, for particulars.

WE CAN SHOW YOU

How to do the Lord's work while having your savings in an absolutely safe investment, upon which there will be no taxes to pay, no change of securities, no personal oversight required, no cost of mortgage records or foreclosures, and upon which you will net a larger rate of interest than in any other investment. If you are a Christian and want your money to work for Christ while at the same time it supports you, write, mentioning this paper, to

BENJAMIN L. SMITH,

Corresponding Sec'y American Christian Missionary Society,

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

—And now Bro. Grover Cleveland has begun to preach, and Brothers Roosevelt and Bryan may look to their laurels. In a recent speech at Nebraska City the ex-president said: "We have fallen upon days when our people are more than ever turning away from their old faith in the saving grace of character and flocking to the worship of money-making idols. Daily and hourly, in the light of investigation and exposure, characterless lives are seen in appalling numbers, without chart or compass, crowded upon the rocks and shoals of faithlessness and breach of trust. How ill have these wrecked lives exchanged the safe course and the harbor of honor and usefulness, which character and rectitude point out, for a wild and headlong rush over unknown seas, in a consuming search for pelf."

—Recently we gave notice of the resignation of Bro. E. Jay Teagarden as pastor of the church at Danbury, Conn., and that his purpose was to close his labors there soon. But now comes the "Danbury Evening News" of October 23, containing a letter from Brother Teagarden to his congregation which he read from his pulpit on the day before, announcing his decision, at the urgent request of his members, to withdraw his resignation and remain with them. In his letter he says: "It would require a heart of stone to refuse to heed the earnest appeal of this church and this community. But I have been guided in my deliberations not alone by your earnest appeal, but by the judgment of men whom you and I mutually trust and respect." And so our brother's fifteen years' pastorate is to be continued, and we feel like congratulating both the pastor and the church on their decision to continue a relation which has been so blessed of God and which has resulted in such blessed fruits. May this relation continue long and be still more abundantly blessed is our sincere wish.

—Prof. A. J. Thomson, principal of the Louisville Christian Bible school for the free education of colored men for the ministry, regardless of denominational connections, under the management of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, encloses us a letter which he has recived from a brother in Missouri, inquiring for information concerning the location of our schools for colored people, in which he says it is common to find influential men and women in the brotherhood actively interested in our general enterprises "who know neither the name nor the place of any school for colored people in the brotherhood." He rightly thinks this ought not to be so. We are not doing half what we ought to do in the line of negro education, but we are doing something and doing it in the right way, and the brethren generally ought to know, if they do not, what is being done, and where it is being done and who are doing it. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will be glad to furnish this information to its readers if Professor Thompson or Bro. C. C. Smith will kindly furnish us the necessary data.

Hurry Up!

It is manifest from correspondence coming to me that we are to have a great year in Missouri Bible school work, notwithstanding the delay in securing a secretary. Requests for institutes are coming so plentifully that all the time to be devoted to this feature this year will soon be taken up. Those wanting such work ought to write me at once. First coming will be first served as far as possible. It takes precious time and costs money to send out statements. Don't wait for them, but send the money you know to be due. Arrangements are being made to increase the field force as rapidly as money is provided with which to do so.

Address all correspondence to me at Richmond, Mo., till further notice.

J. H. HARDIN, Sec. and Treas.

Little Rock (Ark.) Meeting.

Our eights weeks' meeting in Little Rock, Ark., closed October 23 with 169 additions to the church; 86 of these were by confession and baptism and 83 otherwise. Twenty-eight were from other religious bodies. Bro. Edward McKinney, of Dorsey, Ill., directed the music to the satisfaction of all. He is a good man and pleasant to work with.

The first four weeks were spent with the First church, where J. N. Jessup has been the beloved pastor for seven years. He is a wise, good man, and is one of the leading spirits in Little Rock. There were 110 additions to the First church.

The last four weeks were spent with the Second church, a mission of the First church, where there were 60 additions. Dr. D. B. Stanley has been faithfully ministering to this new church for several months, and has accomplished great good. However, his practice as a physician makes it necessary for him to give up this work as soon as a pastor can be selected to succeed him. The last day of the meeting a beautiful site was selected for a new church building, and money raised to purchase chairs to seat the large hall secured for use until a new house of worship can be erected.

R. H. FIFE, Evangelist.

C. W. B. M. Day—December 3.

Our woman's missionary organization has 2,027 auxiliaries and mission circles and 1,197 contributing children's organizations in the churches. Through these societies and by individual gifts it is supporting 336 missionaries, evangelists, teachers and native workers in the United States, Jamaica, India, Mexico, Porto Rico and South America. More than three thousand pupils are in the schools conducted by this organization; more than four hundred children are in its orphanages, and in the hospitals and dispensaries 13,125 patients have received medical attention during this year. It has this year sent twenty missionaries to foreign fields, beside the enlargement made in its home forces.

Through C. W. B. M. day the churches are asked to aid in this good work by taking an offering for it.

Inter-Church Conference on Federation.

The following railroad associations have kindly granted concessions in rates of fare for all persons in attendance upon the interchurch conference on federation, to be held in Carnegie Hall, New York, November 15-21, 1905: New England Passenger Association, Trunk Line Association, Central Passenger Association, Western Passenger Association, The Southeastern Passenger Association, The Southwestern Excursion Bureau.

The rate given for the interchurch conference is one and one-third fares for the round trip on the certificate plan, plus 25 cents to be paid at Carnegie Hall, New York city. Certificates will be issued for going tickets November 11 to 17, inclusive, and will be honored for return tickets up to and including November 25.

For other details address the Rev. Wm. H. Roberts, D. D., chairman, Room 515 Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

Church Extension Receipts.

Comparative statement for the first fifteen days of October, 1905.

	1904	1905	GAIN
From churches,	$3,307.71	$3,7 2.76	$446.05
" individuals,	1,046.46	156.00	890.46

Total gain for the first half of October $1 3 6 05

There were forty less churches contributing this year than last year, though there was a gain of $446.95 in the amount contributed. There are yet more than 500 churches that promised to take the offering that have not yet remitted. Multitudes of churches are pleading for help. The following letter for J. M. Monroe, corresponding secretary of the Oklahoma Christian Missionary Society, is typical of the letters the board is getting. The stronger the board is getting. The stronger churches will surely not allow our missions to suffer because of failure to send offerings. The board can not promise money if the churches will not send it to house our homeless missions:

"OKLAHOMA CITY, OK., October 10, 1905.

"Dear Brother Muckley—A letter from two of our living link men states that you failed to grant their applications at the September meeting of the board. These buildings were started before they had any intimation that they could not get the loans, and they promised the people that they could get it, and so did I.

DO GOOD

With your money and enjoy an income from it while you live by giving to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society on the ANNUITY PLAN. The income is large, uninterrupted, and certain for life. Interest is paid according to age of donor. There is no expense for repairs or taxes. A bond is given to insure prompt payment of interest, semi-annually. It is better than a government bond. Over two hundred gifts have been made, amounting to about $250,000. This plan is especially adapted to those fifty years of age, or older. Full particulars given upon request. Let us send you our illustrated booklet, free of charge.

F. M. RAINS, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, O.

"Brother Muckley, if we can no longer get loans for Oklahoma it will paralyze our work here. If you can tide us over for another year, until we get statehood, we will have about all of the railroad towns equipped with church buildings, and the foundation laid for a great work by our people in Oklahoma. Without this help I fear that we shall lose all of our living link missionaries. It is easy for us to handle these new towns and build with the assurance that we can get your help. In this way we have built forty-two churches the last missionary year, and forty the year before.

"I wish you would write me stating for us to go ahead with this great work. We must make our plans for building now before winter comes on. Doubt for a month now will cost us our fall campaign, and the loss of a dozen churches. Yours in his name, J. M. MONROE."

Remit to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidently made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this recipe free, only asking two 2-cen tstamps to pay expenses. This herb also cures Night Sweats, Nausea at the Stomach, and will break up a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Nebraska.

The church at Kearney where F. D. Hobson ministers was gladdened October 8 by the addition to its membership of three of the professors of the State Normal with their families. Two others had been baptized a week previous, this making in all sixteen helpers in the work. It was a good day for this church, so long struggling along with almost insurmountable difficulties. This church is a mission point of the state board, and much credit is due the society for helping it to this stage. These men who have been added, and their families, have been most excellent workers in other congregations.

F. S. White began a meeting at Liberty church, near Ansley, this week.

Ten were added to the York church on Oct. 8; seven by letter and three by baptism. Thos. Maxwell began his pastorate there Sept. 1, and the work is growing.

The secretary talked state missions at North Bend on Oct. 8. Bro. J. B. White, the jolly preacher, is laid up with inflammatory rheumatism in one foot and hand. He is improving. This church has just builded a commodious parsonage. It is well finished and most conveniently arranged. The total cost, including extra land and a neat barn, is around $1,500. Most of this was raised outright, and the rest will be paid out practically as rent. This is a fine addition to the working plant there. The congregation and the pastor and family are joined together in love.

W. W. Divine, now in the millinery business at Greenwood, supplied at David City on Oct. 8. W. P. Aylsworth was there on Oct. 15.

Samuel Gregg has been called back to Iowa on account of the serious illness of his aged mother. The uncertainty of the case has caused him to relinquish the Minden work.

Brother Edgar Price has resigned at Beatrice. He will take work again in Iowa, so it is reported. We are most sorry to lose Brother Price. Nebraska needs more such, rather than to lose those we have Some other impending changes are adding to the burden of the secretary at this time.

The pulpit supply committee kept its preachers' list open until the last minute possible before the presses began on it, but even before the ink is dry there are changes. May the Lord save us! We are a swift people.

J. E. Wilson will close his work at Indianola about January 1.

No late news from the Whiston meeting at Vesta. It was to close on Wednesday of this week. An organization was effected with some of the best people in the community; the Bethel church house, unused for several years, was donated, and money raised to move it and repair it, with lots donated, is the immediate result.

The state evangelist was granted permission to hold one or two meetings outside of mission points. His first one will be at Harvard, beginning Oct. 15.

The meeting at Magnet, under R. D. McCance, continues. H. E. Motter has been on the field helping with the music.

The National Board of the C W. B. M. has granted the state of Nebraska $300 for mission work this year, beginning Oct. 1. This grant comes at a very opportune time in view of the increased demands.

Someone asks about A. W. Henry. The last we saw of him he was singing as loud as he could at the international convention. He was to hold a meeting at Sanger, Cal. He may have strayed down to Long Beach and gone swimming.

The missionary society will mail to the churches this week posters to call attention to the offering for state missions that is due November 5. We ask the co-operation of preachers and church officers to have them properly posted. If your church does not have them up, write for others. This secretary will supply you.

Do you know this is to be the greatest offering for state missions we have ever made? More churches, Bible schools and C. E. Societies will take the offering on the day appointed than ever before. The amounts pledged will be larger. The prayers for the success of state missions will be more earnest. The sermons will be more searching. These things must be so because of the great convention held by the Nebraska Disciples August 1-6, 1905. That two thousand people could be present at that convention and not carry away with them larger visions of the Lord's will in this matter is impossible. Are you with us?

W. A. BALDWIN.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

Sisters—I can hardly make you understand how disappointed I am to learn that Missouri failed to reach its apportionment in money, of $11,000, for the missionary year ending in September. We were asked to raise for all purposes, outside of state development fund, $11,000. We sent, before September 30, just $10,777.99, making our lack only $222.01. So near and yet to fail! But, we need not have failed if the auxiliaries had been prompt in sending and reporting their September quarter. Mrs. Moses writes that more than enough belated money was received after October 1 to have put us over the $11,000 mark. Was your auxiliary one of those who, through lack of promptness, kept the whole state back? If so, will you not make a promise to yourselves now that never again shall your lack cause your own state to fail of its noble aims? It is always this way. The strong suffer with the weak, the faithful with the others. The next message will give auxiliaries who did not fail. If yours is not among them, you can guess where you stand, and that yours had a part in keeping us from reaching the desire of many earnest hearts.

The number of failures is as follows: In the first district, 9; in the second, 5; in the third, 2; in the fourth, 3; in the fifth, 6; in the sixth, 8; in the seventh, 6; in the eighth, 4; in the ninth, 3; in the tenth, 0; St. Louis, 0; Kansas City, 3. One cause for joy is that we gained $1,861.90 over last year. Let us thank God and go on. I feel that the lack is largely caused by change of officers, who have not been made to know what was expected of them. To new officers who do not understand: Please study the auxiliary constitution.

Have you heard that our own Mattie Burgess has been adopted by the Downey Avenue (Indianapolis) Church as its living link? That means that her support is no longer the privilege of Missouri. Do you start to say, it is not fair to take her from us? Let me tell you that our national board met just this case last year, when Union Avenue (St. Louis) Church chose Mr. Burner for its link, after Indiana had selected him as a state charge. The decision then was that states and districts must give up missionaries to churches, auxiliaries and individuals. Indiana surrendered to Missouri then, and now we must surrender our own girl to Indiana. It is sad, and one church in our state will recall the anxiety of the secretary to have it take her, just because of this very thing. Now that she is Indiana's charge, let us be thankful that one more church has joined the living link band, and rejoice that a home product was its choice. Let us, as a state, send our prayers and our tender love with "Our Mattie," as we still are privileged to call her, on her way over land and ocean, whither she goes to take the unsearchable riches of him whom she loves so well and serves so faithfully.

A message frm Caroline Pope, as she sailed, sent love and said: "Tell the sisters I am sailing in fine spirits." We must watch lest some other state casts longing eyes on this girl of ours. Let us forget the things that are past, and push forward toward better things. We do not want to discourage any, but if the weak places are not told once in a while, we shall not be armed against a repetition of our failures, which we all are anxious to avoid.

St. Louis, Mo. MRS. L. G. BANTZ.

The Tennessee Convention.

The Disciples of Christ in Tennessee met in annual convention at Harriman October 2-5. This was the sixteenth successive annual gathering in such a capacity and proved in many respects the best of all.

The convention was presided over by L. D. Riddell with his usual Christian bearing, grace and dignity. From the opening sermon of the meeting by R. Lin Cave, to the closing sermon by W. H. Sheffer, there was a high and well sustained interest. "Victory" was breathed forth in every sermon, song and prayer.

The attendance was good, in consideration of the fact that Harriman is in the eastern division of the state, and thus far away from the center of our membership. The Harriman people, under the leadership of John B. Dickson, their new minister, received us most cordially and spared not time, money or effort in making our stay pleasant.

The reports from the field were encouraging and showed that much faithful work has been done for our Master. Indeed, the past sixteen years of co-operative missionary work have wrought great things in the "volunteer state." They have witnessed the establishment of many new churches after the primitive order; thousands of dollars consecrated to the sacred purpose of saving men; the gradual quickening of missionary conscience and enlargement of missionary sentiment; the drawing together of all our churches into closer bonds of fellowship and service, and the brightening of our hopes in and the clearing of our visions to the almost infinite possibilities of our Lord's cause in this great state.

Among the most delightful sessions of our convention were those in which Brethren W. J. Wright and A. McLean appeared. These hours were indeed the very mountain tops of transfiguration to our souls. As these apostles of missionary endeavor told us of the great needs of America and the world our souls thrilled with joy that we could have fellowship in a service so great as to call forth the interests of heaven and involve the destiny of our race. These brethren, with their soul-stirring messages from God, are always welcome visitors to a Tennessee convention.

As officers for the ensuing year A. A. Ferguson was elected president, A. I. Myhr, state evangelist and corresponding secretary; W. J. Shelburne, Sunday school evangelist and assistant corresponding secretary, and J. J. Castleberry, recording secretary.

The convention adjourned Thursday night, October 5, to meet at Paris in October, 1906. Our Tennessee Disciples should look forward to it as the crowning convention in all our history. The writer's acquaintance with Paris warrants him in assuring all that an unexcelled welcome will be extended us by the minister and the church, as also the citizenship generally.

Let us go about our task the coming year with earnest hearts and willing hands, showing to the world that as our Lord has died for us, we can live for him. Then we may come up to our next convention with such messages of victory from our respective fields as shall send a thrill of joy and hope around our beloved state.

Toledo Jottings.

The summer is gone, and as the leaves commence to fall, as life seems leaving nature, it seems that new life is coming in the spiritual realm. We are planning a great campaign in this city, in which all the churches regardless of denomination will join; it is not to be a meeting, but a campaign to last until March 1. We will open the campaign with a down-town noonday meeting daily, and with meetings in as many shops as we can possibly get in, besides a great number of cottage prayer meetings, this to last until February 1, at which time the groups of churches will enter on a campaign of evening services to last four weeks or possibly more. Great preparations are now being made; last Monday all the pastors met and spent four hours in prayer; it was a delightful season.

The work among our own churches is on the upward move. I think I am safe in saying that all our churches are at this time in better condition than possibly at any other time in their history.

South Church, Bro. S. B. Norvell, pastor, has, during the summer, painted its building; this work has had a splendid year. During the year Brother Norvell received a call from another church, accepted the same and packed his furniture to start, when his congregation said to him, This thing you must not do. After much consideration, with these strong men of determination staring him in the face, he consented to unpack, and remain for another season; this is one of the best things that has happened to this congregation. Since this the services have been much better; they have determined to work harder to show their pastor they appreciate his labors.

Norwood Avenue, Franklin Mahoney, pastor. Brother Mahoney comes from old preaching stock in Kentucky, and he is doing fine work in this church. They are making history at Norwood Avenue; the offerings are better than they have been for years, while the Sunday school has had a wonderful increase. This church has also been recently painted.

East Side, W. D. Van Vooris. Brother Van's work is moving along, having a steady growth all the time. Brother Van was recently elected the president of the Christian Endeavor for the city and county; this is quite a distinction. We are glad that we have him in this position; it is another step forward in our work.

Central Church. This is where your humble servant holds forth. This is the greatest church in all the country. If you want to find the greatest people in the world, you would do well to look this way; this is the way I feel about the matter. I closed my first year's work with this church last Sunday; we set a few ideals at the beginning of the year. I will name a few: One hundred new members; 25 per cent increase in mission offerings; $1,000 paid on the debt of the church. We met and passed all these conditions, added 100 to membership; mission offering nearly 50 per cent increase, and we paid more than $1,000 on the debt. We set a higher mark for this year all along the line. We had eight additions one week ago, this being the first Sunday in the new year, and six additions last Sunday, making a total of fourteen the first two Sundays of this year. Possibly the greatest work of the year has been our shop meetings. I conduct two meetings weekly in the two largest shops in the city; these meetings have been a success from the beginning. They are now the largest meetings in the whole country; we have as high as 800 to 900 present weekly at one of the shops. We look, plan, work and pray for greater things. J. O. Shelburne.

Kentucky Bible School Notes.

The Maysville state convention, at least as far as the Sunday school day is concerned, will be remembered as one of the best conventions ever held. It was remarkable in its excellent reports, its inspiring sessions and its inauguration of new plans. We call attention to some of the latter.

1. The name of our Sunday school organization was changed to The Kentucky Christian Bible School Association. This association will be incorporated in the immediate future.

2. The apportionment plan of raising money from the schools was continued, with the suggestion that the apportionments be increased whenever practical. The letters apportioning the schools are being sent out at present and we trust that this suggestion from the convention will meet with the hearty approval of the workers.

3. In addition to these offerings the executive committee was authorized, in view of the need for increased funds, to call for personal gifts, both for the general expenses and also for a permanent fund with which to endow the association. We believe this to be a wise step to take and we are hoping to secure some personal gifts for both funds. There is no doubt but that the endowment of the association will increase its efficiency and usefulness. We hope some of our able brethren and sisters will see the wisdom of helping to perpetuate and solidify the work of this state organization.

4. "The Christian Sunday school" of Lawrenceburg will continue to be the official organ of the association, but will appear quarterly instead of monthly. It will be changed in name and appearance somewhat, and we hope to make it better than ever before. Mr. J. M. B. Birdwhistell will continue his efficient services as editor.

5. Institutes held in colleges and secular schools were advised and commended.

6. Special emphasis was laid on the necessity of developing the work in southern Kentucky, and the evangelist will spend much of his time this year in that section of the state.

7. Perhaps the most important step was taken when the convention approved the suggestion that an office secretary be employed. The work has demanded this step if we are in any way to keep pace with the increased needs of the field. The evangelist, even by constant travel, can not reach more than 10 per cent of the schools during the year, and yet there is great need of keeping in close and constant touch with every school if efficient help is to be rendered at all. In accordance with this action Miss Mattie Sacrey has been employed and is already at work upon the duties assigned her. We have every reason to believe that she is competent to do the work, and we are assured of her consecration and interest. She will give her whole time to the clerical duties of office secretary, at least for the present.

An office has been established at 218 Kellar building, corner of Fifth and Main streets. This becomes the permanent headquarters for the association and all mail should be sent here rather than to 413 Fourth avenue, the old address. Visitors will be welcomed at this office, and we want it to be a means of great assistance and strength to the schools in every way.

Louisville, Ky. Robt. M. Hopkins.

A Delicious Drink

HORSFORD'S ACID HORSPHATE

A teaspoonful added to a glass of cold water Invigorates, Strengthens and Refreshes.

Idaho.

The weather in Idaho is ideal so far as sunshine and cloudless skies are concerned. It is, however, just a little dry. Up in the mountains it is quite cool, especially at night. I descended from the mountains nearly two weeks ago, and "came with a straight course" to Boise. I had not been in a church service for over three months, and was so "hungry" I could "taste it."

After leaving Thunder City there is neither school house nor church house, Sunday school nor church. Judging from what the eye can see and the ear hear, the denizens of the mountains keep no calendar and have no Sunday.

I have often heard of places where it is so healthful that the people are compelled to kill someone to start a "graveyard." This seems to have been the case, both at Roosevelt and at Knox. In both cases, however, whiskey was the trouble.

There are many stories of mining, and how it is done, told the tenderfoot during a sojourn "out west." One or two will illustrate the how of the matter. There was one "Jim Butler" in a little town in Idaho. Now "Jim" would not work, but managed somehow to keep even until he finally married a woman who would work and did work sufficiently to keep the "bills payable" at bay by means of a restaurant kept by her in the little city. One day an Indian took Jim to a very rich mine and showed him wonders. This was exactly what he had been waiting for. "Something had turned up" just to his liking provided somebody else would do the work, and it takes work to dig gold "from the bowels of the earth." Well, Jim picked up some specimens, brought them to town, and soon interested the school teacher, who was also an assayist. "Some $400 to the ton," was the report. A little syndicate was formed, in which "Jim" was king, getting three-fourths, while the school teacher, for his brains, and another man with the pelf, got a one-eighth interest each. In a little while the mine sold for enough for the king to pocket a cold $100,000. This is called luck.

In the other case the gentleman's name was, or shall be, Dobson. He was for years a miner, and simply "Old Dobson." It is averred by good citizens that notwithstanding old Dobson set his face against all rum kegs, yet he was often so drunk that he could not stand. On one occasion the little city insulted him, and he swore he would move it hence into the valley. But he had not money enough to get a "glass of social irrigation." Somehow, and the secret lies wrapped in mystery, he got a mine open and "salted right up to date," and sold it for $75,000. He then bought options and in a short time counted his gold by the millions. He was now "Colonel Dobson," and proceeded not only to carry out his threat against the little village, but swore vengeance against a city much larger and more pretentious. About twenty miles away, on the main line, he sent railroads in different directions to cut it off, and built Ramah, so that none might go out or come into this city which had provoked his ire. He also built a hotel that will doubtless serve the public for generations to come, though it is said he declared that "in ten years it would be a third-class hotel." In the midst of his operations—

"The angel of death spread his wings on the blast
And breathed on the face of this man as he passed.
And now old Dobson,
Turning pale,
Yields to his fate,
So ends my tale."

But the people are quite reticent in naming the method by which Colonel D. got his millions. It has been suggested, however, that it was close akin to "Rockeyfellerism," whatever that is.

We regret that the artist has made a mistake and inserted in the group of Western Pennsylvania ministers W. H. Pinkerton, who is pastor at Paducah, Ky., and should have been included in the evangelist group.

In the center of the group of singers is Mrs. Princess Long, and grouped about her are the quartette of Netz Sisters. The others, in order, are: (11) C. H. Altheide, (10) J. P. Garmong, (9) C. B. Dabney, (6) DeLoss Smith, (7) Miss Ida Mae Hanna, (8) W. F. Linnt, (12) Mr. and Mrs. Aden L. Fillmore.

Other evangelists engaged, not included in our group, are: C. R. Scoville, G. W. Moore, W. H. Willison, R. H. Sawtell, F. F. Schultz, N. W. Philips, W. H. Pinkerton, E. Lee Perry, Vernon Stauffer, F. A. Bright, M. C. Frick, E. B. Barnes, W. H. Patterson, G. A. Reynolds and Campbell Jobes.

Dedication at Joliet, Ill.

Lord's day, October 8, the members of the First Christian church, Joliet, Ill., dedicated the new building. The church in Joliet owes its origin to the preaching of Bro. John Williams, at that time of Iowa, but now of Callingwood, Ont. In the summer of 1897 Brother Williams was spending a vacation with his brother-in-law, Geo. B. Smith, of Lockport, a suburb of Joliet. Through the courtesy of the trustees of the Congregational church of Lockport Brother Williams conducted a few services in that church, and as a result nine persons—four men and five women—joined hands and pledged themselves to the work of establishing a Christian church.

On September 5, 1897, the church was organized. Twenty-two baptized believers signed the charter of the new church; eight of these are still members of the congregation. Several brethren have supplied the pulpit from time to time, and the little band has had a true friend in President Hieronymus, of Eureka College, who has not only preached for them on several occasions, but has from time to time sent some of his most talented students to supply the pulpit. The pastor is Ben N. Mitchell, who, returning to this country June 24 of this year, after a pastorate of three years at Liverpool, England, took charge of the church July 1.

The building is frame, with a covering of concrete, and is exceedingly neat and attractive. The total cost of lot and building is $7,600. President Hieronymus assisted at the dedicatory services, preaching a powerful sermon in the morning. Several pastors of the neighboring churches were present and gave words of good cheer.

The following brethren have preached for this congregation at different periods: Geo. T. Smith, C. G. Brelos, I. E. Spencer and W. G. Kitchen. B. N. Mitchell.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Winfield, Kan., Oct. 30.—Nineteen additions yesterday; 14 confessions; 59 added in 15 days. H. A. Northcutt, evangelist; Bentley, singer.—Albert Nichols, pastor.

CALIFORNIA.

Ukiah, Oct. 24.—Two baptisms within the past month. Work moving well.—Otha Wilkison.

San Jose, Oct. 22.—Praise the Lord for the splendid victory yesterday. Seventy-three added in the first day's meeting here. Church at work and city stirred. We look for great meeting.—Coombs and Honn.

COLORADO.

Denver, Oct. 26.—Five were baptized at South Broadway Oct. 25; 2 others received the hand of fellowship. Homer T. Wilson will begin a two weeks' meeting Oct. 29. All going well with us.—B. B. Tyler.

Pueblo, Oct. 28.—Six additions at the Broadway Church, by letter and statement. L. G. Thompson, our state secretary, preached at the Central on Oct. 22.—W. B. Swearinger.

CUBA.

Havana, Oct. 20.—We have had 49 accessions since my last report; 7 baptisms last evening.—Lowell C. McPherson.

FLORIDA.

Kissimmee, Oct. 24.—One confession at St. Cloud Oct. 15, and 1 here Oct. 22. We dedicate our new church Nov. 5 and begin a 4 weeks' meeting at that time.—E. H. Rayner.

IDAHO.

Payette, Oct. 23.—Meeting of 20 nights closed with 51 additions. Frank McRae, singer.—O. E. Hamilton.

ILLINOIS.

Rossville, Oct. 23.—Fourteen added in a meeting with home forces. The attendance was excellent and the interest good. I recently held a two weeks' meeting with the church at Holder, resulting in two confessions.—H. H. Peters.

Kewanee, Oct. 25.—A. C. Roach preached Sunday, after being absent from the pulpit for about one year. There were two additions. The church, after being without a pastor for several weeks, has called W. A. Green, of Rockfalls, as pastor, to take effect November 1.—E. T. Alcorn, clerk.

Lake Fork, Oct. 25.—Evangelist J. Bennett was with us in a two weeks' meeting at Copeland chuch, which was revived and 11 added to the membership. He has been with us at Lake Fork 10 days. There have been 33 additions; 27 by confession, 3 by statement and 3 restored. This makes 114 added to the two churches this year. The meeting continues.—J. D. Williams, minister.

Chicago, Oct. 22.—E. L. Frazier, of Indianapolis, closed a good meeting here yesterday; 9 accessions—5 by baptism and 4 by letter.—Guy Hoover, pastor.

Camp Point, Oct. 24.—One confession Oct. 22. I am in a meeting with the Wolfe Ridge church. W. F. Shearer will begin a meeting with the Camp Point church, Dec. 31. We are planning for large things. —H. J. Reynolds.

Joliet, Oct. 23.—Three additions yesterday by confession and baptism, at the First Christian Church.—Ben N. Mitchell.

Mason City, Oct. 23.—Rejoice with us for Mt. Pleasant. Three weeks ago only 18 members; now 25 new ones, as a result of a 15 days' meeting; 20 of these by baptism. Organized Christian Endeavor, with 29 members. Yesterday was the first day of our meeting here. Four added—two by letter and two by baptism.—O. C. Bolman.

Lake Fork, Oct. 25.—We are in a splendid revival with J. D. Williams. There have been 37 additions in our work.—Evangelist J. Bennett.

Taylorville, Oct. 26.—W. F. Shearer and C. H. Altheide closed a three and one-half weeks' meeting with us last night. Forty took membership, all of them grown people. Seventeen were men. Our union meeting closed Sept. 3, and we had received about 40 into the church from that, or we would have had nearly 100 in the meeting with Shearer and Altheide. We are well pleased with results.—Zuinglius Moore.

Payson, Oct. 23.—Robert L. Layfield has just closed a union meeting which resulted in 56 conversions; 9 will come into the Christian church; 8 by baptism and 1 reclaimed.—Walter Kline.

Paris, Oct. 25.—Our meeting at Bell Ridge closed with 114 additions in 20 days. This is a country church 10 miles from Paris. H. M. Brooks is pastor, and conducted the singing. The church was organized one year ago and had 85 members when the meeting begun.—Finis Idleman.

Toluca, Oct. 23.—Five more added by confession and baptism at the regular services.—S. P. Telford, pastor.

IOWA.

Prescott, Oct. 21.—Three added last Lord's day—2 by confession and 1 from the Congregationalists.—E. E. Mack.

Des Moines, Oct. 28—Second week of meeting closed last night; 59 added to date. —Chas. S. Medbury.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, Oct. 26.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting for the Christian church at Stamping Ground, Ky., resulting in 42 accessions to the church—22 by confession, 2 from another communion and 18 by letter or statement. Though Wm. C. Crerie has been with this church only a short while, he is nevertheless getting a strong hold, not only upon the membership but upon the community. Dr. C. L. Ford, who is in his 82d year, is Sunday school superintendent. We closed the meeting by giving our lecture, "The Book of Books," to a packed house.—J. Murray Taylor.

Martinsville, Oct. 23.—We closed a splendid meeting with home forces last night, which resulted in 31 additions—20 by primary obedience.—M. W. Yocum.

Lily Creek, Oct. 14.—I closed a 12 days' meeting last night, with 1 added by confession.—A. W. Crabb.

Jeffersonville, Oct. 19.—At my last appointment at Hibernia there were 2 confessions. The church is moving on harmoniously.—F. E. Andrews.

Poseyville.—In the "Martin family" meetings now in progress there have been more than 30 additions. E. S. Lawrence is minister. During November the "Martin family assist A. M. Growden at Carbondale, Ill.

Shoals, Oct. 22.—Nine baptisms in a ten days' meeting at Antioch. I begin next at Alfordsville.—M. C. Hughes.

Columbus, Oct. 26.—Since coming here Oct. 1, there have been 17 added. Work moving along nicely. Have organized a class of 70 for Bible study. Have begun to preach to men at noon hour at the shops. I preach at two of these places once per week. Begin a meeting with home forces Sunday.—W. H. Book.

ASTHMA CURED

A Prominent Physician Has at Last Discovered a Certain Cure.

The following letter has been received from Dr. Rudolph Schiffmann, of St. Paul, the specialist in diseases of the respiratory organs, and we trust it will be read carefully by every one who suffers from Asthma, Hay Fever or Bronchitis:

"To the Editor: Please announce in your paper that by simply writing to me, enclosing a 2-cent stamp, any of your readers can have a trial package of my Asthma Cure free. I have prepared a full supply of trial packages for free distribution to sufferers from Asthma, Hay Fever and Bronchitis and no one will be disappointed.

"I have perfected a remedy that is without a doubt an instant relief and a positive cure for Asthma, Hay Fever or Bronchitis. I am fully aware that there is a great deal of skepticism regarding the curability of these diseases, and I have concluded that the simplest way to get my remedy before the people and let it demonstrate its merits is to give away free packages so that any one interested can test its remedy. I know what my Asthma Cure will do. I have tried it in thousands of cases, with gratifying results. I have cured where all others had failed. Do you wonder my confidence in the remedy in unbounded? Do you wonder that I am willing to pay the expense of a trial out of my own pocket?"

All letters should be addressed as follows: Dr. R. Schiffmann, 167 Jackson St., St. Paul, Minn.

Almost every druggist in the United States has Dr. Schiffmann's Asthma Cure in stock.

KANSAS.

Chanute, Oct. 23.—I closed a four weeks' meeting last week; 47 additions; 15 by baptism, 37 otherwise. This does not include reclaimed. We have reinstated 114 old members in the last few months, making our membership now 280.—G. W. Kitchen.

Chanute, Oct. 16.—Our meeting is still in progress; 41 additions.—John W. Martin, Jr.

Hoisington, Oct. 23.—Two added yesterday, 1 from the Christian Catholic, 1 restored.—T. M. McHale.

Moline, Oct. 23.—I have just closed a three weeks' meeting at Elk Falls, with 14 additions—10 baptisms and 4 from other denominations. I will close my work at Moline soon and can hold meetings or locate elsewhere as pastor.—W. L. Ennefer.

Geuda Springs, Oct. 25.—I closed a two weeks' meeting at Timberlake, O. T., with 3 additions. The weather was unfavorable during the last week. We began our work at Geuda Springs last Lord's day. We begin meeting on Nov. 22; will continue indefinitely. The church is a year old. We have a new house, 60 consecrated members and are planning and working for a great meeting.—J. B. Greenwade.

Norton, Oct. 24.—Fourteen added to date. Will continue indefinitely. Churches in eastern Kansas or western Missouri may write me for January. The pastor, A. L. Drummond, is locating many families in this fertile region.—N. A. Stull, evangelist.

Havensville, Oct. 24.—Our meeting is seven days old, with 15 additions. J. T. Purvis, of Holton, preached five evenings last week. Meetings will continue this week. Accessions so far, with one exception, are all young girls and boys from the Sunday school. H. R. Murphy, the pastor, is popular with all the people, and the fruits of his labors among the young people are now being realized. We expect other good results from the meeting.—T. J. Richardson.

Coffeyville, Oct. 28.—Three additions in the last two weeks, 1 confession and 2 letters. We are to begin a meeting in the near future with home forces.—Ellis Purlee.

Nortonville, Oct. 27.—Brother Todd's meeting at Grayson, Mo., closed last night; 17 confessions, 1 restored—18 all told.—W. A. Oldham.

Norton, Oct. 27.—Two more last night—14 to date. A. L. Drummond is pastor. Oakley will likely be our next meeting.—N. A. Stull, evangelist.

Winfield, Oct. 25.—In 12 days 27 additions, more than half of them men. Nichols, pastor; Northcutt, evangelist; Bentley, singer.

Council Grove, Oct. 28.—I wrote that on the first Monday night of the meeting 185 persons confessed that they believed with all their hearts that Jesus was the Christ the Son of the living God. They were not all aliens, but all kinds of people. We have had a bad time for a tent meeting here. There have been 30 added to date. Snowing now very hard.—J. V. Updike.

KENTUCKY.

Latonia, Oct. 23.—One added by letter yesterday.—Harlan Runyan.

North Pleasureville, Oct. 25.—Our meeting closed yesterday with 40 additions—33 not hitherto reported; 2 reclaimed, 16 by commendation, 2 from denominations and 20 conversions. A Methodist preacher was baptized. Geo. C. Waggoner is the preacher. My next meeting is at Barry, Mo., beginning Nov. 5.—Simpson Ely, Joplin, Mo.

Stanford, Oct. 27.—A week's meeting at Crab Orchard resulted in 2 confessions and baptisms and 2 other accessions. Last year a cyclone blew down the Crab Orchard church and they have not rebuilt, but we hope that ere another year the congregation will have its own building.—L. M. Omer.

Murray, Oct. 22.—I closed a successful series of meetings. H. D. C. Maclachlan, of Shelbyville, Ky., preached. There were 10 baptisms and 4 otherwise. The church has been greatly helped.—G. H. C. Stoney.

MISSOURI.

Green Wood, Oct. 23.—Our meeting closed Oct. 14 with 37 additions. Elder D. D. Boyle (evangelist) did the preaching. The singing was in charge of Professor John Cox, singing evangelist of Melvern, Kan. Our congregation is now in good working condition, and aside from the additions, much good has been accomplished.—Leslie M. Lucas, minister.

Canton, Oct. 23.—I just closed a meeting at Timewell, Ill., where Earl Purdy is the efficient pastor, with 16 confessions and 2 by letter the first week. The incessant rain closed the meeting the second week.—Claude F. Pearce, evangelist.

Libertyville.—Edward Owers, of Farmington, assisted by Brother and Sister Zeran as singers and other home forces, is holding a good meeting, in which there have been 11 baptisms and three confessions.—S. W. Robinson.

Lamar, Oct. 23.—One confession last night.—S. W. Crutcher.

Gallatin, Oct. 23.—Two additions yesterday—1 by letter and 1 from Cumberland Presbyterian church of Lock Springs. We begin a meeting with Omer and Butler as evangelists early in November; shall continue at least four weeks.—C. W. Comstock.

Grant City, Oct. 23.—Evangelist E. B. Barnes, of Indiana, closed a 4 weeks' meeting last night with 23 additions.—W. L. Harris, pastor.

Kansas City, Oct. 23.—One confession at Louisburg yesterday. We have had about 20 additions there in the last few Sundays in our regular work.—C. L. Fife.

Walker, Oct. 23.—We are in a good, short meeting here. I go to Pilot Grove, Nov. 1.—Ben F. Hill and Son, California, Mo.

Purdy, Oct. 26.—We closed a short meeting at Galena, Kan.; 19 additions to the church. Galena is an awful wicked town.—J. P. Haner.

Bonne Terre, Oct. 23.—One confession and baptism yesterday.—J. G. M. Luttenberger.

Brunswick, Oct. 27.—Two added last Sunday. The church will give a reception to the new members, 70 in number, Nov. 10.—E. H. Williamson, pastor.

St. Louis, Oct. 20.—The undersigned preached to the church in Poplar Bluff, Mo., on last Lord's day. Three elders and seven deacons were elected. Two men were baptized and one lady was received on commendation. The church is ready for a new pastor.—G. A. Hoffman.

Eldon, Oct. 25.—Have had 3 additions in Eldon since my last report.—S. J. Vance.

Richland, Oct. 25.—The Endeavorers of the Christian Church in Richland held a union service with the Epworth League of the M. E. Church last Sunday night. There was one contession at the close of the evening service. F. H. Wright, the grandson of one of our old time preachers of north Missouri, was ordained a deacon of this congregation at the morning service.—J. R. Blunt.

Braymer, Oct. 28.—Just closed a protracted meeting at Mt. Olive, Harrison county. Scarlet fever and bad weather hindered, but there were 5 addtions—4 by confession and baptism, and 1 reclaimed. Our next meeting will be at Braymer, assisted by M. D. Sharples.—C. E. Hunt.

East Lynne, Oct. 28.—Brother Sterling, of Warrensburg, has been with us 9 nights Six confessions. Meeting continues.—L. M. Spencer, clerk.

Belton, Oct. 28.—A meeting with home forces Oct. 1-25; 16 by confession and baptism and 5 by letter and statement; also 5 by baptism in September, making 30 added here since Sept. 1.—W. H. Scrivner.

Kansas City, Oct. 28.—The meeting with I. H. Fuller at La Monte, Mo., closed with 15 additions, 14 being baptisms. The meeting was at its best when it closed. I sing at Burlington, Kan., beginning Oct. 29.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

NEBRASKA.

Chester, Oct. 26.—A fruitful meeting; general good tone. Twelve additions—8 baptisms; 1 each from the Baptists, Congregationalists and Presbyterians; 1 reclaimed.—D. G. Wagner.

NEW ZEALAND.

Auckland, Oct. 6.—Am in a good meeting here with Chas. Watt; 8 confessions. Meeting continues 10 days. Hold a short meeting for a mission here and then go to Sydney to hold a meeting for P. A. Dickson at Temple Church. I received a warm welcome here when I came.—Jno. T. Brown.

NEW MEXICO.

Raton, Oct. 27.—Revival continues with great interest; people turned away; additions every night; 9 came night before last and 6 last night. At present the membership is 102. Twelve have come from the Methodists and 6 from the Baptists to take their stand for primitive Christianity. Will continue several weeks longer. My next meeting is with Brother Nelson, Rocky Ford, Col., John T. Stivers, evangelist; R. A. Givens, singer.

OHIO.

Hamilton, Oct. 23.—One addition by letter at Lindenwald church at prayer meeting; 1 by letter yesterday, 2 confessions and 2 from the Baptists.—W. H. Hedges.

OKLAHOMA.

Carney, Oct. 15.—Eight confessions at the dedication services; 3 from the Methodists and 2 from the Baptists.—J. M. Monroe.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Wilkesbarre, Oct. 24.—A three weeks' meeting with Evangelist C. H. DeVoe was held in the lecture hall of the Y. M. C. A.; unable to continue by reason of date of Teachers' Institute. There were 15 confessions, 10 of which were baptized; some remain to be; 3 by statement. We have been greatly strengthened. His brother, H. A. DeVoe, minister at Digby, N. S., spent three days with us on his way west.—E. Everett Cowperthwaite.

HOW ONE OF OUR READERS MADE $131.40 IN TWO MONTHS.

Dear Editor: I thought I would write and tell you how I cleared for myself $131.40 in two months. I had such fine success in using Mother's Non-Alcoholic Flavoring Extracts in my cooking that all my friends began to inquire how it was my cakes and desserts generally had such a delicate flavor. Upon my telling them about these new extracts, many insisted that I should get them some. The superior results these flavoring powders bring about, for they come in a powder form and are therefore non-alcoholic, so increased the demand for the goods that no other extracts are now used in this town. I wrote the makers, A. Gross & Co., 910 Bailey Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa., and they gave me the exclusive agency for their goods here. I wrote my sister, Martha, who lives in Lakeville, about the easy money I was making, and she tells me that since she started introducing the powders she has made $10.00 a week extra right along, and it only took about an hour a day to do the work. I believe any woman can do as well if she will only try, and I wish you would advise any of your subscribers who want to make a little extra money to write Gross & Co. about their proposition and learn how easy it is to make a few extra dollars occasionally.

Yours very truly,
Mary R.

TEXAS.

Haskill.—Evangelist J. L. Haddock, his wife, and Talmage Stanley were with us 13 days in a revival meeting. There were 20 additions—16 net gain. The whole town and community was stirred.—J. H. Shepard.

TENNESSEE.

Jellico, Oct. 24.—One confession Oct 22.—Wren J. Grinstead.

Shelbyville, Oct. 27.—Closed meeting at Flat Creek today. Continued 12 days. There were 21 additions.—E. E. Violett.

WASHINGTON.

Pullman, Oct. 19.—Since June 30 additions, not reported—2 by baptism, 1 from M. E. church and others by letter.—Ralph C. Sargent.

Midweek Prayer Meeting.

TEMPER AND ITS PROPER MANAGEMENT.—Ephesians 4:26; Romans 12:18-21.

Temper may be either good or evil. The word "temper" is from the Latin word tempero, signifying "proportion." "Temperance" comes from the same source. A man with a temper is but a well proportioned man. But he may pervert his nature until it is thrown out of proportion, when he may be said to possess an evil temper. The frequency of this perversion has caused the word temper to become synonymous in common speech, with anger; and it is this use of the word which we are to treat in our subject.

Anger may be justifiable. He who can pass through this world, with all its multiplied cruelties and injustices, and never feel angry, proves his want of true sensibility. Even Jesus was moved to anger sometimes, in view of human baseness and hypocrisy. His burning, withering denunciation of the Scribes and Pharisees, in Matthew 23, shows the holy indignation of incarnate truth against falsity of speech and life, which sought to deceive God and mislead man. The citizen who looks unmoved upon the revelations of bribery, graft and fraud which are coming to the surface of our political and commercial life in America, and does not find his heart stirred with intense anger against the robbers in high places who have abused the confidence of their fellow men by using their positions of trust for private ends, lacks an essential factor of good citizenship. To see age or innocent childhood abused will bring the flush of anger to any manly cheek. It is right to be angry at all wrong.

But anger ought not to lead us to sin. "Be ye angry, and sin not." We may not express our anger in doing evil to others. Neither have we the right to curse the wrongdoer. "Bless, and curse not," is the divine injunction. Even our punishment of the evil doer is to be inflicted in love. Jesus did not hate those whose wanton corruption and base deceit wrung from his outraged soul the great denunciation. He loved them; and but a few hours after he had poured out his words of stern rebuke, he paused on the brow of Olivet to weep over these very men, and to declare how gladly he would have sheltered them from harm, as the hen shelters her chickens under her wings, but they would not. Like God, he must hate the sin, but love the sinner.

Anger must be controlled and directed. Self-control, or temperance, is one of the fruits of the Holy Spirit (Gal. 5:22, 23). It is one of the essentials to character (2 Pet. 1:5-7). It is the prime evidence of greatness (Prov. 16:32). If we hate the sin as we ought, we will try to the utmost to deliver the sinner from its power. Hence, we will, in the language of Paul, "overcome evil with good." Thus did our Savior, when he prayed for his enemies, "Forgive them, Father." Thus did Stephen, when he cried out with his last breath, "Lay not this sin to their charge." Thus did Paul, when he said of the Jews that sought his life, "My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they might be saved." Truly, love will find a way to subdue even anger into a servant of good, and bring those elements of our nature that seem most uncontrollable under the yoke of the divine Master.

THE DANGERS OF INDULGENCE.—Prov. 23:29-35; Isa. 5:22-25.

For the Leader.

The danger of indulgence is forshadowed in the very word itself. Indulgence carries with it the thought of toleration, bearing, or permitting, which suggests the probability that the lawful bounds are being overreached. Why is it dangerous to indulge an appetite, to permit a tendency that is toward the hurtful to have its course? This is the very thing we are to call upon you to answer for us tonight. Let us give the matter due attention.

Are we not all inclined to indulge that which tends to the hurtful as well as that which is within itself not hurtful? Is there not in our nature that something that hates to deprive an appetite of its desires? Do we not ponder long before we forbid that which our friend desires? This very part of ourselves is within us for a purpose, but unhappy are we if we allow that which was meant to bless us to turn upon us and become a curse.

For the Members.

1 Indulgence may be said to be the thing that leads in the way of danger. That is why it is dangerous. That is why we are talking of the danger of indulgence. There is a little practice we have. It is not hurting us the first few times. It is a question if it is an outright evil. But, gratified once, it becomes a little stronger in its demands upon us. We gratify it again, and the next time its demands are more imperative. We are scarcely able to get out of its toils the next time. At last we are not our own. The finished work of indulgence is slavery.

2. We do well if we look to the end of things. The start is of importance, but the end must be reckoned with. It is not enough to know what the first of a thing is, but we must know its progress, its finish. If we have looked clear through anything in this way, we are prepared to see its dangers. It may thus reveal itself to us as a thing that is dangerous if indulged. Strong drink has the effect of growing upon one. There is no slavery more absolute than the slavery of strong drink, or the slavery of some drug. Money, property, honor, all things must go at the demand of this imperious ruler.

3. Suppose you keep clear of the grosser evils, the use of drugs, the use of intoxicants, the vice of immorality, and come to the little things that mar many characters—careless speech, as an example. We begin by taking up some strong exclamations to emphasize our statements. They are not very noticeable at first. We grow apace in this use until we have dropped our first violation of clean speech. We may not notice that we have grown worse. Our friends do. And more especially if we have been away from them for a time. The young girl returns from college the first vacation with a store of terms that may not be noticeable to her, but to the old mother they are very noticeable, and they grieve her. Then let the ideals come down, and let the associations be a little coarse and indifferent to the finer sensibilities. Expressions that shock one will fall from the lips unnoticed by the speaker. This is what indulgence does.

4. Indulgence brings up a sad history. One's heart aches when the very term is mentioned. There are but few in the world who ever intend to end badly, however badly they start. They go on through the progress of the hold of indulgence upon themselves, saying "Once more." Alas for them! It is "once more," "once more," until there is no more time. What sad work of ruin goes on between the girl of careless habits and proprieties in her teens and the hag, ruined forever, in the twenties? No tongue can tell. But we see examples of such wreckage almost every day. There is a name you never mention in the family. Whose name is it? Is it not the name of some one who began in the little things and went on the way, led by indulgence? Yes, led, shall it be said, no better, permitted, by the indulgence of a mother, or a father, or of friends, or older associates, and, God knows, too often by all the above named. When it is finished it is the ruin of one dear to you. Indulgence did it. Shall we not call upon all that is within us to put down the spirit that puts off, that procrastinates, that indulges, the things that will some day be our ruin?

Quiet Hour Thought.

The Scriptures tell us to mortify, that is to kill, our desires that lead to ruin. Are we praying daily that we may be able to do this?

NOBODY IS EXEMPT.

A New Preparation Which Everyone Will Need Sooner or Later.

Almost everybody's digestion is disordered more or less, and the commonest thing they do for it is to take some one of the many so-called blood purifiers, which, in many cases, are merely strong cathartics. Such things are not needed. If the organs are in a clogged condition, they need only a little help and they will right themselves. Cathartics irritate the sensitive linings of the stomach and bowels and often do more harm than good.

Purging is not what is needed. The thing to do is to put the food in condition to be readily digested and assimilated. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do this perfectly. They partly digest what is eaten and give the somach just the help it needs. They stimulate the secretion and excretion of the digestive fluids and relieve the congested condition of the glands and membranes. They put he whole digestive system in condition to do its work. When that is done you need take no more tablets, unless you eat what does not agree with you. Then take one or two tablets—give them needed help, and you will have no trouble.

It's a common-sense medicine and a common-sense treatment, and it will cure every time. Not only cure the disease but cure the cause. Goes about it in a perfectly sensible and scientific way.

We have testimonials enough to fill a book, but we don't publish many of them. However—Mrs. E. M. Faith, of Byrd's Creek, Wis., says:

"I have taken all the Tablets I got of you and they have done their work well in my case, for I feel like a different person altogether. I don't doubt if I had not got them I should have been at rest by this time."

H. E. Willard, Onslow, Ia., says: "Mr. White, of Canton, was telling me of your Dyspepsia Tablets curing him of Dyspepsia, from which he suffered for eight years. As I am a sufferer myself I wish you to send me a package by return mail."

Phil. Brooks, Detroit, Mich., says: "Your Dyspepsia cure has worked wonders in my case. I suffered for years from dyspepsia, but am now entirely cured and enjoy life as I never have before. I gladly recommend them."

It will cost 50c to find out just how much Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will help you. Try them—that's the best way to decide.

EZRA'S JOURNEY TO JERUSALEM. – Ezra 8:21-32.

Memory Verses, 21-23.

Golden Text.—The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him.—Ezra 8:22.

The whole history of the exile, the return and the generations immediately following the return, is obscure. It was an age which produced much literature, some of which throws light indirectly upon the conditions then prevailing, but its conscious efforts to record contemporary events were scanty. The prophets of the exile show us much of the spiritual life of the best element of Judaism at that time, especially with reference to the growing Messianic hope. The earlier post-exile prophets, especially Haggai and Zechariah, show the apathy of those who had returned and the arguments by which the better religious leaders sought to rouse their zeal. The external history, however, can not be reconstructed with completeness and certainty.

Between the sixth and seventh chapters of the book of Ezra there is an interval of not less than two generations. So much is concealed in the simple phrase, "how after these things." Twenty years had elapsed between the first return under Zerubbabel and the dedication of the temple. The record now silently passes over nearly sixty years more (from 516 to 458 B. C.) and takes up the thread of the narrative with Ezra's expedition from Babylon.

While we have no details of the history of this intervening period, we know a few general facts. We know that the power of Persia, while not broken, was waning before the rising military force of Greece, for it was about the middle of this period that Darius met the Greeks at Marathon and Xerxes suffered his disastrous defeats at Salamis and Plataea, as narrated by the Greek historians. A failing empire makes a bad master, and it is probable that the province of Judea suffered from the tyranny of the corrupt Satraps who governed it. The high priest apparently acquired some ascendency as the protector of the people's rights when there was no one else to protect them—very much as the Bishop of Rome increased his prestige by standing for law and order when the Roman empire was falling and the barbarians rushing in.

It is evident, too, that the exercise of true and pure religion in Judah lapsed almost to the vanishing point. Perhaps there was disappointment because the glittering prophecies of a glorious vindication of Judah and the entrance upon a Messianic period of great prosperity had not been fulfilled. The golden age had been promised, and it had not come. There was a danger that, under the pressure from without and with the discouragement within, Judah would not be able to escape the fate which the Persian policy of deportation had been designed to secure—that is, that it would be swallowed up in the great complex of mingled races about it. The most ominous circumstance was the growing habit of intermarriage with the surrounding races.

In Babylon, meanwhile, there was a strain of purer religion. Removed from the advantages of temple worship and from the privilege of living in the holy land itself, pious Jews in Babylon had turned with increased reverence to the past, had brought into new prominence the laws and records of earlier times, perhaps had edited and arranged some of them. At any rate, they were prepared to bring to bear the records of the fathers upon the current situation with a force which was quite new. Josiah's reform on the basis of the newly discovered book of the law (probably Deuteronomy) is the thing nearest akin to it.

Ezra, priest and scribe and practical administrator, received permission from Artaxerxes to lead a company from Babylon to Jerusalem. His avowed purpose is to establish the ritual worship on the basis of the book of the law. He is also commissioned to establish a more perfect judicial system for the enforcement of law, and the civil power is enlisted to punish disobedience to the law of God (7:26).

The work which engrossed most of Ezra's attention was the rooting out of the custom of intermarriage with foreigners. In this he met with substantial success, but the execution of the ritual reform which he intended was apparently delayed several years until the coming of Nehemiah. It is worth mentioning, however, that some scholars, in reconstructing the history of the times, have reached the opinion that the work of Nehemiah, who rebuilt the walls, preceded and prepared the way for that of Ezra.

MOTHER'S SLEEPLESS NIGHTS.

Little Daughter Suffered with Eczema for Two Years Until Cured by Cuticura.

"My little girl had been suffering for two years from eczema, and during that time I could not get a night's sleep, as her ailment was very severe. I had tried so many remedies, deriving no benefit, I had given up all hope. But as a last resort I was persuaded to try Cuticura, and one box of the Ointment and two bottles of the Resolvent, together with the Soap, effected a permanent cure."—Mrs. I. B. Unitarianism.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Your "Notes and Comments" editorial paragraph on the approaching "Interchurch Conference" in the last issue of The Christian-Evangelist is an admirable sizing up of the little "unpleasantness" as to Unitarian affiliation. According to a recent Chicago daily, Frank Gunsaulus—in coming to the rescue—makes the statement that "the poet, Whittier, was a Unitarian." Is he right in this claim? W. P. Keeler.

Chicago, Ill.

[No; Whittier was a Friend, or Quaker, and not a Unitarian. But we do not see that it would affect the point at issue if Whittier had been a Unitarian. There have been many pious, devout souls among the Unitarians. The question is: Would it be practicable to bring together in one conference those who deny the divinity and lordship of Jesus Christ, and those who accept that truth as the foundation truth of Christianity, to consider the practicability of Christian union and co-operation? In all moral, social, and political reforms there is no reason why Unitarians, Jews, Christian Scientists, and Ethical Culturists should not co-operate with all other good citizens, regardless of creed or no creed, to effect the desired reformation; but it would be wholly impracticable to bring together in one conference this heterogeneous class of people to consider the vital problems connected with a united Church.—Editor.]

Poetry of Fishing.

Dear Brother Garrison—I know you are a good one in a bass stream. I have witnessed your quality in pulling in these game fish. But have you ever landed a muskallonge? If you have not you have missed the real poetry of fishing. A bass is a game fish and he fights vigorously for liberty; but he comes at you sideways. The muskallonge makes no side issues. He fights a straight battle. If he comes towards the boat all the more danger you will lose him. If, however, his movements are from you, you will experience the very poetry of motion. Hogarth's celebrated line—the undulating—is beautifully reproduced by every movement of your fish. He not only "undulates" but he circumnavigates, and if a big one, he will take your boat along with him.

I have had considerable experience with these fish and I do not hesitate to say that there is more poetry in landing one of them than all the other fishing I have experienced. The first day I fished here I landed five and hooked another, but lost him.

We are a little too late for good results here, but all in all we have had an outing which is an experience to be remembered. Your assistant editor is taking lessons from the old gentleman, and I am not without hope that in due time he will be able to give a good account of himself.

I have not given much attention to ducks, but have made some shots that would doubtless surprise the boys who think that a man of my age ought to be chloroformed.

Yours truly, W. T. Moore.

COLLINS.

Miss Annie Kennedy was born in Harrison county, Ky., March 4, 1875. On Dec. 19, 1894, she was united in marriage to John T. Collins. About one year ago they moved from Kansas City to Sedalia, Mo. She died Tuesday, Aug. 15, 1905. In every place where duty called her as a wife and mother she was faithful. Her husband and three children mourn her untimely departure. Richard Gentry assisted the writer in conducting the funeral at the East Broadway Christian Church. W. F. Hamann.

EDWARDS.

At his home, 811 North 5th Street, Quincy, Ill., Thomas H. Edwards, on July 28, 1905, passed away. He was a Christian in the full sense of the word.

McCURDEY.

Paul McCurdey was born in Norfolk, Sept. 18, 1880, died Sept. 25, 1905. He united with the church at the age of 14, under the faithful ministry of Brother G. P. Rutledge, his brother-in-law. Since that time his young, manly, Christian life has been an acknowledged benediction wherever spent. In home, office, church and social circle his light has shone with a brightness peculiarly reflective of the Master's life within him. To his loving, bereaved parents, sisters, brothers, relatives and friends, we extend our deepest sympathy and direct them to the Great Comforter. J. T. T. Hundley.

Norfolk, Va.

PATTERSON.

B. A. Patterson was born Dec. 11, 1869, near Farmington, Mo., and died May 1, 1905, at Elvins, Mo. For six months he was a patient sufferer with one of the most threatening diseases that may befall humanity. This disease is commonly called pulmonary tuberculosis. Immediately after he united with the Christian Church, he did all he could for the cause of Christ, and those who are intimately acquainted with him have informed the writer that he exercised every influence for good to make up for the time which he lost. His death was the saddest that has occurred in the community. For only a few hours after his death his faithful wife gave birth to a child. While Brother Patterson was prepared to go, and while he made provision for his wife and children, yet it was hard for him to depart, when he was needed so much. He leaves a wife and five small children who have the sympathy of the friends and the entire community.

J. G. M. Luttenberger.

PENNOCK.

Mrs. Jane R. Pennock was born at Trenton, N. J., Feb. 9, 1823, died at Marlboro, O., Sept. 13, 1905. Nov. 16, 1844, she was married to Henry W. Pennock, who died Aug. 13, 1874. From the age of 18 she lived all of her life in Marlboro. She was a devoted member of the church for more than sixty years. She was the mother of four daughters, all living, viz: Mrs. D. S. Mugridge and Mrs. Flora P. Brook, of Chicago, Ill., Mrs. J. G. Brooks, of Warren, O., and Mrs. W. W. Whiteacre, of Cleveland, O. There are five living grand children and two great grand children. She was a patient, cheerful, motherly woman. She possessed the rich culture of the heart which is the fruitage of the gospel. E. P. Wise.

PUTERBAUGH.

Died, at his home in Mackinaw, Ill., Sept. 6, 1905, Solomon Puterbaugh, aged 82 years, 11 months, 28 days. He was a native of Miami county, O., and came to this township with his parents in 1839, where he resided until his death. He was immersed by the venerable pioneer preacher, Jas. A. Lindsey, in 1843. Married to Eliza Ann Howell in 1844, who with two sons and three grand children and one great grand child survives him. One son and one daughter having preceded him. He was an honored and much loved member of the one congregation for more than sixty-two years of this life. His wise counsel and generous contributions have been a power in all the years of his life that will be felt in many circles. His home was always an ideal rest to the preacher. His cheerful, jovial nature and kind disposition of his companion made them the loved of everybody. The graces of this Christian family are a precious memory. Early in his church life he became a patron of church papers and one or more could always be found in his home. The immense throng of friends from many parts of the county, and especially old people, was a striking manifestation of the esteem and tender regard for this venerable servant. The present pastor, J. M. Vawter, and President R. E. Hieronymus, of Eureka, had the services in charge.

George Patterson.

SAVIDY.

Elder Robert Savidy was born in Pottsville, Pa., Aug. 11, 1826. In his infancy his parents moved to Northcumberland county, Pa., where they resided until 1840, when they removed to St. Joseph county, Ind., where Elder Savidy resided the rest of his life. He was married to Miss Mary Ann Rowser, Jan. 9, 1851, and during all the intervening years they have lived and labored in loving accord. Elder Savidy became a Christian in the fall of 1847, uniting with the Christian Church on Harris Prairie, and has always been a faithful aud devoted follower of Christ, serving as elder of the church for many years. He died Aug. 24, 1905, after a somewhat prolonged sickness, during which time his faithful wife, though herself infirm with age, sat almost constantly by his side. Elder Savidy had by industry and economy accumulated a very substantial fortune, and having no direct heirs he arranged for the bulk of it to go, after his widow's decease, to the promotion of the cause of Christ which he loved so ardently. Several years ago he gave to the church in South Bend a good business property on the annuity plan, the same to be sold and the proceeds to be used in the erection of a modern house of worship. He also provided for several thousand dollars to be set aside as an endowment for the church, and bequeathed his home to the church for a parsonage. He remembered the Ministerial Relief Fund with a bequest of $1,000, and provided that the balance of his estate not designated for any other purpose should be devoted to the establishment of a church in South Bend as a memorial to himself and his wife. His death, though not unexpected, has left a vacancy in the ranks of the church in this city, which will be noticed for a long time to come. His widow waits lonely the passing hours when in the full fruition of their faith and labors of love they may be united again in the Father's house above. P. J. Rice.

The Walls of China.

BY EDWIN A. LAYTON, M. D.

From childhood we have associated walls with China. We count the "Great Wall" as one of the Seven Wonders of the World. That stupendous undertaking, showing, as it does, their ingenuity, industry and efforts at exclusion, is characteristic of the Chinese.

Walled cities are ancient and oriental. They are landmarks of an older civilization. They belong to the time when life and property were less secure and when simpler methods of warfare prevailed. China, the "Middle Kingdom," surpasses in the number of walled cities; there are 1,700 to-day. The various walls of China are among the first sights most likely to make an impression on the mind of the newcomer. Arriving at Nanking, for example—the Southern Capital—and "entering in through the gates into the city," he is impressed by the dimensions of the city wall. About twenty-five miles in length, averaging perhaps fifty feet in height, as wide on top as a modern street and built before America was discovered, is the wall which the Taipings found an obstacle at their late day. And there are walls within walls—the inner city wall and every house, with its court, securely walled in. Even our mission compounds have the conventional high walls round about. When at home, therefore, one has the feeling of being shut in from the world and when he walks the narrow streets, bordered by high walls, there comes the feeling of being shut out from the "Celestials." Before the main entrance to every dwelling is an additional wall as high as the house and as broad as high, the only purpose of which is to keep out devils. Traveling in a straight line, as they are said to do, they just bump their heads against these walls if they make for the doorway. "Foreign devils" whose ways also are not crooked have sometimes bumped against walls in gaining access to China and the Chinese.

A hundred years ago these literal walls of China confronted the world. It could be said of China, as of Jericho, that it "was straitly shut up . . . none went out and none came in." And there are other walls—figurative, it is true, but none the less real—which confront the missionary. The difficult, grammarless language with its hieroglyphs, must be faced as a "blind wall." It must be "compassed about," not seven days, but seven years and seven times in the seventh year. Then, face to face with the Chinese, there appears the "middle wall of partition" between his religion and theirs, his civilization and theirs; the vast difference in inheritance, training, ideals; the wall of national self-conceit in process of building since the Golden Age of the Flowery Kingdom, somewhere in the remote past.

Can China's walls be broken down, and how? "By faith," we read, "the walls of Jericho fell down." Here we have, not a city, but hundreds of cities, indeed, a nation, surrounded by walls. But during this century of Christian missions China's walls, literal and figurative, have been falling down. There is a host in China to-day who have seen greater wonders than that at Jericho.

It was interesting and inspiring the other day to hear Dr. Griffith John give an account of his fifty years in China. At his arrival there were only four ports where foreigners could reside. Now all ports of the empire are open to the preaching of the gospel. Then there were but a few missionaries and about 400 converts. Now there are more than 3,000 missionaries and perhaps 350,000 Chinese Christians. He spoke of the great difficulty of getting within the walls of a certain city which long since has become a center of missionary activity. He told of many walls which have confronted him and others, all of which "by faith . . . fell down." Griffith John's name means "Great Faith." He referred to the old story of the negro who said that if the Lord told him to jump through a stone wall, he would jump, trusting the Lord to get him through. Dr. John has that kind of faith. He is one of the host of Jehovah before whom the walls of China must fall down.

All the stations of the F. C. M. S. are in walled cities which not many years ago were "straitly shut up" before foreigners. When once admitted our pioneers were not kindly treated. They were put in yamens, threatened, reviled, spat upon and stoned. But rapidly the wall of separation has fallen down. Churches have been built, hospitals opened, schools established. Before the accomplishment of these things there were great walls of difficulty. "By faith the walls . . . . . fell down." Two more walled cities are to be occupied this fall. By faith and perseverance the language has been mastered. There are now adequate helps to its study and a considerable Christian literature. We have in our mission some of the best linguists in Central China. The old wall of prejudice and persecution is everywhere crumbling away. China is really open to the world and the gospel; opened by whom, and how? We hear of China being "opened at the point of the lancet," opened by treaty, and of the "open door" of commerce, and the like. But we know it was not merely men nor money, neither western learning nor battleships, for when we review the work of the faithful who, by the help of the Lord, went up against a walled nation with its walled cities and walled homes, we must say:

"By faith the walls of China fell down."

A Day Under the Banyan.

BY ADELAIDE GAIL FROST.

It was a bright morning in February—India's February—and the majority of the bungalow household was preparing for a picnic under the big banyan over by Bijanagar lake. Our two-wheeled cart was to carry three persons, and a common country bullock cart the rest of us and our provisions for the day's comfort, which did not, however, add materially to the ride's comfort—for baskets or something that would break, with the "total depravity of inanimate objects," persisted in slipping into the places most desirable for the depositing of one's human self! Miss Graybiel stayed at home with our family, in some respects so strikingly like that of the "old woman who lived in a shoe." Mrs. Gerould, Dr. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Monroe, Miss Haight, Isadas, Sirdar, the cook, a cart driver and myself were the picnic party. We who went in the bullock cart sat in a line of five rows from back to front, one in a row! Feet seemed very unnecessary appendages in this procession. If one wished to put these at other times useful members outside the cart there was danger from the great wheels made of rounds from logs; or if they were extended out the front, the bullocks might turn around or buck against them any time. These animals have abnormal curiosity, and delight to see how near they can come to the edge of the roadside ditches without upsetting the cart; they will also most suddenly decide to go in almost any direction other than that desired by the one who is guiding them, either with a prod or by twisting the caudal appendage of the means of locomotion. It is about four miles from Mahoba to Bijanagar or Vijainagar, "City of Victory." The lake reminds me somewhat of Minnesota's smaller lakes as to its quiet and apparent remoteness; but there are rock crowned hills about Bijanagar, so its waters lie sparkling in a rock-hewn cup. On the side where we picnicked are many stone steps leading down into the water, and also serving as an embankment. Here, we fancy, centuries ago the people of a city came to bathe.

I think we may truthfully say the largest of the Bijanagar banyans is one of the very largest in India. I should think a hundred persons could easily picnic in its shade—at least, more than a hundred children have done it. It trails its branches, at the end of each of which is a brown tassel of roots, in the waters of the lake on one side, while on the larger arc of its circumference the roots find mother earth and continue to increase the great leafy dome above. The sacred pipal tree belongs to the same family as the banyan, but does not send roots from the branches in the same way. We sat under this great tree with screens of roots about us, and had dinner—fried chicken and potatoes roasted in the ashes of our camp-fire; and names of places widely separated geographically mingled in our conversation—India, United States of America, Egypt, Canada, Cleveland and Cairo, Cincinnati and Benares, Indianapolis and Calcutta, Toronto and Bombay, Hiram and Hamirpur. Our conversation was that medley that comforts one in thinking that the far is much nearer than it used to be. I thought of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST very often, and of how I could make its readers imagine, to some extent, any way, the picture and the feelings it awoke in me.

Upon the hillside are the ruins of an old palace and fort combined, belonging probably to the feudal system of the old Chandel rajas, and the lake and palace, and probably a city here was once a part of the capital of some old Hindu king. This ruin adds to the picture—a stretch of green in a field bordering the water makes an emerald band on the further side, the great old rocks add russet and gray to the color scheme, the waters ripple jewel colors in the great basin. Perhaps an unusual ripple is caused by a crocodile, for a number of times that day Mr. Monroe or Sirdar gave the signal that a huge crocodile was in sight and there was a scramble to see him lazily drag himself from the water into the sun. Sometimes three or four wild pea fowl flew up from the near jungle and Mr. Monroe brought one in for a substitute for turkey for the morrow's dinner.

He also shot a pigeon which was roasted over the camp-fire.

I thought of the times I had seen Mrs. Gerould in the pretty "homey" parlors at 110 Olive street, Cleveland, and then I looked at her anew under the big banyan. Were 110 Olive street and Cleveland and—Hiram, really half the circumference of this earth away? Was it really midnight there? It is better not to try to realize how far those western homes of ours are when love and thought and Jesus have brought them so near.

The waters were just beginning to crimson a little when we turned homeward. We passed many people returning from the bazar, so many scantily clothed in dust-colored draperies, so many toil-worn and rude-looking, so many with hidden possibilities and then we came to the good, new buildings almost completed for the survey department which will have headquarters at Mahoba during the re-survey of Hamirpur. They are large, red brick buildings and have given work to a great many people.

Making Home Pleasant.

A Washington woman on a visit to a toy shop recently noticed a small girl who was eagerly looking at a mechanical mouse.

"Although we had never been introduced," said the woman, "the child spoke to me. Holding up the mouse, she inquired anxiously, 'Do you think it looks real?'

"I said I thought it did.

"'It is very expensive,' said the little girl, 'and I've been saving up for two weeks to get it. I want it to look real.'

"'Why not get a doll?' I suggested.

"'Oh,' said she, 'it isn't for me. It's for our cat. We brought him home from the country, and he isn't very happy in a flat. I thought if he had a mouse that would run, to play with, it might make it seem more like home.'

"And the dear little soul's pennies went over the counter. I wondered what she had for herself to make a flat seem like home."—Washington Post.

Wanted—A Companion.

The following advertisement appeared in a London paper:

A lady in delicate health wishes to meet with a useful companion. She must be domestic, musical, an early riser, amiable, of good appearance, and have some experience in nursing. A total abstainer preferred. Comfortable home. No salary.

A few days afterwards the advertiser received by express a basket labeled: "This side up—with care—perishable." On opening it she found a tabby cat, with a letter tied to its tail. It ran thus:

"Madam—In response to your advertisement, I am happy to furnish you with a very useful companion which you will find exactly suited to your requirements. She is domestic, a good vocalist, an early riser, possesses an amiable disposition, and is considered handsome. She has had a great experience as a nurse, having brought up a large family. I need scarcely add that she is a total abstainer. As salary is no object to her, she will serve you faithfully in return for a comfortable home."—Youth's Companion.

Printer's Humor.

"T. P." has collected some amusing instances of printers' errors, contributed by well-known authors. An English woman novelist, he says, tells of the mistake of a printer who made one of her characters say that "she stuffed papa into the grate, and soon there was a merry blaze." What she wroter was "paper."

Mr. E. Murray Gilchrist tells of a passage in an uncorrected proof which read as follows: "With the intent of improving her grandchildren's moral character, the pious old lady would recite every evening terse passages from the masterpieces of Boccaccio." The author had referred to Bogatsky, author of an old-fashioned religious manual on conduct.

W. W. Jacobs writes:

"The most amusing error in my case was made by a typist. I was describing the emotions of a man in a country lane coming in the dawn upon another man walking about tied in a chair. I wrote that '. . . . . he was undecided whether it was a monstrosity or an apparition'; the typist rendered it '. . . . he was undecided whether it was a monstrosity or a battleship.'"

To these recollections may be added the experience of a writer who, in describing the "Norse Sonata" of a certain composer, was made to refer to the work in print as a "horse sonata."—Harper's Weekly.

Christianity in Japan.

A statement prepared by the president of the Duncan Academy at Tokyo, Dr. Clement, shows that Christianity has made considerable progress in Japan. There are now about 300,000 professing Christians in that empire and 100,000 of these are Protestants. The actual church membership is considerably smaller, and in 1903 it was divided as follows: Catholic, 58,000; Greek Catholic, 27,000; Protestant, 55,000. The Russian Church has labored long and persistently in Japan, but its efforts have suffered materially in consequence of the political course of the St. Petersburg government.

Dr. Clement and other missionaries believe that Japan will become a Christian nation within the present century, despite the agnostic tendencies of her educated classes.—The Chautauquan.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week with the Woodneys.

THE SIXTH MORNING (CONTINUED).

When Bonaparte reached the barn, Arthur Lowell, crushed by the new disgrace which suspicion had thrown upon him, had crept away. Luther Woodney helped the horse over the wooden doorsill, and almost dragged him to the manger. The young man climbed to the loft to throw down some hay, and while he was thus engaged the blacksmith came up to the family group.

"Who is this?" asked Worth Acre, gazing respectfully at the forlorn animal whom no one thought of mocking by tying with a rope.

"Good morning, Worth," said Mr. Woodney heartily, recognizing the blacksmith's voice, "I am glad to have you meet Luther."

"It's more than he seems to be," said Worth, as the beast bowed its head that it might rest on the margin of the manger, and dropped its lower lip till the great teeth were exposed to the gums.

"I am sure," returned the other earnestly, "that he is delighted to meet any friend of ours."

"He doesn't look it," Worth persisted obstinately. Luther, busy in pitching down hay, did not hear this conversation, but Mace interposed.

"You don't understand, Mr. Acre. Luther is getting down the hay." Just at that moment the horse feebly extended his tongue and reached for a wisp of hay which had settled on his nose. The tip of the tongue touched the hay and pushed it up between his eyes.

"I don't know about that," said Worth, "I don't believe he can get it down."

Mace began to laugh at Worth's mistake, and just then Mrs. Woodney came with the manuscript of her novel. "How are you now, Bonaparte?" she called airily.

"All right," called Luther from the lift; "I guess that's enough."

"I thought that was Arthur Lowell up there!" Worth exclaimed, startled by a strange voice.

"My grandson has come to spend Sunday with us," said old Mrs. Woodney.

"Is Bonaparte your son?" inquired Worth of Mrs. Woodney.

"No, he is our horse," replied the other, climbing into the box which was fastened at one end of the manger.

"I am glad you have two horses," said the blacksmith, "for I think you will soon want to replace Luther."

"Worth," interposed Mr. Woodney, "you must excuse Mace for laughing, but the thought of replacing Luther is too much for her." Mace, in truth, had become so delighted over the blacksmith's mistake that she had begun to laugh merrily, and as he continued in his error, her laughter continued, till she was now almost hysterical. The great, good-natured blacksmith, deeply puzzled, anxious to set things right, and finding that each remark from him increased Mace's laughter, resolved to say no more. Luther came down from the loft. "This is my friend, Mr. Acre," said Luther's father, and they shook hands.

"Now, Mace, stop laughing," said her mother, "for I am going to begin my tale. Mr. Acre, you won't mind, I hope. I've begun my book, and I want the family to decide on its merits." She began to read: "Late one fine evening in January, while a fine south wind was waving the branches to and fro, and some birds (they were snowbirds) were singing merrily on the glistening sheet of snow and a fine blue color overspread the sky—"

"What we want to do now," said Luther, "is to make this horse lie down on the hay." The hay was piled high beside the mournful beast.

"That ought to be easy," said Worth, coming to his side, "just push him over on it. Let me."

"He's down!" cried old Mrs. Woodney triumphantly.

"Geraldine," said her husband, "I think there are too many 'fines' in that passage."

"There are only three 'fines,'" said his wife, "and every one of them is necessary."

"Why not say 'a pleasant south wind,' instead of "a fine south wind'?"

"Because," returned the wife, "fine expresses my thought, and pleasant expresses yours, and I am the one who is writing the book."

"I think," remarked her mother-in-law, "that what you threw in about their being *snow*birds would just as well be left to the imagination."

"He won't stay down," said Luther, as Bonaparte began to struggle from his bed of hay upon which Worth had pushed him; "and he's hurting his leg by trying to get up."

"Let's rope him down," said Worth. "I'll sit on his neck till you get a rope. He'll ruin his leg, pawing like that."

"Won't it choke him to sit on his neck?" exclaimed Mace.

"Oh, no," returned the blacksmith, seating himself deliberately on the horse's long, thin neck. "It will keep him from hurting himself. Lie still, Luther."

"Well, how do you like the way it starts?" demanded Mrs. Geraldine, looking up.

"Oh, he's all right," Worth assured her. "He's just kicking a little for breath."

"Mother," said Mace earnestly, "I've been reading where the critics make fun of long descriptions of the weather. They say it's going out of style, and if it were my book, I'd leave out that part."

"Then I'd have to leave out all I've read," objected her mother. "But I'll go on," she added hastily, as she saw Luther coming with a rope: "—and just before sunset, a large, red wagon carrying at the end of it a high leather trunk, and leading behind it, by means of a long rope, a dispirited and much-abused horse—"

"Now, Mr. Acre," said Luther, "will you let Bonaparte ease up a little?"

"Where is Bonaparte?" asked the blacksmith.

"Under you," said Luther. Mace began to laugh again and Worth, now understanding his mistake, laughed with her. The horse was tied in such a manner that it could not get up. "Being a blacksmith," Mace said to Worth, "you ought to be able to help that horse."

"Well," said Worth, "I can shoe a horse all right, but I can't make one over. If I'd had this one when it was a colt, something might have been done."

"Go on, Geraldine," said her husband patiently.

"That's all," said the wife.

"All!" exclaimed old Mrs. Woodney, trying not to speak in a tone of relief. "Why, Geraldine, it is brief!"

"That is all," repeated Mrs. Geraldine, "and the last few words came to me just now. They are written with a pencil. Yes, there are not many words here, but they represent a great deal of thought. I have my trunk and my horse in the story, but I don't know what to do with them. I

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

Here is a Simple, Quick, Effective way and COSTS NOTHING—Send for it and see.

Those who suffer with it know well the miseries of catarrh. There is just one thing to do—have it cured. It can be done. To prove it to you, send your address and the means of a quick and safe cure will be sent to your home free in every way. The idea in giving it to you free is to prove to you that there is a home cure for catarrh, scratchy throat, asthma, stopped-up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, etc., etc., and that the remedy that does it is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, the eminent southern doctor and minister, who has for over 31 years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its worst forms.

His discovery is unlike anything you ever had before, as it is not a spray, douche, ointment, atomizer, salve, cream, or any such thing, but a genuine tried-and-true cure that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choky, spitting feeling that all catarrhal sufferers have. It will save the wear-and-tear of internal medicines that only ruin the stomach. It will prevent colds and heal up the mucous membranes so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery and know that you need such a cure, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and a thorough free trial treatment and also an elaborately illustrated booklet, "Plain Facts About Catarrh," will be sent you at once, free, so that you can begin to cure yourself privately at home.

Now write him immediately.

find it very easy to bring things into my book, but it's hard to dispose of them afterwards. I can't see what the horse has to do with the trunk."

"Why not run them as two distinct characters?" Worth suggested, as they prepared to return to the house. "You might have the horse belonging to the hero, and the trunk belonging to the heroine."

"I don't know whether I'll have a hero or heroine," said Mrs. Geraldine. "I've only thought as far as the horse and trunk. Perhaps I may." They went to the house and Luther suggested that Mace play hymns on the organ while all sing to the accompaniment. The suggestion was received eagerly, and soon the dark parlor rang with old familiar airs. Worth had a powerful voice, which alone would have made the walls ring. Luther sang bass and his father, tenor. The blind face of the master shone with holy light as the words, deep with meaning and intense with feeling, trembled upon his lips. Old Mrs. Woodney, erect and stately, her hands crossed upon her lap, her eyes glowing with fervor, raised her voice with a ring of triumphant faith; she had sung the same songs when a child, and if her tones were not so sweet and clear, they had gained something of which the child knew nothing. Mrs. Geraldine, not so familiar with the words, held a hymn book upon her knee, while her son, seated beside her, sang from the same page. Presently all were voicing "Am I a Soldier of the Cross?" each with a different look and feeling. Old Mrs. Woodney sang as one who had proved her answer to that question; she was about ready to lay aside her armor, and she could point to a long career of toil and triumph. Benjamin Woodney was triumphant, too. As a soldier of the Cross, he was not blind, but saw with the clear eye of love and faith the path before his feet, the foe whom he must encounter, and the outposts of sin which he had resolved to overthrow. Worth Acre was a soldier, in his way, putting to flight the sorrows and regrets that might have subdued a less hardy warrior, ready for each day's tasks, and patient under the burden of lifelong cares, smiling with his great brown eyes in the very face of grief.

Luther Woodney was a young volunteer who as yet knew little of the real strength of the foe, but who, with the intrepid spirit of the brave yet untried, was ready for any danger. His mother sang with a serene face and a calm heart, as if she felt it was perhaps enough for her to have sent to the war such valiant warriors as Luther and Mace. But with Mace, that hymn was still a question, and upon her sweet, grave face, lingered a hesitation, a shade of doubt. Was she, indeed, ready to forego the pleasures and luxuries of life for the sake of her religion? The test had not come; would it ever come? And if it came, would she choose the "flowery beds of ease"? She did not know; and, always frank, even with herself, she told herself the question for her was unsettled. Yet there was something contagious in the almost passionate triumph of the voices about her. She sang with the others; the words were the same, but somehow a mist grew in her eyes, a mist of tears. They were so sure—and it was so splendid to be sure! They reached the last verse and their voices grew stronger, till it seemed to Mace's wrought-up imagination that the dark little chamber rang with the shouts of the victorious soldiers. She sang with them—

"When that illustrious day shall rise
  And all thine armies shine
 In robes of victory through the skies—"

Her eyes caught the words of the concluding line, and her voice was hushed, while Worth Acre, rising upon tiptoe, as if to add volume and height to his trumpet tones, led the others with—

"The glory shall be thine!"

There was a knock on the door. Luther opened it and Miss Polly, Miss Susie and Miss Lizzie appeared at the threshold, carrying hymn books.

"May we join you?" asked Miss Polly timidly. She caught sight of the blacksmith and started. Miss Susie saw him and bowed distantly. Miss Lizzie saw and a light flashed in her eyes and upon her lips. It was so unexpected! A blush sought her pale cheek. Worth divined her agitation, and came to her relief.

"Come right in!" he cried, heartily. "We've pitched our tent, and we're glad to get recruits!"

Mr. Woodney, still thrilling with emotion, exclaimed, "Let this be the first meeting of our church of Christian union."

"Amen!" cried old Mrs. Woodney.

"We believe Jesus is the Son of God, and we love him," Mr. Woodney exclaimed. "We know the Bible is inspired, and we accept it as our guide. On that basis, who will give me his hand?" He stretched out both hands, as one feeling in the dark, but sure of the way. Hand after hand met his fervid grasp, till all but Mace had felt his touch. But Mace sat with her face hidden on the organ. Mace was not sure.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Any book in the market will be supplied with pleasure, but to save time for you, give the name of the publisher or author, or both, and the book will be sent you promptly.

"Mr. World and Miss Church Member" is nothing but good for the "weak-kneed" Christian and will tend to stir such to a proper appreciation of how their conduct appears from a distance. Your one dollar is well spent for it.

Remember, by quietly selecting your "Holiday" presents now, we will add any name in gold on any one dollar book, will enclose any card or words, will give you every preference possible if you will only see to it before the rush.

Our school superintendents can present their pupils a very pretty pin in sterling silver at 35 cents; in rolled gold (guaranteed) at 40 cents, and in solid gold (guaranteed) at 85 cents, with cross and crown and the words "Christian S. S." on them.

"The Holy Spirit," by J. H. Garrison, and "Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell, are "selling every day in the week" and buyers all seem pleased with them at $1 per copy, postpaid. Nearly 1,000 copies have been sold, and the demand is not slackened, apparently, at all.

"A great book on a tender theme," is what one friend says of "Alone With God," by Brother Garrison. It will help your meditations to read such; it will help your work to read "Heavenward Way"; either of these, 75 cents, postpaid.

We have just received, after some delay, our fall stock of marriage certificates and booklets, one of the largest stocks we have ever purchased, and advise your examination of the advertisements in this week's paper, as we have added many new ones to our supply.

Our "Saturday Evening Talks" for boys and girls on Little Kings, Little Queens, Little Generals, Little Orators, Little Statesmen, Little Presidents, make a fine present for your children or pupils, and are so handsomely made, bound and illustrated that they are an ornament in any room. They are filled with the very best along such lines as tend to ennoble the children with pure thought, noble deeds and honorable service. They sell at 40 cents each, or $2.00 for the set, prepaid. Fine for Christmas.

By the way, we have some few copies of Johnson's "People's New Testament with Notes," bound in sheep, and some in morocco, and as we are not going to run these bindings longer, we will send what we have in these two bindings at the price of the cloth. There are no complete sets in either one of these two bindings, some being in one and some in the other; but if you prefer sheep, or morocco, you can have them while they last at the price of the cloth—$2 postpaid, for books that ought to bring $3.50. There, now!

"Gloria in Excelsis" is coming into the prominence we predicted for it, and hundreds of them have gone out this past week. W. R. Walker, minister at Killbuck, O., makes the second order, saying: "We are more than pleased with 'Gloria in Excelsis.' It is par excellence the book for church services." The complete book in cloth sells for $9.50 per dozen, not prepaid, or 75 cents each in 100 lots, not prepaid; 50 or more at 100 rate. The abridged editions, with over four hundred pages and all the responsive services, in boards, at 55 cents prepaid; in cloth, 65 cents prepaid; by the dozen, in boards, $5; by the 100, in boards, 40 cents each, not prepaid; in cloth, by the dozen, $6.50; by the 100, at 50 cents each, not prepaid.

I CAN CURE YOUR EYES

Without the Knife At Your Own Home.
No Risk. No Pain. No Inconvenience.

AN unparalleled record of permanent cures, hundreds of which have been effected after some of the most famous specialists in America and abroad had either absolutely failed, pronounced incurable or had condemned the patients to an operation. A rational treatment, endorsed by the press, the pulpit and by modern physicians.

P. CHESTER MADISON, M. D.
America's Master Oculist.
(Copyrighted.)

PERSONS who have suffered unsuccessful treatment at the hands of other doctors and who are discouraged are especially invited to consult me. My best advertisements to-day are the living testimonials over the entire country—people who, after years of experimenting, have turned to me and who have been cured.

MADISON ABSORPTION METHOD
Which Cures Diseases of the Eye at the Patient's Own Home

TESTIMONIALS

MISS MARY A. GREENLEES, 1011 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "Although the best eye specialists in Philadelphia said my eyes would have to be taken out, you have effected a cure."

MRS. W. CHAPMAN, 104 So. 1st St. Marshalltown, Iowa, writes: "Ethel could not tell day from night when she commenced your treatment. Her eyes are perfect now and she has no trouble whatever at school."

ROBERT WRAY, Cuperbino, Santa Clara County, Calif., writes: "Your treatment is an unqualified success in my case even after four operations were failures."

MR. M. DONOVAN, 100 N. Clark St., Chicago, writes: "When I commenced your treatment I was nearly blind with cataracts. I have no trouble now in reading the finest newspaper print without glasses."

TESTIMONIALS

REV. W. E. MILLINGTON, of Keeseville. N. Y., writes: "I had been crosseyed for sixty years and was nearly blinded with cataracts. Your treatment has succeeded where all others have failed."

HON EDWARD P. VAIL, ex-Judge, First National Bank Bldg., Chicago, writes: "I am convinced that through your treatment of my son's eyes that you can accomplish that, in your profession, which all other noted specialists of our country have failed to do."

CHARLES FREBURG, North Freedom, Wis., writes: "My eye is perfectly straight. My friends are much amazed and surprised."

GEORGE E. DOANE, Contractor, 6339 Champaign Ave. Chicago, writes: "I cannot say how you succeeded, but that my eye is sound and well and the tumor is entirely gone. My faith in your treatment is unbounded, for I had been repeatedly advised that the trouble was incurable."

CROSS-EYES STRAIGHTENED WITHOUT THE KNIFE
AND WITH ABSOLUTELY NO PAIN

I am particularly anxious to learn of every case which has suffered unsuccessful treatments or which has been pronounced incurable by physicians or oculists. Do not let your unsuccessful experiments discourage you. Write me a full history of the trouble and I will be pleased to give the matter my personal attention and give you my opinion. THIS OPINION AS WELL AS MY ADVICE WILL COST YOU NOTHING WHATEVER AND WILL NOT PUT YOU UNDER ANY OBLIGATIONS OF ANY KIND OR NATURE. This is a fair proposition. You may rest assured that if I consider your case beyond relief I will candidly tell you so. I have no false hopes to hold out, neither do I make any promises which I can not fulfill. If, later, you decide to place your case in my hands for treatment you will find my fees reasonable and within your grasp. A moment of your time in writing to me may save you or a friend from a life of darkness.

I have just issued this month another edition of 100,000 copies of my Book, "DISEASES OF THE EYE, THEIR CURE WITHOUT SURGERY." This book is without a doubt the finest book of its kind in the world, and consists of eighty pages, sixty pages of which are devoted to eye diseases. Nearly fifty ordinary diseased conditions are treated in separate chapters and the book is illustrated throughout with colored plates. The remaining twenty pages are devoted to testimonials from cured patients all over the country. The book is well worth its weight in gold to any one who is suffering with their eyes. Many books of comparatively no value are daily sold for $5.00 a copy. I offer it to you, however, for the asking. IT IS ABSOLUTELY FREE. Either fill out the attached coupon and return it to me, or mail me your name and address upon a postal card. DO IT NOW.

A PRAYER.

MY prayer is not that wealth and place be mine;
Nor that fame's laurels may my brow adorn,
To pierce my flesh with envy's venomed thorn
And wither in the heat that bade them shine.
I would not quaff life's rich, empurpled wine,
To the exclusion of one thirsting lip;
Nor sail the mortal sea in proud-rigged ship,
Heedless of wretches battling with the brine.
No! In the white, transparent light of truth,
Secure from error, I would ever dwell;
My guide and comfort wisdom's steadfast hand;
My soul buoyed up with love's immortal youth,—
Such ardor as should burst its narrow cell
And fire all hearts throughout the tepid land.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Mr. World and Miss Church-Member
ALLEGORY BY W. S. HARRIS

One of the BOOKS calculated to do good.

It brings vividly to the Christian a realization of how often the Evil One misleads by the seductive influences of the world. The illustrations are very pointed, while the book is full of vital interest and should be read by the great army of church members who do not "think" this or that is any harm.

Current Events.

The Russian Revolution.

The revolution in Russia is the great topic of the week. Editorial writers have so often been called upon to chronicle and comment upon the beginning of a new and liberal regime in Russia, only to find that it was a false alarm, and that the old regime was going on unchanged, that they might be pardoned for hesitating to acclaim the Czar's manifesto as necessarily marking the real end of the autocracy. But it seems to be true. The manifesto bears examination remarkably well. It really means something, which is more than any of the earlier documents of similar pretensions have done. It really authorizes a wide extension of the suffrage and an elected legislative assembly whose approval shall be necessary for the validity of any law. To be sure, the exact extent of the suffrage is not yet defined and some important topics, such as military and naval affairs, and all matters pertaining to the perquisites and properties of the sovereign and his court—are removed from the jurisdiction of the legislative assembly. But the reforms, as far as they go, are real, not nominal; and they go far enough to make the transition of the basis of government from the whim of an autocrat to the judgment of the public—more or less perfecty ascertained.

The cessation of popular clamor and turbulence has not followed as promptly as was expected upon the publication of the manifesto. The general strike was at once declared off and the conditions in St. Petersburg and Moscow vastly improved. There was a good deal of hilarious celebration, but no serious breach of the peace. Elsewhere, however, the effect has been quite different. In Warsaw, Kieff, Odessa and many other cities there have been riots which have become almost massacres, and the troops have shown themselves either unable to suppress these disorders or unwilling to attempt it. The prime movers in this epidemic of rioting represent apparently the same elements of irresponsible radicalism that have always offered violence as the means of Russia's regeneration. Either they are incredulous as to the reality of the promised reforms or, considering them insufficient, wish to press the advantage and compel further concessions, perhaps even a republican form of government. There are thousands who will not be satisfied unless the Russian revolution does to the Romanoffs what the French revolution did to the Bourbons. Incidentally, too, they hope for a general cleaning out of disagreeable elements in the empire—the Jews, for instance, who are particularly obnoxious to many of these violent patriots. So the riots have in many places taken the form of anti-Semitic demonstrations, a type of lawlessness always especially congenial to the roughs and radicals of Odessa and vicinity. The loss of the Jews, both in life and property, has been very great in this district. The incongruity of an assault upon the Jews as a part of the propaganda for popular rights and universal suffrage does not seem to occur to those who are responsible for the combination. Of course, it must be remembered, though, that much of the movement against the Jews is merely concerted robbery without political significance and perpetuated by ruffians who would rob and massacre Christians just as cheerfully if it were as safe.

The Case of Finland.

The reforms promised to Finland are especially interesting, and the light which the recent history of that country sheds on the whole reform movement is significant, because Finland already has, and for a century has had, a written constitution in which the Czars have under oath guaranteed the political rights which, in reality, have been totally denied. The reports say that the Finnish constitution is to be re-established, the legislative diet convoked and the arbitrary power of the governor-general curbed. A century of Czars have sworn to do these same things. Nicholas I, as a part of his coronation oath eleven years ago, swore to uphold the liberties of Finland as defined in the constitution. It is more than likely that the present promise will be more effective. If, in the practical working out of the reform, Finland still does not get the degree of separateness and autonomy which the constitution contemplates (and this is not wholly improbable), it will at least get its share in the general reform of the empire. The case of Finland shows that a Czar does not necessarily consider himself bound by his oath when autocracy and popular rights come in conflict. It would be neither fair nor convincing to argue that, because the last half dozen Czars have all perjured themselves in failing to support and enforce the Finnish constitution, therefore the present manifesto promising larger liberties for the whole empire will not be carried into effect. Morally, perhaps, the Czar would be quite as ready to disregard one promise as the other. But there are two reasons for expecting the late manifesto to be put into operation: First, in the disturbed condition of the empire it would be dangerous to do otherwise; second, the execution of the plan has been put in the hands of Count Witte.

Beveridge on Party Loyalty.

Senator Beveridge has made the mistake of his political life. He has declined to follow the lead of Roosevelt, Taft, Root and the other really great men of his party in their attitude toward partisanship in local elections. In support of the disreputable Republican candidate for mayor of Indianapolis, Senator Beveridge last week delivered in that city one of his justy celebrated spread-eagle party speeches. The gist of it was a plea for party regularity, not only in national, but also in state and local elections. He admitted ingenuously that national issues have no significance in city elections, but the maintenance of the party organization, which is necessary for success in national campaigns, demands party loyalty in local campaigns as well. The election of a mayor is, according to the Senator's theory, not primarily an opportunity to select the most competent men for the management of municipal business, but an occasion for an exercise of party discipline with a view to preparing the machine for the next election on national issues. But no statement could put the case more clearly than Senator Beveridge's own words. Here they are:

> "The mayor of Indianapolis has nothing to do with the tariff or expansion; but neither do the commissioners of Marion county have anything to do with great national questions, nor the governor and the legislature of Indiana. The same reason for breaking with one's party in Indianapolis demands that an honest man shall break with his party in Marion county and in the state of Indiana. And that is the doctrine which the manipulators of the Democratic campaign in this city are seeking to instill in the minds of Republicans. It is the method of party disintegration. When a man begins to vote against his party in Indianapolis it is easy for him to vote against his party in Marion county and in Indiana. And when he begins to vote against his party in Marion county and in Indiana state elections he finds it still easier to vote against his party in the national elections."

There you have it. The habit of independent voting is so insidious and so dangerous to political health that it must be checked in its very first stages. In another part of his address he alluded to occasional departure from the straight ticket as "Democratic tippling," and in the matter of tippling every one knows that the danger point is the first glass. The only safety from a final lapse into a perfect debauch of mugwumpery (to-wit, bolting the party's presidential ticket) is always to support the party's nominee for mayor and aldermen. We venture to assert that a more pusillanimous and picayunish political policy was never advocated by any man who had reached as high a place as the office of United States Senator—and the senate contains many men who are far inferior to Senator Beveridge in both character and ability. The fact that the candidate in whose behalf he is wielding the lash of party loyalty has already given proof of his unfitness for the office which he seeks, and the further fact that his nomination at the primaries is under very grave suspicion of fraud, make the senator's attitude the more reprehensible, but they add nothing to the inherent and essential folly of the principle which he enunciated so clearly and argued so unconvincingly.

Some Sounder Sentiments.

To show that Senator Beveridge in the above utterance does not represent the best thought of his party, one has but to cite some instances and statements which have recently received wide currency. Mr. Beveridge, in a mayoralty campaign in his home town, where a well-oiled Republican machine means a machine which will be his when he needs it, thinks party loyalty in a local campaign is the first duty of the citizen. But let us hear the opinion of one Theodore Roosevelt, whose standing, both as a Republican and as a citizen, is quite good, and whom the brilliant senior senator from Indiana has the effrontery to cite in illustration of his thesis. Mr. Roosevelt says:

> "The worst evils that effect our local government arise from, and are the inevitable result of, the mixing up of the city affairs with the party politics of the nation and the state. The lines upon which national parties divide have no necessary connection with the business of the city. Such connections open the way to countless schemes of public plunder and civic corruption."

Then again, there is the secretary of war, Mr. Taft. We have already quoted at some length, in an earlier issue, from his Akron speech, but in view of Mr. Taft's unimpeachable Republicanism and official position, it is worth while to repeat these words and to put them beside Mr. Beveridge's campaign exhortation. Secretary Taft said:

> "If I were able to cast my vote in Cincinnati in the coming election, I should vote against the municipal ticket nominated by the Republican organization and for the state ticket."

Once more. Elihu Root is a Republican whose loyalty to the party has never fallen under suspicion. His attitude toward the Beveridge principle of inimitable adherence to the party's candidates is thus expressed in a concrete case:

> "I have a strong desire that the city of Philadelphia, whose history and good name are so dear to every American, shall be relieved from the stain which a corrupt and criminal combination masquerading under the name of Republicans has put upon her."

One would think that a man who preaches blind obedience to the party would hesitate to take issue so squarely with its most honored leaders.

What is a Republican?

At the risk of tediously adhering to one subject, we must cite an illustration of the bad effects of blind party appeals when coming from men of such position and standing as Senator Beveridge. Immediately following the speech referred to, a partisan paper in the same city came forth with a denunciation of the "independent Republicans" who want to bolt the ticket and yet keep their party standing. The conclusion is that there can be no such thing as an independent Republican. It is such a remarkably crass statement of the body-and-soul theory of party fealty that it is really worth reading. One needs to be assured—and the character of the paper on whose editorial page it appears gives sufficient assurance—that there is no sarcasm about it:

> "To be a member of a party, an army or an association of any sort involves a definite sinking of the private judgment and the personal freedom in the cause of the organization as a whole. . . . A man is not a Republican who follows it only when it happens to coincide with his views. . . . A man is not a Republican merely because he believes in the gold standard, or in expansion, or in high tariff, or in Theodore Roosevelt. Many men believe in one or all of these things and occasionally vote the Republican ticket who are not Republicans in any proper sense of the word. The true Republican, and no one has any right to the title otherwise, is he who thinks enough of his party to yield his preference to the will of its majority, to make sacrifices for it, to substitute the will and the desires of the party for his own."

One does not often see the case for blind partisanship stated more clearly or less persuasively. Add to it the dictum that the party tie is equally binding in national and in local affairs, and you have a perfect foundation for a regime of perpetual servitude to the party boss. And all this party loyalty is commanded in the name patriotism. It is true, as Governor Folk said last week at Cleveland, that "many men have patriotism on their lips and treason in their hearts." The American people can not have liberty as the result of any manifesto. They can get it only by taking it, and the means are in their hands. This counsel of meek submission to the party—which often enough means the party boss—becomes daily less popular. Russia is moving toward the light of liberty. If Americans will do their utmost, America also may some day be a free country.

Murdered Missionaries.

At Lienchow, China, in the western part of Kwang-Tung province, five Presbyterian missionaries were murdered by a mad mob of Chinese. It was a particularly atrocious crime, since it involved the destruction of hospital property and the interruption of a philanthropic as well as a religious enterprise. The incident seems to have no general significance, but to be wholly the outcome of local friction between the missionaries and their neighbors, the latter having attempted to secure the abatement of a nuisance in the form of a noisy Chinese theater adjacent to the hospital. Still it may indicate something of the general temper of an element of the natives in the interior and it serves to remind us of the ever present perils of even the more familiar mission fields.

College Athletics.

No one will accuse the President of being foolishly squeamish about good, hard exercise or even an occasional bit of good-natured rough-and-tumble, and his suggestions on college football will have the more weight on that account. He invited the chief football advisers of Yale, Harvard and Princeton, six in all, to luncheon one day recently and talked over with them the advisability of such an alteration of rules as will eliminate the unnecessary roughness of the game. It is not a new subject. The football men themselves are always interested in it, though they are always conservative about making changes. The fact is, after deducting from published reports and current impressions a considerable percentage for exaggeration, it is a tolerably rough game. Men run into each other on purpose and throw each other down. They collide with great force and stop not for apologies. They join themselves together on one side to form a human battering-ram, while on the other they join shoulder to shoulder to form a human rampart. In such a case either the ram or the rampart stands a chance of getting hurt. As the game now stands, with its mass of combinations plays, it requires head work of a higher order than any other rough game ever did. That is its virtue. But it is the poorest spectacle that was ever foisted upon the American public, because the close mass plays which make it dangerous also make it next to impossible to see what is going one. The problem has always been to make such rules as will keep the play more open, to make the game more intelligible to the spectators and safer for the players, without eliminating the chance for "teamwork" which alone makes the game worth playing at all. But more important than any revision of the rules of play, is a revision or revolution in the estimate placed upon athletics in the colleges. It is taken too seriously. Victory is given a wholly fictitious value. The desire to win is so great that the temptation to win unfairly becomes overwhelming. College athletics at the present time are not, on the whole, a moral discipline. Instead of the athletic field being the training place of the manly virtues, as it should be, the colleges think they are doing well if, by the application of motives and ideals from other sources, they can keep athletics honest and clean.

The "Marseillaise" in London.

That the "Marseillaise" was sung in London by a great crowd of women suffering from hunger is significant. Britain is now feeling the effects of her policy of holding up the flag abroad for the sake of honor, rather than making provision for a happy people at home. From an average of about 90,000 paupers in London alone there is now apparently a still larger number out of work. Premier Balfour is not equal to the occasion. He is too much afraid of anything that savors of socialism to deal with other problems than "philosophic doubt" and "little wars."

"The Basis of Union."

Under the above title "The Outlook" of October 28 contains an editorial which begins as follows:

> "A momentous question is thrust this fall upon the Protestant churches of this country. It is this: What do the churches regard as the test of discipleship—the test by which a church may show itself to be a Christian church? What is it by which they are willing to be judged?
> "Some thirty denominations, including the largest Protestant bodies of America, will meet in New York city in November for conference upon federation. They are to consider, seriously we hope, the feasibility of concerted action in withstanding wrong and promoting right. If any permanent organization is effected, the delegates must decide on what basis churches will be admitted to it. They can be confronted with no more fundamental question than this."

There are two questions which it seems to us our contemporary blends into one. What "union" is referred to when it speaks of "the basis of union"? The "momentous question" which "The Outlook" thinks is thrust upon the Protestant churches by the meeting of their representatives in New York is: "What do the churches regard as the test of discipleship—the test by which a church may show itself to be a Christian church?" We venture the prediction that the Inter-Church Conference at New York will not undertake to answer this "momentous question." In the first place, the men who meet there will have no authority to act upon such a question; and in the second place, it is not a question upon which agreement could be reached except by dealing in glittering generalities. We could all agree, of course, that that is a Christian church which is founded upon faith in Christ, which is animated by Christ's Spirit, and which is doing Christ's work in the world. The individual members of such church would be those who have entered into personal relation with Christ through faith in and obedience to him. But when we descend from these general principles to deal with the particular conditions to be required of persons in order to their discipleship and entrance into the church, there would be differences of opinion. That is a question we do not think it would be possible to settle in a conference like that which is soon to convene in New York.

There is another question, however, which "The Outlook" hopes will be considered, and which we think would be entirely appropriate for consideration, namely, "The feasibility of concerted action in withstanding wrong and promoting right." That is indeed an important question, but it is not so "momentous" a question as the one which deals with conditions of discipleship and of fellowship. It is entirely proper for the Christian people who are to meet in New York this month to decide on what basis they will co-operate in all matters of common interest for the furtherance of the kingdom of God. That is a question of expediency with which they would have a perfect right to deal, although their action, even on this question, would have no authority to bind the churches beyond the moral influence of the body taking such action. That would certainly be true of those bodies having the congregational polity.

The other question is one which involves faith and conscience, and is not to be settled by public discussions and platforms of agreement. It is a matter (1) of personal loyalty to Jesus Christ, and (2) of a common understanding of what he requires of men in order to discipleship and membership in his body, which is the church. This is Christion union in its New Testament meaning—a union with Christ, which carries with it union with each other. This is coming, and such meetings as the one contemplated will no doubt hasten its coming, but it can not be accomplished except by spiritual growth and progress in the knowledge of Christ's teaching and will.

It seems to us important to keep this distinction between church federation, or co-operation, "in withstanding wrong and promoting right," as far as the churches may agree in what is wrong and what is right, which is a very long ways now, and the union for which Jesus prayed, in which all our denominational divisions and party lines are to give way to "the unity of the Spirit," and there shall be one body, one Spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and one God and Father of all who is above all and in all. It is because we believe that such federation, even though an imperfect union, may accomplish great good, both in pushing forward moral reforms and in common evangelistic work, that we have given it our cordial approval. The first and most imperative duty now before our American Protestantism is to put to some practical use, and furnish some convincing proof of, the unity we already possess, before we can expect the Lord to give us a fuller measure of unity. This is God's law of spiritual development, and neither individuals nor aggregations of individuals are exempt from its operation.

A Call to Business Men.

We read and talk much about men being called to the ministry of the Word, meaning thereby the public preaching of the gospel. But we are inclined to forget that there is a universal ministry from which no follower of Jesus Christ is exempt. Just now God is calling our business men to a ministry that is most important to the successful ongoing of our work as religious reformers. We have reached a point in our history when we must go forward or backward—forward if we can "make good" our promises as restorers of New Testament Christianity; backward, if these promises fail to materialize in tangible results. We have succeeded fairly well—better, indeed, than most of our religious neighbors—in the work of evangelization; but evangelization is only an introductory work, the value of which depends upon its being followed up by the processes of education, spiritual growth and aggressive Christian service.

The work of evangelism among us has been done with but little expense to our business men. It has been done largely by the sacrifices of earnest men who held the Cause they loved in higher esteem than riches or worldly honor. But to do the work that lies before us now requires the co-operation of our business men—our men of affairs and of means. We must have an educated ministry. We must have an educated membership. We must have better endowed colleges, equipped to do first-class work in educational lines. We must make more liberal provisions for our aged and dependent ministers and for the homeless and the fatherless. We must build church-houses in our cities worthy of the Cause we represent and we must assist the weaker churches on the frontier to build houses that will meet their needs. We must vastly increase the treasuries of our Home and Foreign Missionary Societies that they may send out armies of missionaries to extend the kingdom of God.

All this requires means. God has given us the means. It only needs to be consecrated to these purposes. It is not a question of ability. It is only a question of recognizing our responsibility to give an account to God for the right use of the means he has placed at our disposal. It is to this ministry that God is calling our business men today. This call is as clear and unmistakable as any man's call to the public preaching of the Word. If our business men do not hear the call of God, it is because His voice is drowned in the rush and tumult of business and of money-making. Any man of wealth among us today who will stop long enough to listen to the voice of God, speaking through his conscience, will hear the call to enlarged liberality and a more active personal participation in the work of God in the world.

We are approaching the close of the first century of this reformation. It has been deemed wise by our brotherhood in Convention assembled to mark that event by such liberal thank-offerings as would give new power and wider usefulness to all our public enterprises. A committee has been appointed to direct this work. It is about to place in the field a man of recognized ability and integrity to canvass the brotherhood for centennial offerings in the form of special gifts and bequests for the benefit of our colleges, our missionary societies, and our benevolent work. The committee has issued an appeal to the business men of the brotherhood, which we publish elsewhere, in which they solicit the co-operation of every man in our ranks in making our centennial celebration worthy of the Cause we represent. May we not hope that this appeal will not go unheeded by any business men who read it?

In the past too much of the burden of care, responsibility, and sacrifice, has come upon the preachers and a few liberal business men. The time has now come when, if we are to do anything worthy of a religious movement as numerically strong as we have become, we must call our reserve force into action. Our business men must enter the ministry, not as public preachers of the gospel, but as ministering to the needs of the world through our organized activities, as already indicated. If by the time of our centennial celebration in 1909 we have succeeded, even reasonably well, in mobilizing our forces by securing the active co-operation of our business men, in making large gifts, in attending our conventions, and in actively participating in all the work of the church, we will have accomplished a most important work. We will then be in a condition to enter upon the second century of our history with the prospect of accomplishing much vaster things for the glory of God and the good of man.

These two things will receive much attention from THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during the next four years, and indeed, until they shall have been accomplished, namely: the deepening of the spiritual life of our churches, and the enlistment of our business men in active participation in the work of the church, both local and general. If we can not secure the co-operation of our business men our movement fails for lack of support, and rightly fails, because any religious movement that does not touch the life of its members deep enough and profoundly enough to influence their giving and their active service, has failed at a most vital point. We are on trial, therefore, before the world. God is calling our business men into action. Will they hear his voice?

"Thoughts of Thirty Years."*

A thirty years' pastorate in the capital of the nation is an achievement that deserves a monument. The Christian Endeavor Society of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church of Washington, whose pastor, Frederick D. Power, has just celebrated his thirtieth anniversary, has erected a monument to celebrate the event in the form of a handsome volume bearing the above title. It is composed of extracts from the sermons and writings of the pastor during these three decades. It is therefore a monument composed of thoughts; of ideas which have in them a perennial power.

It is very evident that no man could have held the position which the author of the "thoughts" in this volume has occupied for thirty years, in the capital city of the country, and met all the demands which have been made upon him to the satisfaction of all, without possessing intellectual and spiritual resources of an extraordinary character. The thoughts recorded in this volume will help the general reader to understand the secret of his long and successful pastorate. Perhaps no man among us combines, in a more happy degree, those qualities of mind and heart which fit one for wide usefulness as a pastor and minister of the Word.

An incident is related in the book which throws light on his relations with his fellow preachers in that city: "The first gathering of ministers I entered after I went to Washington," he says, "received me cordially, but one who knew me said, 'Here comes Brother Power; he is the only Christian in town.' Oh, no, Doctor!" I answered, "you are a Presbyterian Christian, and my brother here is a Baptist Christian, and Dr. Blank is a Methodist Christian, while I am content to be simply a Christian. That is all there is to it!"

The book has an introduction by President Francis E. Clark, of the Christian Endeavor Union. Its short, crisp paragraphs make it very readable. It discusses a variety of topics, contains bits of foreign travel, and descriptions of men and places whom he met abroad. The discussion of "Missions," "Christian Union," with sketches of Pendleton and Garfield, some verses, etc., all afford sufficient variety not to weary one with any one topic. The Christian Endeavor Union has gotten the book up in very fine style, and we are sure that many of our readers who peruse, weekly, the articles "As Seen From the Dome," will be glad to read this book, and we trust that many of them will do it.

Notes and Comments.

In an article in "The Morning Star" (Free Baptist) by Rev. Geo. H. Ball, entitled "Two New Departures," in which the venerable writer speaks of the union evangelistic services that are now being held, he says:

> "The sharp antagonism between the Disciples and other Christian bodies has happily passed away. On the part of the Disciples the period of attack is over, and that of co-operation has come. On the part of others, the period of fear, jealousy and resentment has passed, and that of candid appreciation of the fresh power in the "plea" for primitive gospel methods, and "restoration of gospel names and usages has come." A great and happy change on both sides of the long continued controversy has evolved a condition of fellowship, confidence and co-operation."

This statement, of course, has exceptions, but no doubt it expresses the general truth as to the present situation. Most of the opposition which the Disciples have encountered has resulted from a misconception of their position and aim. But the chief factor in bringing about this better state of feeling is a genuine growth in Christian knowledge and character, in which all religious bodies have participated.

Referring to the effects of this combination and co-operation of forces, Dr. Ball says:

> "The Disciples have magnified the idea of obedience, and criticise the emotional side of religion; others have magnified the emotional and distrusted the reason and the value of deliberate choice. Both extremes have been modified, greatly to the profit of the Christian church as a whole. The fickleness and extravagances of the emotional life have been succeeded by stability and strength, by discounting feeling and magnifying reason, intelligent conviction and deliberate choice; and cold, business-like reasoning has been improved by a healthy exercise of feeling and proper valuation of emotion. The combination works improvement in Christian experience, Christian joy, Christian enthusiasm, stability, broadness of thought, freedom from prejudice and jealousy, and gain in magnanimity, patience and strength."

In further discussing the subject Dr. Ball remarks that "results plainly prove that the Disciples possess unusual evangelistic power, which the other denominations seriously lack." This, he rightly thinks, might well be supplemented with what some of the other religious bodies have to give, and he thinks the result would be a mutual benefit. There is nothing that will make a severer test of evangelistic methods than these union evangelistic meetings where they are bound to come into comparison and contrast, and we have no doubt that mutual advantage to all participating will result from such united efforts.

We heard recently a noted evangelist preach a sermon on the question as to how far honesty of conviction will excuse a man in his conduct. The evangelist used several illustrations, which, if taken without modification, would settle the question forever that honest ignorance can have no influence in the final decision of the great judge upon those who have made mistakes in this life. If a man thinks he is taking quinine when he is really taking arsenic he will die, even though he be as honest as it is possible to be. But can we press these physical laws into the service of a theory of the moral government of God which makes no allowance for honest ignorance? This evangelist used the case of the apostle Paul as fitly illustrating the point he was making. But Paul himself settles the question against the evangelist.

Although Paul was a persecutor, he "obtained mercy, because he did it ignorantly, through unbelief." The apostle's conduct was not right, else he would have received commendation instead of "mercy"; but it is equally evident that his ignorance was the reason for his obtaining mercy, though he was persecuting the church of God. Saul was conscientious all the time he was a persecutor. His case seems to make it clear that a man may be conscientious and yet be doing wrong; but this conscientiousness, if he is doing wrong ignorantly, will be counted to his credit in determining his final character. Let us be careful not to confound the laws of nature with the laws of moral government. One may be used to illustrate the other, but they do not always run parallel, and this fact should not be overlooked. Still it is true that a man is not only responsible for the light he has, but for that which he may have. If Saul had refused the light which shone about him and the message which was delivered to him, he could have had no claim to the divine compassion. Nevertheless it must constantly be borne in mind that the gospel is a dispensation of grace, not of law, and that Christianity looks at the intention and pupose of the heart more than upon outward acts. This is the fact which the evangelist seemed to overlook, in his illustrations.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Of course all the readers of the "Easy Chair" believe in prayer: but how much do we pray? Do we allow the pressure of business, of domestic cares, of studies, of social intercourse, to deprive us of the time for prayer? We fear that is the case with far too many of us. The poet was right when he said,

> "Prayer is the Christian's vital breath—
> The Christian's native air."

Can a man live physically without breathing? No more can one live the spiritual life without prayer. And as we delight to breathe the pure air and feel its invigorating influence as it enters our lungs and purifies the blood, so the Christian learns to delight in prayer, in which he breathes the atmosphere of heaven and feels its purifying influence upon his mind and heart. It is not simply the privilege of making special petitions, which is in itself very precious, but it is God himself which the soul craves.

> "As the hart panteth after the water brooks,
> So panteth my soul after thee, O God!"

How we wrong our souls, then, when we allow the world and its carking cares and pursuits to come between us and God! Other things being equal, that Christian will be best prepared for temptation, trial, and duty, strongest in faith, hope, and love; purest in heart and happiest in life, who spends most time in prayer.

To whom ought we to pray? The question may seem odd and unnecessary. And yet it is being raised by Christian people. It is being asked, "May we pray to Christ?" "Is it not wrong to pray to the Holy Spirit?" One whole department of our New Hymnal, "Gloria in Excelsis," has been criticised because of its songs in relation to the Holy Spirit. It is thought to be wrong to sing such songs as

> "Come, Holy Spirit, calm my mind
> And fit me to approach my God," or, again,

> "Spirit Divine, attend our pray'rs
> And make our hearts thy home."

Why so? Do we not pray to the Holy Spirit when we pray to God? Do we not pray to the Son when we pray to God? Is not God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit? We are not to think of these as three separate beings, each one jealous of his particular sovereignty, and the boundary lines of his prerogatives! That would be to think of God after the manner of men, and to think of Him unworthily. There is but one God, revealed as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and wherever the Spirit is there God the Father is, and wherever the Son is there is the Father, and there also is the Holy Spirit. The same theory on which these hymns are objected to as prayers addressed to the Holy Spirit, would rule out all those hymns addressed to Jesus Christ, unless, indeed, the objectors would attach a degree of divinity to Christ which they do not attach to the Holy Spirit. So we would have to cut out such hymns as "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me," "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me," and a host of others.

But how it would impoverish our hymnology to cut out all those hymns which breathe a prayer to Jesus Christ, and to the Holy Spirit!

But, thanks be unto God, He does not compress the gratitude, praise, and devout aspirations of his children, into hard and fast lines of formal expression! As the little child is allowed to prattle out its love and its wants to father or mother in any form of words which its loving heart prompts, so our heavenly Father is delighted with the praises and petitions of his frail children on the earth, whether they be addressed to Father, Son, or Holy Spirit, if only they come from the heart and are breathed in reverence and filial love. There is propriety, no doubt, in the ordinary form of adressing our petitions to God, the Father, in the name of the Son, through the help of the Divine Spirit. But we must not attempt to hold poets and poetic expressions, and the devout outgoings of the heart, to theological rules. We may rest assured, too, that God delights far more in the freedom of the Spirit as it is manifested in our Christian hymnology, than he would be with any formal phrases made with a view to conform to certain set rules and regulations. So we shall be free to sing,

> "Spirit of God, descend upon my heart;
> Wean it from earth, thro' all its pulses move;
> Stoop to my weakness, mighty as thou art,
> Make me love Thee, as I ought to love."

For unto Thee, O God—Father, Son and Holy Spirit—are due from the hearts of thy redeemed children, love, gratitude, and everlasting praise, now and forever! Amen.

We have already spoken in this department of the use of the hymnal as a devotional book, and the reading of hymns, even where we can not sing them, as a means of spiritual culture. Who of us has not felt, at times, the need of some more worthy vehicle of praise than any poor words which we could devise? We have felt the currents of our soul flow back on themselves for want of some channel through which they could flow out in thanksgiving or praise. Through all the centuries past men who loved and reverenced God have been seeking out forms of expression by which the soul may utter its deepest feeling and its loftiest thought to God. We have a rich treasury in such forms of expression in the Psalms, with which every devout soul ought to be familiar; and then we have those sacred hymns, many of which for centuries have served as vehicles for the soul's affections to rise heavenward. To read or sing these hymns thoughtfully and make their sentiments our own, is to enter into communion and fellowship with a vast company of redeemed spirits in heaven and on earth. But, more than that, to enter into the spirit of these devout hymns is to enter into communion with God and to feel the touch of the Infinite. We regret that the singing of the hymns in family worship, and around the fireside, has gone so largely out of fashion. An hour, or half-hour, spent in singing in any home always brings a benediction upon the family, and drives away those feelings of envy, and strife, and worldliness which are the enemies of the home. We plead for the use of the hymnal in our family worship and in our private devotions as a means of enlarging our vocabulary of praise and of promoting spiritual culture.

There is nothing like a banquet table to draw the brethren together and to draw out their best thoughts. If you have a problem in your city which requires the united wisdom and co-operation of the brethern, prepare a banquet and invite the brethren to come around a common table. It need not be an expensive feast, but there is an attractiveness about it that will bring the people together and promote good feeling and fellowship, and, when wisely guided by a good leader, the brethren will tell their best jokes, divulge their best thoughts, and commit themseves to any worthy enterprise. Politicians and promoters of business schemes have long known the value of the banquet table in carrying out their purposes. In later years, however, church people have caught on to the idea, and, cutting out the improper accessories, have used it with telling effect in promoting religious enterprises. Christianity is preeminenty a social religion and naturally tends to draw believers together. The agape, or love-feast, of the primitive church has been allowed to fall into disuse, and the church has no doubt suffered in consequence. Let it be restored and adapted to modern conditions and needs, and it will serve a most useful purpose in promoting unity of feeling and action in behalf of all worthy enterprises.

That was a veritabe love-feast which the preachers of St. Louis enjoyed last Monday when they were guests of the Christian Publishing Company at luncheon. We never felt more proud of our St. Louis ministers, and perhaps never had quite so large a group of them together at one time. It developed the fact, not simply of a formal but of a very deep unity of feeling and purpose on the part of our St. Louis ministers who seemed to be "of one mind and of one heart." The brethren will all be interested to know that our St. Louis preachers have recenty decided to conduct simultaneous evangelistic services in this city during the next year, and are already planning for the success of that great undertaking. More and more, the churches of St. Louis recognize their oneness, and that the success of one is the success of all, while the failure of one would be the failure of all. This is the spirit, we believe, that is permeating our churches in all the cities, and is controlling their relations with each other, and their operations, more and more. In this spirit we conquer. If we could have learned this lesson a half century ago our cause in the cities would have been vastly stronger than it is today. But, thank God, our churches have outgrown, and are outgrowing, the things which divide, and are being guided more and more by the spirit of unity and of brotherhood, which now, as in the beginning, is the most vital and fundamental feature of our religious movement.

Reminiscences of a Debater

After dinner the young preachers—there were many of them attending this debate, as young preachers very often did—were excited, for they had heard that those fellows were going to kill three or four of us. When we got to the church I never saw so excited a crowd of people in my life. They were standing up on the seats and were packed up in the windows. They expected war. They had heard that those doctors had said there had to be a retraction and an apology and had heard that I said I didn't believe there would be any.

Dr. Burroughs had the first speech. He went on to reply to Burgess' former speech and he came in his notes to this place where he referred to the men and women going in swimming together. He said that the rules of the debate didn't admit of it. Said he, "I pass that and if it were not for the rules of the controversy I feel bound to observe I'd take that matter in hand myself." Said he, "I don't say that all others will pass it as I propose to pass it, for they are not under the same obligations that I am," and, said I, "Pouf!" "I tell you this," said he, "if the gentleman refers to the matter again I shall bring upon him the retribution a dozen times hotter than the hell in his book." Burgess was sitting down taking notes and about the time for him to go up I wrote a note, saying, "Keep perfectly cool, but score him." He put that note into his pocket. I was sitting right where I could catch him if he were being defeated, and I was sitting right where I could catch any one passing to him. Burgess got up and went on perfectly cool in his speech until he came to that place, and said he, "My opponent proposes, if I refer to that matter again, to bring a very hasty and hot retribution. Ladies and gentlemen, I take this occasion to repeat with emphasis everything that I said. Now," said he, "come on with your hot stuff."

These old doctors were sitting there and—it was probably all arranged for—some folks came to the windows and called out one and another, calling them all out, and leaving Dr. Burroughs and me alone and he could not administer the hot stuff; he was not prepared for it. I refer to that as one of the most exciting scenes in those days of belligerency. Mr. Burgess is now dead. He was one of the bravest and truest men I ever preached with. He was a true friend, a true man, and has gone, I trust, to where we don't have any contentions and disputes.

Those spiritualists and infidels, you know, will abuse you and do anything. They are not restrained as preachers of the Gospel are usually. And that reminds me that a Methodist preacher was there by the name of L———. He was the roughest man I think I ever heard talk in a discussion. I had had a debate with him, and Burgess and I had concluded that we would not debate with him any more; the old fellow manifested such a bad spirit. The brethren wrote to old Bro. Ben Franklin, who was always ready to say something for the cause, and he was a war horse in his day. Brother Franklin agreed to go and debate with this doctor. A short time afterwards he learned that we had concluded not to debate with him, that he was not a suitable man, and he wrote to me telling me what he had heard and said, "I want you to come up and be with me; I am doing the debating." I preached at night and they would debate in the daytime. It was in the central part of Illinois where they have ears of corn "so long." It was in roasting ear time, and beans and the finest tomatoes you nearly ever saw. They had a great big tomato that was popular there at that time, called the General Grant. Well, they made their forenoon speeches, then adjourned for dinner, and we would have a basket meeting. Ben Franklin's mouth set just exactly right for taking corn off the cob. He would run an ear of corn across his mouth and it would come out cob; and he could eat tomatoes and beans in proportion. L—— was a good eater, too, but he wasn't as cool a man as Brother Franklin. Franklin was the coolest man I ever saw; he could take 'most anything. L—— got up that afternoon, so cross and full, and right straight out. I noticed old Ben's hands sort of close. Said he, "I don't allow a man to call me a liar." And I would just about as soon have a mule kick me as have old Ben strike me a fair lick. "You didn't come all the way from Cincinnati here to fight, did you?" said L——. "I did not come here to be abused and am not going to be," replied Franklin. L—— sat down at the invitation of his moderator, the Methodist preacher. Brother Franklin turned around, looked at the audience and he smiled clear from his hair down to his chin. I never was so glad to see a smile in my life. One more incident in connection with this debate and I will be through.

JOHN S. SWEENEY, AS HE IS TODAY.

CALLED BROTHER FRANKLIN A LIAR,

There was one of those little houseflies that sometimes bother preachers, and both men struck at it, and it bothered me a time or two. I knew just what was the matter when I noticed them striking that way at the end of their noses. L—— had a way of speaking like an old pump with a valve out of fix—a good deal more wind than talk. He was puffing around and—he swallowed the fly. Well, he couldn't talk, you know. He got to coughing and coughing and finally got to vomiting. Somebody got a bucket and set it there and he threw up in the bucket and he came to a layer of those big tomatoes; you know, I thought he had a hemorrhage. I was sure the man was going to die of the hemorrhage. I would have given five dollars to be out of there where I could laugh. After the speeches were over, I said to Brother Franklin, "You are a good politician. The policy is not to say a word about that fly and tomatoes and all that. Say nothing about all that. You will get sympathy for him if you go to telling that." Said he, "You are exactly right." Along towards the last of the debate, two or three days after that, infant baptism was the question. Brother Franklin had a regular knock down argument. "The practice," said he, "is not once mentioned in any shape or form in any revelation of God to man. In no form is it mentioned. Well," said he, "if there had been, my friend would have found it and would have been reading it to you. Here," said he, "is my friend, scholarly, posted up in the history of this whole controversy, sweeping around here and a-sweating and a-puking, but if it had been mentioned he would have said it." We had to fight for every inch of ground and we had to contend with some unscrupulous men and some very rough and worldly men, and if it had not been that we had men who could do that we woudn't have had the churches over the country that we have now. There wasn't a man in Whitehall that could entertain me when I went there, and we went to a hotel.

About the warmest time and the nearest to a fight was a debate with an infidel—one of the same kind Burgess debated with. He was firing away at Christian custom, exaction, and all about it, and there was an old manufacturer that was one of the best payers that he had. The debate was in the opera house and this old fellow paid for half of it. Over his factory was posted the sign: "No Sabbath Here." I happened to see it, and I said, "I may have use for it." When he went on and was telling what a hindrance Christianity was to progress, I had finally to press this thought at him. "Now," said I, "give us something better. You can't maul darkness out of a room with a sledgehammer. You have to introduce light and the darkness will go. You can't drive cold out with a sledgeham-

As Seen From the Dome

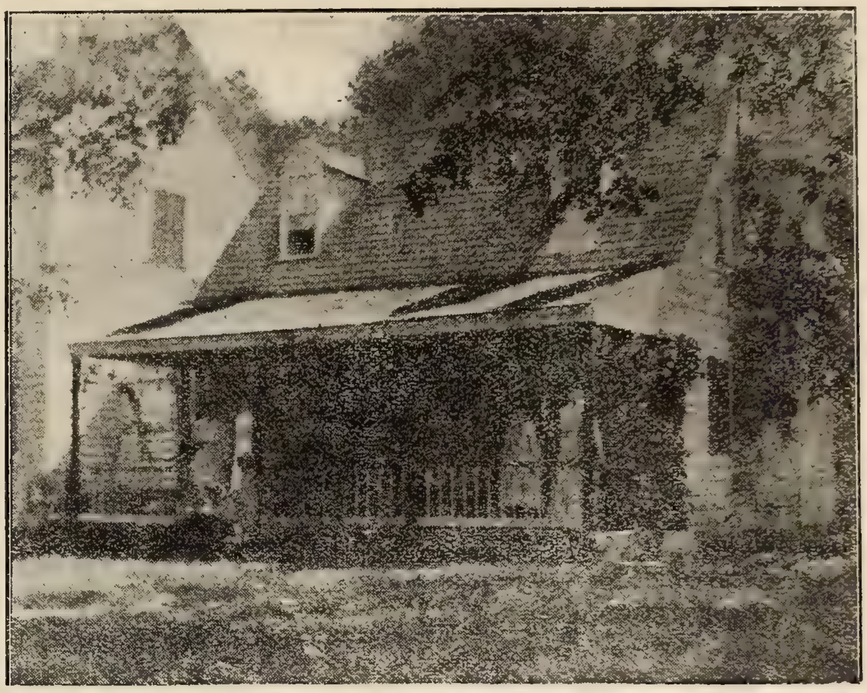
By F. D. Power

The past week has witnessed some notable occurrences in religious circles at the capital. First the presence and discussions of the Methodist bishops have been of interest, not only to the world of Methodism, but to all good people. The conferences of this board are held semi-annually. The board consists of twenty-two members. Eighteen of these are in attendance. They are big men and busy men. They preside over conferences in all parts of the world, visit churches, dedicate houses of worship, co-operate in educational work, lend support to meetings in the interest of missions and benevolence, and in a word superintend all the many and varied operations of the great religious organization which they represent. There are one hundred and thirty conferences over which these men preside, in home and foreign lands.

A number of interesting matters are under consideration. One was the preparation of a joint catechism to be used by the churches north and south, and a joint hymnal, thus bringing about better relations between the two bodies. Another thing is the case of Professor Hinckley Mitchell, of Boston University, whom the board refused to confirm last spring on account of certain heretical sentiments. The professor has been filling the chair of Hebrew and Biblical exegesis for twenty years. Complaints were made of his heterodoxy, and the question was referred to the board of bishops. The charges were made by one of the faculty and by students. There has been much dissatisfaction and a close vote has retained the teacher when his case has before come up for consideration. It is claimed he discredits all Bible history previous to the time of Abraham. The case is ended, the bishops refusing, by a close vote, to sustain him. Bishop McCabe was the most active in opposing the professor. These leaders of a great religious people have no use for a man in their theological schools who lacks faith in the prophets, denies the fall, questions the truth and efficacy of the atonement, and the beginnings of the race as revealed in the Scriptures; and these are some of the things charged against Professor Mitchell, who, by the way, is not a member of the Methodist brotherhood.

The bishops could not altogether avoid politics. Ohio is wrestling with Herrick and Maryland with the Poe amendment, and the brethren are quoted as against both. Bishop Hamilton, of San Francisco, said some sensational things. The future American, he thinks, will be a composite type of all the races of the earth. This is God's solution of the race problem. "Over in Maryland some cheap politicians are trying to solve the race problem—so called—by thrusting its difficulties out of their path. They are trying to deprive men of their God-given rights. What does God care for the color of a man's face? You who listen to me tonight, many of you very proud, no doubt, of what you are pleased to call your Anglo-Saxon blood, will be the grandparents, or at any rate, great-grandparents of men and women partly Chinese and Japanese and Russian Jew and Southern European and dusky African." The bishop says he did not include the last named, but he did say the typical American is to be born of the amalgamation of all the races that now inhabit this continent, highest as well as lowest, most honored as well as most despised. We shall wait the fulfillment of the prophecy with interest.

Another matter of great importance to us locally was the dedication of the new Y. M. C. A. building, the finest today in the world. This is saying much, when we remember there are 575 such buildings, valued at over $20,000,000. The total value of the property of the association is $530,000 and the equipment is equal to the care of 5,000 men and boys. To those of us who have for thirty years past been associated with the work at the capital, this is a wonderful growth. The association was organized in 1852, it being the sixth to be organized in this country. It had many ups and downs and sometimes was practically dead. When I came to the city in 1875 a handful, mostly men that were not young any longer, met in Lincoln Hall, D and 9th streets, and Don Piatt and other funny men on the press amused themselves at our expense. After it got upon its feet under James E. Pugh, on New York avenue, its building was twice destroyed by fire. Then in 1898 came a canvass for a new building and the people rallied to its support with $40,000. At the "jubilee banquet," January, 1903, the present building movement was launched, and the full amount of subscription for building and furnishing, $350,000, was secured by May, 1905. The new building is the most complete and beautiful Association Temple yet erected. Its architecture is Italian Renaissance with classical details. It has two gymnasiums, baths, swimming pools, bowling alleys, educational rooms, sleeping apartments, cafe, club rooms, offices, halls, etc., etc., and can give to thousands of young men at once all the benefits that belong to such institutions. The principal speakers on this happy occasion were Bishop McDowell, of the Methodist church and Dr. Henry Van Dyke, of Princeton. The addresses were of a very high order.



WHERE F. D. POWER WAS BORN.

An interesting feature of the festivities was a cablegram from London from Sir George Williams, the Y. M. C. A. founder, still living, and young at four score, who said: "Heartiest congratulations. Greatly rejoice with you all upon dedication of your splendid building. May divine blessing increasing rest upon and prosper you." Altogether October 30 was a great day with us in Washington.

Something of special interest to our own Zion was a celebration, October 27, of the Vermont Avenue pastor's thirtieth anniversary of service. Perhaps a thousand gathered, representatives of our own and of other churches, preachers and "laity," to offer their kind congratulations to the preacher and his wife. There was a program. The pastor had requested that such subjects be assigned as the Higher Criticism, the Peace Compact Between Japan and Russia, the Doctrine of the Trinity, Total Hereditary Depravity, Government Supervision of Trusts, etc., etc., but the committee of arrangments would not take the advice. F. M. Bradley, one of the leaders of the church in 1875 presided; C. M. Shelton represented "the Old Guard" with "Memories of Thirty Years"; Andrew Wilson one of our young elders, spoke of "these later days"; Walter F. Smith had something to say about "The Progress of the Disciples in Washington"; Peter Ainslie came from Baltimore to discourse on "His Larger Work"; my nearest neighbor of the Lutheran Memorial Church who has been my steadfast friend in the three decades, and a pastor in Washington for over half a century, spoke of "Our Fellowship;" and James M. Pickens, another of our young elders, presented a souvenir volume, "Thoughts of Thirty Years." It was all very gracious and kind, but somewhat embarrassing. A score of veterans of 1875 stood in the receiving line.

The volume, "Thoughts of Thirty Years," is a very beautiful book of 200 pages specially prepared for this event by my Christian Endeavor Society. A committee of five—Mr. J. M. Pickens, Mrs. Ethel Dewey, Mr. Rex E. Kinsell, Mr. J. Wilbur Starrett and Miss Alice Van Arsdale—did the work. It is a collection of extracts from the

The Romance of Religious Realism

By William Durban

With real astonishment and no small sensation of pleasure many Christian people must be just now perusing the pages of one of the most marvelous records of religious enterprise ever issued. I myself feel that it is about the most remarkable account of Christian enterprise registered in the history of the Christian Church since the missionary tours of the apostle Paul were registered in the Book of the Acts. I refer to the newly published one hundred and first report of the British and Foreign Bible Society. This phenomenal volume is monumental of the work of a whole century of Bible distribution. I am well aware that the American Bible Society is a grand institution, doing a noble and an increasing work. But there is no institution on earth that can, for magnitude of operations in the religious sphere, compare with the organization which has its headquarters in that splendid block of massive granite building known as the Bible House, Queen Victoria street, London. This society is the parent of all other Bible societies.

CONSECRATED ARITHMETIC.

The figures of this voluminous record are immense. In the whole course of its existence the society has sent forth a total of 192,537,746 copies of the Holy Scripture, complete or in parts. During the past year the number of Bibles, New Testaments and portions of Scripture amounted to 5,857,645. Last year no fewer than 950 colporteurs were employed to carry the Scriptures from door to door in nearly every country on earth, at a cost of £45,000. Says the report: "If your eyes could trace these humble Bible sellers up and down the world we would see them busy among Indian rice fields and along Chinese waterways, across the Canadian prairies and through the Australian bush, and beside the great African lakes; we should watch them sheltering in native huts in the snow defiles of the Andes and threading their path under trails of purple orchids through the forests of Brazil."

THRILLING ADVENTURES OF COLPORTAGE ENDEAVORERS.

How often have we heard it asserted that truth is stranger than fiction! This extraordinary record truly makes it appear so. Nothing that I can remember in the whole range of imaginative literature is more sensational than the simple facts cited in the current records of the doings of the Bible men employed as colporteurs by this society. This band of nearly a thousand skirmishers against the works of cosmopolitan darkness, unbelief, superstition, idolatry and savagery are night and day going through ordeals and trials of which we, who quietly abide in comfort at home, have simply not any notion at all. They tell their varied stories with the utmost simplicity. Not one of them appears to think himself anything at all of a hero. Most of these recitals are given as personal narratives in a supplementary volume, entitled, "Seed Corn for the World." It is as wonderful as the main volume, and has a fascination all its own. But both the books abound in thrilling recitals. It should be noted that these colporteurs last year sold over two and a quarter millions of copies of the Scriptures. Colportage has extended beyond all precedent. Out of every dozen volumes sent out nearly five are sold by this agency. That fact alone is surely abundantly significant. Some people may fancy that the Bible Society simply scatters wagon loads of Bibles gratuitously. That idea is a fallacy. The truth is that the Bible is in growing demand throughout the earth.

COLPORTEURS AT WORK.

Petrenko, a Siberian colporteur, writes: "Between the villages of Berezovka and Komarichi the driver and I nearly perished in a bad blizzard. We were on the steppes some twenty versts from our destination. Thank heaven, we managed to get through; our horses were good ones." Sabrikin, also working in Siberia, tells how one of the Russian soldiers on his way to the front saw a New Testament being offered to some one else. He pulled out his purse and counted out the money, and then seizing the book in his hands reverently kissed it.

How beautifully this kind of work produces effect may be gathered from the following incident: A missionary from Penang recently paid a visit to one of his village stations, twenty miles distant. "But," said the missionary, "you are an utter stranger to me and we can not admit you till we have tested you. Besides, what do you know of the Christian faith?" "Well," replied the man, "I know a little. Some months ago two Europeans (one of whom was the Bible Society's sub-agent) came here selling little books, and I purchased one of them—a Gospel and the Book of Genesis. Since then, I have been reading them both, and I have come to the conclusion that this is the true religion. Now try me for twelve months, and if I am unfaithful, turn me out of the church."

THE SILENT MISSIONARY.

Nowhere does the seed of God's kingdom show greater vitality than in India, where last year the Bible Society circulated nearly three-quarters of a million copies of the Scriptures. In a certain village, after preaching for a time about the need of worshipping the one true God and no other, a missionary was explaining how Christ is the Savior of men, when one of the villagers spoke. "Sir," said he, "you need not go on with this explanation. None of us worship idols; we only believe in the one true God and in Jesus Christ." The missionary asked this man if he spoke for himself only, or for all the village. The men who were sitting by exclaimed with one voice, "We all believe on Jesus Christ." On inquiring how this had come about the missionary found that one man who could read Urdu had been given a New Testament in that language some years before and that he had taught all the village to believe on Christ. He said that he had never received any teaching, but that from reading the gospels alone he had come to believe.

THE VOCATION OF THE BOOK.

The Bible is thus silently playing a wondrous part in the elevation of humanity, and it is well that we should have such records of indications of the results. It penetrates where the missionary can not gain access. For instance, the other day I was spending several hours in conversation with Miss Annie R. Taylor, one of the two "Heroines of Tibet," Dr. Susie Rijnhart being the other. Miss Taylor said much of her habit of distributing Gospels in the Chumbi Valley, and she seemed much pleased to tell how, when the late British expedition entered

OLD FASHIONED FARE

Hot Biscuits, Griddle-Cakes, Pies and Puddings.

The food that made the fathers strong is sometimes unfit for the children under the new conditions that our changing civilization is constantly bringing in. One of Mr. Bryan's neighbors in the great state of Nebraska writes:

"I was raised in the South, where hot biscuits, griddle-cakes, pies and puddings are eaten at almost every meal, and by the time I located in Nebraska I found myself a sufferer from indigestion and its attendant ills—distress and pains after meals, an almost constant headache, dull, heavy sleepiness by day and sleeplessness at night, loss of flesh, impaired memory, etc., etc.

"I was rapidly becoming incapacitated for business, when a valued friend suggested a change in my diet, the abandonment of heavy rich stuff and the use of Grape-Nuts food. I followed the good advice and shall always be thankful that I did so.

"Whatever may be the experienc of others, the beneficial effects of the change were apparent in my case almost immediately. My stomach, which had rejected other food for so long, took to Grape-Nuts most kindly; in a day or two my headache was gone, I began to sleep healthfully and before a week was out the scales showed that my lost weight was coming back. My memory was restored with the renewed vigor that I felt in body and mind. For three years now Grape-Nuts food has kept me in prime condition, and I propose it shall for the rest of my days.

"And by the way, my 2½-year-old baby is as fond of Grape-Nuts as I am, always insists on having it. It keeps her as healthy and hearty as they make them." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. There's a reason.

mer; you have to introduce heat. You introduce something better than Christianity, and it will go. You won't have all this trouble." He replied we had to clear away the ground, remove prejudices of the people, and, when all that was done, the infidels were going to show you what is to come—show that they have something better. "Well," said I, "go somewhere where you don't have these prejudices." I said,

"PACK UP AND GO TO THE FIJI ISLANDS."

If they don't eat you up before you get started you won't have any Sabbath there; you won't have any factory." Well, I was pressing along this line and the old fellow got mad. He said if I referred to the sign over his factory again he would take me down a button-hole or two. We had it arranged. E. B. Cake was the preacher there. I told Brother Cake and another brother to go out and make the little necessary preparation. It was in the opera house and there was a door under the stage. The house was crowded and a policeman was in the doorway. I got to bearing a little harder than before and this old fellow got up in the back of the hall and said, "You are making a personal talk to me and I shall hold you personally responsible for it, and if you repeat it I will take you down for it." I said, "I repeat it with emphasis." Of course, the women got frightened and jumped up in the aisles and some got to crying out. The old fellow finally got down to the steps that came up on the stage and the door went under and the policeman tapped him on the shoulder and took him back there and that was the last of him.

What results followed these debates? As a rule, good results followed. If we had a man who was capable and manifested the right spirit in his debate, good generally followed. Our cause was built up. Just take one instance: I went down to Texas about thirty-five or forty years ago and was to debate with Dr. Ditzler, the celebrated Methodist, a man who always tried to act as a gentleman, and at the close of the debate I stayed a day or two. We had a very small congregation meeting in a little house. I could not stay then, but I went back there after that and I baptized 140. We built up a strong church there. Speaking of Dr. Ditzler, there is one thing I will tell you at the risk of being a little tedious. We had a debate in Carlisle, Ky. We had a debate in daytime and preaching at night; two sessions in daytime. And there was an intervening Sunday. There had been some eighteen or twenty confessions at the night preaching and it was announced on Saturday evening that there would be preaching in the Christian church and baptizing in the creek at the place designated, in the afternoon, or right after preaching if possible. The Methodist preacher came up and announced that there would be preaching and baptism in the Methodist church at 11 o'clock. They had had a very small hearing and we had heard of no one to be baptized, and there was a little anxiety about it, but we could not find out. There was a big fellow by the name of Secrest who said he was a "Campbellite," but he wasn't a "Christian." He came to me and said, "I am going down there to see who is baptized." I stopped with an old Brother Piper. Secrest went down there and found they had hunted up a little boy that was six or seven years old, whose mother had been a member of the Christian church, or Baptist, I don't now recall which, and had died recently, and his old grandfather was a great Methodist, and they had concluded to baptize this boy so as to have a baptizing. Dr. Ditzler was to do the baptizing. This old brother was the godfather and called the boy up and had him there while Dr. Ditzler read the ritual. Ditzler, coming to the time, prayed and the boy cut out right down the aisle

WITH THE OLD GRANDFATHER AFTER HIM.

This man who had gone to see it, Secrest, got up as if to look after the boy and cut the old fellow off, and the boy got out, crying. When I got home I could see that something had gone wrong by looking at the negroes in the dining room. They knew that they had tried to baptize this boy, and that he was crying as he came out, but got away from them. Well, I just waited, I would not take reports. After dinner Secrest came around. He came in, and I said, "Don't tell me anything that you are not willing to swear to." He said he would swear to everything he said. He went on to tell me the story just as it occurred. "Now," said I, "you are going to be here at the debate and are going to swear to that, for I want you to." On Monday we commenced debating again and we fixed on the "Design of Baptism." This is where Ditzler got in his big arguments against baptism. Well, in replying to it, I said I believed in water in its place. I went on and quoted a good many passages of Scripture about baptism and water, etc. "That," said I, "is what I believe. But," said I, "you never catch me chasing boys around town trying to baptize them by force, much as I believe in water." The people laughed. It got out all around. I had to wait about five minutes to go on with my talk and when I did I told him that when we go out on the prairies to hunt we don't wait for the bird to alight. "We take him on the wing," I said, "and I advise you to have some kind of hydraulic gun to take them down when they get on the wing. If you had had one you would have got that boy." After that, when he would go to do anything bad I would tell him I would tell the Carlisle story just certain, and he would stop.

Lhasa many of these were found there. The missionary must not go to the Forbidden City, but the Word of God had found abundant entrance. When the country is fully opened for evangelization it will be found that the Bible has been the pioneer of the missionary. Such testimonies emphatically confirm the centenary sermon on behalf of the society in Southwark Cathedral, in which Bishop Talbot declared that "the Bible Society, whether or not we can approve of all its methods, has contributed incalculably to the work of the world evangelization."

TAKES TIME

Some Years Getting There and What Happened Then.

The poison in coffee does not always work its mischief swiftly—sometimes it fastens its hold upon the victim by slow degrees that are not noticeable for a while. But once it begins, the day will surely come when the coffee drinker will be "up against it" and must have relief.

A lady writes from Cal.:

"We were great coffee drinkers in our home, using it at every meal and frequently drinking it in the evening with friends, and it was not until after the lapse of years that we began to realize that it was doing us harm.

"My symptoms were not so bad, although my health suffered in many minor ways, but my husband became afflicted with a most painful stomach trouble. He could not assimilate his food properly and everything he ate gave him great distress. We were slow to suspect the truth, but we now see that it was caused by the use of coffee.

"At last he determined to quit using coffee altogether, and like a good wife I did so, too. We worried along for a month without any hot table beverage, till one day a friend happened to say to me 'I am using Postum Food Coffee now, and feel so much better for it.' I told her that we had tried it and did not care for it, and she said it must have been because it wasn't properly prepared. So I bought a package and prepared it strictly according to directions. We were astonished and delighted at the result.

"We have been using Postum Coffee for a year, now, and I rejoice to be able to tell you that it has cured my husband of his dyspepsia. This is a statement that does not seem to have the significance it ought to have. If I could make you understand how intense his sufferings used to be, you would realize what a deliverance Postum wrought for him.

"My own health has also greatly improved and the credit for all must be given to Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle, Creek, Mich.

Spying Out the Land

By C. L. Pickett, M. D.

In accordance with instructions from the Philippine Christian Mission, in company with our evangelist, Adriano Guerro, and an interpreter, I have recently visited the Cagayan valley. The purpose of this visit was to spy out the land and determine, if possible, the advisability of locating a new mission station in this region, and if so, discover the most propitious location for the same.

Leaving home on June 21, the towns of Aparri, Linas, Lallo, Gataran, Nasiping, Alcala, Amulong, Iguig and Tuguegarao were visited. Everywhere we found the people ready and anxious to listen to the gospel. We took with us something more than one hundred Scripture portions, New Testaments and song books, and could easily have disposed of several times as many.

In one town we were able to buy one hundred Scriptures from a local agent, which were sold at once. The eagerness with which these people listen to the Word of God and seem to crave instruction in the same is, to my mind, as loud a voice calling us to come over and help them as the apostle Paul heard on that memorable occasion from Macedonia.

According to the latest statistics, the population of the province of Cagayan is 142,000, while that of Isabella, the adjoining province on the south, is 69,000. As yet there has been no Protestant missionary work undertaken in either province. All that has been done has been by the passing visits of the agents of Bible societies. It may be said that most of the people are nominally Roman Catholics. There is a goodly sprinkling, however, of the followers of Aglipay. But in either case their religious instruction is certainly very meager. In the smaller towns, it consists almost solely of a monthly or semi-monthly visit of a profligate priest, who holds a mass in Latin, performs their marriages, sprinkles their babies, and passes on. I am sorry to say that in every case where I was able to make inquiry from reliable parties I was told that the priests were living with from two or three to a dozen women, and that gambling was their common custom.

In one instance, a priest borrowed money from three different American school teachers during one evening, in order that he might continue in a game of cards, wherein he was being the loser.

There are a few friars also still remaining in the valley. At Gataran one had just visited the town a few days before our arrival to see if his services would be acceptable to the people. He was emphatically informed that they could get along very well without him and that they would be very grateful if he would pass on. And this, too, by people who are Romanists. The impression made upon an outsider is that while the people are nominally Romanists and are following the observances and rituals of the church as best they understand them, the real spiritual teachings of the Bible are unknown to them. Hence, immorality in all its shades is to be found, while lying and deceit abound everywhere.

At heart, however, the people are not bad, and there is unquestionably a consciousness of the paucity of religious instruction, and a deep, though often undefined, hungering and thirsting after something more satisfying in the way of religious knowledge and experience.

We found but one man who seemed to be openly prejudiced against anything in the way of Protestant innovation. The people everywhere are, as in the days of old, ready to hear the Word gladly.

If ever there was an opportunity for Protestant work and a pressing demand for it at once, it is here and now. Multitudes are ready on every hand to give the missionary a respectful hearing. The door is wide open and the people are accessible, teachable, hospitable. Malice, suspicion, hatred toward strangers are practically unknown to them. The field about Samaria was no riper when Jesus bade his disciples lift up their eyes and look.

Other men have labored here. The people know, in a general way, something of the teachings of the Bible. Their worship is a strange conglomeration of superstition, reverence for the saints, adoration of Mary and awe of God. They know of Jesus as a babe, and of Jesus on the cross, but Jesus Christ as a potent power in everyday life, as a Saviour of mankind and as an advocate with the Father, they know not. The vitality of the Savior's teachings and the efficacy of his blood are at once new and strange doctrines to them. Ours is preeminently the opportunity to enter in and labor, supplying what former teachers have omitted, teaching them the way of the Lord more perfectly, and breaking to them anew, as it were, the true bread of life. It is therefore our hope and prayer that the Foreign Christian Missionary Society may find it in their power to send out at no distant date a force of new workers to occupy this most needy and neglected field.

Personally, I have no hesitancy in expressing my conviction as to the advisability of sending a medical worker along with an evangelist. There is one Spanish physician, one mestizo and one American negro M. D. in the province of Cagayan. But the prices charged by all are such as to render medical service, and even medicines in many cases, out of reach of the common people. As a practical example, quinine is the medicine most generally understood by the people. It is one medicine that the government has allowed free entrance into the islands, charging no import duty in order that the price might be nearly within the reach of all if possible. Quinine tablets cost at wholesale 3-4 of a centavo each. There are now four places in the province of Cagayan where they can be purchased and the price in every instance is 5 centavo each. The selling prices of all other medicines are in the same proportion. Malted milk costs about 40 cents a bottle. The transportation charges, 5c, selling price, $1.75. As it is now, only the officials and wealthy classes are able to pay for medical attention and the outside towns and barrios receive nothing.

In talking with the "Presidente" or mayor of Alcala, a town with a population, including the surrounding barrios, of 7,000 people, he said: "When our people get seriously sick, they simply die, there is no other remedy." When I suggested the possibility of sending a medical missionary, he said: "Good! Send us one quickly. The need is very great and our people will treat him well." The suggestion met with a similar response in every village.

As regards the people of Cagayan valley, I find that it is the general opinion that fully one-half, and possibly more, are Ilocanos. The Cagayans form the bulk of the remainder, yet there are a few smaller tribes speaking different dialects, and in the foothills and mountains a goodly number of Negritoes. Ibanog and Ilocano are the two principal dialects spoken. It is estimated that three-fourths of the people understand the Ilocano language. The Cagayano learns the Ilocano, but the Ilocano does not seem to care very much about learning the dialect of the Cagayano. Intellectually and industrially, the Ilocanos are decidedly in the ascendency. The native priests are all Ilocanos. In the schools, the American teachers tell me the Ilocano children almost invariably take the lead. Four-fifths of the native teachers now at work are Ilocanos. The Ilocanos make the best house servants. They are doing nine-tenths of the work on the tobacco plantations. They are the ones that do all the work in connection with the river commerce. They have also taken charge completely of the quite extensive fishing operations about the mouth of the river. All the Americans are a unit in saying that the fate of the industries of the valley is in their hands. All of which goes to show the importance of having a missionary force in this region, to cooperate with the workers among the Ilicanos on the west coast.

As to which of the two chief centers, Tuquegarao or Aparri, is the most strategic and opportune for our immediate occupation, I have no hesitancy in recommending the latter. In the first place, we can not hope to occupy the whole valley, and therefore that which we do occupy ought to be that which is most nearly contiguous to that which is already occupied on the opposite side of the island. As the central range of mountains extends squarely to the sea on the north, and the trails over the mountains are practically impassable (only fourteen being passable), the course of travel is by sea, and therefore, the north coast is most nearly adjacent.

In the second place, the inhabitants of the coast towns are almost all Ilocanos from Ilocos Norte and Ilocos Sur, and every year there are thousands passing back and forth. All stop in Aparri for a greater or less length of time. We need a missionary here, in order to minister to our own brethren.

During my five days' stay here, a perfect stranger, as I supposed, to everybody, I met one of our brethren from Loaog and some twenty or more of my former patients. I think I am safe in saying that I met one hundred people who knew me and knew what my business was.

At all times here we have splendid audiences to hear our preaching; sometimes 400 and 500 at a time. Here, also, we found a man who had purchased a Bible some two years before our visit. He had thought to become a priest in the Independent Church, but in studying his Bible he came to the conclusion that the practices of the church were not in accordance with its teachings. He had therefore quit the church and had taken the Bible as his source of religious help. Upon hearing our preaching, he asked for baptism at once. On questioning him, I found he had a very good general idea of the teachings of the Word. The next day I had our evangelist baptize him. We therefore have already a beginning in this important commercial city. We have a man who is even now distributing literature and doing all he can for the cause. No change in printed matter will be necessary in this field.

In the third place, the most northwesterly town of the Province of Cagayan, Claveria, is the most northerly town of the island of Luzon. It is said by some to possess a very salubrious climate, and its occupation may serve us well occasionally, as a respite from the more intense summer heat of other places. Mountains 1,500 feet in height tower up immediately behind it, while the sea is at its base. Fertile rice fields are near at hand on one side, while the mountains are covered with splendid forests on the other. An inhabitant of this town voluntarily offered to secure the timber necessary for the building of our Laoag chapel and see that it was brought down to the sea ready for shipment, we paying simply the hire of the work men and the cost of the government permit. As there will be other buildings to erect in the future, within our "sphere of influence," and the problem of good building materials is not an easy one, the occupation of this region may be of value to us on this score also.

Again, many people in this town have come from the region of Banqui, where our work is already propitiously started. These have noised abroad something of the teachings of the Word and of the work of Protestant missionaries. Every man from the town whom I met while in Aparri asked: "When are you going to visit us?" It is a dream of your present workers in the Philippines and, I believe, no vague one, either, to have in the near future one unbroken line of Christian churches extending along the coast from Vigan on the south, to Buquey, the most northeasterly town of the island of Luzon, on the north.

In the fourth place, the towns along the lower Cagayan river are as easily accessible from Aparri as from Tuquegarao; those along the coast more so. While to the west of the river and along the Rio Chico, there is much virgin territory, where even the Roman Catholics have not successfully labored. The provincial supervisor told me that the distance from Aparri to Tuquegarao, by land, was about seventy miles, but that much of the road was only a trail over the hills, and some of it was all but impassable during the rainy season, because of the many little ravines and streams yet without bridges. The river route measures about ninety miles. It requires all the way from two days to two weeks to make the trip one way on the river, and two or three days to go overland on horseback. The present means of transportation are simply miserable. Accommodations en route are "nil," and as for eating and drinking, one must have infinite faith in the Almighty and an abounding confidence in the antiseptic possibilities of his alimentary apparatus.

The town of Alcala with 7,000 population, which I have placed with Aparri, is as easily accessible from Tuquegarao, and if towns farther up the river were added to the list the balance might easily be brought out in favor of the latter place. Tuquegarao has the advantage of being the capital of the province. There are more Americans there and the provincial high school is located there. On the other hand, Aparri is twice over the more important commercial center and will eventually be the terminus of the railway. Tuquegarao is on higher ground, the streets are in better condition, and the drinking water is better. On the other hand, while Aparri is low, flat and sandy, its proximity to the sea makes it much cooler. The market of Aparri is far ahead of that at Tuquegarao. The cost of living at the present time would be considerably more at the latter place. In either place a special itinerating allowance annually will be necessary on account of the cost of travel. This will be greater at Aparri than would be necessary at Tuquegarao.

Taking it all in all, it is my opinion that now is the most opportune time to extend our work in all directions possible. Religiously, as otherwise, it is a transition period throughout the islands. The change from Spanish bishops and church officials to American and Australian priests is being brought about slowly, but naturally the language and other problems make it inevitable that the new regime be slow about getting close to the people.

In many places an American priest has not yet set his foot, and many provinces have been visited only a few times. There seems to be almost as much, if not more, animosity toward these gentlemen than there is toward Protestant workers. It may not always be so. Many native priests have not yet been influenced in any way by the American hierarchy. When they are, antagonism and prejudice is invariably fostered. Everywhere church property is sadly in need of repairs. Evidences of decay are abounding. Immense convents are occupied by a single priest, his woman, and a few servants. As yet there is no evidence of efforts being made at repair. The transition from government to individual support is working havoc with buildings, and the process is likely to continue for some time. The priests are kept busy in many cases to keep up their own personal income.

Missionary work here now will, in all probability, amount to ten times what the same effort will amount to ten years hence. The younger generation which is being influenced considerably by the public schools, is already doing some thinking for itself. It is our opportunity to direct a portion, at least, of this thought to the glory of the Father's kingdom. We should therefore beseech the society for a favorable consideration of this field, and implore the sending of additional workers to occupy new territory at as early a date as possible, believing that the Lord hath much people in these parts, and that the sowing of the seed of the kingdom will bring forth immediate harvest of even more than a hundred fold.

Are You to Blame for This?

[The following letter has been sent to us by Brother Muckley, with permission to publish. It is an argument in concrete form why every church should have a hand in enlarging our Church Extension Fund. Read it and ask yourself if you are to blame for this disappointment.—Editor.]

"Lawton, Okla., October 8, 1905.

"Dear Brother Muckley—I am disappointed and sad because of the receipt of your letter stating that our application for a loan for Chattanooga has been refused for the third time. I must now be a self-confessed liar and plan to save our building from sale. I promised to have the building ready and dedicate this month. We can not dedicate until we at least have the promise of a loan. I possibly can put off matters until next month if I can know that this loan will be granted. Otherwise we must lose our building, and I have already written Brother Munroe that I will resign next month if this loan is not granted.

"I am a living link of the C. W. B. M., working under the direction of our territorial board. My field is the new country (formerly known as the Kiowa, Apache and Comanche reservation) opened to settlement four years ago. This country is larger than several eastern states, and has a population of nearly 100,000. We can point to more congregations and more church buildings in this new country than have ever been organized and erected in any other new country in twice the time and age. No one has ever made the sacrifices that I have made to plant our cause in strategic points in this new country, and if we can keep up our present rate of progress we will be the dominant religious factor in this new country. This is only the third time I have been before your board for a loan and, Brother Muckley, it does seem strange that you should pass over this loan for three successive months when the September offerings came in during that time. Please write me the exact condition of the board. Be candid with me, and if you can not assure me of the loan next month we might just as well let our building sell, and I will put in my resignation and look for other work.

"I forgot to say that during the last three months before our convention I organized three congregations, started one church building, raising the funds, located one preacher and added 101 to the membership. Yours fraternally,

"C. M. Barnes,
"Living Link Evangelist of the C. W. B. M."

Questions Concerning Personal Religious Experience.

Please answer clearly and concisely. Give age at important events.

I. CHILDHOOD TO AGE OF TWELVE.

1. Home influence—Was it religious? Was there definite religious instruction? Family worship? How was Sunday observed?
2. Church influence—Denomination? What impressions did the church services make? And the Sunday school?
3. Personal activities—Nature of prayer and other religious acts. Did you have a sense of sin? In what did it consist and what did you do about it?
4. What were your ideas of God, heaven, hell? Did you have definite fears? Of what?

II. ADOLESCENCE.

1. Did you have social life in church circles, or in other "sets," or both?
2. Did the question of joining the church or any religious society confront you at any time. How did it rise, through direct influence or pastor, or teacher, or through reflextion? How intense was the problem? How was it settled? Age?
3. Has your religious development been continuous since that time? If not, indicate nature and occasions of change? Did you have the same kind of experience (such as struggle, anxiety with sudden decisions, or gradual growth) in other lines? For example, in choosing occupation, taking up social interests or some form of art?

III. PRESENT ATTITUDE.

1. Do you consider yourself religious? What would you give as reasons for saying you are religious? or non-religious, as the case may be?
2. Are intellectual problems prominent in your experience? If so, what are they?
3. Do you get religious values in other than so-called religious exercises? For example, in "secular" work, entertainments, or anything of that kind?
4. How do you determine whether a thing is right or wrong for you to do?

• Add any other facts of your religious experience not covered by the above questions.

Answers to these questions will be treated with the strictest confidence. Please send them to E. S. Ames, 5520 Madison avenue, Chicago, Ill.

To the Business Men of Our Churches

An Open Letter.

Dear Brethren—As you are aware, no doubt, an effort is being made to enlist the men of our churches, and especially those men of affairs usually classed as business men, in the more active service of the church, both in their local congregations, and more particularly in the general enterprises of the church. You will recall that at our National Convention in St. Louis in 1904 an organization of business men was formed, to be known as the Business Men's Association of the Christian Church. This new organization has for its object the enlistment of the business men of our churches in more active Christian work, both for their own spiritual welfare and that of the cause they represent; to secure their attendance at our religious conventions and their participation in its business, and thus to harness a mighty unused force among us for the better support of our missionary, educational, and benevolent enterprises.

The plan was to have local leagues, or chapters, formed in all our churches to cooperate with the national organization. Because of the inability of our corresponding secretary to give as much time to this work as he had hoped to do the association did not accomplish, during the past year, much in the way of increasing its membership and perfecting its organization, as it would otherwise have done; but many local chapters have been formed and are at work in their respective congregations. We hope every church among us will form such a league of its business men.

It is believed now, however, that the time has come when our organization must furnish proof of what it can do for the advancement of our cause. The National Convention in San Francisco decided, on the recommendation of our Centennial committee, to put a first-class man in the field to stimulate liberality toward all our general enterprises and to solicit special gifts and bequests for the same, in view of our approaching Centennial celebration in 1909. It was also recommended that our Business Men's Association take it as their special duty to to provide the necessary funds for the support of such a man and the necessary expenses for carrying on this work. It is estimated that not less than $5,000 per year will be necessary to prosecute this work with vigor. We understand that the committee has already selected one of our best men to undertake this work, and it only remains for us to guarantee his support for the work to begin at once.

At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the Business Men's Association, held in the city of St. Louis, it was decided to undertake the raising of $5,000 at once in reliable pledges to be paid during the year as needed, for the support of this work. It is by no means the thought of the executive committee of the Business Men's Association that the sum mentioned should limit the contributions of our business men toward the Centennial offering. On the contrary, it is believed that five or six of our cities might readily guarantee this amount and that other offerings might be made, either directly or through this committee, to any one of our colleges, missionary organizations, or benevolent enterprises, in harmony with the recommendations of our Centennial committee. By the personal solicitation of the president of the Business Men's Association, including his own contribution, $1,100 has already been pledged by the brethren of St. Louis. This amount will no doubt be increased, and other cities will, we are sure, manifest equal zeal in behalf of this effort to worthily celebrate our Centennial anniversary.

While the officers of the society will make what personal solicitations they can, it is impossible for them to reach all the liberal-hearted, enterprising brethren in our brotherhood who will wish fellowship with us in this good work, and we hereby solicit their pledges first, toward the completion of this $5,000 fund, and then in larger gifts, through the agent which is to be put in the field, to any and all of our general interests. We would call upon the business men everywhere, in all our churches, to rally to the support of their local minister, to heed the calls of our missionary societies, our colleges, and our benevolent institutions, and to make such offerings for their support as will furnish to the world an exhibition of how much we believe in the principles of that great reformation whose Centennial we are seeking to celebrate.

What Truths Should the Evangelist Emphasize?

By C. A. Brady.

The work of the evangelist is to proclaim glad tidings to human beings. His work is one of grave responsibilty. Every word and every move on his part is having its influence, and this influence may mark the destiny of some soul. The evangelist, like all other of God's servants, has retained his individuality, which will continually manifest itself. There are certain truths, however, or parts of one great truth, which must be particularly emphasized. The early evangelists employed certain agencies in their work, prophecy, history, poetry, the gift of oratory, etc.; yet a few great truths were always pressed home to the hearer in such a manner that he could not forget them. The hearer might go his way, years might pass, but these great primal facts could not be dislodged. They would continually influence his life.

The first work of the evangelist is instruction. The man must be converted from something to something else. Easy, pretty words of themselves are not instruction. Strong, earnest words, chosen to fit the hearer, sometimes pleasant and sometimes unpleasant—a message on which the hungry soul can feed, must be presented. This part of the work must be a faithful and full presentation of the Christ—his life, his work, his demands. There can be no Christianity without a Christ, and no salvation without one able and willing to save. The evangelist will command the attention of the hearer to the extent that this work is well done. The world expects the evangelist to proclaim a plain, true Gospel, which demands sacrifice and denial of self, and respects him only when he does it. All the powers and methods of the speaker ought to be used to drive home these facts. No use to talk about the superstructure until the foundation is well laid. The person now believes the message, is impressed with the Christ, but thus far has not decided to accept him. Up to this point his attention has been riveted on the Savior and not on self.

The next work of the evangelist is conviction. The hearer must now see himself undone, wretched and unsaved. This also may not be at all times a pleasant work for the evangelist, and sometimes this part of his work is far from being well done. An unconvicted church membership is the proper soil for disruption, backsliding, and hypocrisy. May this be the reason that there is prejudice against the evangelist? Has he frequently sought a numerical obedience at the expense of an obedience desired and demanded by the convert? Did the three thousand, or the Ethopian, or Saul of Tarsus need to be prevailed upon to obey commands, or were their longings such as only obedience could satisfy! Surrender is on the part of the convert, and can be done by none but himself. A truly convicted sinner is the greatest poem ever written—the noblest epic ever sung. Peter wept bitterly, and arose a new man. The penitent's tears are seeds of the spiritual harvest.

At the fitting time the work of the evangelist is to bring about obedience. The penitent desires to know how to follow and how to serve his Lord. As a people we have been very exacting and very uncompromising in matters of obedience. And so is the Word, and so must we be if we are true to that word. And while the evangelist should not be abusive or bigoted, yet the people desire a "Thus sayeth the Lord." It is his message, not ours.

If certain truths are emphasized in bringing about the conversions recorded in the Bible, so should we emphasize these truths, not as our own, but as from heaven. This can be done kindly and emphatically, and without the spirit of antagonism. What truths then should the evangelist emphasize? Rather what truths must he emphasize? Large responsibility rests upon him; he is a witness and must testify truly. The judge demands that the jury shall only consider real testimony. All else is ruled out. The evangelist is neither judge or lawyer, simply a witness. Those truths must be emphasized that will convince the world that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that will bring the sinners into full subjection to him. His will, his life, his influence, his powers, must all be surrendered to his God.

By B. C. Deweese.

The proper reply to this question can be given, it seems to me, in view of facts which we all recognize. The very work of the evangelist—the proclamation of the Gospel—gives material for the answer. We are disloyal to ourselves, if we fail to follow the New Testament teaching. "Preach the Word," is its general order for all evangelistic effort. This directs us to the source of information on the subject.

The same need which confronted the apostles confronts the preachers of righteousness today. Man always, and everywhere, is sold under sin. He is in the kingdom of darkness. The darkness is the same in kind in every age. Man's inability to save himself is now, ever has been and ever will be manifest. God is the God of salvation and upon his mercy and grace we all depend. Since these things are so, the gospel for an age of sin is the remedy in every age. Among those for whom the Bible teaching is final this is not in dispute.

It follows then that the inspired preaching of the apostolic age contained the truths needed for that age and for ours as well. Happily we do not grope in the dark in a fruitless endeavor to recover that teaching. The great commission and the preaching of the apostles and "apostolic men" furnish all the data needful for a correct answer to the question which heads this note. Let the evangelists familiarize themselves with these facts. The situations reported in Acts are parallel to the experiences of the evangelists of our age. The coincidence is startling and suggestive. When, therefore, we meet with like cases the one thing to do is to give the New Testament answer. This is infallibly correct and is preaching the word of salvation.

Two observations are worth while. The men who follow this method keep close to the Bible. This shuts out human speculation—the bane of all really effective preaching, and gives the people confidence that they are really doing the things which the Lord commanded in the gospel. Further, such preaching, when done in the spirit of Christ, is always successful. Long experience and close observation alike convince me that a careful presentation of the cases of conversion recorded in Acts is the most instructive, the most inspiring, and the most successful way to preach Christ. May I not urge our evangelists to make more of this method while the days are going by?

The Supreme Importance of State Missions

By J. O. Rose.

The problem of the mission church is not so much the work of starting it (that is comparatively easy), but the work of sustaining it until it becomes self-sustaining. State work, as compared with district or county work, is the only sure guarantee of sustained support.

Two things, at least, are necessary for the life and healthy development of a mission after it is planted: First, intelligently continued Scriptural supervision; second, wisely sustained financial support until it can be made sulf-supporting and self-directing. This the county or district organizations, as a rule, have failed to do. There are a very few, noble exceptions. This is because the average length of pastorate in Indiana is less than two years, hence before the new mission church has passed the perilous transition to sturdy self-suport, and while it is yet weak, unorganized and undisciplined, the preachers of the district that have supported and cared for it move away; new preachers are located with uncertainty and delay, and the weak mission is neglected. It drifts into debt, discouragement and division. The flock is left without a shepherd, and in the crisis a pitiful appeal is sent to the State Society to send a state worker to come and gather up the fragments, where the conditions are often worse than if no beginning had been made at all. This, too, where the funds have been withheld from the State Society to invest in the local enterprise. The investment has sadly depreciated in value, and the mission has became a very "hard field." It has multiplied conditions of failure.

The two necessary elements for success are wanting. There has not been continued support and sustained supervision. The ministry in our churches is too transient and too uncertain.

The remedy is in the unity of all our state interests and the concentration of all our state energies in a wisely directed and sustained support of every mission which we plant until it becomes self-supporting. Preachers may come and preachers may go, but the State Society (the systematic, organized co-operative forces of the churches of the state) will go on—as long as the Great Commission applies, and state work-can maintain a sustained support of every mission as long as it has need.

Kansas---How About Appropriations?

If some of the good brethren over the state could walk into the office of the State Board, some day, and look over the mail, they would be surprised at the number of worthy appeals that come to the board for help. The paper on which some of these appeals are written is actually tear-stained, indicating beyond doubt that hearts are anxious about the Lord's work at many points in Kansas. Individual members of the board have borrowed money, giving their personal notes for the same, in order to respond to some of these appeals, so touching have they been. This course, however, has involved the board in a financial way that is embarrassing when reported at our State Convention. It is not business to borrow money in order to make appropriations to weak churches, and yet these churches must not be allowed to die for want of a little assistance.

I think it is quite generally conceded that the Disciples of Christ in Kansas are not a poor people. They are worth at least $25,000,000. They are rich in houses and lands. Oil and gas and coal and mineral wealth abound in great quantities. God has blessed us with bountiful crops. There are more than 40,000 Disciples in Kansas, and hundreds of churches all prosperous under the blessings of God. A very small per cent of their income would be sufficient to evangelize Kansas and win it for Christ.

Now, brethren, what is our duty? These appeals must be answered. God is testing us.

There are eleven congregations in Kansas whose buildings are closed. Forty-eight congregations are homeless. Three hundred and seventy-five towns in Kansas are without a congregation of the Disciples of Christ. All are appealing to us for help. What shall we do? What is our duty?

In addition to these appeals, two new field workers will be sent out into the field—and evangelist and a Bible school specialist. These workers are added to the present force by direction of the churches through their delegates to the Eldorado convention. The salaries and expenses of these additional workers have to be provided for. The State Board is perfectly willing to do all that is required of it, and even more; but the whole problem is up to the churches. They must act, and act like heroes, or else no appropriations can be made to weak churches and no additional force be placed in the field. It is the duty, therefore, of every church to raise its apportionment. If the churches fail to do this, the work must fail. The cause of failure, then, must be placed, not at the door of the State Board, but at the door of the churches of Kansas.

Brethren, $8,000 is not too much for 40,000 Disciples to raise. We can do it, and by the grace of God we will do it.

FRANK E. MALLORY,
Topeka, Kan. President K. C. M. S.

To Confer on Federation.

SEVENTEEN MILLION COMMUNICANTS TO BE REPRESENTED IN THE CARNEGIE HALL GATHERINGS.

The Inter-church Conference on Federation, for which preparations have been making for more than three years, is at hand. The opening session will be held on Wednesday evening of next week, November 15, at Carnegie Hall, in New York City. Twenty-seven evangelical denominations have commissioned more than seven hundred delegates and alternates, who will be present when Governor Higgins, of New York, delivers the opening address. Seventeen million communicants who believe in Jesus Christ as Lord of all, have sent these seven hundred men to come together to see what can be done to heal the hurt of Christendom. Organic union is not so much as dreamed of, but a working plan of co-operation will be perfected by these representatives of the various religious bodies.

The delegates will be welcomed by the chief executive of the state and the city, and will listen to a letter from the President of the United States, whose official duties near the opening of Congress will prevent him from expressing in person the interest which he feels in this largest delegated conference of Christian bodies ever held.

On Sunday, November 19, the ministers throughout the country are requested to speak on "The Co-operation of the Churches as a Sign of the Oneness of Believers." The majority of the Protestant pulpits in New York and its vicinity will be filled by prominent delegates. In the afternoon there will be an interdenominational gathering in Carnegie Hall.

On the last evening of the conference, November 28, a reception to the delegates at the Waldorf-Astoria will be given by the half dozen or more denominational social unions and church clubs of the city.

All of the meetings of the conference will be open to the public, but admission will be by ticket. JOHN BANCROFT DEVINS,
Chairman Press Commitee.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow Charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in the stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Our Budget.

—The simultaneous evangelistic campaigns are moving grandly on.

—Push the offerings for state missions, through your missionary committee, until all the brethren have a part in it. Remember no offering is limited to one day.

—Be sure to read the appeal of the committee of the Business Men's Association to the business men of our churches, which is printed elsewhere. It wouldn't be a bad idea for preachers to read it from their pulpits lest it should escape the attention of the men in their congregations.

—The work of evangelism is going on splendidly, but must be supplemented by the large and generous gifts of our business men in behalf of our general enterprises if the results are to be permanent.

—The weakest side of our work just now is that which the Business Men's Association is trying to bring to the front, and it needs the more emphasis on that account. Let press and pulpit push it.

—The joint committee of Free Baptists and the Disciples of Christ to confer on the subject of union expect to hold a meeting in New York City in connection with the great Inter-Church Conference, which is to convene there next week. While the big meeting will be thinking about the co-operation that is possible now, the committees will be thinking and praying about a complete union.

—Reports from State Mission Day indicate that there was rain in many parts of the country and especially in Missouri so that the collections were either small or were not taken at all. We press upon our brethren the urgency that this cause receive their attention. Let nothing stand in its way, and take a collection for State Missions some Sunday in this month.

—There have been 512 added in the campaign in Greater Kansas City to date. Several churches are not in the campaign. Frank L. Bowen, Sec.

—R. C. Rogers is in a meeting at Clinton, Ky.

—D. Y. Donaldson is now in charge at Iola, Kan.

—J. W. Ellis has begun work at Bentonville, Ark.

—Geo. A. Johnson goes to Flemington, Pa.

—An addition is being built to our church at Mt. Vernon, Ill.

—S. Boyd White has entered upon his ministry at Mt. Healthy, Ohio.

—Improvements have been made in the church at Lowe, Ind.

—E. T. Lane, of Bainbridge, Ind., expects to locate at Thorntown.

—A. R. Teachout is the nominee for mayor of Cleveland on the Prohibition ticket.

—The new building of the Central Christian Church at Sherman, Tex., is now in use.

—A new church has been dedicated at Denison, Tex., and a protracted meeting is being held.

—Geo. D. Weaver, of Greenville, Miss., has received a call to the Second Church, Little Rock, Ark.

—A. F. Reiter, of Bluffton, O., has entered upon the pastorate of the Calhoun Church, Baltimore.

—R. E. Lee Abbott, recently of Spencer Va., now divides his time between Corbin and Barbourville, Ky.

—We learn from Brother Sizemore that although the church at Rockport, Mo., is without a pastor, the brethren are keeping up their meetings with good attendance and enthusiasm.

—A new house of worship at North Platte, Neb., will be dedicated by L. L. Carpenter next Lord's day.

—The Disciples' Social Union of New York City will entertain their visiting brethren on Tuesday evening.

—J. Cronenberger has accepted a call to Phoenix, Ariz., and will relinquish his work at Falls City, Neb., December 1.

—The new building at Elmira, N. Y., will be dedicated about the first of the new year. C. C. Crawford is the pastor.

—The new church house at Chilo, Ohio, where R. E. Stratton is pastor, has been dedicated by Geo. B. Ranshaw.

—It is hoped that the new building at Plainville, Kan., costing about $11,000, will be ready for dedication in December.

—An educational conference under the direction of the Eureka College Association was held at LaHarpe, Ill., November 6.

—Mrs. E. L. Ford and daughters have given $4,000 towards the endowment fund for the Disciples' Divinity House, Chicago.

—We understand that the church at Aurora, Ill., has designs on F. G. Tyrrell for their pastor. He has supplied for them several Sundays.

—Charles W. Dean began a meeting with the church at Grand Rapids, Wis., last Lord's day, and expects a singer to assist him within a week.

—James H. Brooks reports that the brethren at Blytheville, Ark., where he has just taken up his ministry, are arranging to build at an early date.

—Brother and Sister Bayard Craig, of the Central Christian Church, Denver, Col., have just celebrated the tenth anniversary of their marriage.

—Marshall G. Long, who has been at Markel, Ind., for over three years, closed his work there November 5, and begins next Lord's day at Warsaw.

—W. C. Hull's departure from the church at North Tonawanda, N. Y., was deeply regretted. Tokens of esteem were presented to him and his wife.

—The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has enlarged its appropriation to Wisconsin in order that more work may be done among the Scandinavians.

—The Foreign Society has received $500 from a friend in California on the Annuity Plan, this being the fourth gift from this friend on this plan, so well is she pleased with it.

—L. W. McCreary, late pastor of the East St. Louis Christian Church has accepted a call to the Hamilton Avenue Christian Church, St. Louis, and has entered upon his work.

—Bruce Brown, of Mansfield, O., was selected to deliver the presentation address on the occasion of the dedication of the drinking fountains presented to the city by the Christian Endeavor Union —The Foreign Society is soon to issue a new and attractive birthday box for the children in the Sunday schools to gather offerings to go toward the Children's day offering, the first Sunday in June.

—Our latest advice is that the temperature of B. E. Utz, of the Central church, Spokane, has been slowly lowering, but it may be some time before he is out of the hospital.

—Preparations are being made by the church at Harrodsburg, Ky., where M. G. Buckner is pastor, for a great meeting with the Brooks brothers, following the Pittsburg campaign.

—Frederick A. Mayhall, who recently resigned as pastor of the Hamilton Avenue Church, has formed a law partnership in St. Louis, with the firm of C. L. & P. W. Moss, and will enter upon the general practice of law, his office being in the Roe Building, No. 510 Pine Street.

—The trustees of Washington Christian College have just created a system of tuition scholarships for all ministerial students of the church district of Delaware and the District of Columbia.

—There is at last an "American Revised New Testament" in larger type, and we have a good stock of these in "Bourgeois," selling at 60 cents, 80 cents and $1.10, according to the binding.

—The Christian Woman's Board of Missions appropriates $1,000 a year toward the work of the New York Christian Missionary Society, and $2,000 to the Chicago Christian Missionary Society.

—The date of the dedication of our church at Mobile, Ala., is definitely fixed for November 19. A general invitation to attend is extended to the brotherhood by Claude E. Hill and his congregation.

—"That They May All Be One," by Amos R. Wells, the editor of "The Christian Endeavor World," is one of the strongest books from the "outside" that we have seen and sells for 75 cents postpaid.

—That excellent book, by Senator Albert Beveridge, "The Young Man and the World," is $1.50 postpaid, and is another fine Christmas present from father, mother or sister to the young man of the world.

—Our church at Belle Center, O., is passing through one of the most fruitful seasons in its history. A corner lot in a fine location has been secured and about $4,000 have been subscribed towards a new building, which will be erected next summer. H. E. Beckler is the minister.

—S. V. Williams, of LaPorte, Ind., with his wife as leader of song, will begin a meeting for D. S. Domer at Beaver City, Neb. Brother Williams was assistant to John L. Brandt during the World's Fair period.

—The last report from Denver is that the mortgage on Brother Tyler's church is down to $2,000 and that efforts are being made to make it possible to wipe out the indebtedness by December 3. A meeting is to be held by Homer Wilson.

—We receive many news items about ministers being called for a second, third or fourth year's service. Would it not be much better for churches to make calls for indefinite periods or as long as both pastor and people are satisfied?

—B. A. Abbott has just celebrated his eleventh anniversary at the Harlem Avenue Church, Baltimore. Several of our churches in that city will engage this month with other prominent Protestant churches in a union evangelistic campaign.

—The receipts of the Foreign Society for the month of October amounted to $5,582, a gain over the corresponding time, 1904, of $1,529. This is a good start on the new missionary year which points toward $300,000 for Foreign Missions by September 30, 1906.

—The first Lord's day in December is the day set apart for placing the work of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions before the churches. It is hoped it will be widely observed and that the offering will help forward the great work of this organization.

—Leander Lane has just closed one year's pastorate with the church at Santa Anna, Cal. During the year there were 130 additions to the membership, 54 being by baptism. A new building is now contemplated, though the present one has been much improved.

—Miss Mattie W. Burgess, well known and loved as a missionary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, sailed for India, her chosen field, on the S. S. Pannonia, November 1. She will have charge of the Mahoba Orphanage, a responsible position for which she is well fitted.

—A. C. Smither has just preached his 1200th sermon to the congregation of the First Christian Church, Los Angeles. Brother Smither's is now the longest pastorate in the angel city, and he has a record of over 1,600 additions to his church in his fifteen years experience there.

—The Northern Idaho Missionary Board is desirous of opening correspondence with a good evangelist to work in that district. A man who can lead the song service is needed. Send terms and recommendations to W. L. McCullough, Clarkston, Washington.

—Sumner T. Martin reports that he has just had a card from the repular pastor of the church at Pasadena, Cal., Frank M. Dowling, who is resting and recuperating on his ranch at Covina, suggesting as a watchword for the congregation, "The New Church Building Started Within the Year." "I think it will be done," adds Brother Martin.

—B. L. Allen has begun preaching for the church at Tullahoma, Tenn. Brother Allen has served as State C. E. Superintendent for the Christian churches in Indiana for nearly four years, and was minister of the Morris Street Church of Indianapolis. He was also associated with some of our religious papers.

—The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has made an appropriation of $250 toward the salary of E. E. Crawford, of Albuquerque, N. M., in order to help the Albuquerque congregation in its struggle to build a church home, and $500 toward the support of the minister of the Winnipeg (Manitoba) church.

—Rev. W. C. Bitting, D. D., of New York, has been called to the pastorate of the Second Baptist church, this city, and began his pastorate here last Lord's day. Dr. Bitting is one of the ablest ministers among the Baptists and we are glad to join in the welcome to him to our city. He has come to a great field and we trust he may accomplish a great work.

—In another column we publish some questions concerning personal religious experience which Brother E. S. Ames desires to have any competent person answer. Brother Ames will present some results of this inquiry in one or more articles in The Christsan-Evangelist, and we will be glad if our readers will co-operate with him in this investigation.

—Percy G. Cross writes from Hope, Ark., his new field of labor, as follows: "The work has started splendidly here. Large audiences. Five confessions yesterday. Results far-reaching. Every one is happy. The disciples here are a royal body—loyal, willing to work—giving me magnificent support. This is encouraging to any preacher. We fully appreciate The Evangelist. May it continue to grow and go."

—Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Gordon, Dr. Rosa Lee Oxer, Miss Daisy Drake and Miss Caroline Pope, missionaries of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, who sailed for India October 7, were in the great storm that caused the Campania's disaster. Their ship, the Columbia, was uninjured, but they were two days overdue when they arrived in Glasgow, Scotland, October 17. The party will spend some days in Scotland and England ere re-embarking for India.

—Dr. W. E. Macklin and family, missionaries of the Foreign Society to Nankin, China, who have been in America on a much-needed vacation, sailed on their return trip from San Francisco on the Siberia, November 4. Dr. Paul Wakefield and wife, of Springfield, Ill., went out with them on their first term of service for the Foreign Society. Dr. Wakefield is a son of Prof. E. B. Wakefield, of Hiram, O. Mrs. Wakefield is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. V. T. Lindsay, of Springfield, Ill.

—We are in receipt of the first number of the "Hudson Valley Christian," a little paper brought out by G. B. Townsend, of Troy, N. Y., which it is hoped will be the medium of bringing the churches of Christ in eastern New York into closer fellowship. From it we learn that Brother Townsend's flock has begun to make improvements in its building at a probable cost of $1,500, and that the fall and winter work of the Third Avenue Church has never been more hopeful. The church at Poestenkill have adopted a daily payment plan for the liquidation of their indebtedness in two years' time, and J. P. Lichtenberger has raised a fund of $5,000 to apply on the debt of the Lenox Avenue Church, of New York City.

—E. T. Dougherty, of Wabash, Ind., still remembers that trip in The Christian-Evangelist special to San Francisco, and in a business letter to Brother Hoffmann, of this company says: "You ought never in all your blessed days hear the last of the painstaking care you lavished upon your excursion 'west,' and the joy and satisfaction it afforded all having part therein." It was Brother Dougherty who caught the biggest fish at Catalina Island, the thrill of which he will never forget in all his "blessed days"!

—The annual report of the corresponding secretary of Oklahoma, J. M. Monroe, shows forty-two church buildings were erected the last year and forty the year before. Ninety-six churches have been built during the two and a half years he has been corresponding secretary. This is an average of one every ten days. The other lines of mission work were carried forward, such as holding meetings, organizing churches, locating preachers and reviving weak churches. This work has been done by the corresponding secretary and five living link missionaries.

DO GOOD

With your money and enjoy an income from it while you live by giving to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society on the ANNUITY PLAN. The income is large, uninterrupted, and certain for life. Interest is paid according to age of donor. There is no expense for repairs or taxes. A bond is given to insure prompt payment of interest, semi-annually. It is better than a government bond. Over two hundred gifts have been made, amounting to about $250,000. This plan is especially adapted to those fifty years of age, or older. Full particulars given upon request. Let us send you our illustrated booklet, free of charge.

—The poetic muse that hovers about our office sometimes perpetrates ridiculous rhymes, as the following, for instance:

"The melancholy days are come
The sadddest of the year,"
When party lines are fading out
And bosses shake with fear.

Heaped in the ballot boxes, safe,
The counted votes repose,
While party bosses, nipped by frost,
Lie withered like the rose.

But soon the Spring will come again,
Our presidental year,—
When all our party bosses, brave,
Their drooping heads will rear.

—The Central Christian Church at Warren, O., where J. E. Lynn ministers, has just observed its second annual roll call service. The minute book containing the signatures of the seven charter members who organized the church is 1803 was displayed. It was then a Baptist church. As the roll was so lengthy only the names of pastors were called. But one person was present who came into the church before the pastorate of Isaac Errett, in 1851-1855. Eight were present who became members during his ministry. Cards were filled out by each member, on which was indicated the departments of the church in which he was at work and those in which he was willing to enroll to further the movement of the more complete enlistment of the membership.

—A report of the Little Rock campaign appeared in our last issue. We have received from Brother Jessup another account which goes to show that the primary purpose of the campaign was to put on its feet the Second Church, which is a comparatively new organization, started by Brother Jessup and the First Church, and since looked after, as far as his medical practice would permit, by T. D. Stanley. On the day before the meeting closed a lot—the best in the neighborhood—was purchased for $4,000, and a suitable man to do regular pastoral work is now being sought, correspondence already having been entered upon. The resolutions of the church and the commendation of Brother Jessup speak very highly of the work of R. H. Fife as preacher and Edward McKinney, of Dorsey, Ill., as leader of the music.

—Percy G. Cross, Hope, Ark., writes: "Accept my congratulations for State Mission number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The call of the states is truly heart-searching. My heart was made sad, though, for Arkansas was conspicuous by her absence." But Arkansas, with a few other missing states, was invited to sit at our board with the others, but for some reason failed to respond. Brother C. adds: "Glad to notice several strong men coming into old Arkansas. Brother Ellis, at Bentonville; Purless at Siloam Springs, and Paragould has just secured a strong minister to take up the solid work that Brother R. O. Rogers labored so long and efficiently to build up under God's guidance. Such brethren as Ragland, Edmonds, Jessup, Kincaid and the old-young giant, Browning, have labored long for the awakening, and many of us are constrained to believe it is at hand."

Church Extension Receipts.

Comparative statement for October, 1904, and October, 1905:

	1904.	1905.	Gain.
From churches	$4,606.86	$6,513,84	$1,906,98
From Individuals	2,122.75	1,462,51	*660 24
Total gain for October			$1,246.74

*Loss.

In October, 1904, there were 370 contributing churches and in October, 1905, there were 367. There were three less contributing churches this year than last, but the churches this year sent $1,906.98 more money. Many of our strongest city churches have not sent their offerings and multitudes that could afford to send smaller amounts have had no fellowship. A great brotherhood should never allow a newly occupied field to be lost for lack of a building. Remit to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Building, Kansas City, Mo.

Century Simultaneous Revival.

PITTSBURG, PA., Nov. 4, 1905.

The first week of the Century Simultaneous Revival has closed with splendid achievements all along the line. The results at every particular point from which reports have been made are beyond the first week of any previous meeting at the same place. Excepting Hallowe'en, the attendance has been excellent, although no church now has its audiences swelled by visiting members of neighboring churches. There have been over two hundred additions. The number, including those who come Sunday, will be telegraphed Monday. But best of all is the pronounced success of the noon services in the old Third Presbyterian Church, down town. Large congregations, about eight hundred each day, have gathered there and the influence of this central service has been a benediction on the churches. Moreover, this great city is becoming aware of our presence and during the next three weeks, we believe, will hear with interest the message that we have to bring. We ask the prayers of the brotherhood.

Butler College Semi-Centennial.

On November 1, Butler College, Indianapolis, observed the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of its first session. The formal celebration of the semi-centennial was postponed until later in the year—as the Columbian and Louisiana Purchase Expositions occurred a little after the even anniversaries of the events, which they commemorated. The birthday of the institution, however, was celebrated with a service, at which there were addresses by Mrs. N. E. Atkinson, the only surviving member of the first graduating class, the class of 1856, former President Scot Butler, and Dr. A. W. Brayton, a member of the college board. Mrs. Atkinson's address was reminiscent and personal. President Butler's was in his warmest and richest vein—poetic fantasy mingling with sage advice and spiced with subtle humor. Dr. Brayton, medical expert, all-round scholar and philosopher, blessed with a sense of appreciation as wide and deep as his appalling fund of information, was at his best.

It was not a formal observance, but a somewhat impromptu exercise to mark the day and to suggest to the students and alumni some of the things which the college has stood for and for which it hopes to stand in the next half century. The present flourishing condition of the college, with its increased attendance and prospect of largely increased endowment, conduced to an observance of the day in the proper spirit of joy and thanksgiving. W. E. GARRISON,
President of Butler College.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Colorado.

The churches of Colorado are entering upon the greatest missionary campaign of their history. At the convention in August the board recommended that we keep our financial motto where we placed it two years ago, that is, $2,500 for state work. The committe on recommendations indorsed the report. But in the discussion Bro. A. E. Pierce, treasurer of the board, put our faith to the test by moving to amend by making the amount $3,000. This provoked a lively discussion, but was adopted with enthusiasm. A great undertaking for 42 churches and less than 6,000 members. But the west is characterized by largeness, including large enterprises and endeavors Therefore, with faith and courage we have set ourselves to the task.

At the convention of 1898 an era was begun which we will call the period of greater self-support. Colorado had made a fine record prior to that year, $846 was the most that had been raised in any one year for state work. At that convention it was decided to raise $1,000, and over $1,200 was raised that year. The next year the sum went beyond $1,400, the next over $1,500, the next not quite $1,500, the next $1,593, the next $1,629, and the year just closed, $1,483. A large number of uncollected pledges remain from the year just closed, which will be received yet.

Two plans have been used in the Colorado work, viz: that of spending most of the funds in the support of one or more evangelists, the other of supplementing the salaries of pastors in weak churches, until the churches could support themselves. The former plan was used mostly in the earlier days of our work, the latter has been used most for fourteen years. But during these years evangelistic effort has not been lost sight of. And for the last two years larger efforts have been made in that direction than for some time; and we expect to do more each year on that line. But the plan most used has brought substantial and permanent results. During the fourteen years mentioned 28 churches have been organized or revived and made permament. This is almost one church established for every thousand dollars of missionary aid received. Colorado cheerfully acknowledges its great indebtedness to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

During the last missionary year nine fields have been aided, and seven men supported as their ministers. Steady progress has been made. Special evangelistic efforts have been made in each field helped. Two of the fields are important educational centers—Greeley and Golden. The former is the seat of the State Normal School. F. D. Macy was minister. The chief work was the building of a tabernacle, which is now almost paid for. Golden is the seat of the State School of Mines, a technical school of the first rank. J. W. Maddux is minister. Here also the special work has been in behalf of a building, a permanent and modern house of worship. This is now the chief work before the church. Rifle, with R. M. Bailey as minister, is building. This is an important business center in western Colorado. Meeker and Grand Valley, other fields to which Brother Bailey ministers, are hopeful fields. At the former Flourney Payne, of Denver, is now in a meeting. Wray, with C. G. Johnson as minister, is making steady progress in paying its obligations to the Board of Church Extention. Windsor, where E. J. Harlow labors, is making steady progress toward permanent work. J. Bennett is about to begin a meeting there, from which good things are expected. Florence is in the building enterprise, and has set before itself the task of completing their house this year. Ward Russell is pastor. Paonia had Walter Carter as minister six months. Good progress was made in additions and influence.

Of the future: It is great beyond words to express. Colorado is central in the great west. Her resources are many and abundant. Her people are enterprising and enthusiastic. Colorado is a great mission field, and now is the time to enter it.

Already the notes of victory are sounding as we enter the new year's work. Years ago we had a church at Sterling. It was built in boom times, and afterward the boom in the town and in the church broke. After a time the church could not maintain a minister longer, and they were without one for ten years. The building, not well located, was sold, and the debt to the Board of Church Extension paid. A church was organized at Atwood, a small point six miles distant. It has made good progress. After efforts in vain to find a man who would undertake the work of re-establishing the work at Sterling, J. K. Hester was found, and things are moving. Within two days after he and the corresponding secretary arrived upon the field a lot, with residence upon it, had been purchased. This building will make a parsonage. A tabernacle is already in course of erection, and will be ready for use before January 1. This was undertaken less than a month ago. It will be successful. J. K. Hester seems to possess a special adaptation to work in fields which many would call hopeless.

Sterling is but one example. Many important towns and cities, business centers, with fine futures, await this work, and must be entered before they are beyond our reach.

Let every church in Colorado at once take an offering for the state missions. To raise the $3,000 we must increase last year's gifts one hundred per cent. We can do it; will we do it? The help of every pastor, elder, Sunday school superintendent, Christian Endeavorer and member is needed. Let all wheel into line and march forward to the greatest year's work in the history of our great commonwealth.

Leonard G. Thompson, Cor. Sec.

St. Louis Letter.

Additions to the local churches inside the city during the past month numbered 111.

The writer of the St. Louis letters was quite busy during the month of October performing marriage ceremonies. He united in marriage, on October 3, Mr. Arthur Johnson and Miss Olive Jones, of this city; October 17, Mr. George Whitney, of Decatur, Ill., and Miss Barbara Rupp, of Springfield, Ill.; on October 18, Mr. John W. Pearce, of Memphis, Tenn., and Miss Laura Bencini, of this city; on October 24, Mr. Elliott West and Miss Phoebe Spence, both of St. Louis; on October 25, Mr. Benjamin Hüber and Miss Bessie Hess, and on the same day, Mr. John Bauer and Miss Amanda Trautwein, all of this city. Most of these people are members of the Compton Heights Church.

The Business Men's Association, of the Compton Heights Church, had a very interesting sociable and entertainment in the church early in October. The whole church is getting ready for the annual meeting and roll-call to be held about December 4. We have had a beautiful fall work. The Sunday school has passed the 500 mark in enrollment, and the workers are busy endeavoring to get the regular attendance up to 400. We have additions nearly every Sunday, and very few weeks pass without using our baptistry. Our women have entered the autumn work with enthusiasm, and have already made quite a little sum of money, besides giving their help in many other ways. We have one of the finest intermediate Christian Endeavor Societies in the United States. They have enrolled over fifty members, and they work like beavers.

John L. Brandt has been holding a series of meetings with his former assistant, Brother Helser, of California, Mo., recently. Have not heard the results. R. A. Omer, of Camp Point, Ill., has been with Brother McFarland, of the Fourth Church, in special meetings. A good interest was awakened. Our city evangelist, Brother Maxwell, is with Brother Ireland, of Carondelet, in a special meeting.

Our Business Men's Association of the city had an interesting and profitable sociable and informal dinner at the Union Avenue Church recently. After dinner the evening was spent in discussing the question of missions and enlargement in St. Louis. It was decided to buy a lot for a new mission at once, and an effort will be made to plant at least two new missions each year in this city. Our people are awakened on the subject of city missions as they have not been for a long time.

At the preachers' meeting, October 23, it was decided to begin preparations for a series of simultaneous meetings to be held in this city next fall. A committee was appointed to take the matter up with the churches at once, to get them all enlisted so that they will begin preparations at an early date. We feel that a movement of this kind ought to be thoroughly organized before we go into it.

The Hamilton Avenue Church has called Brother McCreary, of East St. Louis. He is a rustling young preacher and will do a good work wherever he is put.

The Old Orchard brethren have dedicated their new house and are as happy as a bride in her new home. If any of our brethren should be in the city on any Monday morning we will appreciate a visit from them to our preachers' meeting. Our meetings are held every Monday (except the last Monday in the month) in the building of the Christian Publishing Company, 2712 Pine street, at 11 o'clock. Just pull the latch, and walk in, and you will be welcomed.

SCALP HUMOR WITH LOSS OF HAIR

Merciless Itching Made Him Wild. Speedy Cure by Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

"For two years my neck was covered with humor, spreading to my hair, which fell out, leaving an unsightly bald spot, and the soreness, inflammation and merciless itching made me wild. Friends advised Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and after a few applications the torment subsided, to my great joy. The sores soon disappeared, and my hair grew again as thick as ever. I shall always recommend Cuticura." (Signed) H. J. Spalding, 104 W. 104th St., N. Y. City.

State Work in South Dakota.

South Dakota mission work moves on slowly, but we believe surely; $1,211.68 were spent last year in state mission work. For the past two years it has been the polity of the State Mission Society to devote a part of the money available to the supplementing of pastors' salaries at the weaker places, thereby enabling them to have a more competent class of preachers. Meanwhile, special evangelistic efforts have been sustained at several points. During the last missionary year three churches have been established and a fourth one partially organized. We hope to do greater work in the future. This is a great big country, and the need is great. The preaching force is entirely inadequate to the need. The people are liberal in proportion to their number, and after there are a few more strong churches here, the work will move more rapidly. I look for the time when there will be a great forward move in this state.

There are many opportunities for the school teacher who can preach. His teaching makes it possible to live and work in places where a living remuneration would be impossible for the few Disciples. Many small congregations that could not support preaching otherwise, could considerably augment the pay of the consecrated teacher who could preach for them on Sunday. We have one or two splendid examples of good work done in this way. These examples might be duplicated a score of times if we had the men. We are buckling up our armour and mean to push forward.

O. E. Palmer.

Oregon.

The field is full of promise. The numerous calls for assistance are but indications that our opportunities are multiplying. We live in a splendid state and are a prosperous people. A little systematic generosity would enable us to pay our indebtedness and enter a number of new fields this year. We ought to assist our brethren in Baker City, a town with a population of 7,000, to organize. Astoria, with a population of 9,000, awaits our coming. Oregon City, with a population of four thousand, is, as yet, untouched. In all of these places we have earnest brethren and sisters who are anxious to organize and get to work. The assistance they require, we are able to give. Every Oregon town and hamlet represents a door of opportunity for the Disciples of Christ.

Our method of taking the offering this year is: Let the churches which have preachers allow them to go out and hold a missionary meeting, supporting them while they do so, then add the proceeds of this meeting to their own offering for state work that a double portion may be given to this work. If you have not taken the offering, do so at once. Albyn Esson.

Ovarian Tumor Cured by Anointing With Oils.

Pittsburg, Texas.

Dr. D. M. Bye Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

Dear Doctors—It has been some time since we wrote and I thought I would write you a few lines to let you hear from us. This leaves wife in fine condition. She goes where she pleases and is still improving in health and flesh. Glad to have to say to you that she is permanently cured of the tumor. We are still receiving letters of inquiry. Persons that have written to us some months past, now write to me asking what we think of Dr. Bye's treatment now, and if we think she is permanently cured. Dear Dr. Bye, we feel under many obligations to you for wife's recovery from what we thought was certain death. May God bless you continuously in your labor of love. Yours truly,

DEDICATIONS.

HIGHLAND, KAN.

We dedicated a new church building October 29. Brother Walters, of Webster City, Ia., was in charge. This is a town of 800, the seat of the earliest mission (Presbyterian) in the state. The Christian Church here numbers about 160. The present building was erected over a year ago, but on account of a disastrous bank failure the dedication was postponed. However, the church has grown steadily in numbers and zeal, so that when Brother Walters asked for $1,060 to clear the building of incumbrance, $1,475 were pledged. At the evening meeting this sum was swelled to $1,600, making possible the purchase of new pews. The church, which is by far the most beautiful in the county, cost only $7,000. Brother Walters is a decided success in work of this kind. He is now in a meeting at McPherson, Kan. We are rejoiced over the bright prospects for the future.

Hugh Lomax, Minister.

OLD MONROE, MO.

A new society of eighteen Disciples has been organized by O. J. Gary at Old Monroe, Mo., and on October 29 a new union church was dedicated, the sermon being preached by E. M. Carr, of Canton. The lot, which is situated in the center of the town, cost $150, the building about $1,600. This has a tower, belfry and vestibule on one corner and pulpit, platform and choir loft on the opposite corner in the interior. The entire church floor is covered with a handsome all wool ingrain carpet. When all bills are paid it is estimated that there will be about $350 incumbrance, drawing 6 per cent.

ROFF, I. T.

Our new house of worship at this place was dedicated by Bro. S. R. Hawkins, of South McAlester, corresponding secretary of Indian Territory missions, on October 29. We needed $275 to meet all obligations, except a loan of $400 from the Board of Church Extension, and we secured $283.

The cost of the house, which will seat 300, was about $2,500. It is a result of the sacrifices of consecrated men and women; sacrfices such as few in the old states ever know. When I began work here two years ago there was a membership of 32, with no property, but there was an opportunity and we improved it.

We now have 137 members and successful departments. During the progress of our building we took the collections for foreign, home and territory missions and for church extension and orphans' homes. Though the offerings were not large, we wanted a fellowship in the good work.

I think this is a fair sample of what can be done in many places in the Indian Territory by a prayerful practice of faith and work. E. S. Allhands.

ARBELA, MO.

The new church at Arbela, Mo., has been dedicated. This is the youngest mission of Scotland county work. A little over one year ago the county evangelist held a meeting there in the Baptist church. Later a move was made which resulted in a beautiful little building. M. J. Nicoson, of Memphis, had charge of the dedication. Six hundred dollars were needed to pay the debt and $698 were raised. J. M. Jayne, the county president, was there and his work had much to do with the success of the day. Preachers present and assisting in the services are C. A. Hicks, J. D. Bruce, C. V. Pearce, J. A. Grow and Rev. Little. M. J. Nicoson.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidently made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this recipe free, only asking two 2-cen tstamps to pay expenses. This herb also cures Night Sweats, Nausea at the Stomach, and will break up a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Iowa Bible School.

At the state convention in June it was decided to make some radical changes in the work. In the first place, the "Evangelistic Work," done by our workers, the holding of protracted meetings, was abandoned except in the rare cases where an institute grew into a meeting. Then, to get out of the way of State Missions and other interests, the Rally day in September, on which we made our appeal for funds, was abandoned. In its stead we were to combine with the American Board and push Boys' and Girls Rally day in November and divide receipts. The schools which were to pay direct were asked to pay quarterly.

The financial result for the first four months, so far as the schools are concerned, is that the offerings have been by far the smallest in the history of our work. On the other hand, the amount of work called for and done, and the money received for field work is greatly in excess of that of any other year.

Whether Iowa is willing to support an exclusive Sunday school work is a question which is yet to be solved. If the schools and the preachers simply neglect to send in the money to support it, it will die. That is all that is necessary to kill it—neglect it. On the other hand, a rally by its friends between now and Christmas will insure its triumphant continuance. Write me what you will do. J. H. Bryan.

Plan of Work in Kansas.

The last state convention set a new pace for the coming year in state missions. It means "enlargement," in big letters. The impression that we had been working on "a five cent basis" too long seemed to be the universal sentiment. The time had come for a forward movement.

Accordingly the Committee on Future Work brought in a report recommending that an additional state evangelist be placed in the field, on a guaranteed salary, making two state evangelists thus supported. Also that a Bible school superintendent be employed on a guaranteed salary, and that he be one of the best that can be obtained in the brotherhood.

The rally cry was raised to eight thousand dollars, and a diligent effort is to be made to secure an offering from every church in the state.

The above recommendations represent a distinct advance, and this addition of new workers means an additional financial outlay on the part of the state board, though these workers are to raise all they can on the field. They are to work mainly among our weaker churches and schools where the need is greatest, consequently the field support will necessarily be limited. Here will be, therefore, a splendid opportunity for those who are strong to help support the weak.

In addition to the evangelistic work which must be supported the state board has received numerous appeals for aid to support weak churches in the employment of a preacher. There are many of these, and all are deserving. They are looking to the state board, for there is no one else to whom they can go. There are eleven congregations whose doors are closed, no meetings of any kind being held in these buildings. Recently two of them were sold for debt. Brethren of Kansas, if these doors are ever opened for the proclamation of the primitive Gospel, the state board should, nay, will have to, take the initiative, but the board can not do this unless the brotherhood of the state places the means in the hands of the board. At the last meeting of the state board it was decided to make no appropriations for mission points until the January meeting, thus giving time for the churches to take the offering for state work on state day, November 5.

Therefore, it all depends upon what the churches do during November. "It is up to the churches." There was never a time when so much depended upon this date. The preachers and churches hold the key to the situation. They can untie the hands of the state board, or they can let them remain tied during the entire year.

And we are encouraged to believe that the response will be generous and universal. Orders are coming in every mail for pastoral letters and collection envelopes which we are furnishing free. Up to the present writing cheering words have come from the following brethren: C. A. Finch, F. E. Mallory, F. H. Bentley, Topeka; Homer Foltz, Oakland; F. W. Emerson, Yates Center; W. M. Berkeley, Marion; W. W. Blanchard, Stockton; J. Ed. Stevens, Goodland; L. S. Ridnour, Osawatomie; L. W. Myers, Blue Rapids; Chas. S. Early, Ottawa; Ernest E. Denney, Pittsburg; F. M. Branic, Junction City.

Brethren, let Kansas missions have the right of way during November. We await your response with anxiety. An offering from every church and a gift from every member must be the motto.

In behalf of the state board,

W. S. Lowe.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 5.—I have been at this First Church, Allegheny, Pa., of which Wallace Tharp is pastor, seven days with 72 added; 41 to-day. We had 273 added here six years ago.—Chas. Reign Scoville.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Canton, O., Nov. 5.—Four hundred and 7 added in 31 days. We are continuing. —Welsheimer and Kendall.

ALABAMA.

Mobile, Nov. 2.—Two accessions by letter and two confessions. Claude F. Hill is pastor.—James H. Robinson..

ARKANSAS.

Hope, Oct. 31.—Splendid services Sunday; four more additions—two confessions, two by statement. Largest audiences in history; turned people away Sunday night. Seven were baptized into Christ.—Percy G. Cross.

Hot Springs—Jewell Howard, of Plano, Texas, visited us for ten days and we had 13 additions.—T. N. Kincaid.

Marshall, Oct. 29.—Our meeting here will close tomorrow night. Ten additions so far. Had large crowds and fine attention. The church has engaged my services for another meeting in August, 1906 They will erect a new house of worship next year.—R. O. Rogers.

CALIFORNIA.

San Bernardino, Oct. 23.—Our work at San Bernardino is booming. We had nine additions last Sunday, making 17 so far this month. I organized a church at Rialto last Sunday afternoon. There will soon be a strong church there. I preach for them regularly every Sunday at 3 o'clock.—H. E. White

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, Oct. 24.—Present at ministers' meeting: Pres. J. E. Stuart, E. B. Bagby, W. T. Laprade, Daniel E. Motley, F. D. Power, Walter F. Smith, J. E. Gorsuch, and the writer. Reports: Whitney Ave. (Walter F. Smith), one by letter; Thirty-fourth St. (Claude C. Jones), two by letter; Vermont Ave. (F. D. Power) 10—nine by letter and one confession; Ninth St. (E. B. Bagby), six—three by letter and three confessions; Fifteenth St. (J. E. Stewart, pastor and J. E. Gorsuch, evangelist), seven—six by letter or statement and one confession. Total 26—21 by letter or statement and five confessions. Beautiful Kimmel Memorial Hall adjoining Whitney Ave. church was dedicated Oct. 22 by F. D. Power. Meetings continue at Fifteenth St. and at H. St. churches.—Claude C. Jones, Sec.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, Oct. 30.—One confession at our regular morning service at Church Street Christian Church, three since last report. Our audiences are growing.—T. Henry Blenus.

ILLINOIS.

Lake Fork, Oct. 31.—Meeting closed Sunday night with 42 additions: 32 by confession: one from the Baptists, three restored and six by statement. This makes 108 additions to this church this year, and 123 additions on the field this year. Evangelist J. Bennett conducted the revival.—J. D. Williams, minister.

Jacksonville, Oct. 30.—Six added to this congregation last Sunday, all by letter. C. C. Smith, of Cincinnati, was with us at the morning service and gave us a splendid message on "Work Among the Colored People of the South." Our chorus choir of 40 young Christians is a prominent part of the regular church service.—Guy B. Williamson, assistant pastor.

Toluca, Oct. 30.—Six more added: two by letter and four by confession and baptism. This makes 13 additions at the regular services in the last four weeks. Audiences are twice as large as one year ago.—S. P. Telford, pastor.

Camp Point, Oct. 31.—Have just closed a revival at Lake Fork, Ill., with 52 added, J. D. Williams, pastor. Begin at Bement, Ill., Nov. 1.—Evangelist J. Bennett.

Danville, Nov. 5.—The First Church of Christ is in a revival meeting with 12 additions to date. F. G. Tyrrell, of Chicago, is the evangelist. We expect a great meeting. —J. H. Smart, pastor.

Arcula, Nov. 2.—Three baptisms last Sunday. This makes nine not previously reported.—L. T. Faulders.

Chicago.—The annual meeting (seventh year) of the Austin Christian church was held Nov. 1. Almost the entire membership was present. The church now numbers 201. There was a net gain of 40 during the year, 23 by baptism. Money raised for all purposes, $2,892.26 Gave to missions, $151.63. The present pastor, Geo. A. Campbell, has been with the church since January, 1898.

Aurora.—The church has had two additions, one by baptism and one by letter.—Jas. W. Miller, clerk.

Herrin, Nov. 5.—Closed a good meeting at Girard. We have begun a meeting here with W. A. Hunter.—C. A. Hill and wife.

INDIANA.

Waveland, Nov. 3—The three weeks' meeting at Brown's Valley resulted in six confessions and baptisms. J. C. Ashley donated his services for what the church felt like giving. The congregation was greatly encouraged and strengthened, while the whole community was deeply stirred.—S. D. Watts, minister.

Terre Haute, Oct. 30.—There was one confession at the College Avenue church last night and one added the Sunday before by statement. We will be able to occupy the Sunday school room of our new church about Dec. 1.—Leonard V. Barbre.

Edinburg.—Closed a three weeks' meeting with 38 additions. J. T. Adams, of Hartsville, led the singing. The local minister did the preaching. The hearty co-operation of the members of the church did much to promote the interest of the meeting. W. H. Book, of Columbus, preached three nights and gave his lecture to men Sunday afternoon. God is blessing the efforts of his people here, and every branch of work is advancing.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Tulsa, Oct. 30.—Meeting with home forces closed with 25 additions; also two other additions unreported. We recently paid $117 on extension loan, put carpet in the church and secured a supply of song books and Bibles for the church. Our work prospers here, as is the case all over the Territory. —Randolph Cook, minister.

Checotah, Oct. 30.—We began a series of meetings yesterday. There has been little preaching here for a year; however, I find some splendid workers and a live Sunday school. One accession yesterday. Prospects are fine. Will want to correspond with some good, consecrated man with view to taking the work here. This is a fine town in a splendid country.—Frank L. Van Voorhis.

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga, Has Hit on a New Idea.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a southern physician, Dr. J. W. Blosser, of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1.00 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package, and an illustrated book.

IOWA.

Des Moines, Nov. 4.—Our meeting is developing splendidly; 88 added at the close of the third week. Bright prospects for the future. Miss Pauline Wambaugh who assists me regularly in the work here is in charge of our meeting music, and rendering most efficient service.—Chas. S. Medbury.

KANSAS.

Junction City. Oct. 31.—I just closed a meeting at Sutphen Mills, Kan. Ten additions.—F. M. Branic.

Hoisington, Oct. 30.—One restored.—F. M. McHale.

North Topeka, Oct. 30.—Evangelist J. W. Garner, of Perkins, Okla., closed a two weeks' meeting last night with 20 accessions—three by primary obedience, four from the denominations and the remainder came from our own congregations elsewhere, either by statement or letter. A good meeting.—F. H. Bentley, pastor.

Chanute, Oct. 30.—Three more confessions yesterday, following the meeting that closed a week ago. Good work now in all departments.—G. W. Kitchen.

city on last Lord's day. There were seven added. Prospects are for a good meeting. C. P. Smith is the faithful pastor.—L. L. Carpenter.

Highland, Oct. 30,—J. W. Walters, of Webster City, Ia., closed a 22 days' meeting. Additions, 23—baptisms 12. Cold, rainy weather during most of the meeting. Brother Walters is now at McPherson.—H. Lomax, minister.

Burlington, Oct. 31.—Victor L. Goodrich, of Independence, has just closed for us at Pleasant Hill, Coffey county, a splendid meeting with 21 additions. Our pastor, A. B. Moore, continued the meeting two nights longer with seven additions—28 in all.—A. W. Lane.

Ann Arbor, Nov. 3.—Thirteen additions for the month of October—three by baptism and 10 by letter.—A. C. Gray.

MISSOURI.

New Hampton, Oct. 29.—Closed a short meeting at Martinsville, Monday evening with home forces. Eleven added—four confessions and seven otherwise; sixteen since July, which indicates a healthy growth. Begin at New Hampton Sunday. G. W. Terrel will do the preaching.—J. T. Alsup.

St. Joseph, Nov. 4.—We had a good meeting at Troy, Kansas, Oct. 1-15, with seven additions to the church. I preach for them two Sundays in each month.—N. Rollo Davis.

Kirksville, Oct. 30.—At prayer-meeting last Wednesday, two made the good confession. One being Professor Harvy, one of the leading educators in the State Normal. Eight took membership with the congregation yesterday. This makes 52 the past eight weeks. The church here is in earnest and the Lord is blessing their labors.—D. A. Wickizer, pastor.

Albany, Nov. 2.—We spent the month of October in a series of meetings with J. P. Garmong, of Des Moines. It was a pleasant and profitable month's work. There were about fifty additions and a revival in all the departments of the church. We take up the series again Dec. 3, and bring the meeting up to a consummation and we are planning for greater work in all lines.—C. H. Mattox, minister.

St. Louis, Fourth Church.—Meeting led by R. A. Omer, closed with 30 additions. Some excellent material.—E. T. McFarland.

Maryville, Nov. 2.—S. M. Martin has just closed here. The meeting continued eight Sundays, and the results were 60 additions to the church. Bad weather interfered and we really should have continued another week in order to get the full benefit of the interest we had created. The three strong points of Brother Martin's work are: 1. His plain preaching to the members of the church. 2. His strong doctrinal preaching. 3. His financial teaching toward the close of the meeting. We have received great good from the meeting. The results told upon our prayer-meeting last night, making it much larger than usual.—H. A. Denton, pastor.

Plattsburg.—Am in a meeting here, 20 additions to date; 19 by confession.—G. L. Snively.

Columbia, Oct. 30.—Brooks Bros'. meeting closed Wednesday night Oct. 25, with 217 additions; since then we have had 15, making for the month of October, 232; about 150 by confession and baptism. The meeting has been of great benefit to the church and the town. The preaching was plain, practical and helpful throughout. The house, which holds 1,200 people, was crowded at almost every service, often many were turned away. There was but one service throughout the meeting at which there were no confessions. The singing, led by A. K. Brooks was an important feature of the meeting. The present membership of the church is 1,000. The membership at the beginning of the present pastorate 10 years ago was 410. During this time about 700 letters have been granted.—C. H. Winders.

Libertyville, Nov. 1.—Our meeting of two weeks closed Oct. 30, with 20 by baptism and two by statement. John S. Zeran and wife conducted the singing and in consequence of the failure to secure the services of evangelist J. T. H. Stewart, of Ohio, the meeting was carried on by several preachers as they could spare their time as follows: Hale, Owers, Zeran, Robinson and Dodson. All the members "had a mind to work" and put their shoulders to the wheel.—S. W. Robinson.

Moscow Mills, Oct. 30.—I held a two weeks' meeting at New Galilee, Lincoln Co., with seven confessions, E. M. Carr, Canton, is the regular preacher.—O. J. Gray.

Louisiana, Oct. 31.—Three were baptized at our regular service last Lord's day; we are having a good Bible School. E. B. Rule is the efficient superintendent and other departments of the work are prospering.—E. J. Lampton.

La Monte, Oct. 30.—The meeting closed formally last Sunday night. There were 17 conversions, one reclaimed. It was a good meeting from the start. The music was especially good under Professor McVey. Thirteen of those added were young men. The church in La Monte is in excellent condition spiritually. A small balance is due on the new building, but that is provided for and will be forthcoming by our annual meeting on Jan. 1, 1906. Brother McVay went to Burlington, Kan., for November and goes to Vinton, Ia., for December, to Petersburg, Ill., for January and to Ipava for February. I expect to leave for my old home at Barbourville next Monday for a visit with my aged mother and others of my kin. The churches around in this section of the country are all doing well.—I. H. Fuller.

Plattsburg, Nov. 2.—Evangelist J. M. Elam, of Carthage, Ill., has just closed a meeting for me at Frankford, Mo., with 31 added—19 by confession, 12 otherwise, and the church very much strengthened.—J. M. Baily.

St. Joseph, Nov. 4.—During the two years' and four months I have been with the King Hill church the debt of $300 has been paid, gas lights put in the church, the church papered and a nice carpet put on the floor, a baptistery built and the church has contributed to nearly all missionary interests. They are now up with my salary and owe but very little on their improvements. The First Christian Church of this city has paid $200 a year on my salary and have given the money to build the baptistery, for which we are indeed thankful. The Bible school has been largely increased and 128 persons have been added to the congregation; 88 of them coming during our tent meeting last September in which W. A. Moore, Bible School secretary, did the preaching. There were two additions my last preaching day and one the previous day.—N. Rollo Davis.

Pierce City, Nov. 5.—To day was a great day at Pierce City. The church raised the full apportionment for state missions and thirty dollars for county missions; every department of the work is improving.—Joseph Gaylor, State Evangelist.

NEW YORK.

New York City, Oct. 31.—We have had three more additions to the Lenox Avenue Union church. Miss Mattie Burgess addressed the ladies Oct. 25. Great plans are being made for the Scoville and Smith meeting in January. We expect to have C. S. Medbury with us Feb. 4. Bro. Lichtenberger is "doing things." Our work is growing. The future is bright for a great harvest.—R. E. Carpenter, clerk.

Buffalo, Oct. 31.—Three added recently—two by confession and baptism. Our great simultaneous evangelistic meetings including over 70 congregations of Buffalo, will begin Nov. 5, and last 10 to 20 days. Following this union effort the various churches of the city will hold meetings of their own. Ten or more well-known union evangelists will speak nightly.—B. S. Ferrall.

OHIO.

Bell Center, Oct. 17.—H. F. MacLane, as evangelist, has just closed a four weeks' meeting during which time 53 were added to the church. Every department of the work is looking up and all are very hopeful for the future of the church. Mrs. Minnie Frink Duck led the singing.—H. E. Beckler, minister.

OKLAHOMA.

Enid, Oct. 30.—We have just closed a splendid revival meeting in our church. Homer T. Wilson did the preaching. There were immense audiences. There were 22 additions. Bro. Wilson went from here to Denver, Col., to hold a meeting.—Scott Anderson, pastor.

Chandler, Nov. 1.—Nine more additions here. This makes 57 during the past seven months.—J. E. Dinger, minister.

Oklahoma City, Oct. 30.—Seven added to our membership yesterday, 157 in 14 months. Prospects bright.—Sherman B. Moore.

Lahoma, Oct. 30.—We had two additions yesterday—a United Brethren preacher and his wife. He has been baptized and I will baptize his wife. He is a man of influence and ability and will preach the New Testament plea.—J. D. Lawrence.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Ellwood, Oct. 29.—The battle is on, we have stormed the strongholds of satan, and the opening gun has been fired in behalf of the unsaved in Western Pennsylvania. Our simultaneous movement in Western Pennsylvania is going to stir this section as it never was stirred before, and all shall know from the least to the greatest who we are and what we stand for as Disciples of Christ. Ten thousand souls in this campaign is our slogan.—Fred F. Schultz.

NEHEMIAH'S PRAYER.—Neh. 1:1-11.

About a century and a half had now elapsed since the beginning of captivity. There had not been a complete depopulation of the land, and during the latter half of the period considerable bodies of pilgrims had returned. Over forty thousand came with Zerubbabel with the permission and help of Cyrus. Five thousand came with Ezra. It is entirely probable that other companies had returned from time to time and that there was more or less passing to and fro between Palestine and Babylonia.

But Judah was still in a desperate condition. The rebuilding of the temple, accomplished twenty years after the first return under Zerubbabel, had not resulted in the permanent revival of religion as was expected. The people mingled and intermarried with their ancient heathen neighbors, and the danger of national disintegration was even greater than it had been in the captivity. The cities were still partly in ruins and their walls unbuilt. The decadent religious condition had drawn Ezra, the scribe, from Babylon to attempt its reformation. The pitiable physical and material status of the Jews in Judea were the motive for the work of Nehemiah, the king's cupbearer, who became governor.

Nehemiah was a Jew who had attained high rank at the Persian court, a circumstance which indicates that even the best of the Jewish people did not feel it their duty to be separatists from the social life about them. It shows, also, that the participation in public affairs was not necessarily demoralizing. The career and character of Nehemiah are an argument in favor of the belief that the people of God ought to participate to the fullest extent in the life of the world—and also that they ought to leave honors, ease and social position when the cause of God presents an opportunity for service. Nehemiah had an honorable and lucrative post at the king's court, but his name is remembered only because he left the court to engage in a work which must have seemed very trivial to the Persian nobles of his social circle.

At Sushan, the winter residence of the Persian court, Nehemiah had a conference with his brother Hanani and a company of travelers who had just returned from Judea. They gave a very discouraging report of the conditions. The broken walls, the burnt gates, the ruined cities, the "affliction and reproach" which had come upon the feeble remnant which now represented the Hebrew people in the home of their fathers—these were the things which appealed to him. He hid two things; he prayed and he set to work to remedy the conditions.

The prayer which Nehemiah voiced on this occasion was based on Jehovah's covenant with Israel. He recalls the promise that was made through Moses, that it was conditional upon the obedience of the people, and that assurance had been given of forgiveness and restoration to favor if they repented after evil-doing. So Nehemiah acting as self-appointed spokesman for his nation, makes a general confession and prays for a return of God's blessings upon Judah.

PEOPLE WHO MAKE CAUSES PREVAIL. —Num. 13:30; 14:6-10; Luke 12:32-40; Rev. 12:10, 11.

Back of Every Victory Stands the Victor. Every noble cause that succeeds in the world finds its embodiment in a great soul, who, while others groaned under the intolerable yoke, alone struck the blow that presaged freedom. Moses came from the wilderness unto captive Israel, as a herald of the freedom for which they had ceased to hope; and from his heroic spirit the contagion of patriotism spread throughout the nation. Luther gave voice to the longing for spiritual freedom which had been shut up in the dumb heart of Europe for many generations. He became the living dynamo by which the holy wrath of men's outraged consciences shook the throne of the Pope. American patriotism embodied itself in the heroes of the revolution, among whom stood unrivalled the noble Washington. To the reader of the story of that dread conflict, it seems as if that one sublime figure stood at times as the sole bulwark of our hope of liberty. And in the universal conflict with sin and death, do we not all turn to the Son of God as the one in whom are incarnated that strength and wisdom, that mercy and love, which alone can bring victory? Three instances are given in our lesson of this principle.

1. Moses, Caleb and Joshua. Three men stood between a nation and its ruin. Unlike King Saul, in later years, who listened to the voice of the people, and disobeyed the command of God, these men braved the wrath of the multitude to uphold the word of Jehovah. They believed in God, and the people did not. They were fearless, and the people cowardly. They were spiritual, and the people carnal, caring more for the flesh pots of Egypt with slavery than the milk and honey of Canaan with liberty. It was these three qualities, faith, courage and spirituality, that made the three leaders more than a match for the thousands around them.

2. The Servants of Christ. It is the marvel of history that Jesus could so calmly leave this world after his resurrection, and commit his cause, which involved the hope of humanity for all ages, to a handful of obscure and unlearned men. To their anxious hearts, dimly foreseeing his departure and dreading their own impotence, he says: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Theirs but to empty the heart of all earthly ambitions, and fill it with the treasures of eternal truth and hope; theirs but to be faithful, ever alert to hear his voice and fulfill his will, and success is sure to come to their endeavors. History has already vindicated the confidence of Jesus in his disciples, and their faith in his promises.

3. The Martyrs for Christ. Never has Christianity gained such victories as when it seemed in the way of extermination. Ages of persecution have been followed by eras of deeper faith. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church," and when men have laid down their lives in testimony of their faith they have thwarted the plans of the enemy, and established their holy cause. John heard the voice from heaven saying, "They overcame him by the blood of the lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death." Faith that incarnates itself in a willingly surrendered life can meet with no obstacle which it can not overcome. May such faith be ours.

MEDICAL MISSIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.—Mark 1:29-34.

For the Leader.

Medical Missions is a theme that affords material for the most eloquent sermons ever preached. In fact, the most eloquent preacher the world ever knew was a medical missionary. No one has gone beyond him in the art of healing the sick in the flesh as a means to the soul to the end that it might be healed. Do we not remember the vivid descriptions of the many days of healing and preaching upon the part of our Savior as given by the four evangelists? How full was that life of work, and how much of that work was in the nature of a healing!

Since the close of the personal ministery of Jesus a new form has been assumed by medical missions. Now his disciples go out to the far off and benighted portions of the world prepared to administer the art of healing as taught by medical science of today. The means are different from those used by the Savior; the results are the same. Could there be a more noble or more fascinating work than that which is the counterpart of the healing ministrations of our Savior, or as near the counterpart as we can have? This, then, is the topic of the meeting tonight. Let each one realize all from this meeting that the Lord would have him receive.

For the Members.

1. Evangelism was first in the ministry of Jesus. But healing was one of his methods of evangelism. Everywhere he went the sick crowded to him, and his sermon was sometimes stopped for a time that he might heal the sick. Then, taking a fresh text from the incident, he would preach on to the increased audience. The cries of the suffering and the rejoicing of the healed were mingled in the same service in many of the meetings of the Lord. He began amidst scepticism; he closed amidst belief. On every hand they proclaimed his praises and power. Only the officials of a decadent church stood off criticising. Have we ever thought what would have been the fortunes of the ministry of Jesus were it not for his power of healing? How much greater headway the opposition would have had with this withdrawn?

2. We have a double preparation and a double ministery in a medical missionary. He is educated and qualified for the ministry of the Word. He is also given a medical course and goes to his field equipped with a first-class education in the art of healing. Entering the new field in some foreign country, he gets easy access to the hearts and homes of the people through his work as a physician. In these countries medical skill, in proportion to the millions that are suffering from ailments, great and small, is almost altogether confined to the missionaries. The prejudice against the Christian religion, and against foreigners, is strong. It may often be that the missionary would never get access to many homes were it not for his medicines. He goes as one who can heal the body, but is known as a man of God, or of Jesus, and is tolerated because he can save life in the flesh. His cures are marvels to those who look on, and life to those who are treated. At once he advances from the place he now holds in the esteem of the healed and his friends to the importance of the healing of the soul from sin. He preaches Christ to his hearers. You can see at once how great his success may be as a result of this introduction through medical work.

3. But to come closer home, let us study some of our own medical missionaries. The Christian Church has some great medical missionaries in India, China, Tibet and Africa. In India there is Dr. C. C. Drummond at Hurda. He went out from the state of Nebraska. He is a Cotner man. He is now in America on his first furlough. He is a quiet man, but his work is the very best in all India. In Tibet are Dr. A. L. Shelton and Dr. Susie C. Rijnhart. Their first baptisms were on July 7 of this year. Dr. Rijnhart writes recently that she had treated three cases of attempted suicide in six days. They were young married women. We all remember Dr. Rijnhart as the wife of the faithful Brother Rijnhart, who was murdered in Tibet some years ago. This heroic woman, after telling the most thrilling story ever told of hardships and danger in this hermit kingdom, has returned to spend her life doing something for these benighted people. In China we have Dr. W. E. Macklin at Nanking. It is said that Dr. Macklin is one of the great men of China. His influence is wonderful. Healing the body, talking Jesus to his patients, treating thousands annually, performing all kinds of difficult operations, his work is magnified among the people, and many turn to the Lord. Time would fail if one tried to mention all our medical missionaries. We Endeavorers must not forget the Orphanage Hospital at Damoh, India, where our boys are.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Is my work in assisting the work of medical missions such as would make me willing to carry a report of it to Jesus, if I should be told that I could go to him with it and return after I had made it?

Current Literature.

Indian and Spanish Neighbors, by Julia H. Johnston. Price 50 cents net. Fleming H. Revell & Co., Publishers, New York, Chicago, Toronto.

This work is intended as a text book in all women's home mission societies. It is supposed to cover the needs and opportunities for work among the Indians and Spanish speaking people in our western states, and in Cuba and Porto Rico. The subjects discussed are: "The Redman's Burden"; "The Educational Problem"; "The Mission Field"; "The Earlier and Later Day Spanish Speaking People"; etc. The new relation of this country to Cuba and Porto Rico and the growing intercourse between our country and the republics south of us, make this a timely book for woman's home missionary societies.

Home Mission Readings, For Use in Missionary Meetings, by Alice M. Guernsey. Price, 50 cents net. Fleming H. Revell & Co., Publishers, New York, Chicago, Toronto.

It is encouraging to know that the intrest in Home Missions has grown to such a degree among the Protestant churches as to create a demand for such a volume as this. It consists of a series of short chapters adapted to use in an auxiliary or home mission meetings. Some of them consist of letters from the missionaries in the field, giving their experiences, and others treat of different phases of the subject. Such chapters as "A Package of Letters"; "Uncle Sam's How, D'y'-Do"; "With a Nurse Deaconness"; "Headlines"; "What Was the Use?"; "Girls and Girls"; "The Rummage Barrel"; "Gifts for Christ-child"; indicate the general character of the work.

The Representative Men of the New Testament, by Geo. Matheson D. D. A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York. 12mo, $1.50.

This is a companion to two volumes dealing with the representative men of the Old Testament. The work, says the author, is "neither critical nor historical, but mental." The reader is led into a gallery where hang fifteen portraits named: John the Expanded, John the Self-Surrendered, Nathaniel the Invigorated, Peter the Emboldened, Nicodemus the Instructed, Thomas the Convinced, Philip the Disillusioned, Matthew the Exalted, Zaccheus the Conscious-struck, James the Softened, Barnabas the Chastened, Mark the Steadied, Cronelius the Transplanted, Timothy the Disciplined, Paul the Illuminated. Here the key to each character study is a "descriptive verb indicating the particular influence exerted over the man and which transformed him." "Each portrait embodies a distinct thought." The author's purpose and position are: "Assuming the authenticity of the narratives and letters, what is the message which each life brings?" His spirit, his knowledge of human nature, his ability to see the best in men, and his consequent sympathetic interpretation combine to produce a work which can not be other than interesting, suggestive and illuminating. The whole story is a beautiful tribute to the transforming influence of Jesus upon character. This will prove a most helpful book for class or private study.

The Joy That No Man Taketh From You, by Lilian Whiting. Little, Brown & Co., Boston. Fifty cents net.

Affirms strongly that an indestructible inner radiance, a joy that shall survive, not only undimmed, but exalted and purified, privation, loss, disappointment trial even to death, is possible for and should be the possession of every soul. This joy is the abiding personal presence of the Christ. "Spiritual truth is the very breath of the soul." It is not a religious luxury, not the peculiar privilege of the devotee at the altar, but an absolute necessity in all human life, whose highest expression is love. Love is not passive; it is the force which achieves; it is the intensest form of energy. Faith in God, rather than "a treasure to be drawn upon on solemn and sacred occasions, is the universal aid in every aspect of human life and every variety of human affliction." The book is strong, earnest, direct and pleads for a faith at once spiritual and practical. It expresses much that is helpful in brief space.

The Harmony of the Gospels, in the words of the American Standard edition of the Revised Bible; An Outline of the Life of Christ, by John H. Kerr, D. D., author of "Introduction to New Testament Study." American Tract Society, 150 Nassau street, New York. Special price for limited time, $1.00 postpaid. Regular price, $1.50.

This new Harmony of the Gospels, the author tells us in his preface, is the outcome of teaching the life of Christ for a number of years in the San Francisco Theological Seminary. It is not an attempt, as he says, "to harmonize the gospel records, but simply to arrange the materials chronologically and in such a way that all the parallel passages are placed so as readily to see their agreements and differences." The author cuts loose entirely from the old plan of regarding the Passovers as the important marks of time in the life of Christ, and a tentative chronology is given. The life of Christ is here depicted in three periods, namely, those of "Preparation, Labor, and Triumph." The first period reaches down to the baptism of Jesus; the second through his Judean, Gallilean, and Perean Ministries, and the Passion Week, through to the resurrection; while the latter begins with that date and still continues. An arrangement like the foregoing, growing out of actual experience in teaching the life of Christ is likely to be found helpful to other students of that Life. It is a great point in its favor that it uses the American Standard Revised version.

MOHORTER.

Mrs. J. H. Mohorter, nee Katie Davis, was born at Iron Hill, Delaware, May 25, 1868, and passed into the life eternal October 19, 1905, at Pueblo, Colo. She was religious from childhood. Her earliest impressions and experiences were under the fostering care of the Methodist Church. J. L. Parsons, in June, 1887, in Newark, Deleware, baptized her into Christ. At about the same time he baptized J. H. Mohorter, who became her husband. They were married November 23, 1888. Soon the struggle began to secure an education and a place in the ministry of the Christian Church. If ever a woman was a helpmeet to her husband, and millions of them are, Mrs. Mohorter was such a woman. For her noble husband, for her family, for her church, she lived with a beautiful and steadfast devotion.

From 1889 to 1893 this earnest young woman and her devoted husband struggled on Hiram Hill, as students in Hiram College, Ohio. After his graduation they spent two years at Ashland, Ohio. Three or four years were spent with the Ætna Street Church in Cleveland. From Cleveland, in the spring of 1898, they went to Boston, coming to Pueblo in the autumn of 1903. Sister Mohorter's health gave way during her residence in Boston. She was the mother of five children, four survive and mourn the departure of a pure, devoted, unselfish, wise mother. During Brother Mohorter's student days in Hiram, his wife cared for the home and little family while she studied art and music.

The hearts of the Disciples of Christ wherever J. H. Mohorter is known will go out toward their stricken brother in loving sympathy. All Pueblo was in mourning on the day or the funeral. The Ministerial Association passed resolutions of sympathy, for the publication of which there is not space in this department of The Christian-Evangelist. Dr. S. H. Kirkbride, of the First Methodist Church, voiced the sentiments and emotions of the city pastors at the funeral services in the Central Christian Church. B. B. Tyler.

Denver, Col.

POTTS.

Ruth W. Pierce was born Oct. 6, 1865; departed this life Sept. 20, 1905. Her birthplace was Smithfield, Pa., where she spent most of her life. She married W. A. Potts. Since 1892 they have lived in Pekin. She leaves two sons, and is survived by two brothers and two sisters. She was a noble Christian wife and mother and very active in all good works. She left her wardrobe to the Old Folks' Home at Jacksonville. She requested that the church organizations send no flowers at her death because she felt that the money should be devoted to missionary purposes. Instead, the organizations united in establishing a life-membership in the C. W. B. M. for her son, Curran Pierce Potts. The funeral was conducted by the writer at the residence, Sept. 22, 1905.

Pekin, Ill. J. A. Barnett.

WEBER.

Joseph Weber was born at Wallnut Grove, Ill., June 22, 1855. He became a member of the Church of Christ in 1888, and his life has been the manifestation of an earnest care for his Master's service. His illness dates from the last of March, his suffering long and severe, his patience marvelous. He died at his home, three miles east of Brandon, Oct. 16, 1905. A wife and three children mourn their great loss.

Family Circle

Two Poets.

By Frank Honeywell.

Oh, tell me which poet is greater—
  Both study the Infinite plan—
The one who finds beauty in nature,
  Or he who finds nature in man?

Off into the woodland he ambles
  And dreams by the brook in the dale;
All life is a rhythm of gambols;
  The violet is queen of the vale.

He paints a word-picture of beauty,
  With a delicate deftness of mind,
And he draws a sweet lesson of duty
  That nature portrays to mankind.

And the toil-weary laborer reads it,
  And a mist passes over his eyes.
Such lesson—he feels that he needs it,
  But it comes in a sort of disguise.

Perchance he may, too, be a poet,
  Unlearned, unknown, care-oppressed,
With a well of soul-truth, could we know it,
  That a Milton has never possessed.

And the brook he sees times without number,
  And the violet, too, in the glade;
But his troubles fill waking and slumber,
  And he sees not the beauty God made.

The brook in some heat-blighted season
  Dries up, and the violet droops;
And the lessons march fast through his reason
  In epigrammatical groups.

"I've read the great poem of beauty,"
  He muses with half-bitter sigh;
"And its sweet admonitions of duty,
  But I stumble whenever I try.

"And the poet, I gladly would love him;
  Immaculate joy is his theme;
But he dreams with both hands stretched above him,
  Nor one down to me in his dream.

"If he'd mourn for the brook and the flower
  That are dying athirst for the love
That nature bestows in a shower,
  One hand would drop down from above;

"And he finds in my heart the dry river
  And the violet drooping, half-dead,
And he'd change to a love-shower giver,
  That he's keeping ungiven, unsaid."

Oh, tell me, which poet is greater—
  Both study the Infinite plan—
The one who finds beauty in nature,
  Or he who finds nature in man?

Fads I Have Followed.

BY WILLIAM BYRON FORBUSH.

There is no more faithful faddist than a boy. From the time he begins to enjoy any consecutive play his amusements may be divided into his games and his fads. His games fill his holidays and his outdoor hours when he is with his gang. His fads are for his evenings and rainy days, when he is alone or with his chum.

A boy's first fad is usually collecting. Surely you have not forgotten those one hundred and fifty canceled postage stamps that you glued into your father's old ledger with a sure and-dirty hand? Modern boys use gummed "stickers," but then the other fellows "swipe" their stamps. Nobody could swipe ours; they couldn't be pried off the paper. You have not forgotten, either, how you used to collect visiting cards. You bought them by mail order down in Connecticut for thirteen cents a hundred. They were brocaded, scrolled, water marked or striped, and some had colored cupids pasted over your name. These last you exchanged with the prettiest girls in school. You never used them for social purposes, still they were a certificate of friendship. There were some boys so mean that you wouldn't exchange cards with them.

The next fad was "swappin'." I remember the old cedar box in which I kept my capital. It contained a choice store of "agates" and "alleys" and an infinite variety of broken and useless trinkets. Many were the transactions, lasting all the afternoon, up in the attic under the rain-washed eaves, at which I became richer by one tarnished brass buckle, or poor by one alley taw.

These commercial transactions led naturally to the fad of money making. Weekly allowances were unknown in my time. Daily and weekly publications had not begun to allure boys from their play to make a nuisance of themselves hawking these literary wares. But you remember how you waited all the early fall the coming of "the premium number" of the "Youth's Companion"? Probably you never secured a subscriber, possibly you never tried. What was the use? All the fellows and most of the grown-ups took it. But when that premium number came you were, at least in fancy, possessor of all the treasures of that great warehouse.

I have not forgotten my adventure with the garnets. I had just begun to study mineralogy. In my rambles I discovered some field garnets in the brook bed in my father's pasture. Here was a bonanza! My Sunday school teacher wore a garnet brooch two inches in diameter which I had long admired. I had about a bushel of the stones behind the butternuts in my father's corn barn and wrote the most extensive jeweler in New York, offering to divide the profits if he would cut and sell the stones. Some considerate clerk wrote me that garnets were worth about ten cents a ton.

At another time I began book canvassing. I started in the morning in a neighboring town with my satchel packed for a fortnight's absence. By four o'clock in the afternoon I was covering the last of the eleven miles that separated me from my mother, bent beneath my burden and meditating profitably on the parable of the Prodigal Son. I was amazed and grieved that my prudential return was received with unholy hilarity instead of with the sacred delight described in the Scriptures.

The fads of college days are varied. Gay raiment is sure to be one of them. My face mantles even now to think of the yellow toque with which I shed a genial warmth one winter on my return to my native town. Unexpectedness, too, characterizes the fads of the collegian. Subscribing to matrimonial papers and cultivating female correspondents in Methodist female seminaries in the middle west was the united enterprise of our dormitory one stormy February. Spinning tops is a Yale feature, and President Roosevelt is credited with initiating rope skipping as a form of gymnastics at Harvard.

If, as Gross says, childish play is a rehearsal of adult life, the fads of young men may be characterized as a deprecatory protest against adult seriousness.

The fads of mature men and women may be games, but they are quite as apt to be serious avocations. In the English edition of "Who's Who," each prominent Englishman is asked to state his fad. That of Lord Salisbury was chemistry, Mr. Gladstone's was the study of Homer, and that of another statesman was the raising of orchids. The recreation involved seems to be as real as in games. "If you can not afford a horse, ride a hobby," is a bit of wisdom that has saved many a care-burdened man from exhaustion or premature decay.

Good fortune has been the guide to discover many a helpful fad. It is the beginner's remarkable first day's play that swells the ranks of golf enthusiasts. The accidental purchase of a first edition of Bryant, worth fifteen dollars, for a nickel once started me on book collecting.

A fad may be defined as a discovery of unexpected values. If one can find new value, no matter in what, he adds a new avidity to life. I was disappointed one summer in taking a projected foreign tour. I decided to spend considerable time in Salem, Concord and Plymouth, making believe that these old towns were in a foreign land. I believe I pretended that I was Matthew Arnold. The result was a freshness of impression and a sense of historical perspective which, since then, visits to Italian cities have hardly surpassed. I have continued the habit, especially when I have been stranded for days in uninteresting middle western towns. Only a few days ago I stayed a week in a prosaic Indiana city, but I discovered there the last surviving character of "The Hoosier Schoolmaster."

DEAFNESS AND CATARRH CURED

BY "ACTINA"

Ninety-five per cent of all the cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache: all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial, postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Diseases, free. If it was once remarked of Ralph Waldo Emerson that the magnificent leisure of his journeyings through California was itself an argument for immortality, why might it not be said of the experienced faddist in any field as well, what Mr. Mabie had said of him whose fad is nature, that "Life is so vast, so unspeakably rich, that to have reported accurately one swift glimpse or to have preserved the melody of one rarely heard note, is to have mastered a part of the secret of the immortals?"—The Congregationalist.

A Word for the Jews.

The month of November is to be signalized by the celebration of the 250th anniversary of the advent to the United States of the first group of Jewish settlers, and Professor Abram S. Isaacs contributes a timely article to the November number of the "North American Review" on "The Jew in America." Professor Isaacs traces the distribution of the Jews throughout various parts of the country, and recounts the manner in which the Jew took part in the pioneer work which laid the foundations of prosperous communities, and did his full share in furthering the general interests of the country. The American environment has proved to be most favorable to the development of the highest qualities of the Jew, among which Professor Isaacs mentions his spirit of enterprise, his breadth of view, his patirotism, and his love of education. Says Professor Isaacs:

"What are the Jew's lines of occupation? He is active in business; he succeeds or fails according to his abilities. He enters every profession, is architect as well as plumber, is machinist, inventor, engineer, as well as merchant, lawyer, broker, pedler, drummer, or wage earner in the sweat shops. He can own mines or build theaters, run a ranch or a hotel. He can graduate from West Point or Annapolis, be painter or sculptor, financier or steamboat captain, motorman or policeman, steeplejack or street musician. He is emphatically no multi-millionaire, as some Baptists are, nor can it be said of him, as was stated few years ago of Presbyterians, that sixteen prominent bank and trust company presidents in New York city were of that church and in good standing. His wealth is absurdly overrated; doubtless the proverb, 'as rich as a Jew,' has much to answer for. Great masses of his people, not recent accessions exclusively, live from hand to mouth. A glance at the records of Jewish charitable societies in the large cities would show how widespread is Jewish poverty. He has his millionaires, it is true, in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, San Francisco, but the number is very limited. Moderate fortunes, due to thrift and enterprise, are more common; but even these are not so numerous as is popularly supposed. It was easier to disprove the notion that heretics had tails than that all Jews are rich."

Men and the Servant Problem.

A very welcome and appreciable change has come through the practical interest in the question shown by men. They have lectured and written on the subject, and have listened to the lectures on it given by women. This means that the subject is being recognized by them as worthy of study and discussion and as of importance to all—to men and to women alike—who are interested in the welfare of society. On its practical side also the interest of men is making itself felt. Chafing dish courses have been opened for men, where they have learned the preparation of the luxuries of the table, as the rough-and-ready experiences of camp life in summer vacations and in military campaigns have taught them how to prepare the necessities of life. Young men in college and young men living in bachelors' apartments are proud of their attainments in afternoon teas and chafing dish suppers, while men trained as nurses learn the preparation of delicacies for the sick. It is true, indeed, that cooking classes are but indirectly connected with domestic service, but anything and everything that breaks down artificial barriers, and that permits the free industrial entrance of both men and women into whatever occupation they prefer, is a direct gain to every line of work. Any one whose attention has been turned in the direction of securing household employ must constantly come in contact with the fact that there is a considerable number of men engaged in household employments for remuneration.—November Atlantic.

Dr. Stokes on Bonnets.

At the recent unveiling in Ocean Grove of the bronze statue of the late Dr. E. H. Stokes, a Methodist minister said.

"I knew Dr. Stokes well, and one of the things I most admired in him was his simplicity, his honesty, his plainness. He hated affectation and vanity, even in women; and in a good-humored way he would often poke fun at the freakish fashions that came up from time to time in woman's dress.

"I remember one summer, when the ladies' hats were very large, and a great many cherries and beans and grapes and so on covered them, Dr. Stokes went about Ocean Grove telling a hat story.

"He said there came a knock at a man's door one morning, and the man answered it, and then called upstairs to his wife:

"'Ann, here is the girl with the vegetables.'

"But the wife, coming down stairs hastily, called as she descended:

"'Don't be silly. It's my new hat.'"

Opportunities and Responsibilities of Leisured Women.

This is the substance of a thoughtful article by Mrs. Russell Sage in the November number of the "North American Review." Mrs. Sage begins with the frank admission that woman's highest duty is in the home, where her influence is more powerful for the lasting good of mankind than anywhere else. But there are many women whose domestic duties leave them leisure for other activities, either because they are unmarried or because their children have grown up. Mrs. Sage protests that too often this leisure is fritted away in frivolities, and she touches with dismay on the growth of the gambling habit among women whose time would hang heavily on their hands were it not occupied in some way. But there is a large field of usefulness open to such women, who are indeed accountable for the proper use of their opportunities. Every woman can make her town or village better. She ought to interest herself in civic affairs to make sure that her family receives a due return in service for the taxes it pays to the community. The town or village must be adequately policed for the protection of her daughter and the saving of her son from lurking evils. And there are sanitary conditions essential to health that must be jealously watched.

Queen of the Meadow.

Marjorie had been anxious to come to their summer home in the country, but she had not been there a week till she wished that she was back in the city. The trouble was that she had so many pleasures and playthings that she soon tired of them.

Dressed in her pretty starched, white gown, with a gaily trimmed straw hat on her brown curly head, Marjorie started for a walk in the field back of the cottage. She didn't expect to enjoy it, but she wanted to do something.

But it was not much fun walking in the meadow, for sticks and stones and sharp grasses scratched her glossy kid shoes, and dewberry vines caught spitefully at her silk stockings.

In an oak tree, half way across the meadow, sat a bare-footed girl, dressed in faded calico, who was singing shrilly and merrily:

> "I'm queen of the meadow, the meadow, the meadow;
> I'm queen of the meadow where sweet flowers grow."

Marjorie walked up to the tree and looked at the bare-footed little girl who seemed so happy.

"Hello," said Marjorie, "who are you?"

"I'm Queen of the Meadow," answered the little girl, soberly."

"Queen of the Meadow!" cried Marjorie, looking at her with wide open eyes. "Are you, truly?"

"Of course I am, and this tree is Green Oak Castle, and the woods that you see over there is my standing army, they dress in green, you know; and that clump of bushes is my special guard; they're obliged to watch the castle every minute to see that nothing happens to their queen."

Marjorie forgot all about being tired of life, and listened eagerly to the other little girl. "It sounds like a real fairy story," she said.

"It is a real fairy story," answered the Queen of the Meadow, "and I am the real queen."

"Can't I play, too?" asked Marjorie, who had forgotten for once all about her fine clothes, and didn't mind a bit because the other girl was poorly dressed.

"Let's play," said the Queen of the Meadow, "that you are a visiting princess and have come on a long journey to visit me; and I'll invite you up into my castle and show you the crown jewels."

"O, let's play that," cried Marjorie, delighted. "But I don't believe I can climb this tree, into the castle, I mean."

"Of course you can," cried the Queen of the Meadow, "if you just take off your shoes and stockings." So Marjorie took them off, and her hat, too, and went to visit Green Oak Castle.

And it was wonderful how quickly she scrambled up into the tree, with the aid of a big stone to stand on, and a helping hand

"You can be the Princess White Rose," from the little bare-footed queen above. said the queen, "'cause your dress is white. Now, I'll show you the crown jewels; but they are very precious, so when we find 'em we mustn't either of us touch 'em."

And up the uneven, winding oaken stairway of limbs went the Queen of the Meadow, from one branch to another, higher and higher, and after her climbed the visiting princess, White Rose, crumpling her pretty starched skirts and scratching her bare feet on the rough bark. But what of that? It was the most fun!

Marjorie wondered what the crown jewels were; she had no idea what they might be, but the queen seemed to know all about it.

When nearly to the top of the tree, the Queen of the Meadow said: "Here the jewels are in their casket," and Marjorie pulled herself up on a limb and looked where the queen pointed, and there were four blue robin's eggs like beautiful polished stones, resting in a soft nest.

"O," cried the Princess White Rose, "can't I have one, just one egg? The old mother bird will never know the difference."

"Yes, she will," cried the Queen of the Meadow, sharply. "We mustn't handle 'em; if we do it might break up the nest; let's go down now."

"I won't touch 'em if I ought not to," said the princess; "I didn't know it made any difference."

"Let's sit under the tree and talk a while," said the other girl.

So they scrambled down from the Green Oak Castle and sat in the shade of the tree; while the queen, whose real name was Ruth Mason, told Marjorie that she lived on the cross road in a little log cabin on the other side of the meadow, and that she had to work mornings, washing dishes, tending the baby, and helping her mother, but that she had part of every afternoon for herself, and that she had the best times playing "Queen of the Meadow," and that it was twice as much fun with Marjorie to play with her.

And Marjorie learned that she could enjoy herself in the country after all; for she had found a friend who, without expensive toys and fine clothes, had taught her how to be happy.—Junior Herald.

A Week with the Woodneys.

THE SIXTH DAY—AFTER DINNER.

When the services were at an end, Worth Acre walked home with the Miss Days, that the Woodneys might have their son to themselves. It was seldom that the blacksmith found himself in the society of the three maiden sisters. He occupied the rather embarrassing position of rejected suitor, and at the same time of unwelcome guest, whenever he went to the Day cottage. It was not only that Miss Lizzie had refused him her hand, but that her sisters had highly approved, nay, had even influenced her decision. Miss Polly and Miss Susie suspected that Miss Lizzie still felt a sentimental regard for Worth after the lapse of twenty years, and while they considered a marriage between a Day and a blacksmith as an impossibility, they were not sure that the youngest Day was firm in her convictions. Worth, nevertheless, sometimes visited their home, where, ignoring all that threatened unpleasantness, he brought brightness and high spirits, and shocked the modest echoes of the quaint little rooms with his hearty laughter. The Days sometime wondered if he had forgotten the romance of his youth, when Lizzie, fresh from a boarding school, had so far forgotten proprieties as to fall in love with him. To look into his honest, jolly face, it was difficult to believe a secret sorrow was hidden in his bosom. The more he laughed the better Miss Polly and Miss Susie were pleased. They liked him, but they could not like him as sisters. With Miss Lizzie it was different; sometimes when his loud "Ha! ha! ha! ha!" was ringing, she would dart toward him a reproachful look, or at least, one full of wonder, as if she did not understand how he could be so merry, unless, indeed, he had long since ceased to care for her. But she did not think he had ceased to care, and that is why his jolly ways and his evident enjoyment of life puzzled and even shocked her, at times. Life was not very gay for Miss Lizzie. She saw it slipping away, carrying with it the last of her youth and bloom, the last of her romance and dreams. She was thirty-eight, and the windows of thirty-eight look upon forty, and forty is but a younger sister of fifty, and fifty means gray hair and retrospection. If anything were to happen, it must happen pretty soon—that was Miss Lizzie's feelings; for, in truth, she still imagined that something might happen. Once she had hoped Worth would trade the occupation of blacksmith for one of the elegant professions, but he proved inflexible in his determination to do the work his heart was in, and not to undertake a life work unsuited to his tastes and abilities. "I am a good blacksmith," he would say, "and the world needs me more than it does a poor lawyer or an incompetent doctor." Miss Lizzie's eyes sometimes timidly asked, "Not even for my sake?"

When they reached the gate of the Days, the sisters did not ask Worth to come in. Well, it was nearly time to get dinner, so it was hardly to be expected. Still, it had been so long since Worth had walked by Miss Lizzie's side that he was in a condition to expect almost anything. "Isn't it a splendid day!" cried Worth, looking about upon the earth, as it quivered with delight in its noon bath of glorious sunshine. Miss Polly and Miss Susie agreed with him, but still they did not invite him in. On the contrary, they said "good-bye" and went to the house. Miss Lizzie lingered at the gate.

"Do you know tomorrow is September?" asked Worth, looking down upon her from his side of the gate. "Doesn't it remind you of schools and picnics? The world smells like it did when I was a boy. Do you ever notice that? Sometimes I come out of my shop, not thinking about anything in particular except my work, and I get a whiff of the outdoors, and—well, it's a funny thing, I know! A curious little thrill runs up and down and I seem to smell odors of bygone years. Of course, the world is heated and cooled like it always was, but it isn't always that we can get back our old feelings."

"Have you the old feeling today?" asked Miss Lizzie, who was tracing invisible letters on the gate with a rusty nail.

"I suppose it was singing those hymns," he answered vaguely. "I naturally felt like asking you to let me see you home from church—as I used to, you know."

"Well," she answered, "you did see me home from church. I am glad. Once in awhile it's good to feel young. Not too often—it might spoil one, you know."

"What are you writing?" he asked, as her eyes followed her hand intently.

"Nothing," she answered, starting, and dropping the rusty nail. "I must go now. Good-bye."

"And come again?" Worth suggested, trying to look into her eyes.

She hesitated. She wanted him to come, but her sisters did not. The color mounted to her brow, but she could not meet his gaze.

"Well, I'll come any way," Worth declared "but I won't bring my blacksmith shop with me. Try to get Polly and Susie braced up for a visit just about tomorrow night. I've got one of my homesick spells to see you and sit near you, and hear your voice. These spells come every once in a while—a sort of periodical intoxication, and I can't overcome them. Would you like for me to reform, Lizzie?"

"I am a prohibitionist," said Miss Lizzie, looking up at last. A playful, tender smile shone in her eyes, and for a moment she was very youthful and pretty. "Still, Worth, in case of sickness—" She paused, still smiling and blushing.

"Yes," said Worth, "regular home sickness—sure enough sickness of the heart. Then you'll be glad to see me, and not too much afraid of Susie? Good-bye." He walked away with a brisk step. His face was beaming. Arthur Lowell did not come to dinner. Worth supposed him dining with the Woodneys. In the afternoon the blacksmith went to take a walk, all alone. He had many things to reflect upon; every sentence Miss Lizzie had spoken, every gesture and look she had given, required careful and loving consideration. He wandered aimlessly out into the country and came back by the deserted church. Something in its ruined yet picturesque aspect appealed to him, and he entered the yard. He was surprised to find the little musician among the tumbled heaps of brick and stone.

"Enjoying solitude?" inquired Worth, sinking down beside him.

"Oh, Mr. Acre," said Arthur, "I'm in dreadful trouble! Mr. Woodney missed his watch this morning and all of them think I stole it, and I don't know what to do."

"Bless my heart!" cried Worth, regarding him attentatively. "How long have you been out here, Arthur?"

"Ever since the watch was missed," said Arthur, his eyes shining feverishly. "I can't go back. I can't go anywhere. What can I do? I thought I'd run off, at first, but that would only make them think all the more that I am a thief."

"Of course it would," Worth agreed promptly. "So far as I know, running away has never accomplished anything but saving, maybe, some worthless life. I'm glad you didn't run, Arthur; I can't tell you how glad I am."

"But what can I do?" cried Arthur, wildly. "What good does it do to stay? I'll never live down that white rooster, and now this gold watch has come up to end everything. Mr. Acre, advise me, won't you"?

"I will, my boy. But right here, I'll point a moral. You won't mind, I hope, if I point a moral?"

In the midst of his distress, there was something hopeful in the other's honest face and hearty voice. "I won't mind anything you say, sir."

"Good! Let's point a moral. Your secrecy about that white rooster laid you open to this new suspicion. Understand? Always be frank and open, and folks won't be so quick to suspect. You see, it didn't seem wrong of you merely to keep the secret of burying a trespassing rooster—but now what comes from it? You get the moral, my lad? It's these little wrong things that lead to most of life's unhappiness. It isn't some big thing like killing a man or setting a house on fire, but the tiny acts of day-after-day."

"Yes," said Arthur, paling, "it is awful!" "I do understand. I will be so careful after this! Still, that won't help what is in the past, and it won't help about this watch."

"When trouble comes," said Worth, "the thing to consider is not how big it is, but how little it is. I want to show you how little your present difficulty proves. They think you stole the watch of Mr. Woodney—a blind man who has been so good to you."

"Yes," said Arthur, paling, "it is awful!"

"But you didn't steal it," said Worth heartily.

"Oh, no, sir; oh, how could I?"

"Sure," returned Worth.

"But it's the same to them as if I had taken it!"

"But it's not the same to you," said Worth. "If all the Woodneys in the world believed you a thief, you and Worth Acre would know different. Enjoy your conscience—that's the secret of a happy life. If I always fed on what people say and think about me, I'd get mighty little gravy with my meat! Just because I took grandfather out of the asylum, his wife and son and daughters have abused me without ceasing. But I haven't lost my hair over it. My conscience says, 'Let's be joyful'; and we are, too! Now, just because I'm a blacksmith, some people whom I'd rather have for friends than the President of the United States, look down on me, and won't hear to it."

"But did anybody ever accuse you of stealing anything?" Arthur asked, smiling in spite of himself.

"Well, no!" returned Worth simply; "it would have been too unhealthy a pastime for them. But you must confess you've laid yourself open to this suspicion. The thing to be done when a difficulty is too strong for you, is to wait. Nothing kills a trouble like waiting. Live down the charge; prove by your life that you couldn't have taken the watch; then if it's never found, you will be exonorated, any way."

"That would take years. I want to do something right now—some good, brave act—something the people can see—If I could risk my life, or even lose my life in saving somebody—for I'd be willing to die, Mr. Acre," Arthur cried, his eyes blazing, "to prove that I am not a thief."

"We don't do things that way," said Worth; "not in Missouri. Nobody needs their lives saved by any one dying for them. Don't you suppose if there was anything to be done as you describe, I'd have gone and done it myself, long and merry ago? It's only in books that you can do something at the end of one chapter to cover you with glory in the next. No, my lad, the only way you can help others is to live a clean, honest life in the work best fitted to your ability. Every good life helps everybody else. Will you come and work in my shop? In that way you can earn your living and have time to practice your music between times. When school begins, I'll let you go to school. Blacksmithing may not be to your taste, but independence is, I hope, and with me you will be independent. Besides, it will strengthen you and give you muscle, and make a man of you."

"Thank you, thank you!" cried Arthur, seizing one of the other's strong hands in both of his own. "I will go to work for you in the morning."

"Hurrah!" cried Worth. "We'll do our duty and wait for trouble to pass over. We'll just hammer away at the forge, and somehow we'll find our hearts filling with sunshine and music—and whether it's the 'Devil's Dream' or Mozart, it will be all the same!"

He was interrupted by some one hurrying into the yard. Worth and Arthur started up to find Mace panting violently from hurried running. "Oh, Arthur!" cried Mace, grasping both of his hands, and breathing so heavily she could not speak more. The tightening of her fingers seemed to squeeze the last drop of bitterness out of his heart. "Have you found the watch?" he cried excitedly.

"It's found!" grasped Mace, working his hands up and down unconsciously. "It's found!"

"What did I tell you?" cried Worth, clapping Arthur upon the shoulder.

"All the others are following me," panted Mace, "but I wanted to be the first to tell the good news, because I was the first to suspect something wrong. Won't you forgive me, Arthur? I am so sorry!"

The sudden shock of good news and kindness was too much for the little musician's composure. "Yes," he stammered, the tears streaming down his thin cheeks," there ain't anything to forgive—it was my own fault that I was suspected. Don't feel bad, Mace, you couldn't help it. And it was lovely for you to come so quickly."

"I feel like a wretch!" cried Mace, her own eyes overflowing. "But never mind, Arthur. If there ever was a good and faithful friend, I'll be one to you."

BUSINESS NOTES.

—There seems to be no end to the demand for "The Holy Spirit," by J. H. Garrison, and "Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell. And at $1.00 each, postpaid, it is not surprising.

—Books for Christmas presents make gifts which are appreciated the year round, but a good book given on that happy day tells for time and eternity We carry them in all prices from "ten cents to $10."

—Our new and reduced price list of Sunday school supplies is now ready, and will go to all requesting the same, clearly showing that we are leaders in prices as well as in quality, for this company always takes a pride in having the very best at the very lowest price.

—Many are taking advantage of our offer to put the name of any one on any one dollar book of our own publication or any Bible, providing the order comes in by or before December 1. One friend ordered six dollar books under this offer, another three, and many one or two.

—See the advertisement in this week's paper of the handsome Cradle Roll Certificates—Primary, Junior and Intermediate Diplomas. These are of the very highest type of the printer's art, and at 36 cents, plus postage, or 42 cents prepaid, they are by far the cheapest and best on the market.

—We thank our friends for so patiently bearing with us in our anxious state when we were out of two or three of the Bethany books at once, but the rush was so "fast and furious" that we were out before knowing it, and we have had so many calls that it was with difficulty that we could get ahead at all; but now that we are "out of the woods," we hope to remain so for the remainder of the season.

—We wish our friends could see the many pretty Christmas cards; also, the Christmas Holly private postal cards, running in price from 1 cent to 10 cents each; also, our pretty stock of Christmas tree ornaments, including artificial snow, which sets off the tree beautifully. The same are fully described in our "holiday catalogue," which we hope to have ready by or before the middle of this month.

—Geo. B. Townsend, Troy, N. Y., orders another shipment of the Normal Instructor No. 2, "The Christ." He seems to lead the brotherhood in the size of his class. This is the booklet for you to use for a systematic study of the life of Christ in connection with the Bible school lessons for 1906, as the entire year is given up to the life of Jesus. The price is 15 cents single, postpaid, or $1.50 per dozen, prepaid.

—The "Gloria in Excelsis," in both the complete and the abridged forms, is in active demand and we are now on the fourth edition of this excellent church Hymnal. The edition in boards, abridged, sells for $5.00 per dozen, or 40 cents each by the 100, not prepaid. The abridged in cloth sells for $6.50 per dozen, or 50 cents each by the 100, not prepaid. The complete book is not in boards, but in cloth, and sells for $9.50 per dozen, or $75 per 100, not prepaid.

—We have a remarkable Bible offer; the more so, as it is so near "Christmas." A fine morocco bound, leather lined to the edge, silk sewed Bible (publisher's price, $4.50) for $2.50. And we will put any name in gold on the front cover. The publishers have dropped this style, hence made us the offer, which we accepted. These books are also linen paper. Such a bargain was never put on the market before, and though we have a large stock, they will go rapidly at such a price.

Alum baking powders are detrimental to health.

Many consumers use alum baking powders in perfect ignorance. They are allured to the danger by the cry of cheapness, and the false and flippant advertisements in the newspapers. Alum baking powders do not make a "pure, wholesome and delicious food" any more than two and two make ten. Their manufacturers are deceiving the public.

—"The Disciples of Christ," by Errett Gates, is for busy readers and is not to take the place of the more pretentious books along historical lines. It is a popular edition of the "History of the Disciples of Christ," and as such we can very fully commend it to our readers and will promptly forward a copy to any, postpaid, at $1, the popular price.

—In the matter of song books, we are still "in the lead," and we mean to continue so. "Praises to the Prince," "Popular Hymns" No. 2; "Silver and Gold," "Living Praise," "The Gospel Calls," one or two, or combined, are what easily hold us at the front. These are bound in limp, boards and cloth, save "The Gospel Call," one or two, which are not in cloth, and "The Gospel Call' combined is not in the limp cloth. All save "The Gospel Call," combined, sell at $15 per 100 in limp, or $20 per 100 in boards, or $25 per 100 in cloth, excepting "The Gospel Call," combined, which sells at $40 per 100 in boards and $50 per 100 in cloth. Fifty or more at the 100 rate.

WHILE the Inter-Church Conference on Federation will not have the distinction of being the first great assembly in the United States to emphasize Christian comity and co-operation, it will be unique as the first officially delegated body to represent in formal conference concerning Christian work in the United States the large majority of the denominations of American Protestantism. Should the present promise of its import be realized, there should be an influence in its utterance and its action so powerful as to create a new epoch in the progress of Christ's kingdom in our land—and, one may dare to say, in all lands. When, however, the future historian undertakes to trace the rise and development of federation, his description of sources will take him much farther into the past than the casual glance suggests. For the Inter-Church Conference on Federation is the culmination not only of immediate but of remote influences. He will find their origin in the spirit and teaching of the church's Founder and their illustration in the formative decades of the early church.—Frank Mason North.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

The Elections in New York.

The country never saw a more interesting series of minor campaigns or a more curiously assorted set of election returns than those which we have just witnessed. In general, the elections of November 7 issued in a sweeping victory for the idea of independence in the determination of local issues. It went hard with those who tried to make the protective tariff or any other national issue the touchstone for deciding questions of purely local administration or questions of fundamental honesty in public affairs.

New York enjoyed a campaign thrilling enough to send shivers down the spine of the most hardened and blase politician. The victory of McClellan was both expected and deserved—expected because he was Tammany's candidate, and deserved in spite of that unholy alliance. But the close race which he was to have was not at all expected, except as there crept into the public mind, during the closing days of the campaign, a somewhat definite suspicion that the Hearst candidacy was not going to be the opera bouffe affair that his attempt to secure the presidential nomination had been. When Mr. McClellan was nominated, such an astute political prophet as "Harper's Weekly"—whose forecast of the outcome of the last national election was almost uncannily accurate—spoke of him as having the victory in his pocket before the fight began. The support of united Tammany, plus the support of that large element of independent voters who thought his administration worthy of approval, might have been expected to make it almost unanimous for McClellan. But it did not work out that way. In the first place, Tammany is in the habit of swelling its vote by fraud and violence, but even a corrupt gang will not be so enthusiastically and effectively fraudulent when, by the fortunes of politics, it happens to find itself tied to a clean candidate. It was so when Folk was running for governor of Missouri. "What's the use?' said the old guard, who had been controlling elections by the bludgeon; "what's the use of stuffing the ballot-boxes in the interest of a candidate who will put us all in the penitentiary if he gets a chance?" While McClellan is not a Folk, he is so much better than the political machine which is supposed to support him, that the same reasoning doubtless held good. So he got only the honest vote of his party—and that is a good deal less than its normal voting strength. In the second place, the independent vote, suspicious of the name and sign of Tammany, and always "uncertain, coy and hard to please," went to Hearst instead of McClellan. The returns give McClellan a plurality of only 3,000 over Hearst. This number is about one-half of one per cent. of the entire vote.

Mr. Hearst is not convinced that he was really beaten, and has filed notice of a contest. A recount of the ballots will be an immense undertaking, but, in view of the closeness of the result as announced, and the control which Tammany exercises over the election machinery, Mr. Hearst's suspicion is an entirely reasonable one. Mr. Ivins, the badly defeated Republican candidate, is one of Mr. Hearst's attorneys for the prosecution of his claim.

The Election of Jerome.

The success of Jerome in New York and of the reform candidates in Philadelphia and Cincinnati were the great and notable triumphs of the independents. Jerome began his campaign for re-election to the office of district attorney with no organized backing whatever. When the campaign was well advanced, the Republican nominee for that office resigned in his favor and he accepted a place on that ticket. The purpose of this was not so much to give Jerome the backing of the party, as to give the party the backing of Jerome. It was a fearfully close race—a plurality of a little more than one thousand out of nearly six hundred thousand votes. So obviously it was the votes gained by the Republican alliance that saved Jerome. And it was only Jerome that enabled the Republican ticket to have any representation at all among the successful candidates. The defeat of Jerome, after the conspicuously effective work that he has done, would have been a rebuke and a discouragement to every public official who is soberly trying to do his duty. He deserved a much larger plurality, but it was a triumph to be elected at all with three candidates in the field and himself attached to a party ticket whose other members received only about one-fifth of the total vote.

Philadelphia and Cincinnati.

There was nothing half-hearted about the defeat which was administered to the pirates in Philadelphia. A plurality of 75,000 in favor of the reform "city party" candidates puts on record the popular approval of Mayor Weaver's course and sets the proper seal upon the so-called Republican ring. Seldom has an issue been more clear cut. Those who wanted a regime of plunder knew which ticket to support, and so did those who wanted honest government. There were no illusions about it. The whole story was out, and everybody knew it. And by this overwhelming vote the people of Philadelphia refused to issue to the old piratical crew letters of marque and reprisal to prey upon the public treasury and the common weal. The Republican candidate for state treasurer of Pennsylvania went down with the general wreck of his co-partisans.

In Cincinnati, the Cox machine (Republican), went down with a crash, and Cox went with it. Immediately after the election he issued a statement declaring his intention to retire from politics. This is the best thing Mr. Cox has ever done for Cincinnati. "Nothing in his (political) life became him like the leaving of it." He has been a malign influence in his city and party for a quarter of a century. If Mr. Taft's bold utterance against him in his Akron speech a few weeks ago had anything to do with the result, it is a new reason for general gratitude to our great and growing secretary of war.

Indianapolis, unhappily, is not in a position to join in the chorus of rejoicing over the triumph of independency and reform. The appeal to party loyalty was effective. Probably it would have been less so if there had been presented a choice between a thoroughly bad candidate and one who was the complete embodiment of the idea of reform. In this case, however, the reformer was not in all respects a thorough-going reformer. He had done much to improve conditions, but he had left undone some things which might as well have been done. It was an illustration of the futility of half-hearted and compromising reform as a political policy. It warms one's enemies and cools one's friends. The result is a confusion of the issue and a verdict which does not necessarily represent the best moral sense of the voters. In this case, it resulted in the election of the Republican candidate for mayor.

Other Elect

In Salt Lake City an avowed anti-Mormon candidate was elected mayor. It appears, however, that in spite of the efforts of the opposition to make resistance to Mormonism the principal plank in its platform, the Mormon church refused to take this view of the campaign and took no very decided stand for or against either candidate.

Tom Johnson, Democrat, and exponent of the principles of public ownership, was re-elected mayor of Cleveland.

The Union Labor mayor of San Francisco, Eugene E. Schmitz, was re-elected.

State elections in Massachusetts, New Jersey, Maryland and Nebraska gave Republican victories. In Maryland, the chief issue was the adoption of the amendments to the state constitution, limiting the suffrage and establishing partisan control of elections. On the former point, which amounts practically to the disfranchisement of the negroes, there would doubtless have been a good Democratic majority, but the latter was resisted as dangerous, not only to the rights of the public, but also to the welfare of the party which might happen to have control of the election machinery. This Democratic defeat in Maryland is supposed to deal another death-blow to Senator Gorman's political hopes. Mr. Gorman has received a good many death-blows in the past 15 years, but his constitution is wonderfully hardy. We hope this is a real one.

In the Indian Territory a plebiscite was taken for the ratification of the tentative constitution, which was prepared by the separate statehood convention at Sequoyah. Advocates of the plan of admitting Indian Territory as a separate state, under the name of Sequoyah, predicted that over 100,000 votes would be cast and that the sentiment of the people of the territory in favor of separate statehood would be overwhelmingly demonstrated. As it turned out, the vote barely reached 25,000, and the demonstration which was counted upon to fortify the advocates of separate statehood when the bill comes up in the next Congress, is declared a failure.

Russia.

Count Witte has formed his cabinet and is preparing to launch the plan of popular government. The details are all to be arranged yet. At the meeting of the douma it is expected that the questions involved in the emperor's manifesto will come up for consideration, and Count Witte has declared his intention to stand for the establishment of a popular legislative assembly if a single member of the douma will stand with him. Meanwhile, the more timid and skeptical of the Liberals consider the whole of the promised reform as entirely tentative and unsubstantial and refuse to have anything to do with the government until the new regime has been put in actual operation. The popular disorders throughout the empire continue, as if the people were anxious to prove themselves incapable of any degree of self-government, now that it has been promised to them. The most serious outbreak last week was at Cronstadt, the seaport of St. Petersburg, where a mutiny of marines was reinforced by riotous civilians. The ill-feeling which is leading to violent encounters in various parts of the empire is not easy to understand completely at this distance. It is some comfort to find that it is not altogether understood even in Russia. A dispatch from St. Petersburg says: "Although it is impossible in every case to diagnose the true cause of the conflicts, it is clear that their origin generally is the hostility aroused among the different classes of the population." This position seems impregnable. When one sees shooting and bayonet attacks and the wielding of clubs, one at once suspects hostility. In general, of course, the hostility arises, directly or indirectly, from the conflict of opinions as to the merits of the present government and the sufficiency of the reforms which have been promised. Even without being further understood, they help us to see how enormous is the task which confronts Count Witte, of making this heterogeneous multitude live peaceably under any one system of government. To create a correct and effective form of government is a large undertaking, but it is a much larger one to persuade this turbulent, warring mass, trained to suspicion by many deceptions, made bitter and sullen by oppression, that the government which he forms will be really their government. Making peace with Japan was a simple bit of diplomacy compared with that.

Insurance.

Mr. Vandiver, the Missouri state superintendent of insurance, has ousted the New York Life Insurance Company from the state by suspending its license. The effect of this action—if it has any effect at all—will be to prevent the company from writing any new policies in the state while the suspension continues. The reason assigned is that the company maintains and expends lobby funds to influence legislation. The company declares its intention to continue to do business, and it has secured a temporary injunction, restraining the superintendent of insurance from interfering with its business.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company is under investigation by the New York legislative committee. Its salary list and expense account are similar to those of the other companies which have been under inquiry. For example, its president, Mr. Hegeman, receives a salary of $100,000 a year, and the vice-president receives $75,000. As a clever paragrapher suggests, the company seems to be paying the union scale.

The Founder of the Y. M. C. A.

Sir George Williams founder of the Young Men's Christian Association, died in London, November 6, at an advanced age. It is not often that a man lives to see the sixty-first anniversary of an important movement which he has started. It is not often that a man received knighthood in recognition of the value of his religious work, and that a work outside of established churches. Mr. Williams, as a young clerk in a large London house, saw the young men of the city subjected to manifold temptations, and conceived that they might be helped by an institution which would combine recreation and reading with religion. He interested some of his fellow-clerks, and they rented a small room for a reading room and place of social meeting. It was a movement from the ranks. It originated among the very class of people whom it was designed to serve. Mr. Williams' employer became interested in the plan, and while the clerk was enlisting more young men as members, the employer was interesting business men to provide financial support for the enterprise. How the movement grew and what it has become need not be told. The old age of the founder has been crowned with honors. At the semicentennial of the founding, in 1894, Queen Victoria conferred knighthood upon the founder, and he became Sir George.

Bishop Merrill.

Methodism has lost a prominent figure by the death of Bishop Merrill, whose end came suddenly right in the midst of official duties. He rose from the position of shoemaker to become one of the leaders of a great church, which he served in the capacity of preacher, editor and bishop. He was directly descended from John Wesley, through his mother, and with his fine gifts as parliamentarian and speaker it was not unnatural that he should rise to the first place in a church with which all his ancestry had been identified.

Thanksgiving and Football.

Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus will find a very large number of people who will agree with him in his denunciation of the custom of playing football on the day which this nation has set apart for the expression of gratefulness to God Almighty for the blessings vouchsafed to it during the year. The distinguished Chicago preacher has just said:

> "Let us combine the cross of Christ with the flag of our country in the celebration of this day in old-fashioned way. I beseech you, each one of you, to be here, and by your presence set up a protest against the spirit of commercialism and frivolity that is becoming too prevalent on this holiday.
> "It may be some of you will stay away to attend the football game—that disgrace to the history of this day and the spirit of thanksgiving that is coming to be fought by the preceptors and faculties of our schools and colleges."

It would be a good thing if ministers all over the country would take this firm stand. The game of football, as developed in the American college of today, is one of the most brutal exhibitions that is tolerated by an intelligent nation. The game, as played in England, has some points of merit, both from the standpoint of physical development and as an interesting exhibition to onlookers, but the American game tends toward extreme brutality, though, of course, we would not say it has no good points. But the making of Thanksgiving Day the time of a great football spectacle has, in many places, destroyed entirely the real spirit that stands behind the day, and we agree with Dr. Gunsaulus that it is time to cry a halt.

The Kingdom of Norway.

Norway has emerged from her rupture with Sweden by a great majority of her citizens declaring they are in favor of having Prince Charles of Denmark to rule over them. The government had presented a motion to this effect, and it was carried by a vote of 87 to 29. When this was submitted to the people, their verdict was just as significant.

Who? When? and What?

The following letter of inquiry raises the three questions suggested above, touching our representation in the inter-church conference in New York city this week:

> WAXAHACHIE, TEX., November 4, 1905.
> Dear Brother Garrison—An announcement of the approaching "Inter-church Conference on Federation" sent me by Mr. E. B. Sanford says: "Its importance is assured by the fact that twenty-four religious bodies, with communicant membership aggregating 18,000,000, have appointed delegates." And in giving the names of "bodies thus represented" he mentions "Disciples of Christ." Will you kindly tell, through THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, if you have the information: (1) Who the "appointed delegates" are; (2) when and by what "religious body" they were appointed; and (3) what is the extent of their authority in binding our people, if they have any such authority? Fraternally,
> CHALMERS MCPHERSON.

1. Who? We printed some time ago the list of the brethren who had accepted invitations to attend the inter-church conference at that time, but it was not a complete list, and we have not received the complete enrollment. We will print the list of those who attend after the conference is held.

2. When? They were not appointed by any of our conventions. In answer to a letter of inquiry as to the method of appointment, from Dr. E. B. Sanford, the editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST replied that as our Omaha convention had endorsed the principle of federation, it did not seem necessary for another convention formally to appoint delegates, because all it could do would be to ascertain who were going and appoint those. We suggested, therefore, that he and his committee extend an invitation to such of our ministers as would be likely to attend, and perhaps a dozen of us sent in lists of names of men who would be most likely to attend such a conference, and from these lists a number were invited to be present. This is the resolution adopted by the Omaha convention:

> "Resolved, That we, representatives of the Disciples of Christ, in convention assembled, having heard with pleasure the presentation of the claims of the Federation of Churches of the United States, urged by the national secretary, Dr. Sanford, do hereby express our cordial approval of the effort to bring the churches of the country into closer co-operation and to give a truer expression to the degree of unity that already exists as the best means of promoting that complete unity for which our Lord prayed, and we pledge our hearty co-operation with this and every movement that has for its object the unification of all believers, to the end that the world may be converted and the kingdom of righteousness established in the earth."

While there was some discussion and difference of opinion in the Omaha convention concerning this resolution, growing out of a misunderstanding of its import, subsequent discussion in our congress at Des Moines, and through our newspapers, has developed the fact that there is unanimity of sentiment among us in favor of the fullest co-operation with other religious bodies in moral and religious work that is consistent with our own principles and aims. Of course, no one among us ever favored any other kind of federation.

3. What? We imagine there was a merry twinkle in the eye of our brother as he wrote this question about "binding our people!" There must have risen before him a vision of burly, dogmatic, ecclesiastics, binding with strong cords of ecclesiastical authority, the hands and feet of our struggling churches, and he must have smiled at the thought! It was not for his sake that he asked this question, but for the sake of other souls more timid and fearful. No, brother, these preachers who go to New York to represent our great brotherhood, at the invitation of the leaders of this inter-church conference, have not the slightest authority to bind our people with anything stronger than cords of love and reason. Besides, there is not anything to bind us to, but what we are all in favor of! Every man among us that believes in Christian union in sincerity, and not as a party slogan, believes also in co-operating as far as possible with all religious people in doing whatever good he can in the world, and in overthrowing the forces of evil.

Praying for the Holy Spirit.

Brother McGarvey returns to the defense of his position which THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST recently criticized, namely, that we are not authorized by the Scriptures to pray for the Holy Spirit. His defense, expressed in a single sentence, is, that Christians already have the Holy Spirit, and therefore do not need to pray for "it." In "The Christian Standard" of November 16, he puts it thus:

> "If I were to sit down at the table and pray the Lord for the bread which is smoking hot under my nose, my wife and children would think that I had suddenly lost my mind. If I were to pray for the remission of those sins which I committed before I was baptized, I would be casting doubt upon the promise of God, or upon my own sincerity in that act. If I were to pray for the comfort and strength which I at the moment was enjoying, I would offer a fool's prayer. For the things which God has already graciously given me I give thanks. I pray for those I have not yet received. I believe that I have had the Spirit of God as it was promised on Pentecost ever since I first obeyed the gospel; and therefore I have never prayed for it. If Brother Garrison has been deprived of the Holy Spirit, he is wise in praying that it may be restored to him. Of this he is probably the best judge."

To this we reply that if Brother McGarvey believes that he already possesses, and always has possessed, since he became a Christian, the Holy Spirit in all the fullness of His power that is now possible to a Christian, and feels no need of being further "filled with the Spirit," as Paul exhorted the Ephesians who had no doubt received the Spirit, he is certainly right in not praying for the Spirit for himself; but he might intercede for the rest of us who feel deeply our need of a fresh anointing and a deeper infilling of the Holy Spirit. For ourselves, we can say with Paul, we have not yet attained, but we press on, if that we may lay hold on that for which also we were laid hold on by Christ.

The fact which Brother McGarvey strangely overlooks is that one may possess the Holy Spirit in a measure and yet feel the need and duty of praying for him in a still larger measure. There is no truer prayer, perhaps, in all the Bible than that of the father who, in anguish of heart, cried unto Jesus, "Lord, I believe; help Thou my unbelief!" If this man with a little faith, could pray for more faith, why can not a Christian possessing the Holy Spirit to a very limited extent pray that he may possess him in a larger measure? This is exactly the prayer that most of us need to pray, not only as respects our faith, but as respects our possession of the Holy Spirit.

In the light of this truth is it not easy to understand how Paul could exhort the Ephesian brethren to be "filled with the Holy Spirit," and that they might "be strengthened with power through his Spirit in the inward man," even though they had already received the Spirit? Our brother has certainly not reflected on the depth of meaning in the phrase, "filled with the Spirit," if he supposes that every Christian already possesses the Holy Spirit in that sense, and therefore need not pray for him. What a glorious church we should have if it were indeed true that all its members were "filled with the Holy Spirit," as were Barnabas and Philip and other picked men of the New Testament church! But that is the ideal for which we should strive as restorers of New Testament Christianity.

Brother McGarvey admits that if the editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has "been deprived of the Holy Spirit" he would be "wise in praying that it (He) may be restored to him." Why, then, would it not be "wise," if he feels the need of the Holy Spirit in larger measure because of increasing responsibilities, duties, and burdens, for him to ask for it? Really, Brother McGarvey here admits all that we have been pleading for, namely, the right and duty of all who feel the need of the gracious Spirit of God to fill them and anoint them for special service and special burdens, to pray for him. Of course, those who do not feel such need are certain not to make such prayers.

Brother McGarvey asks for other Scriptures than those we quoted to prove that Christians have the right to pray for the Holy Spirit; but we are persuaded that if those cited do not satisfy our brother, no amount of Scripture which we might quote would serve the purpose. Surely if Paul admonished the Ephesians to be "filled with the Spirit" they would be justified in praying for such infilling. If Paul would pray for them that they might be strengthened by the Spirit, why should they not pray for themselves the same prayer? The plain truth is, Brother McGarvey is advocating a position which, if accepted, would be calamitous in the highest degree to our spiritual growth and development. It is for this reason, and not with the remotest feeling of "indignation" or unkindness toward Brother McGarvey that we make our earnest protest against it. It is most gratifying to know that this protest of ours has met with general approval from our readers.

Referring to the point as to whether any among us ever held, or now hold, to the word-alone theory, we are quite satisfied with the proof we cited in a former article and, as we said therein, are perfectly willing to leave the matter to our readers to judge between us. We are free to say, however, that the word-alone theory is no more damaging or deadening to the spiritual life than the theory that we may not pray for the Holy Spirit.

Concerning Responsive Readings

Professor McGarvey's recent animadversions on the new hymnal, "Gloria in Excelsis," and particularly that portion of them which deals with the question of responsive readings, contain some suggestions which are worth thinking about. The general statement that responsive readings are usually badly read and that they are generally not properly responsive, but only alternate, contains much truth. As to the first point, it is possible that intelligent leadership may be able to produce better reading in concert, just as Professor Calhoun's intelligent teaching is expected to produce better reading by the ministers. In fact, it might be suggested that when a young minister is learning to read the Scriptures in public worship, he ought at the same time be taught to lead in the reading by the congregation. In general, the great drawback to responsive reading is what might be called the holy drag, which results from the apparent belief that the religious effect of the reading is in inverse proportion to the tempo.

So much of Professor McGarvey's comments have reference to responsive readings as such and not to those included in this particular hymnal. His second point of criticism is that responsive readings are generally not properly responsive, but only the alternate reading of sections of continuous narration or discourse. This also is partly true, but it is also partly unavoidable. But in arranging the selections from the Psalms in "Gloria In Excelsis" particular care has been taken to make this criticism inapplicable. As pointed out in the explanatory preface of the book, the large majority of the verses of Hebrew poetry consist of two lines each, the second of which echoes or responds to the first. Here then is a basis for a genuine responsive reading. Let the minister read the first part of each verse and the congregation the second, instead of reading alternate verses according to the usual custom. Thus, in reading the 103d Psalm, we would have the following arrangement:

M. Bless the Lord, O my soul:

C. And all that is within me, bless his holy name.

M. Bless the Lord, O my soul;

C. And forget not all his benefits;

M. Who forgiveth all thine iniquities;

C. Who healeth all thy diseases; and so on. This arrangement has the added advantage of making the portions shorter and thus reducing the tendency to drag.

The readings from the Psalms in "Gloria In Excelsis" have been arranged in this way and it is believed that a trial of this real responsive reading will issue in most satisfactory results.

Notes and Comments.

This story, which contains its own moral, comes from Arkansas: A preacher was preaching a discourse to prove that there is no Holy Spirit now except the Word and that it was a delusion and superstition to believe in anything of the kind. At the conclusion of his discourse he asked if anyone had anything to say on the subject. A colored brother who had been an interested listener rose, and said; "Brudder, yous made one mistake to-day. You orter have said 'Dere is no Holy Spirit now dat you knows of!'" That italicized phrase would save many a dogmatic statement of a mere negation from being wholly false. We recommend it to those who would affirm that there is no God, no divine Savior, no Holy Spirit, and no salvation from sin.

"The fundamental error in Christian philosophy," says Dr. Bashford, "is the making of each particular church an end in itself, rather than the means for the realization of the kingdom of heaven upon the earth." We venture to add that just in proportion as any religious body regards itself as an end instead of the means for the realization of the kingdom of heaven upon earth it is sectarian in its spirit and aims; and that, on the other hand, that church or religious movement which regards itself as an instrument or means for establishing Christ's reign upon earth and sees that it is succeeding only as it is accomplishing that work, has passed the limitations of a mere sect, and has allied itself with the essential and the universal in Christianity.

It is possible, perhaps to draw several lessons from the elections of last week, but there is one supreme lesson that stands out with such prominence that no one but a blind man could fail to see it. It is this: The time is past when politicians can afford to antagonize the moral sentiment of the people. Such a course spells ignominious defeat sooner or later. The triumph of the reform party in Philadelphia; the overwhelming revolution in Ohio; the election of Jerome in New York City, and the "close call" of Tammany mark the rising tide of moral sentiment and indignation against political boss rule, and the wicked alliance of politicians with the saloon element.

Even in politics it pays to be decent! The moral convictions of the people are not to be trampled under feet roughshod by political place-seekers. Conscience is entering into politics and has begun the work of housecleaning. The people are not helpless. They can break the bonds which hold them in servile bondage to political bosses and partisan whips. They have only to rise up and assert their independence at the ballot box and the work is done. The results of this fall election will carry inspiration to honest voters throughout the country. It will encourage honest men who are the victims of municipal misrule and political graft to act together regardless of party lines, overthrow the ward bosses, and elect honest and capable men.

Never were there so many independent voters in this country as there are today. This is the most encouraging sign in our political heavens. When men refuse to follow blindly partisan leaders, but insist in putting their conscience and best judgment into their votes, there is hope for the redemption of our cities from the bondage of corruption. Too long have our voters been beguiled by the siren voices of party politicians urging them to party loyalty in campaigns where political questions are not in issue. By this device have our cities been kept in bondage to corrupt political bosses. The eyes of the people are being opened to that fact as never before. This is a sign which even politicians ought to be able to understand.

It is safe to say that when Ohio comes to nominate another governor both the leading parties will be careful not to nominate a man who is opposed by the Christian and temperance elements of the state. Large majorities are no longer protection against defeat when the conscience of the people is ignored. When decent people of New York want to defeat the "ring" that controls the city, they will not divide their forces along party lines, but will combine on a platform of honesty and efficiency to overthrow municipal corruption. The next mayor of Philadelphia will not hesitate to stand for righteousness in city government against a party machine. He will have an example that will stiffen his backbone. In a word, the lesson is slowly percolating through the brains of politicians that the path to political preferment and success is the path of rugged honesty and devotion to the people's welfare.

We heartily endorse the following comment in "The Central Christian Advocate":

"No class of men today need more encouragement than the editors of the great papers. For example, the 'New York Evening Post' is authority for the statement that emissaries of the insurance companies 'have not hesitated to visit the newspaper offices and request kindness and something more in editing and commenting on the report of the hearings.' When it is remembered how much it costs to put out these papers and what a source of income even silence would be, it suggests that good people ought to write the publishers and editors of all papers which take their stand four-square for what financially is the unprofitable side. In this connection we may say that a Kansas City evening paper deserves the appreciation of the city for its fight against the brewers and saloonists in behalf of the enforcement of law."

Editor's Easy Chair.

This is one of those delightful Indian summer days that we associate with this season of the year. The blue of the sky is softened by a haze which is diffused through the atmosphere and lies upon all the landscape like a transparent veil. It is such a day as makes a lover of Nature long to escape the city and tramp through the woods, or follow the winding course of a stream upon whose bosom are floating the falling leaves of autumn. There is something in this decay of nature and in the prophecy of the oncoming winter which one feels in the sharpness of the air, which inspires a feeling that can not be described as melancholy or sadness, and yet which has in it just enough of the tender tone to lead one to reflection and meditation. With what stately procession the seasons make their round! How steadfast and unchangeable are the great laws which govern the natural world and which from age to age bring seed-time and harvest with all the varied phenomena to which we are accustomed! One feels, as he looks upon these changing seasons, that they are not accidents, but are brought about under the universal reign of law, which has its source in the beneficent Being who made and upholds all things. It is this reliability of natural law on which all our human enterprises are built, and to which all our plans are adjusted. It is the same characteristic of God in the kingdom of grace that makes it easy for us to build our hopes upon Him. He is "the same yesterday, today and forever." Therefore we can trust Him.

This is where Nature becomes a parable to us, teaching us spiritual truth. Just as men must come to a knowledge of natural laws and adjust themselves to them in order to success and progress in material development, so to know the laws of God in the spiritual realm and adjust ourselves to them, is the essential condition of human happiness and of spiritual life and development. This is religion on its philosophic side. It is the gospel of common sense and reason. Christian character is no more an accident than autumn with its harvests. It is a result of knowledge of and conformity to the laws of the kingdom of God. Of course, this view is fatal to many theories of religion, but it is in strict conformity to the teaching of Christ and those who most fully uttered his mind. "Whatsoever a man sows that shall he also reap" is an instance of "natural law in the spiritual world." God's laws run through all worlds, for this is a universe in which we live, with an omniscient mind that is above all, and through all, and in all. One great difference between an educated mind and an uneducated one is the recognition by the former that this is a universe of law—laws for the material world, and laws for the spiritual world, and that conformity to these laws is the condition of life in its deepest and highest meaning. This does not, by any means, dispense with grace, which is the divine method of restoring man to his normal condition of love and obedience to God, who is the source of all law.

We had occasion some time ago to take a four o'clock morning train at a small station a few hours' ride out of St. Louis. Just as we were on our way to the station from the little hotel, a countryman arrived on the scene, panting, and inquired if the train had gone. When he was told that it had not arrived yet, but would in a few minutes, he seemed delighted beyond measure, and told us that he had been trying several times within the last few weeks to catch that train, but that he never had any luck before. His catching of it now he regarded as a species of rare good luck, and he was overjoyed at it. To his simple, untutored mind the trains did not run according to a fixed schedule, but came along at odd times just as it might happen, and therefore he could never tell whether he was going to make a train or not. We were not surprised in the little talk we had with him—for his manner had excited our curiosity—to find that he looked upon the world in very much the same light. No man, he thought, could tell what the Bible teaches, as it teaches one thing in one place and a different thing in another; one religion was just as good as another, and perhaps no religion would do as well as any; right and wrong were so inextricably mixed up, that no one could tell what was right and what was wrong. The whole world was guess work and was ruled by chance. But ever and anon he would return to the streak of good luck which he had struck that morning in getting the train! After all, he was only a pronounced case of an undisciplined mind. When we meet with that class of happy-go-lucky individuals, whose lives are without plan or method, and who speak of the success of this or that one as "luck," our mind reverts to that rude, illiterate fellow, fairly dancing with joy over his good luck in catching the train, which he had often missed before, not, according to his idea, because he was too late for the schedule time, but because his luck was bad!

The Easy Chair had occasion recently to dine with a number of the members of a college football team. A matched game with a neighboring college was pending, and we had occasion to observe their abstention from certain articles of diet. Hot rolls, cakes and pastry were eschewed as unsuited for men who are to measure strength with each other on the field of contest. Nor did the men seem to think it too great a sacrifice to make for the honor of their team. We could not but remember how often we had seen preachers devour all these luxuries just before going into the pulpit, with never a thought apparently, that it might diminish their intellectual and spiritual power in the work of preaching. Many a good sermon, to our certain knowledge, has been shorn of its power because of a too hearty meal, and many a preacher has crossed the dead line before his time, because he fed his stomach too bountifully and his mind too sparingly. It is a matter of the plainest common sense, to say nothing of experience, that no man can do his best intellectual work, or his best spiritual work, while his digestive organs are grappling with the difficult tasks which have been thrust upon them. If football teams must keep their bodies in subjection to be winners in the contest, how much more ought men who engage in the higher task of preaching to abstain from every indulgence of the appetite which would diminish rather than increase their power. "But every man that striveth in the games exerciseth self-control in all things. Now they do it to receive a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible."

By the time these paragraphs reach the eyes of our readers the editor expects to be in the city of New York, a member of and participating in the great Inter-Church Conference which convenes in that city from the fifteenth to the twenty-first, to face the problem of the closer unification of our Christian forces in co-operation against common foes. The signs of the times certainly are calling the church to cease its internal warfare and direct its united energies, as far as it is practicable to do so, against those evils which mar our civilization, imperil our national safety and impede the progress of the kingdom of God upon earth. On the very day of the publication of The Christian-Evangelist its editor will be presiding over one of the sessions of that great gathering which will deal with the question of "A United Church and Religious Education." May we not ask our readers to breathe a prayer for the blessing of God upon that great assembly, in dealing with these momentous questions, and upon those of us who represent our own religious movement, that they may be able to bear some worthy part in a gathering whose purpose is in such harmony with our historic plea for the unity of believers, in order to the conversion of the world?

Is Life Worth Living?

Can the Church Accomplish Her Mission in Her Present Divided Condition?

By L A. CHAPMAN

Dr. Philip Schaff said that "union among Christians is becoming more and more an imperative necessity if they are to conquer in the great conflict with infidelity and anti-Christ." And the converse is equally true that disunion among the followers of Christ is rendering the church more and more unable to accomplish her true mission in the world. We have about 150 kinds of Christianity in the United States and Canada. Instead of Christ's name being honored by all of them we have a multitude of human names honored, such as "Westminster," "St. Nicholas," "St. Mary," "St. Barnabas," "St. Paul," "St. Peter," "St. Bridget," "Lutheran," "Methodist" "Presbyterian," "Baptist," "Congregational," "Episcopal," "Swedenborgian," "Mormons," etc. And these are not all. We have 12 kinds of Baptists, 17 kinds of Methodists, 6 kinds of Catholics, 19 kinds of Lutherans, 12 kinds of Presbyterians, 2 kinds of Episcopalians, and 2 kinds of United Brethren. And what reason is given for such divisions? Simply little differences of opinion that should never be made tests of fellowship or serve as a basis for the erection of different religious bodies. Who can defend all this jargon for a single moment? Is it not directly opposed to the teaching of the Master? "I am the vine and ye are the branches," is often quoted in defense of denominationalism. But the best exegetis, including Bruce and Stevens, say that these words teach the very opposite of divisions in the church, viz.: Christian unity. This allegory depicts the necessity of an organized and vital union between all believers and Christ. The branches refer not to denominations, but to believers. To abide in him is equivalent to bearing a relation to him analagous to that of the branch to the vine, from which it draws its life. Such a union is the condition of all fruitfulness. These words then teach that the individual disciple must abide in Christ; and by all abiding in him, we have Christian unity. "A house," said Jesus, "that is divided against itself can not stand." No more can the church so long as she is split up into denominations and torn with sectarian strife.

And what is denominationalism but sectarianism? A careful examination of Webster will reveal the fact that they are one and the same thing.

The Baptist body is a great institution, for she has always borne testimony to the primitive action of baptism, to the separation of church and state; and has produced the Pilgrim's Progress of Bunyan, such preachers as Robert Hall and Chas. Spurgeon, and such missionaries as Carey and Judson. But what sense can there be in calling the church, the bride of Christ, after an ordinance of the church? And the Congregational body is certainly a grand institution, for she has taught and proved that congregational independence is both stable and Scriptural. She has also laid the foundation of New England with her literary and theological institutions. But why call the Church of Christ after a form of church polity?

Likewise the Presbyterian and Episcopal churches are great institutions from the historical standpoint The first stood up for the rights of the laity and for the crown rights of King Jesus. The second gave to the world the Authorized Version of the Bible and kept alive the knowledge and love of antiquity through dark and troublous times. Yet why call the church of the Redeemer after an officer in the apostolic church?

And the Methodist and Lutheran churches are great institutions. The first produced a revival that shook England to her foundation; and the second restored the primitive ideas of the supremacy of the Bible, Faith and the People in religious affairs.

Yet why call the congregation of the faithful after a method of doing work, or after the great reformer of the 16th century?

Listen to Martin Luther: "I pray you leave my name alone, and do not call yourselves Lutherans, but Christians. Who is Luther? My doctrine is not mine. I was not crucified for any one. Paul would not that any one should call themselves of Paul, nor of Peter, but of Christ. How, then, does it befit me, a miserble bag of dust and ashes, to give my name to the children of Christ. Cease to cling to these party names and distinctions. Away with them all, and let us call ourselves Christians, after him from whom our doctrine comes."

The name is the only thing that often separates Christ's followers. Human names are only divisive among God's children. Dr. Davis, of the Presbyterian Church, and ex-president of Princeton University, said: "It is but a due honor to Christ, the founder of Christianity, that all who profess his religion should wear his name. To be a Christian is not enough nowadays, but a man must also be something more. But where is the reason or propriety of this? I may indeed believe the same things which Luther and Calvin believed, but I do not believe them on the authority of Luther or Calvin, but upon the sole authority of Jesus Christ; and therefore should not call myself by their names as one of their disciples, but by the name of Christ, whom alone I acknowledge as my Master and my Lord!

And Dr. Adam Clark, the prince of commentators among our Methodist brethren, in commenting upon "And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch," said: "The Greek word in our common text (Acts 11:26), which we translate, 'were called,' signifies in the New Testament, to appoint, warn, or nominate by divine direction. In this sense the word is used in Matt. 2:12; Luke 2:26, and in Acts 10:22. If, therefore, the name was given by divine appointment, it is most likely that Saul and Barnabas were directed to give it; and that, therefore, the name Christian is from God, as well as that grace and holiness which are so essentially required and implied to the character. . . .

"A Christian, therefore, is the highest character which any human being can bear upon earth; and to receive it from God, as these appear to have done, how glorious the title."

But it has been said that we are trying to monopolize New Testament names. If the Disciples are doing that, they are doing wrong. The charge, however, can not be sustained, as we urge all of God's people to call New Testament institutions by New Testament names.

We claim to be "Christians only;" and the distance between this claim and the claim of being the "only Christians," is just the same as the distance between the spirit of Christ and the spirit of sectarianism.

How any person can read I Cor. 1:11-13, and then advocate denominationalism as it exists today is more than tongue can tell. In order to apply this Scripture to present day conditions, let us paraphrase it: "It hath been declared unto me of you professed followers of Christ by some agnostics, atheists and infidels that there are divisions among you. Now this, I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Luther; and I am of Calvin; and I am of Wesley. Is Christ divided? Was Luther crucified for you? or were ye baptized into the name of Calvin? Now I beseech you brethren, by the name of Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment."

* * * * * * * *

Then the influences of a divided church upon the world is directly opposed to her best interests. Christ prayed that his disciples might be one, that the world might believe on him. Our divisions afford too many excuses to men and women for not becoming Christians. Christ seemed to fore-see that a divided church would operate against the conversion of the world. The kingdom of the Prince of Peace must not be divided against itself. A church that urges upon men the gospel of unity and fraternity must not be at war with itself. That institution that preaches the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man must not be engaged in carnal warfare.

Then again, denominationalism is expensive. How often is it true that a small village, and even our cities, are overstocked with churches! Who has not noticed that in our cities, generally certain districts are over supplied with churches, while other districts in the same city are without a church of any sort? Denominationalism represents the law of competition, which is always expensive, while Christian union represents the law of co-operation.

The rich must be sought for their money, if for nothing else, to keep the machine going. The church must live, and in the present hampered condition of churchianity very peculiar devices and motives are often resorted to in order to outstrip some other denomination. Instead of making men feel that they need Christ they are made to feel that Christ needs them. And this condition of things must continue if division in the church continues.

There is a waste of wealth by this system of church management that is simply appalling. How often is it true that in some villages and cities one-half of the churches, rightly distributed, would suffice for the Lord's work. I have seen, myself, a preacher, in a large city church that would seat 1,200 people, preaching to perhaps 50 or 75 persons on Lord's day evening upon the "Theology of Robert Browning." Is this the best that this competitive system of church management can do when millions of the human race are dying every year hungering for the pure gospel of Christ which we could well afford to give them? Shame on the church of this, the beginning of the 20th century! Our lethargy and doubt and competition and hatred are a stench that has ascended as high as heaven. Our present system of running the affairs of Christ's kingdom is a downright travesty upon the cause of Christianity.

The evil effects of our divisions in the church are carried right into the heathen field itself. Listen to Dr. A. T. Pierson: "We are positively wasting both men and money by the rivalry of several denominations in the same field, while other fields are entirely unoccupied." And again, Dr. Pierson says: "It is the reproach of missions that several denominations are needlessly occupying the same fields, while other fields have not a missionary of any sort."

"In our present divided state," writes a veteran missionary, Dr Alexander Williamson, "we will never Christianize China —never!" "When I asked," says Bishop Selwyn, of the Episcopal Church, "one of the most remarkable of the New Zealand chieftains why he refused to be a Christian, he stretched out three fingers, and pointing to the center joint, said: 'I have come to a point from which I see three roads branching. This is the Church of England, this the Church of Rome, and this the Wesleyans. I am sitting down here doubting which to take.' "And," adds the bishop, "he sat doubting at that 'cross road' until he died." "The world," says Dr. Milligan, a Presbyterian, "will never be converted by a disunited church."

For all thy church, O Lord we intercede,
Make thou our sad divisions soon to cease;
Draw us the nearer each to each, we plead,
By drawing all to thee, O Prince of Peace.

Dr. Fisher, of Yale College, says: "The centrifugal age of Protestantism is closed. The centripetal action has begun." Christian union is the one high, clear note of this, the beginning of the 20th century. The change of thought in favor of a united, rather than a divided, church can not have escaped notice by any except a few ecclesiastical Rip Van Winkles who will wake up some of these fine days only to find themselves perched high and dry among the rubbish of past centuries, while God's people are marching on conquering and to conquest.

Some Strait Decrees

By L. H. Stine

A question that was indispensable to the spiritual welfare of the old German Baptist brothers, and that lay at the foundation of their strength, hurled, with the force of cyclonic action, their late national conference into the arena of animated debate.

May an old German Baptist brother install a telephone in his home? Destiny had decreed that old German Baptist brothers should live in the atmosphere of paramount questions; and where could a wise and solemn people have found a nobler, or a finer, question to engage their faculty of reason? The settlement of a question of such surpassing importance, critical and serious as it was, kindled a torch without the light of which our earth would be a barren waste, cheerless and dark and deadly.

The scintillations of passionate reason, more numerous than the sparks of Promethean fire, mingled with the lightnings and corruscations of exaggerated sentiment that flashed with "fire of warlike memories" and created a light divine that searched the Hoosier earth around, setting the eyes and ears and tongues of old German Baptist brothers in bold array for the defense of ancient custom and for the enforcement of ancestral law. Fortune was laboring with a vast intent to continue the age of simple faith when old German Baptist brothers were loyal to established custom for which the fathers had fought and had died long before the sinful ring of a telephone offended the sensitive ears of the pious. Brightening reason's lamp made plain the path of conscious duty and, removing the last hue of uncertainty of a sickly appetite that would please the flesh, and of shapes that would cheat the sight of faith, and silencing rumors wild that would shake the heart, left the event of that great day's action under not one shadow of doubt.

Michael Montgomery, a leader of ampler influence than a feudal lord, who seems to be the measure of many things, bearing the sanction and weight of authority on his brow, awful and serene, and with an expression in his countenance, "though a little dark with excessive bright," which one would fain call master, arose to a high event and determined the issue on which the fortunes of the old German Baptist Zion trembled. The sagacious lead of Michael Montgomery lighted on this observation that the use of a telephone in the home of one of the faithful is wicked as is the sin of witchcraft; for it brings an old German Baptist brother under a prodigious possession of demons and enters him into compact with a powerful spirit of evil, otherwise called the devil. Telephonic communication amounts to an alliance with infernal powers; and this modern defender of the ancient order of things put a perpetual injunction upon all old German Baptist brothers. restraining them henceforth from sinning in this regard. Neither science, nor invention, nor music, nor art, is a Scriptural accompaniment of Christian life, whether it is lived by the fireside in the home, or before the altar in the church. The substitution of an electrified wire for the atmosphere, as a medium of sound, is an unpardonable perversion of the supernatural order. A vaulting ambition that sets the divine plan of hearing aside, and adopts the inventions of uninspired men, as improvements on the wisdom of God, is the sin that overthrew the angels in the beginning and that destroyed their first estate. Had the employment of a wire been embodied in God's science of sound, Moses, or a prophet, Christ, or an apostle, would have made report of God's designs; but the Bible is silent, and shall the silence of the Bible not be respected?

Christendom has reached at last its crisis. It never was intended that a man's articulate voice should sound from Boston to Galveston. The patron of the telephone sets at naught the wisdom of God. Ill counsel had misled the deeds of the old German Baptist brothers. Now that telephones have invaded the sanctity of the home, and even the sacredness of the church at times; now that the roar of the pealing organ, resounding in the church, charms the fiercest grief and disarms the severest rage of fate and dissolves the people into ecstacies with the soul and discourse of excellent music; and now that hypnotism has added an artificial catalepsy to modern evangelism, thereby endowing the old-fashioned gospel with a mysterious and invincible power over sensitive subjects, it is high time, indeed, that Michael Montgomery should pronounce a sentence of doom on modern innovations and inventions that trespass on the divine wisdom, and that he should set himself to the task of restoring the simplicity of the primitive order.

Lawrenceville, Ill.

Thou who hast dwelt among us, flesh of our flesh, and brother of our thought and cares, we return to Thee in all our joys and trials , sure of Thy sympathy and resting in Thy love. From Thee derives our hope. To Thee it reaches out through mysteries of life and death. Thou art still our brother, caring for our state, touched with a feeling of our infirmities, putting Thy trust in us, even as Thou invitest us to put our trust in Thee. Thou art our pattern, our great example of what a man may be. Thy love rebukes our selfishness, Thy diligence our neglect. Help us to live in the light of Thy presence and to show a little of Thy glory in the earth. In the vision of Thy love for men, help us to love our neighbor as the object of Thy love. Pardon our sins and help us to overcome temptation. And may the thought of Thy welcome at life's end be a perpetual benediction for our work of every day. Amen.

The Cry of the City

By Amory H. Bradford, D. D.

The new world cities are exceptionally cosmopolitan. Irish, German, Polish, Hungarian, Italian cities all are condensed in New York and Boston and Chicago and St. Louis. Emigrants from beyond the Alps and the Balkans, from Sweden and Sicily, with hatred for all government, when brought together, exhibit little municipal esprit du corps. They have come here for what they can get. Society has done little for them, and some of them are its enemies. They do not know our language, and have no care for our institutions. They herd in tenements which make virtue and decency impossible. That they are not worse than they are is a tribute to the inherent nobility of man. A down town ward in any great city is a congeries of tenement houses, on the ground floor of which are grog shops, while on their upper floors are rooms in which human beings nearly lose both their identity and their humanity. There are found vices which would have shamed the insane Cæsars; cruelties that Torquemada would have blushed to commit; depths of infamy that Dante could not have exaggerated. Such people infect others with the virus of their wickedness. They have votes and make laws which have relations to the world; they rear families in an environment which defies the church and threatens the foundations of the state.

While these classes are flocking to the cities, in ever increasing throngs, those who appreciate higher and finer things, who might make more healthful environment, are going to the suburbs. The urban life is steadily deteriorating; the suburban life, with equal steadiness, is improving. Consequently, in the districts deserted by good citizens, wickedness organizes; the police become leeches on those whom they ought to protect and government degenerates into a farce. Exaggeration in treating this subject is difficult. New York, Boston and Chicago, even more than London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna, are a confusion of races, and a Babel of tongues.

Where are bred the revolutions? Where the faces of the poor are ground in the factories. Where is the most terrible poverty? Where modern Shylocks open sweatshops and grow rich at the expense of those who live in cellars and attics? Where rises the bitter cry of the unemployed? Where the mills are multiplied, whose stoppage means starvation to thousands who seldom receive more than starvation wages? The modern city is the standing menace of civilization—yet without the city there can be no civilization. It is the strategic point in the contest against wickedness. If that be taken for righteousness the salvation of the world will be easy; if that be lost the redemption of humanity may be deemed impossible.

What should be the attitude of the church toward the city and its problems? Jesus was more interested in men on the earth than in some far off heaven. What he saw caused his heart to break. And he was no mere sentimentalist. The city needed him. What did he do? He entered it; went into the very heart of its wretchedness; touched its open sore with his own hands. The only way to cure humanity is to touch it. The city needs good men in its politics and business more than it needs even divine Christs weeping over it. Jesus was no connoisseur in religion. He went on no tours of curious inspection. Those who can do nothing for the world's misery had better keep out of it. Pious curiosity, with no sacrificial purpose behind it, hinders more than it helps. The world needs more men with the spirit and method of Jesus, those who are ready to enter its misery, vice, crime, and live and die there. Anarchists and the unemployed will listen to those whose sympathy is impartial and who speak out of accurate knowledge. If the cities of this world are ever made the cities of our God the credit will belong to those who have put themselves at the service of humanity at its worst, and who have learned to love the lowest as well as the best of the race. What the city needs is Christlike men and women, willing in these days to be what Jesus was in Jerusalem—those who are ready to go where the people are, to live where they live, to study their problems in their light, and then to help them to higher levels. The human way is to build a great house, and say none too graciously—Come to us; the Divine way has been to go forth to find those who required assistance. The cry of the hungry and suffering souls is for personality, real, genuine, unselfish, divine, personality; some one near enough to be touched, divine enough to inspire, human enough to encourage. The churches must learn to go to the people. It is easier for Fifth avenue to worship in Mulberry street than for Mulberry street to go to Fifth avenue.

The next thing for the churches to do is to insist that the pulpit shall adapt its messages to the people to be reached. Preaching is not the only means for advancing the Kingdom. Anything that will keep a man sober helps toward that end. Anything which will draw men and boys from the grog shop six days in the week by its gymnasium and clubs is doing Christ's work. The Gospel of hope may be sung into some disheartened souls; they can be touched by a woman's singing, "O, Think of the Home Over There," when an argument for immortality would have no more effect than sunlight on a rock. Those who are hungry for bread do not care much about heaven or hell. Jesus fed the hungry, healed the sick, told his disciples to do the same, and then to preach the Gospel. First, that which is natural; then that which is spiritual. Those who are physically miserable, as a rule, must be made comfortable before they will listen to the preacher, much less appreciate his words.

The Kingdom of God will come on the earth, but it can not come while thieves and murderers make laws and pretend to dispense justice; while sleek, slimy, serpentine politicians talk piously about "practical politics," and then sell the social Christ for less than thirty pieces of silver; while grog shops are on every corner; while the respectable sit in ceiled houses away from the tides of human care and crime, and while the vile and selfish tighten their grasp on municipal life.

But there is a Gospel to be preached even while the human landscape is so dark. This message should be rung out with the music of ten thousand Christmas bells. All are children of the King. No depth is so deep that God is not there. No depravity is beyond the reach of love. No human being is ever lost except he chooses to be. This Gospel must be heard in the sweat shops and grog shops, among the sick and the poor, among the vicious, cruel and devilish. The truth that love must be victorious some time emphasized by Christlike men and women, will have the force and persuasion of the rising sun. Oh, these awful questions! Oh, these terrible sights! Oh, these hungry multitudes and these starving children! Oh, these great cities; will they ever be like the City of God? They will, but not until those in the churches, and thousands beside, have so entered into the life of Christ that their hearts bleed for the masses, as He bled for men; not until the cultured and strong go into the midst of the hopelessness and desolation of the time as He went; not until thousands more, walking in the divine footsteps, have died as He died for those who will not appreciate their efforts.

This movement for the redemption of the municipalities is already well started. The churches and the social settlements are in the lead in this new crusade, and with them are men and women with the prestige of social position, the culture of the universities, with wealth, with exalted character, with faith and prayer, where they have nothing else to give, and these can not be defeated.

Every great city has a voice and utters its appeals. In that appeal are the entreaties of the poor, the sobs of children, the groans of the dying, the despair of the wicked, the wail of lost souls. All these are condensed into the terribly bitter cry which rises from thousands whose hearts are starving with social and spiritual hunger; whose lives are barren of all that makes existence endurable—much less beautiful. What shall be the answer of the church to this "Cry of the Human" and "Cry of the Children"? Christ wept over the city; He entered the city; He gave Himself for it; He died for it, and all good Samaritans will do likewise, never forgetting that—

The man most man, with tenderest human hands,
Works best for men, as God in Nazareth.

Garrison on the Holy Spirit

By A. B. Jones

A little volume issued by the Christian Publishing Company has been before the public for nearly a year. It has elicited notices, both favorable and unfavorable. To those who understand the situation this was to be expected. In their revolt from the mystical and fanatical teachings and practices of the clergy, in the early part of the nineteenth century, the fathers of our restoration movement found it necessary to place emphasis upon human reason and the Holy Scriptures. In their efforts to lay proper stress upon these important factors in Christian thought and character, and to oppose a mere emotional religion, it is not strange that some preachers and scribes associated with this reformatory effort should drift to an extreme, and hold inadequate views concerning the Holy Spirit, his mission and modes of activity in the redemption of men. Some such men appeared in the early history of this movement, and were called down by Mr. Campbell because of their misrepresentation of the plea of our fathers for a return of New Testament Christianity. In 1852 he had occasion to publish to the world the following notice. "I have no doubt that some of our brethren may have so expressed themselves, as if in the conversion of sinners it was all Word and no Spirit; nay, indeed, that the Word and Spirit are identical. I have on various occasions had to repudiate such an idea." And were Alexander Campbell living today his "big stick" would be used vigorously on the heads of some men among us—men whose ideas of the Holy Spirit and his work are crude and vague, and as unscriptural as they are contrary to the teachings of our own fathers.

Mr. Garrison has rendered a genuine service to the people he represents and to the cause of religion by the publication of this book. Our literature is defective because of its lack of books on this subject—books clear and strong and sane in their utterances concerning the Holy Spirit and his work in the conversion, the sanctification and the salvation of men.

The spirit of Mr. Garrison's book is modest, humble and reverent. In his preface he says, "The author has given but little space to the metaphysical side of this question." In this I am not sure that he has pursued the wisest course. With many the metaphysical difficulties of this subject are the greatest. No science has made more rapid strides in recent years than psychology. That its development has all been reassuring of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, as revealed to us in the Word of God. The value of Mr. Garrison's book would have been greatly enhanced, I believe, had he dwelt more largely upon this phase of his subject. It is to be hoped that when he fulfills his intimated purpose of revising and enlarging this volume in the future, he will give more attention to the metaphysical aspects of his theme. The author has discussed his general thesis—"The Holy Spirit: His Personality, Mission and Modes of Activity," in twelve separate chapters.

"The Tri-Personality of God" is the theme considered in the first chapter.

Consistent with the traditions of our fathers, Mr. Garrison refuses to enter into confusing and misleading speculation and terminology concerning the "Godhead." The unthinkable proposition of one God in three Gods and three Gods in one God, in the sense of modern technical personality, he discards as meaningless and unprofitable. "Any doctrine of the Trinity must be held in harmony with the fundamental conception of the unity of God," says the author; and then adds: "This involves the conclusion, of course, that God is not three in the same sense in which he is one." Mr. Garrison then quotes approvingly from Dr. Clarke's "Outline of Christian Theology" as follows: "God is a person in whose nature there is a threeness that has been expressed in his threefold self-manifestation. The Trinity of manifestation, or, as we have called it, the Trinity, is a part of historical Christianity, and enters into the foundation of Christian faith. God, the eternal Father, revealed in his Son, in whom he comes to men to save them, and entering our life most intimately in the Holy Spirit of enlightenment and renewal—this is the very substance of Christianity."

There is one statement in this chapter to which I demur. Referring to a quotation from Dr. Fairbairn concerning the fatherhood of God and the sonship of Christ, the author says: "The relation is an eternal one, growing out of the divine nature."

To our way of thinking it is easy to conceive of God as eternal, but the ideas of father and son involve the limitations of time.

Inspiration is the subject of the second chapter.

That the Holy Scriptures are inspired in a sense in which no other literature is inspired, the author does not hesitate to believe and to proclaim as a fact. He holds, however, "that it is primarily the men who were inspired and only secondarily their writings * * * They were moved—that is, quickened, enlightened and impelled—by the Holy Spirit, and their writings naturally partook of the character of their inspiration."

With regard to the "method and measure of inspiration" the author classifies the various theories under two general heads—"the mechanical and the dynamical." With reference to the mechanical or verbal inspiration he says: "We do not know of a single great thinker in the church today who holds to the mechanical theory, and we may therefore pass it by."

Mr. Garrison accepts the dynamical theory, but adds: "There is a variety of views under this general theory some giving more and some less prominence to the human element in the sacred writings. The important thing, it seems to us is to have no theory that is not broad enough to contain all the facts."

Again he says: "By the inspiration of the Scriptures we are to understand that its writers were under divine guidance. To what extent they were under divine guidance is a legitimate question for discussion; but it would seem that those who recognize the authority of the Scriptures must also admit such a degree of divine guidance or control of the sacred writers as would assure the substantial accuracy of the inspired record, and furnish an all-sufficient and infallible guide to one seeking the way of salvation."

We do not remember to have read an article on inspiration, in so brief a space, that was more satisfactory.

"Function of the Holy Spirit in Conversion" is the topic of the third chapter. We quote the following sentence from the second page of this article, which contains a most significant and important truth—a truth that becomes the key to unlock the author's theme intelligently and intelligibly to every candid inquirer:

"We are now living under the dispensation of the Holy Spirit, who entered into a new and different relation with men after the glorification of Christ, and the inauguration of his reign on earth."

This fact, so clearly set forth in the New Testament, once grasped and properly appreciated, the whole subject of the

If Your Food Fails to Sustain You, Change.

One sort of diet may make a person despondent, depressed and blue and a change to the kind of food the body demands will change the whole thing

A young woman from Phil. says:

"For several years I kept in a run-down miserable sort of condition, was depressed and apprehensive of trouble. I lost flesh in a distressing way and seemed in a perpetual sort of dreamy night mare No one serious disease showed but the 'all-over' sickness was enough.

"Finally between the doctor and Father I was put on Grape-Nuts and cream as it was decided I must have nourishing food that the body could make use of.

"The wonderful change that came over me was not, like Jonah's gourd, the growth of a single night, and yet it came with a rapidity that astonished me. During the first week I gained several pounds in weight, my spirits improved, and the world began to look brighter and more worth while. And this has continued steadily, till now, after the use of Grape-Nuts for only a few weeks, I am perfectly well, feel splendidly, take a lively interest in everything, and am a changed person in every way." As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Yesterday I went to the chrysanthemum show. It was a great sight. All the new things were there and thousands of the old favorites on exhibition A canny Scotchman who belongs to my fold was in charge. He is a regular Burbank—a wizard with the things of the garden. His father before him was a gardener, as was Adam, his far away ancestor, and he knows everything that is to be known about botany in general and chrysanthemums in particular. I called on his father years ago at Coldstream, and he conducted me through his garden. It was just such a spot as Alphonse Karr wrote about so charmingly. The space, about two acres, running back to the Tweed, was surrounded by a brick wall, along which the fruit trees were trained with their branches flat against the surface to get the sun, and pears and plums were growing as bunches of grapes along a trellis. There were lovely beds of sweet peas and heliotrope and nasturtiums and squares devoted to vegetables and small fruits, and all showing the care and nurture of a skillful, friendly hand. God created man a gardener. The first Adam was honored with this distinction, and after all, the sweetest, purest delight known to any occupation open to his descendants is found in a garden. I can imagine a score or more of old farmers, skilled in all the inventions of modern horticulture, sitting today under the shade of the tree of life in the eternal paradise of God, and talking over with the first of gardeners the methods of his time.

But about the chrysanthemum show. Yes. I confess to a decided weakness for flowers. Always on my desk before preaching is a blossom, a rose or carnation, or small dahlia or chrysanthemum, or even that humbler member of the aster family, known familiarly as the daisy, of which Chaucer sang:

> "That well by reason men calle it maie
> The daisie or else the eie of the daie."

The blossom is for my buttonhole, and I think the sermon always has a better flavor for it. Luther always kept a flower in a glass on his writing table, and when he was waging his great public controversy with Eck he kept a flower in his hand. The Great Teacher said, "Consider the Lilies." Why? because God speaks in the flower as well as in the messages of Moses and in the precepts of Paul. Flowers are for the solace of humanity and often they have the power to regenerate communities or to save souls from baseness and wrong. Mungo Park's life he owed to a blossom in the desert, and flowers in the windows have brought decency and taste in the homes and saved the father and boys from the saloon.

But about the show. I am coming to that. Autumn blooms are the fairest. It may seem so because we know the season is almost past and the last rose of summer will soon be blooming alone. Nature flares up in her greatest glory as she is about to say good-bye to summer. Bryant sings:

> "The melancholy days are come, the saddest of the year,
> Of wailing winds, and naked woods, and meadows brown and sear.
> Heaped in the hollows or the grove the autumn leaves lie dead;
> They rustle to the eddying gust, and to the rabbit's tread.
> The robin and the wren are flown, and from the shrubs the jay,
> And from the wood-top calls the crow through all the gloomy day."

And then he asks pathetically: "Where are the flowers, the fair young flowers, the beauteous sisterhood?" and declares "they are all in their graves—the gentle race of flowers." But evidently the poet did not live in sight of the Dome. We have neither melancholy days nor dead blossoms in sight. Roses are still blooming and the glory of the asters is everywhere. Yesterday I picked a nasturtium bloom hanging over a wall within reach as I walked along, and so I appropriated it for my buttonhole. As I rang the doorbell of a parishioner not far away a little girl of five years in the adjoining yard lifted her finger in a warning fashion and said: "Yes, you picked that nasturtium in our yard!" "No," I replied, "I haven't been near your yard." "But you did; we have got some just like that; and you picked it over here!" It was a serious charge, and the little one was dead in earnest, but the lady on whom I called explained that she was a much spoiled little miss and I thought no more of it, only that people ought to be generous with their flowers and live in houses by the road and be the friends of men.

The show? Well, the "Four Hundred" were there. It is good once in a while to strike the "Four Hundred," and feel you are one of them. They display more emotion as they view the splendid blossoms through gold eyeglasses, and they pretend to know more about the plants, but they do not enjoy the show half as much as some of the plainer folks of the 10,000 who have thronged the exhibition It is better to belong to the 10,000 as a steady thing. But beauty appeals to every man. These are works of a divine artist. and in all their forms, hues, proportions and moral expressions they tell of Him. I am reminded of the words of Channing: "Beauty is an all-pervading presence. It unfolds into the numberless flowers of the spring. It waves in the branches of the trees and the green blades of grass. It haunts the depths of the earth and sea, and gleams out in the hues of the shell and the precious stone. And not only these minute objects, but the ocean, the mountains, the clouds, the heavens, the stars, the rising and setting sun, all overflow with beauty. The universe is its temple; and those men who are alive to it can not lift their eyes without feeling themselves encompassed with it on every side." And this beauty is an infinite joy to all classes. It is this which brings out the 10,000. The "Four Hundred" came largely to see "Mrs. Roosevelt."

Mrs. Roosevelt is a chrysanthemum. My Scotch brother took the pollen of a white bloom and that of a pink one and made a glorious golden blossom and wanted to call it after his wife, but finally concluded to give "the first lady of the land" that honor. Fanciers pronounce Mrs. Roosevelt perfect. It is an incurved intense yellow flower, beautiful in color and form, said to be the most perfect yellow ever produced, as well as the most perfect specimen of the incurved variety, in a word a triumph of the chrysanthemum grower's art. Then there is a new silvery pink, "Miss Alice Roosevelt." It is a reflexed quilled-petaled flower which is declared to "be a daisy." Then there are 250 other varieties. There are splendid golden Roi d'Italies and Ducrosiets and Mrs. D. Appletons, and beautiful white Honestys and Merzas and Adelias and Wm. Jenning Bryans. In all a charming aggregation.

Our Greek tells us "chrysos," gold, and "anthemon," a flower; and our florists say a large genus of herbaceous and subshrubby plants; and we get them from two species of plants that grow wild in China and Japan. It is the flower of the east, as the rose is the flower of the west. There are over a hundred books about the chrysanthemum, and its magazine literature is

FROM TEXAS

Some Coffee Facts From the Lone Star State.

From a beautiful farm down in Texas, where gushing springs unite to form babbling brooks that wind their sparkling ways through flowery meads, comes a note of gratitude for delivery from the coffee habit.

"When my baby boy came to me five years ago, I began to drink Postum Food Coffee, having a feeling that it would be better for him and me than the old kind of drug-laden coffee. I was not disappointed in it, for it enabled me, a small delicate woman, to nurse a bouncing healthy baby 14 months.

"I have since continued the use of Postum for I have grown fond of it, and have discovered to my joy that it has entirely relieved me of a bilious habit which used to prostrate me two or three times a year, causing much discomfort to my family and suffering to myself.

"My brother-in-law was cured of chronic constipation by leaving off the old kind of coffee and using Postum. He has become even more fond of it than he was of the old coffee.

"In fact the entire family, from the latest arrival, (a 2-year old who always calls for his 'potie' first thing in the morning) up to the head of the house, think there is no drink so good or so wholesome as Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

exceeded only in bulk by that of the rose. There are single types and anemone forms, and pompons, and hairy types and recurved and incurved. There are Japanese types, the large fantastic kinds introduced in England in 1862, which brought the craze for big blooms in the flower shows all over the world, and came to America in 1869. Many of these are freaks and oddities, and with all the American florists' skill he can not touch the little brown people in producing them. There are Pyrethrums, of which we have over four hundred varieties, and Marguerites and the ordinary ox-eye daisy, the white weed which every child knows and gathers. And all these royal things that we give lofty names come by cultivation and hybridizing until we get "Mrs. Roosevelt." She is supposed to be the perfection, the highest type, the ultima flos, so to speak.

Other things one sees at the show beside people and flowers. Here are pineapples ripening and crotons growing, and rubber and alligator pears, and cotton and tobacco, sugar cane and loquats. Here are lemons and oranges, olives, figs, pomegranates and limes; calla lilies in full bloom which my friend raised from the seed; coffee plants which he produced by crossing wild ones from Zanzibar with the ordinary Cuban plant; big Transvaal daisies, intensely red, and a bewildering array of strange fruits, grains and flowers that are a study for a life time. It is a great place—this chrysanthemum show, and it took the indigo off my blue Monday this week. Another time I may tell you some Monday of the 100,000 moths which a fellow spent twenty years in gathering and presented the other day to the museum. Think of his punishment in another world if he get his deserts—a pin stuck in him for every one he has used to impale these pretty creatures of God!

A United Church and Religious Education*

By J. H. Garrison.

Our subject this afternoon embraces two of the largest conceptions and ruling ideas of modern times, namely, Christian unity and Religious education. The unity of the world, the unity of law, the unity of the race, the unity of all knowledge—these are the sublime conceptions to which the modern mind is led by all the revelations of science and of history. We are indebted, however, to Jesus Christ for the idea of Christian unity—a spiritual brotherhood of believers bound together by their mutual allegiance to him who revealed the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Perhaps there is no measure of Christ's greatness that is more striking and impressive than the fact that in an age of bitter hatreds, narrow provincialisms, and partition walls, among men, ' hateful and hating one another," he came with a mission to all, died for all, offered pardon to all, and established a church for all, which was to be the spiritual temple of a redeemed and unified humanity, and prayed that its members might be one as he and his father are one.

Education is the divine process of developing a human being along the lines of his native powers and potentialities until he has become what God in his creation designed him to be. Religious education is the training of the human soul in the knowledge of the highest things—its relations to God and to its fellowmen. All God's revelations in all dispensations, and all institutions which he has established among men—the family, the church, and the state—have for their purpose the moral and religious education of mankind. What is the relation of these two great ideas—a united church and religious education?

When Jesus prayed that his followers might be one, in order that the world might believe, he indicated the relation between a united church and the very first step in religion, or at least in Christian education, which is faith in Christ, the world's greatest teacher. It is evident that he regarded the relation of the one to the other as very vital. No other one fact would have such an impressive influence on the faith of men and hence in promoting religious education, as a united church. We Protestants, in our love of liberty, have probably underestimated the value of unity as a divine factor in the religious education of mankind. This great assembly, however, representing as it does the leading religious bodies of Protestantism in this country, convened to study the problem of a closer unification and co-operation of Christians in order that the church may do its work in the world more effectively, is evidence of the fact that we are coming to a recognition of the place and power of the united church in giving new potency and direction to all the methods and processes of religious education.

We may not be prepared at present to consummate that unity of our religious forces which is contemplated in the prayer of our divine Lord, when he prayed that his followers might be one, even as he and the father are one; but let none of us say that because such union is impracticable now, it will therefore forever be impracticable. Such a convention as this which is now here assembled would have been impracticable and impossible even ten years ago. The Lord Jesus is the head of the church, and let us put no limitations to his divine power. If, in his infinite wisdom, he sees that a united church—a church so united as to be unhampered by its denominational divisions in fraternal co-operation and mutual Christian fellowship—is necessary to accomplish his divine purposes in the world, in evangelizing the pagan nations and in overthrowing the gigantic evils which have become intrenched even in our Christian civilization, who are we that we should withstand God? Our duty is, my brethren, to put ourselves completely under the leadership of Jesus Christ, to be, molded directed, and used by him for the accomplishment of his sublime mission in the world. Where he leads we can afford to follow.

But is there not a degree of unity already attained by us which finds no adequate expression in any organization which has yet been formed, or in any form of joint co-operation to oppose those things to which we are all opposed, and to bring about such reforms as we all desire? Why should we expect the Holy Spirit to lead us into greater unity of thought, feeling, and purpose until we make some better practical use of the unity which already exists? The right use of what we possess in order to increase our possession is a law in the kingdom of God from which neither individuals nor religious movements are exempt. That there is such unity, and that it should have a practical manifestation such as the world can see in co-operative movements for the world's betterment, is the meaning and purpose of this magnificent assembly.

It is with great pleasure that, as chairman of this session, I invite your attention to the discussion that is to follow, and not without hope that it will help us to a clearer understanding of the relation which exists between these two leading ideas of our modern life—Christian unity and Christian education—and so hasten the fulfillment of our Lord's prayer, "That they all may be one!"

A Revival of Giving.

By J. K. Ballou.

One of the greatest revivals that is needed is a revival of paying to the Lord that part of his goods that he demands. The amount one pays to the Lord according to his ability, may not be the best test of one's religious life, but it is generally a true one. A sense of our duty—of our duty to God, and more spirituality will insure a larger return to the Lord than is now made. This revival is starting, but it must spread through the church till it permeates it through and through. The Jews gave one-tenth, and Christ seems to approve it, but what do Christians give? It is a little short of a disgrace that many churches do not have preaching, and others let their preachers move, because they will not give them a support. I know churches which have from eight hundred to one thousand members which pay their ministers from twelve hundred to fifteen hundred dollars a year, and when a missionary day comes the minister asks for a liberal contribution and a "collection" is taken which amounts to less than a dollar per capita. Why not pay one-tenth of the income, and instead of having a treasury that is beggared, receive the Lord's money by the thousands instead of by the hundreds? Paying one-tenth may not be the best way, but it is a far better way to finance the church than the unjust, unbusiness way that is generally employed. I know Disciples that would give three, four and five times as much if they gave one-tenth of their income. Try it, brother preacher, and educate the church to do it and the burden of the church finance is solved.

The Awakening of a Big City

By G. P. Rutledge

This "neck of the woods" is somewhat removed from the center of our brotherhood, and political questions are not supposed to occupy much space in religious journals. However, there are times and occasions that permit intrusions and digressions. If The Christian-Evangelist had a Philadelphia correspondent, his letter this week would be filled with "political gossip"—it could not be otherwise, for no one in Philadelphia can think or talk of anything else!

For forty years a political machine calling itself the Republican party, has tyrannized the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and especially the city of Philadelphia. Frequent efforts at reform have been made, and occasionally success seemed in sight; but the enemy has ever been victorious. Under the masterly direction of the late Senator M. S. Quay, the iniquitous organization was always able to rally its forces—in him it found a refuge in every time of trouble. But, a year or so ago, Quay was conquered by "the last great enemy," and when he departed the "brain-pan" of the organization was left empty. Senator Penrose, Israel W. Durham, James P. McNicol and others assumed control, but their lack of foresight soon became apparent. They took hold of the reins with boyish hilarity, gleefully cracked the whip and drove the wagon so recklessly that it tilted over, and this morning it is lying bottom side up in the ditch! If the "Old Man" had only been here, it wouldn't have happened—he would have called a halt. It was his motto to "drive slow over rough roads," and to "make concessions when in a tight place." The boys inherited his ambition to "run politics," but his caution did not descend to them.

That old serpent, whose slimy form has wriggled down through the centuries, and with whose despicable history are connected such names as Achan, Gehazi and Ananias and Sapphira, has sought to permanently establish itself in America. From the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the lakes to the gulf, it has inflicted its cold, absorbing coils upon every state and city—and, from this view-point, it seems that the monster's heaviest fold has poisoned and crushed the state of Pennsylvania, while its greedy mouth has been stretched over the city of Philadelphia. While the people have been "loyal to party" and the men have "voted straight," the snake has grown great and fat and defiant. Men now prominent in the organization, who, when the writer came to Philadelphia eight years ago, were poor, are now multi-millionaires—some of whom have no visible means of accumulating money. In the meantime, banks in which government money was deposited have been looted and wrecked, officials have been duped and suicide has followed suicide, valuable franchises have been given away, loans and appropriations have dwindled, and contracts, both great and small, have been let by the hand of favoritism. Major Gilliette's recent report on the filtration contract for the city of Philadelphia revealed the fact that something like $6,000,000 had gone astray within a few months. Five years ago John Wanamaker offered the city $1,500,000 for some franchises that were subsequently bestowed upon a corporation free of all charge. Thus the game has been played for years. But the grafters got too bold. Last spring they attempted to "pocket" the city gas works—some citizens, regarded as "meddlers," went so far as to intimate that the city hall and Fairmount park would be sold next!

We had a mayor elected by the organization, but it was thought he had been put to sleep. He had either been "feigning a nap," or he awoke—he alone knows—and, to the astonishment of the public and the exasperation of those who had put him in office, he vetoed the "gas steal." The city councils ignored the veto, and promptly passed the proposed transaction on. Whereupon Mayor Weaver arose in the power of his official might and slew the corrupt combination. He discharged the directors of public safety and public works, and appointed in their stead men who have been known as reformers for years. When the director of public safety refused to vacate his office, the mayor and a constable paid him a personal visit and gave him thirty minutes to get out of the way—and he got! Then began the reform movement in earnest, with the mayor as leader. The organization immediately took down its city ticket, and put up another bearing the names of men whose characters were unassailable, and raised the old familiar cry, "Reform within the party!" But the faith of the people had been shaken, and the city party came into being. Its ticket was indorsed by the Democratic and Prohibition parties and "the bands began to play." The organization started out with a million-dollar campaign fund, and threatened to annihilate the young party—but there are some things, and people as well, that money will not buy. Of the eight daily papers, six supported the city party.

The preachers, in their denominational and interdenominational meetings, passed ringing resolutions in condemnation of the nefarious system that had robbed and humiliated the people. The Methodist ministers—more than a hundred strong—marched in a body to the city hall and demanded justice. Also, prior to the mayor's change of position, about five hundred ministers assembled in Holy Trinity Church and prayed that he might be led to take a stand for civic righteousness. The papers ridiculed their meeting, men on the streets made fun of it, and it was reported that when told about it the mayor laughed heartily and remarked that "the preachers could pray but they could not dictate the policy of the administration." Little did any one then think that, within six weeks, the mayor would seek the counsel of preachers—which he did—and champion the cause they had been advocating. Preachers in politics! They have been in the thickest of the fight here. They "stumped" the city, solicited votes on the streets, and substituted political speeches for sermons. Scarcely a congregation that was not repeatedly urged from the pulpit to vote for the city party. Some of the leading ministers were threatened by officials, who were allied with the organization, but they kept on "crying aloud and sparing not." The pastor of a large, wealthy church stated from the pulpit that his position had been threatened, then boldly announced that he would speak on "The Political Situation" every Sunday evening until the election. He fulfilled his promise—addressing audiences that overflowed the great auditorium—and, somehow, I have an idea that he will continue as pastor of the church. He's built that way. The writer preached on the subject, addressed ward-meetings, solicited, and voted, but it required no courage on his part—every man in his congregation, so far as he is able to learn, rejoiced in the part his preacher was taking and voted the reform ticket. Mayor Weaver was the most active man in the city. In an automobile he sped from ward to ward, and division to division, sometimes delivering five and six addresses in a single night. The women, also, were conspicuous in the campaign. It was no uncommon thing for a woman, either rich or poor, to address a ward or division meeting. On election day, they held prayer meetings and supplied lunch to division workers. It was a common fight against a common foe. Multi-millionaires and day laborers sat side by side and spoke from the same platform.

The flame of enthusiasm was likewise fanned by interested people in other sections of the country—among them Secretary Root and Governor Folk. The latter came all the way from Missouri to make a speech, but upon his arrival he found that it was speeches the people wanted. From the station to the hotel, he had to talk with reporters. He spoke at luncheon, in the afternoon, and again at dinner. At 7:30 in the evening he took a carriage to meet his appointment in the Academy of Music, but ten thousand or more people had gathered outside and refused to let him enter until he had made a speech. After the Academy meeting he sought rest, but found it not. At 1 o'clock in the morning a crowd of several thousand gathered about his hotel and made the night hideous, until the management appealed to the governor, and he made another speech from one of the balconies. Hereafter, if any one tells Governor Folk that Philadelphia ever sleeps, he will not believe it!

Yesterday the battle was fought. The ballots flew, and so did knives, blackjacks and bullets.

Genuine reform is always accompanied by "rough-house methods." Wrong dies hard. The doctors and hospitals are busy this morning dressing battered heads, and the magistrates are busy trying to separate the good from the bad in the prisoners' dock. There were over five hundred arrests—representing all stations of life, from that of Harbor Master Maloney, who "fares sumptuously every day," in one of the most fashionable sections of the city, down to the poor idiot who knew no better than to stand around the polls with his hands in his pockets. Only one preacher was arrested! He was accused of voting twice, but is out on bail and says he will prove that he didn't do it. The writer is glad to say, "It ain't me."

The entire City Party ticket was elected by 43,000 majority. Also Mayor Berry, of Chester, a Democrat, and the reform candidate for State Treasurer, was elected by a landslide vote.

In the language of Charles Emery Smith, postmaster general under McKinley, and editor of the Philadelphia "Press": "Yesterday Philadelphia was on trial; today she greets the country, vindicated, reclaimed and disenthralled."

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 8, 1905.

A PREACHER'S DISCOVERY.

Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., Atlanta, Ga., is the discoverer of a successful remedy for the cure of Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness, Bronchitis and Asthma. It consists of a combination of medicinal herbs, roots and leaves, which are burned on a plate, smoked in a common clay pipe or in a medical cigarette—the fumes being inhaled into the throat and lungs and exhaled through the nose. It contains no tobacco. The manner of its use is simple, and no other means can so easily reach and cure the disease in all its forms. Dr. Blosser offers to mail free a liberal sample to any sufferer who will write to him for it. If your case is a stubborn one and you desire special advice, he makes no extra charge. This remedy has met with wonderful success, curing cases of even 25 years' standing.

If you wish a box containing a month's treatment, send $1.00, and it will be sent, postage paid. Address, Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

Our Budget.

—E. J. Church, of Seneca, Mo., is in a meeting at Granby.

—J. J. Ralston has accepted a call to Santa Paula, Cal.

—H. A. Sickafoose has taken the work at Independence, Ore.

—Steubenville, O., will get M. J. Grable, who was recently in Cleveland.

—A. J. Moore goes from South McAlester, I. T., to Ballinger, Texas.

—Finis Idleman is holding a meeting for the Metropolitan Church, Chicago.

—L. L. Carpenter is to dedicate the new church at Jonesboro, Ark., November 26.

—At Wylie, Texas ,a new church building has just been dedicated by A. J. Bush.

—A. B. Carpenter has just organized a church at Elgin, Okla. Lee Bowman is the elder.

—E. J. Lampton has purchased a home at Louisiana, Mo., and henceforth his permanent address will be at that place.

—J. S. Stockard has become pastor of the church at Canyon, Texas, having left Allen.

—J. C. McWhirter will take charge of the work at Orange, having resigned at Marshall, Texas.

—On January 1, U. G. Miller will give up the pastorate at LaHarpe Kas. The congregation there hopes to build before long.

—W. B. Slater began work with the church at Greenwich, O., last Lord's day, having resigned at Lancaster.

—A church has been organized at Maywood, Chicago, by A. J. White, with about fifty charter members.

—Long Beach, Cal., will get E. W. Thornton as pastor, and J. J. White has taken charge at Fullerton.

—We hear excellent reports of the work of J. W. Reynolds, Saunemin, Ill., where he has been since the last of June.

—The corner stone for a handsome church building has been laid at Utica, O., where Grant A. Waller is the pastor.

—F. M. Dowling is preaching as he is able for the Ontario church, having secured an orange ranch at Covina, Cal.

—L. H. Stine, from whose pen an article will be found in another column, is carrying on a good work at Lawrenceville, Ill.

—A new house of worship is a possibility at an early date in Ocean Park, near Los Angeles, Cal., where we have a small congregation.

—John Mullen writes us that W. P. Dorsey, of Huntington, W. Va., is holding a meeting at Lowell, O., with Mrs. Minnie Duck as singer.

—The price of the new book of F. D. Power, "Thoughts of Thirty Years," is $1.00, and not 75 cents, as was announced in our last issue.

—E. W. Yocum reports that improvements have been made on the church at Mountain View, Mo., and that the congregation there is at work in earnest.

—Joseph Lowe, having been compelled to resign on account of ill health, James Sharrett will, for the present, preach for the church at Rushville, Kas.

—There has been a big meeting at San Jose, Calif., where J. V. Coombs has been in charge. The latest reports indicate that there were 112 accessions to date.

—President Roosevelt has designated Thursday, November 30, as a day for Thanksgiving. The Lord's day before Thanksgiving day is rally day for Home Missions.

—The work at Lowell, Ind., under A. M. Hootman, is in a promising condition. The church parsonage has been remodeled, and a new furnace put in the church building, while a spirit of revival pervades the community.

P. S. Hillman has been visiting Brother Baker's church at Joplin. Mo., preaching twice in the absence of the pastor. He reports good congregations and both of our churches in that city active.

—G. N. Shishmanian, our missionary for many years to Turkey, has returned to this country and located at Lexington, Ky. He reports the work in Turkey as still continuing and being blessed of the Lord.

—J. A. Shoptaugh, of the Broadway Christian Church, Pueblo, Col., is proving himself an energetic worker and has given satisfaction to the congregation over which he has ministered but a few months.

—J. M. Plummer has just located with the church at Howard, Kan., and while the church is not strong he finds the members willing, and believes he will like his new field and accomplish some good there.

—J. H. Burgess, pastor at New Haven, Mo., recently ordained to the ministry R. C. Abrams, of St. Clair, Mo Brother Abrams has been principal of the St. Clair schools, and is preaching half-time for the church there.

—W. Henry Jones, who some months ago took a Colorado pastorate, finds the climate there does not suit him and he has accepted a call to our church in East St. Louis, where L. W. McCreary was lately ministering.

—After a month's work in his new field at Duluth, Minn., Baxter Waters feels very much encouraged about the prospects. It is, in a large degree, a pioneer church, there being none other of our brotherhood nearer than 150 miles.

—Our church at Holdenville, I. T., begins a meeting November 19, with the new pastor, R. S. Campbell. Brother Campbell held a meeting in his late church last year will splendid success. Bert I. Bentley will have charge of the singing.

—J. M. Van Horn has just resigned the pastorate at Worcester, Mass., and is open to engage with another church. Brother Van Horn is one of the tried and true, and the church he leaves will require a well-qualified man, for it is in a very important field.

—J. W. Towsy has resigned his work at Goodland, Kan., and will look after his financial interests in the Indian Territory. His present address is Gons, I. T., but he expects to be back in Kansas in a few months. The church at Goodland will want a preacher.

—Chalmers McPherson, who is to read a paper before the Texas Christian lectureship on "Christian Liberty and Methods of Christian Service," gives a cordial invitation to all the conservative brethren who oppose missionary conventions to listen to his arguments.

—Our newly established church at Artesia, New Mexico, has secured for its pastor E. H. Holmes, of Whitesboro, Texas. This organization has had a life of only two years, but a neat church building has been erected and the membership has increased from a dozen to seventy-five.

—J. H. Hardin closed his pastorate with the church at Richmond, Mo., last Lord's day and his residence and office will now be in Kansas City, where he should be addressed at 311 Century Building. His whole time and strength will now be devoted to pushing the Bible school work of Missouri.

—One of our young preachers, now a student in Union Theological Seminary, writes: "Since coming to the seminary I am of the opinion more than ever that the position of the Disciples of Christ is the basis toward which Protestant Christendom is moving." No doubt the present tendency is to simplify the creed of Christianity to Christ, and its terms of fellowship to submission to Him. That way lies Christian unity.

WE CAN SHOW YOU

How to do the Lord's work while having your savings in an absolutely safe investment, upon which there will be no taxes to pay, no change of securities, no personal oversight required, no cost of mortgage records or foreclosures, and upon which you will net a larger rate of interest than in any other investment. If you are a Christian and want your money to work for Christ while at the same time it supports you, write, mentioning this paper, to

BENJAMIN L. SMITH,

Corresponding Sec'y American Christian Missionary Society,

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

—Our church at Marion, O., has issued a little four-page church leaflet which not only gives the most interesting facts about the church work, but epitomizes some of the general news of the brotherhood. The indication is that Brother Maple's congregation is a busy one, and has in view a great work.

—The church building at Mechanicsburg, Ill., is being repaired. Among the improvements are a new furnace, new roof, new windows, and probably a new piano will be added. L. A. Chapman, the pastor, preached in the Odd Fellows' Hall while these repairs were being made. A large vocalion has been added to the church at Buffalo recently.

—We have received a number of communications requesting the address of Pedro Alvarado. We hardly think it worth while, even if we could answer the inquiry, for we can assure our friends that they are not likely to be able to influence this rich Catholic Mexican to go into any philanthropic or other enterprise in which Americans and Protestants are engaged.

—W. J. Russell has been having a tilt with some of the members of the ministerial association at Frankfort, Ind. It appears that these preachers have been criticizing some positions of Brother Russell, and have propounded certain questions. A big revival is going on in his church, and there have been 60 additions to date. On the evening of November 8 there was a big demand for seats and the church was crowded, it having been announced that Brother Russell would reply to his critics before the sermon. We may have space in a later issue to give some portion of this reply.

—The offering for Western Pennsylvania missions taken by the church at Uniontown, Pa., will probably amount to $300 or more. On the day this offering was made the church arranged for the purchase of a $4,000 lot adjoining their present property, to be used in the enlargement of its church building and the Bible school department.

—Crayton Brooks still continues his pulpit onslaughts on the lawless elements in our cities. He has recently taken part in the efforts being made to purge Colorado Springs of its ringsters and gamblers. Brother Brooks is at present engaged as one of the evangelists in the Pittsburg campaign and has just spoken powerfully in that city on the subject of civic reform.

—Some of our smaller contemporaries help themselves quite freely to articles in The Christian-Evangelist without a sign of any credit to the paper which procured the articles and paid for them. We will be pleased to have our smaller papers use anything in our columns which they may find available to their purpose, but we shall expect the usual courtesy of proper credit to The Christian-Evangelist.

DR. W. E. MACKLIN AND FAMILY, NOW ON THE OCEAN, RETURNING TO THEIR MISSION FIELD, NANKIN, CHINA.

—A. T. Campbell has just been installed as pastor of the Monroe Street Church, Chicago. The words of Edward A. Ott, the retiring pastor, seems to indicate that he is giving up the ministry. We trust that he will yet find that, as his education was for the ministry, he will yet be turned back to a calling that is higher than any other and in which we believe Brother Ott could yet make himself very useful.

—We make two requests of our readers: Please address all communications that are not strictly personal, but are intended for The Christian-Evangelist to "The Editor" and not to individuals; and secondly, when you desire to call our attention to something in a newspaper mark the news item or paragraph distinctly. We simply have not time to wade through column after column of local papers. A still better plan would be to make a clipping from the paper and send it to us in an envelope. By following these suggestions communications can be handled much more expeditiously.

—Louis S. Cupp, late of Platte City, Mo., has purchased a home in Kansas City and writes The Christian-Evangelist that "the latch string is out." His first month's work for the Hyde Park Church has resulted in 17 additions, and the brethren are now planning for a great thank-offering for their church extension loan. The debt on the building is about $6,000 and their aim will be to lift this as soon as possible.

Dr. Errett Gates paid a visit to The Christian-Evangelist office on his return from Kansas City. He reports that the $30,000, which he has been seeking to raise, has almost been realized. Only $1,900 are still lacking to secure the pledge of $15,000, which Brother R. A. Long made. This fund is to be used for endowment, and it is hoped that some individual will put up the building that will be needed for our divinity school in Chicago.

—An all-day anniversary meeting has just been held by the church at Albion, Ill., for which C. C. Garrigues ministers. Nearly $1,900 was raised during the past year, over $580 being for improvements, and more than $230 going to missionary causes. The membership is 258, with a net gain of 18. Brother Garrigues has begun his second year, with an increase in salary. An evangelistic meeting is planned to begin early in December.

—The Foreign Society is preparing to hold a series of rallies in Southern Indiana, Southern Illinois, Tennessee and Kentucky during the month of December. Further announcements will be made next week. The whole months of January and February will be occupied with rallies in different parts of the country. A rally may be the equal of a national convention in point of interest and enthusiasm. Those who can do so should make it a point to attend and assist.

—Jackson, Ky., has not had the best of reputation, but it is improving, according to W. J. Dodge, who writes us that a new, commodious, substantial Christian church building is nearing completion, and when the financial strain is over the prospects for a good work will be greatly multiplied. Those willing to aid in this needy mission field can send their cheque to Brother Dodge, or O. H. Pollard, or to the Jackson Deposit Bank.

—Among the visitors at The Christian-Evanglist office during the past week were F. M. Rains, Dr. W. T. Moore, J. G. McNutt, of Newman, Ill.; I. H. Fuller, of La Monte, Mo.; T. N. Kincaid, of Hot Springs, Ark.; J. G. Lewis, of Taylorsville, Ill.; E. J. Fenstermacher, of Clintonville, Ky.; T. N. Myers, of Lexington, Ky.; W. C. Perigo, late of New Hartford, Ill., and W. W. Wharton, of Winchester, Ill. The two latter brethren are open for meetings or another pastorate. We were delighted to greet these brethren.

—Bro. O. L. Lyon, whose sermon we recently published, giving the reasons for his change of church affiliations, has received and accepted a unanimous call from the church at Newman, Ill., where he begins his labors January 1. He writes: "I am quite happy in my new relations. I have enjoyed a freedom and a fellowship almost unknown to me before. I only desire to be used for the advancement of the Master's kingdom. I wish The Christian-Evangelist great success. Every week for three years I have read it with much pleas- and profit."

—The Foreign Society has issued an edition of Dr. Rijnhart's book, entitled, "With the Tibetans, in Tent and Temple." President McGarvey states that no missionary document that he has ever read has stirred him as this book has stirred him. Sir William Muir, then the principal of Edinboro University, issued a pamphlet about this book when it first appeared, calling attention to its merits and urging people to buy and read it. The first edition of this book cost $1.50. The special edition is sold for 50 cents and the postage, which amounts to 12 cents. Orders may be sent with the cash to F. M. Rains, Box 884, Cincinnati, Ohio.

—Excavations have been begun for a new church building at Armington, Ill. It is to cost $10,000. L. E. Chase, the minister, writes that it is a time of great rejoicing, as the work has been hindered for years for lack of room. He speaks very highly of his membership, and the brethren taking a joyful part in all the missionary offerings. The church was never more prosperous than at present. They have just enjoyed a week of Bible study under the direction of Knox P. Taylor, the state Bible school evangelist.

—We have received notice of the marriage of M. A. Hart, pastor of our church at Fulton, Mo., and Miss Nell Barker, of Rockland, Me. Brother Hart is one of the Christian-Evangelist Special party to the coast and we wondered why some of the young ladies of that party did not capture him, for he seemed to us worth making a captive. The explanation has now come to hand. Brother Hart was already captured, and we rejoice that so promising a young man has found a woman who seems peculiarly fitted to be a helpmeet in his work. His bride was one of the faculty of William Woods College.

—Adam K. Adcock has closed his work at Jackson, O., and has entered upon the pastorate at Tiffin, O. Brother Adcock is a Tennessean by birth and was educated in that state, though he subsequently studied at Kentucky University and at Kimberlin. Most of his ministerial life, however, has been spent in Ohio. His ministry at Jackson extended over two years, and judging by the splendid reception given him and his wife and the kind things said of them on their farewell, Brother Adcock has made a deep impression on the church members and the citizens. He himself writes: "They sent me away with more faith in the human race and more confidence in myself, and yet with an humble spirit. I love those to whom I have ministered by God's blessing. May we meet in His presence! Our new field at Tiffin is promising and we look forward to lots of hard work and success."

—Mrs. Howard T. Cree, of Augusta, Ga., writes: "I must tell you how much I enjoy the Easy Chair. I read your paper eagerly each week. This fall, when we came home from our summer's vacation, it was a great pleasure to read of the trip of the 'Special' to California and it was somewhat of a compensation for being deprived of going. Mr. Cree and I felt almost like we had been with you."

—We have received the second copy of "The Berean Helper," published monthly at Oenaville, Texas, by Thomas J. Easterwood. It is a small four-page paper; price, 25c a year. Its special object is to encourage Bible study. The object is a worthy one. Brother Easterwood's brethren should help him to secure a printing office where the paper could be better printed, and the editor should give some plan of Bible study, and suggest some books that would help his readers in the work. We wish him success in the worthy undertaking.

—Horace Siberell writes that John S. Zeran, who has until recently been engaged in business, has felt a call to go into the more active service of the ministry in which he will be assisted by the musical ability of his wife. They already have a number of calls for meetings and with their ability and the experience they have already had in religious work they should prove valuable servants in the ministry of the Lord. Brother Zeran may be addressed at Farmington, Mo.

—R. S. Smedley, of Geary, Okla., dedicated the Fairview church at Sand Creek, Grant county, and raised all the indebtedness, so that the loan will now be returned to the Church Extension Board. Brother Smedley, who has been a living-link evangelist under the Home Board, has resigned that position and will now preach half time for Hitchcock and build churches and hold meetings the rest of the time. He solicits correspondence which may be addressed to him at Geary.

—"The New Church Messenger" reports the coming into the fellowship of the New Jerusalem Church from the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Professor Eben Fish and wife, of Lakewood, O. In his letter giving reasons for his step, Professor Fish gives, among others, the fact that the discipline practically declares for infallibility, in providing that no articles of religion or rules of doctrine "contrary to our present existing and established standards of doctrines" shall be passed by the general conference.

—The University of Missouri has arranged for a series of Sunday evening sermons to be delivered this winter in the university auditorium by some twenty prominent ministers of various churches. The importance of having a strong church and preacher in university towns was one of the points urged in the conference at Urbana, reported in a recent issue. We are glad that at Columbia we have this. The membership of the church there, as reported by Brother Winders in our evangelistic columns, is now one thousand. In this connection it may be of interest if we state that Dr. Jones, now acting president of the state university, and himself a Presbyterian, has just been urging the meeting of the synod of that body to devise some method by which the three hundred Presbyterian students at the university can be brought under the influence of the church. It is being suggested that the Presbyterians of the state erect a guild house near the university.

For nearly 300 years the Bible was not re-translated. The language of the 1611 or "King James" edition had all these years remained unchanged while the English language itself changed so much that at least twenty-five different dictionaries were necessary.

For these reasons

New Church for St. Louis.

The dedication of the chapel of the Union Avenue Church, St. Louis, took place last Lord's day. F. M. Rains preached an admirable sermon in the morning, and then proceeded to raise pledges and gifts to free the property of the debt of $6,000, and at the same time secure enough money to warrant the congregation in going forward with the completion of the main auditorium. There was a fine Sunday school rally prior to the morning service. The total cost of the contemplated building will perhaps be over $70,000, but it is not expected that more than $60,000 will immediately be put into the plant, as the erection of the steeple and some other details can be completed at a later date. Many of the brethren who had made pledges covering a period of five years when the chapel was begun extended their pledges from two to five years longer and other new pledges were taken, payable over a period of five years. After some four or five thousand dollars had been added at the dedicatory exercises in the afternoon to the promises made in the morning, the amount totalled up $34,000, and the officers feel now that they can go ahead in the erection of what promises to be one of the most complete and handsome church edifices in the west. A union communion service was held prior to the dedication, Dr. W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo., offering the dedicatory prayer, and S. R. Maxwell and Dr. J. H. Garrison returning thanks for the emblems. In the evening the pastor, Dr. J. M. Philputt preached, his theme being "The Right Putting of Emphasis." Special music was rendered at all the services, and the day was a very joyful one to the members of this congregation and their friends. It should be noted that there were no very large individual contributions, the largest, we believe, being $3,000, while quite a number of children contributed pledges of $25.

A Visit to Drury.

The editor of The Christian-Evangelist had the pleasure last week of accompanying a large party of the trustees and friends of Drury College from this city to Springfield, Mo., on the occasion of the installation of their new president, Dr. J. Edward Kirbye, D. D. It was a great occasion. There was an imposing procession made up of the faculty of the college, the board of trustees, visiting delegates from other colleges, local ministers and other friends of the institution, across the campus from Fairbanks Hall to Stone Chapel, where the installation exercises were held. An able address was delivered in the forenoon by Rev. Stephen M. Newman, D. D., pastor of the First Congregational Church, Washington, D. C. Greetings were extended in a very happy manner by Rev. Frank E. Jenkins, D. D., Atlanta Theological Seminary; Rev. Wm. M. Jones, Ph. D., Hyde Park Church, St. Louis, representing the churches of Missouri; Chancellor W. S. Chaplin, LL. D., of Washington University. Professor Edward M. Shepard, dean of Drury College, presiding. In the afternoon other greetings were extended by J. T. Woodruff in behalf of the city of Springfield, and by Mr. Alfred Page in behalf of the alumni; R. B. Howland, representing the students, and Professor A. P. Hall, representing the faculty. President-elect Dr. Kirbye then delivered a very strong inaugural address on "Democracy and the College." Both the speaker and the speech were received with great enthusiasm by the large audience. The presiding officer, Professor F. A. Hall, of Washington University, then in behalf of the trustees made a brief address and turned over the charter and key of the institution of the newly elected president and introduced him to the audience as the duly installed president of Drury.

Our Congregationalist brethren, under whose supervision Drury has been established and is being conducted, have borne a leading part in Christian education in this country. From the landing of the Mayflower to the present time they have been zealous advocates of education, and of that kind of education which makes for Christian character. They manifest a most commendable interest in their institutions of learning. It is not every religious body that could have gathered a whole car-load of busy men to go across the state to attend the inauguration of a college president, and by their presence encourage the school in its work. It has been a most fortunate thing for the great region of the southwest that Drury College was planted at the time and place that it was, for throughout all this region it is exercising a most beneficent influence, and we trust it is at the beginning of a new era of development under the young and able president. The institution is decidedly Christian in tone and non-sectarian in spirit.

A Red Letter Day.

Monday, November 6, was a red letter day with the Christian ministers of St. Louis. The Christian Publishing Company, at their own expense, have fitted up a beautiful and commodious room in their new building especially for the ministers' meetings. We occupied it for the first time on the above date. Dr. Garrison, in a few chosen words, presented the room, completely furnished, lighted and heated. The rising expression of appreciation which followed was something more than a formal vote of thanks. But more surprises were to follow. After the morning program, which included an able and interesting paper from Bro. J. S. Hughes, of Chicago, we were invited downstairs to a beautiful banquet prepared by the young ladies of the Christian-Evangelist staff. Eighteen hungry ministers never spent a busier hour. Every soul was satisfied. Impromptu toasts followed, closing with a few forceful words from Dr. Garrison on the place of emphasis in the work of the minister today—the deepening of the spiritual life and the recognition and understanding of the importance and work of the Holy Spirit. We sang "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," and all felt the occasion marked an epoch in the history of our work in this city—the passing of isolation, every fellow for himself, and the dawn of the new and better day of mutual sympathy and coöperation in the great problems that confront us. James M. Philputt, President St. Louis Ministerial Association.

The Pittsburg Campaign.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 13.—Reports to date, with several incomplete and others missing, show the following additions to the churches: Allegheny, First, 141; Observatory Hill, 10; Shady Avenue, 26; Bellevue, 23; Braddock, 7; Carnegie, 11; Grafton, 3; Homestead, 67; McKee's Rocks, 61; Belmar, 48; Central, 48; East End, 12; Fourth Church, 16; Herron Hill, 8; Knoxville, 36; Squirrel Hill, 20; Turtle Creek, 16; Wilkinsburg, 42; Connellsville, 70; Charleroi, 14; Washington, First, 61; Washington, Second, 4; Duquesne, 4; Cannonsburg, 4; Pittsburg, First 23. Total, 774. W. A. Warren, Secretary.

Dedication at Athens, West Virginia.

It was my privilege to dedicate the new and beautiful house of worship at Athens, W. Va. We raised money to provide for all the indebtedness against it. Athens is the seat of the West Virginia Normal College. It was a great pleasure to form the acquaintance of the president and many members of the faculty. The cause of primitive Christianity is making very satisfactory advancement in that part of West Virginia. L. L. Carpenter.

Wabash, Ind.

Dedication at Sherman, Texas.

The new building of the Central Christion Church, Sherman, Texas, was opened to the public October 22, 1905. R. R. Hamlin, pastor of First Christian Church, Fort Worth, preached the opening sermon, and Leonard Dougherty, of Louisville, Ky., had charge of the music.

Actual work was begun on the building last January. It is built of buff-colored brick. The appointments of the house are modern in every way.

The membership of the congregation is 400. The pastors preceding the present one were Harry Hamilton, B. F. Wilson and J. W. Holsapple. The plans for the new building were adopted, and the subscriptions taken in the pastorate of J. W. Holsapple, who was with the church about five years. The present pastor, J. H. Fuller, came in March, 1904. Evangelists Hamlin and Dougherty are remaining with the church for a few weeks in a meeting. All indications point to a great success. Harmony, fellowship and spirituality are the factors making the outlook so rich and fine.

A very unique entertainment was provided at the Compton Heights Christian Church, St. Louis, on November 3, in the form of a missionary debate. The members of the Intermediate Society of Christian Endeavor challenged those of the Senior organization, and their arguments were presented and sustained in such a manner as to win the decision in their favor two to one. The question as discussed was, "Resolved, That, at the present time, the foreign mission field needs our help more than the home field," the Intermediates taking the affirmative, and the Seniors the negative.

Both phases were well presented, neither side denying the need of work in its opponent's field, but each contending for immediate help. Two of the strongest arguments given by the negatives were, "The light that shines brightest at home shines farthest abroad," and "Save America for the world's sake;" and two arguments as given in rebuttal were, "People are dying unsaved in America, not for lack of churches, but in spite of them," and "Save the world for Christ's sake." Besides the oral presentation of their theme, the Intermediates made charts, placards and mottoes, and had these, together with a map of the world showing comparative religions and heathendom, hung in very conspicuous places. The Juniors added much to the pleasure of the occasion by singing "We for Christ and Christ for All," and Harold West recited most beautifully the story of "The Two Mitts."

Altogether it was a very instructive and profitable evening and one that may be suggestive to other organizations. The preparation for such an intelligent presentation of these great topics must help to extend Christ's kingdom both at home and abroad.

That Free Gift.

We are glad to learn that a number of our readers are availing themselves of our offer of volumes of the New Christian Quarterly for 1895 and 1896 as a free gift, on the following conditions:

Any one sending us a new subscriber to The Christian-Evangelist at the regular price of $1.50, or who renews his own subscription for the year at the same price, will be entitled to either one of these volumes, the price of which is $2.00.

Anyone sending us two new subscribers and $3.00, or renewing his own subscription for a year and sending us one new subscriber, and $3.00, will be entitled to both volumes.

As to the contents of these volumes see our issue of October 19. The gift is absolutely free, as the paper is put at the regular price. These valuable volumes should be exhausted at once.

Ministerial Exchange.

The church at Rockport, Mo., is in need of a good, active pastor. Moderate salary. Address, F. A. Sizemore, Rockport.

E. B. Barnes, of Noblesville, Ind., has open dates for December and February. He would be glad to hear from churches desiring meetings in those months. E. E. Nelms, singing evangelist, has an open date for December. He may be addressed at Casey, Ill.

Lawrence Wright, evangelist, Des Moines, Iowa, who has done evangelistic work exclusively for fifteen years, can be had for meetings. His brother, Edward, who has been his singer for years, has decided to enter upon the work of pastor. This caused the cancelation of their dates arranged far ahead. Here is a valuable man. Put him to work.

J. L. McDonald, Snow Hill, Md., a man of ability and ripe experience, can be had for a pastorate or for meetings.

Miss Edna Kendall, 3807 Lake avenue, Chicago, Ill., desires work as singing evangelist. Her record is good as a gospel singer.

D. R. Francis and wife, Sullivan, Ind., will enter the evangelistic field about January 1. Brother Francis is an usually gifted speaker, and he and Sister Francis sing gospel solos with unusual power. You will make no mistake to call them to your assistance.

The church at Grand Junction, Col., would be glad to hear from any good strong man who is looking for a new field, as we are without a preacher. Write F. C. Johnson, church clerk.

Wanted—Superintendent of Bible schools in Oklahoma. Applicants should state what preparations they have made for such work, and what experience they have had. Some one is wanted who will take the field with a view to devoting a number of years, in organizing and building up the work. Address, Dick T. Morgan, president Territorial Board, Woodland, Okla.

WEEKLY GIVING CALENDAR SYSTEM

For Church Collections.

This is certainly the best method ever invented for managing church finances.

C. R Albee, Treas. Christian Church, Jefferson, Ia.

A decided success, we have used this system for two years and offerings have increased more than fifty per cent. F. E. Mallory, Minister Third Christian Church, Topeka, Kan.

Hundreds of churches have doubled their offerings by the use of our attractive Calendar System of Finance. Samples mailed on receipt of your request.

Mention the paper.

N. Rollo Davis desires to correspond with churches near St. Joseph, Mo., that want a pastor for part, or full time, for 1906. He may be addressed at 211 North Twenty-first street, St. Joseph.

B. E. Youtz and son, R. O. Youtz, are open for meetings after January 1, 1906. Terms reasonable. Song books furnished free. Address 1222 Twenty-eighth street, Des Moines, Iowa.

Wanted: To correspond with a Brother who can lead congregational singing and would like to locate in a mild climate. Address J. T. Boone, pastor First Christian Church, Jacksonville, Fla

The Christian Church of Atoka, I. T., is at present without a pastor. The congregation owns a good house, well furnished, out of debt; can pay reasonable salary. A great field for work; town growing rapidly and substantially. Address L. Langford, Atoka, I. T.

Miss Gertrude Maxwell will re-enter the evangelistic field as chorus leader and soloist. I commend her to pastors holding their own meetings. Address her at Kokomo, Ind. J. H. MacNeill.

W. W. Wharton is open for meetings, or a regular pastorate. He may be addresed at Winchester, Ill.

W. C. Perigo may be engaged for evangelistic meetings, or as pastor. Address him at New Hartford, Ill.

Another Call to Texas.

During the past few months I have issued a request that all persons in every congregation of Disciples in Texas furnish me with a complete list of their church membership, etc. This is a very important matter and I hope some brother or sister in each of our congregations will at once volunteer to look after this work. Just write me a card saying you will do the work and a supply of blanks will be sent. So far as possible, I would like for these reports to be made up to January 1, 1906, and mailed to me immediately thereafter. May I not have a ready response to this request from all over the state? NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

North Carolina.

Last Lord's day morning we had one added by letter, the first since my work began here. At night I preached a special sermon to young men, and nearly every seat in the audience room was filled. I will continue a series to young women next Lord's day evening; a sermon later to children and others.

The preachers have a union meeting at the Y. M. C. A. There were ten present last Monday. They received me very cordially, and elected me a member of the association. There is a devotional spirit; each meeting is opened with a hymn, scripture reading and prayer. On Lord's day at 4 P. M., there was an anniversary service at the city hospital. Most of the preachers participated, the writer being called upon to make one of the addresses.

Salem is an old town, and the seat of a Moravian academy. Some of the buildings are more than one hundred years old. Bishop Rondthaler, who came here from Philadelphia 28 years ago, was for years the principal. He still does some teaching. He is prominent in all good works in the Twin Cities. Winston is the newer part, and the business section.

President Roosevelt was given a great reception at the state fair at Raleigh. He was to have been entertained by Governor Glenn, but the death of the governor's brother, who was also his private secretary, caused a change in the program. The governor's home is in Winston, on the same street and about a square from my church.

From my former field I learn of the successful dedication of the church at Waynesboro, Pa., by B. L. Smith, on Oct. 8th. Pledges for the full indebtedness, $825, were secured. They have not yet secured a preacher. Brother Smith writes: "I think the Waynesboro church building is one of the prettiest buildings I have seen in many a day's travel."

Kentucky.

A number of revivals are now in progress throughout the state. The gospel is being favorably heard, and many souls are turning to Christ.

Evangelist James Samll, with W. E. M. Hackleman as leader of song, is in the midst of a splendid meeting with the Broadway Church, Lexington. At this writing there have been about sixty additions.——H. D. C.Machlachlan, of Shelbyville, is assisting H. H. Lloyd in a meeting with the church at Lagrange.——C. J. Armstrong, of Winchester, is assisting in the meetings now in progress in Greater Pittsburg.

W. H. Allen has resigned at the Chestnut Street Church, Lexington, to accept a call to the Jackson Street Church, Muncie, Ind., and expects to begin work in his new field about December 1. We are indeed sorry to see him leave Lexington, where he has done such good work. He is one of our most useful men.

The Central Church, Lexington, has just been handsomely frescoed. While the church was closed for these repairs, the congregation held regular services in the Y. M. C. A. building. This congregation is prospering greatly under the faithful ministry of I. J. Spencer.

S. Boyd White has resigned at Falmouth and is already at work in his new field at Mt. Healthy, Ohio. We regret to see him leave "Ole Kaintuck."

Joseph Severance, of Georgetown, has just closed a good meeting with the church at Willard, Carter county.——The meeting at the Clifton Church, Louisville, under the leadership of C. B. Newnan, of Indianapolis, closed with sixteen additions. Thad S. Tinsley is the faithful pastor of this congregation.——D. F. Stafford, of the Third Church, Louisville, has just closed an excellent meeting at Tyrone, Anderson county.——J. A. Holton is in a meeting with "home forces" at St. Mathews, near Louisville.——The meeting at North Pleasureville, in which the minister, George C. Waggoner, was assisted by Evangelist Simpson Ely, closed with 48 additions, 20 baptisms.——J. Murray Taylor, recenty of Washington, D. C., has just closed a successful meeting with the church at Stamping Ground, Scott county, which resulted in 42 additions, 22 by baptism.

The church here at Midway has just been newly frescoed, painted, etc., and now presents quite an attractive appearance. We were all greatly rejoiced at having 11 accessions at our regular services on last Sunday. Eight of these were by confession and baptism. George W. Kemper.

Nebraska.

It is a sad duty we have to chronicle the death of Bro. A. A. Adams' wife. No details have reached this office. Brother Adams will have the deep sympathy of all his brethren.

The following record of the work at Peru, under the leadership of J. D. Forsyth, for the first four weeks, speaks well: Twelve added by letter, four by baptism and one confessor to be baptized. Brother Forsyth is taking a good place in the religious life of the town. He began a meeting with the church on the 29th.

The secretary has visited Broken Bow, where the church is not in the best of condition, though it is not especially suffering from its experience with its last preacher. They need a good, safe man to stay with them for a term of years.

It ought to be said that Bro. L. F. Harman, who has been preaching for them for the last half year, after his work with the church ended, took up and organized an independent movement, which he does not call a church, though he has recently established a Sunday school in connection with it. He lectures each Sunday evening, and is reported to have very "broad" views concerning the divinity of Christ and is very "liberal" in his expositions of the scriptures. No reflecton has been made upon his personal character. It seems to be one of those cases in which a man finds himself out of harmony with the views held by the religious people with whom he is identified. In the case of Brother Harman, he has been with us but a few months, coming to us from the Methodists last winter. It seems too bad that a capable man should turn from the bread of the word to take up with the husks of the philosophers of the day.

H. T. Sutton, head of the School of Eloquence at Cotner University, is the nominee of the Prohibitionists for regent of the State University. Brother Sutton is not only a man of sterling character, but is eminently qualified to fill the postiion, if elected. If more men like him could be put into public places of trust, the world would be better.

J. A. Beattie is supplying regularly at Ulysses now.

Chancellor Aylesworth preached for the new congregation at Vesta on October 29.

The first response to the state missionary apportionment letter came from the Ladies' Aid Society at Nehawka. This was immediately followed by the Bible school at Waco. This is taken as a sign that the offering is not only going to be a good one, but that it is coming early. This is as it should be, as the treasury is empty, and the bills for October quarterage, as well as the fall printing, are unpaid. This is the time of year when a dry treasury is apt to occur, and also when the socicty necessarily has to have considerable expense. We hope that these considerations will move the churches to promptness.

This paper may reach some scattered Disciples in the state. If so, would it not be good for such to have a part in this great work by sending in a personal offering. There are members who are well able to put $100 each into this work. Name your own field if you choose, but give to the work of helping our helpless brethren in a manner befitting your abilities. Let us pray that the offering may be large

Illinois C. W. B. M.

Illinois began the national year October 1, 1905, with 178 auxiliaries, 4,024 members and 1,638 subscribers to "The Tidings." During the year 12 auxiliaries were organized, and three reorganized, and but one disbanded.

Illinois was apportioned $10,000 for the year, and raised $11,072.42, thus exceeding her apportionment by $1,072.42. Much institute work has been done and interest along all lines has been on the increase. The past year has been the best in the history of the Illinois work. C. C. Smith spent 10 weeks in the state, raising in cash and pledges about $1,100. W. J. Burner attended several of our district conventions and created much interest in South America.

Illinois special work for this year is the raising of $3,600 to be used in supporting Mrs. Bertha Lohr in India, Miss Bertha Westrup in Mexico, and Mrs. Burner in South America, and to help Chicago city missions. Last year 99 auxiliaries in Illinois observed C. W. B. M. day, raising $78.92. This year every auxiliary ought to observe the day. All C. W. B. M. day offerings can not be applied on Illinois special work. A letter concerning the day and a copy of the November "Tidings" have been sent to every preacher in the state, and the state officers are counting on a hearty response.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidently made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country ,and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this recipe free, only asking two 2-cen tstamps to pay expenses. This herb also cures Night Sweats, Nausea at the Stomach, and will break up a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. P. C. MADISON, M. D., Suite 280, 80 Dearborn St. CHICAGO

C. W. B. M. In Missouri.

We are sorry to report that Mrs. A. M. Fullen, has met with a painful accident, which necessitated her cutting short the route she was making among the auxiliaries in the southwest part of the state. She fell and broke her arm and collar bone, and was obliged to return to her home in Gravette, Ark. Our prayers are with our afflicted sister.

In one C. W. B. M. letter, the writer stated that Mr. B. H. Gleaver, was president of the Ralls county co-operation; this was a mistake. He is the live secretary of that county.

Every auxiliary should be making preparations to observe C. W. B. M. day. Ask your pastor to preach even a better sermon than last year. A most delightful exercise, by Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds, has been prepared and will be sent in any number to the auxiliaries by Mrs. Helen E. Moses. It provides for several taking part on that day. We highly recommend a sharing of the time with the pastor, for those who can, and let his sermon use a short time and let others come in with some of the beautiful and inspiring selections of this ready-prepared program. The most important thing is a thorough preparation on the part of the auxiliary. Every cent of money raised that day may go to pay your special apportionment for the state.

New auxiliaries are reported at Foster, with Mrs. Emma Cathers, Mrs. Lura Bowman and Miss Emma Goodenough, as officers; also at Clark with Miss Sallie Robinson, Mrs. Geo. Hulen and Miss Dora March as officers. Rothville has organized itself, with Mrs. C. D. Stratton as secretary, president and treasurer not reported. That is the way to do my sisters, send for literature and get to work.

Greater New York.

The New York brethren are looking forward with pleasure to seeing and hearing several of our leading preachers during the Inter-Church Conference on Federation.

The 56th Street Church is a church so officered and membered that they go right ahead with their work although without a pastor. They have a Chinese school which is doing splendid work. About thirty are in attendance. Two have already made the good confession. The Sunday school under the leadership of J. H. Banton, is making progress. Brother Banton is a lawyer who combines an active church life with his legal profession. The church is in great need of such men. Recently Geo. L. Snively, of St. Louis, preached for them two Sundays on his way to and from the New England Convention. G. L. Garvin also preached two Sundays. October 12, A. E. [illegible] Nankin, China, spoke to them morning and evening. October 15, C. C. Morrison, of Springfield, Ill., preached for them.

J. P. Lichtenberger and the 119th Street Church are working in preparation for a meeting with Chas. R. Scoville in January. They are conducting personal worker classes and devoting the Wednesday evening services to planning, praying and preparing.

S. T. Willis, at the 169th Street Church, recently preached his sixteenth anniverary sermon. They hope soon to complete their new house of worship, which will be a splendid monument to the membership and pastor.

Herbert Yeuell has arrived to take charge of his work in Brooklyn and began by a revival meeting for W. G. Oram, at the Third Church.

The Disciples of Christ have six resident pastors in New York, six promising churches and about fifteen hundred members. There are as many more Disciples (?) living in the city, but not connected with any of our churches. If friends know of such, or pastors know of members moving to the city, it would be of great service to send their names and addresses to one of the New York pastors or to J. P. Lichtenberger, president of the Disciples Union of New York, 41 West 119th street.

There are fourteen ministers of the Christian Church in New York now, eight of whom are taking more or less work at Union Theological Seminary. Those at the seminary are R. W. Gentry, of Sedalia, Mo., who was J. M. Rudy's assistant for some time; P. A. Parsons, who is well-known in Northeast Missouri, where he preached while attending school at Canton; M. L. Bates, pastor at East Orange, N. J.; Charles Foster and A. J. Wilson, two Kimberly Heights boys, formerly from England, who have been holding down the whole state of Vermont for some time as pastors; J. L. Garvin, from Ohio, who, by the way, is rejoicing in the advent of a new girl at his house; and A. E. Cory, here on leave of absence from his work in China.

Ohio.

This is Wednesday morning November 8, in the year of grace 1905. It is the "day after." There was an election in Ohio yesterday. As a certain Dutchman said, it was a "landscape-slide." Bossism and the machine have gone down. The church of Ohio was on trial. Now it is triumphant. The liquor interests openly endorsed Mr. Herrick and saloon keepers were solicited all over the state for campaign funds. There is no end to the surprises. It is not a Democratic victory nor a Republican defeat. It is a triumph of righteousness against the saloon and machine politics. We are feeling pretty good, thank you.

F. M. Fields has closed a very successful year at Geneva, with 82 additions and the Sunday school has increased 40 per cent. The Christian Endeavor took two banners at a recent county convention. The meeting house has been overhauled and a manse for the dominie provided. Good for Fields and Geneva.

Geo. Darsie began a meeting at High Street, Akron, Sunday Nov. 12, with W. E. M. Hackleman as leader of song.

The meeting at Canton goes on gloriously with 374 added at this date. This is a great victory and will place "our synagogue" at the head in that city. The Canton church will have a big job of assimilation but we shall expect them to be equal to it.

Two meetings begin in Lake Co., Nov. 19. J. J. Tisdall, at Perry, with the Saxons as singers and C. A. Freer, at Painesville, with Miss Ida Mae Hanna, as soloist. The outlook for good meetings is hopeful.

E. P. Wise has resigned at Cedar Ave., Cleveland, and will go Jan. 1 to the church at East Liverpool. Brother Wise is a good man, full of faith and the Holy Spirit and will do good wherever he goes.

W. G. Walters, who was at Fostoria two years ago has been called from Blue Field,

Wealth in the Inland Empire

Business opportunities in new and growing towns. Wonderful agricultural wealth in the great irrigated districts. F. Walden of Zillah, Wash., cleared $10 000 net in one year from 80 acres. Others are making like profits. Schools, churches, rural delivery, rural telephone lines—a good land to live in and a climate second to none. Adjacent to Spokane and the great Puget Sound cities—ample markets for all time.

Ask D. B. Gardner, D. P. A., 210 Commercial Bldg., St. Louis, or C. W. Mott, General Emigration Agent, St. Paul, Minn., for information about the great irrigated districts of Eastern Washington.

W. Va., to Ashland, Ohio. He will find a good church at Ashland and we welcome him back to Ohio.

The offerings for state missions began Sunday, Nov. 5. We are making Lake Co., a living-link in the Ohio society this fall. There are five churches in the county but three of them are not very strong, If you have not made an offering for state missions do so before the month is up.

Ira H. Dusfee, held a very successful meeting at Centerburg, where L. G. Walker is bishop. He is now in a meeting at Lynchburg with Brother Pierce. The later reports of the Ohio election indicate that the state Democratic ticket is elected and the next legislature will be Democratic. The Democrats have therefore, a great opportunity and responsibility. C. A. Freer.

Indian Territory.

October 19 we organized a congregation at Wewoka, the capital of the Seminole nation. We also organized a Sunday school and Ladies' Aid.

Sunday, October 15 was spent with the church at Chickasha. Large audiences were present morning and evening, and a pledge of $50 was secured for the support of our work the coming year.

I visited Calvin on October 20, and found a small number, whom we hope to make the nucleus of a well organized church in the near future.

We have just dedicated the new church at Roff. Bro. E. S. Allhands and this little band of the faithful have won a victory during the past year, not only in erecting a $2,500 building, but in winning souls by the score, indeed by the hundred during the time.

Monday following the dedication at Roff, we began a meeting for some brethren at Stonewall. We fully expect to organize at Stonewall.

We recently arranged with F. H. Groom to hold a meeting at Haileyville, and with J. S. Hawkins, of Prior Creek, to hold one at Haskell. On account of serious sickness of both Brother Groom and his family, he has had to give up the Haileyville meeting. Brother Hawkins is at this writing in the Haskell meeting.

D. M. Harris, of Wagoner, writes encouragingly of the work at Wagoner. Randolph Cook is in a meeting at Tulsa. I. C. Mullins is also in a meeting at Hartshorn.

R. E. Campbell will shortly begin a meeting with home forces at Holdenville; George H. Farley at Muskogee, and J. T. Hawkins at South McAlester will do likewise.

Charles Musselman has accepted the work at Ada. Frank Brain, of Wilburton is in Chicago for a short stay.

During the coming missionary year, beginning with November 1, all our missionary interests are going to receive greater emphasis than ever before, beginning, of course, with Indian Territory missions—first "in Jerusalem" then "in Judea." It would do my heart good, would do all of us good if a liberal offering could be sent during the coming year to each and all of our missionary boards. But the following four should be considered above all others, for the reason that they are doing more than all others to build up the cause in this new and needy field. First in importance is the "Indian Territory Missionary Co-operation." Every member, every church in this Territory, should make his most liberal missionary offering during the year to this co-operation. Every church in the Territory should during the coming year, make a liberal, the next most liberal offering to General Home Missions, remitting to Benj. L. Smith, Cincinnati, O. The Territory receives most substantial financial assistance from the general home board and has for several years. Hence, we should remember to make an offering to Home missions the first Lord's day in May. To neglect such an offering is to be ungrateful.

Not a church in the Indian Territory should ever neglect to take the annual offering for Church Extension. About one-half of our churches in the Territory have been aided out of this fund.

At present scarcely a house of worship is built in the Indian Territory that is not aided by this noble fund. But for it, we would be handicapped and embarrassed beyond description in this new and needy field, where money brings fifteen and fifty per cent interest, and the people are nearly all of moderate means, not to say poor. Send this offering to G. W. Muckley, Water Works Building, Kansas, City Mo.

As our churches are yet young and small, not many of them can be prevailed to have more than our Children's Day offering during the year. In this case the exercise should be Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. Send to Benj. L. Smith, Cincinnati, Ohio, for free literature. The collection should also be sent to him. He will divide it equally between Indian Territory missions and general Home Missions.

S. R. Hawkins, Cor. Sec.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Canton, O., Nov. 12.—Forty to-day; four hundred and seventy-eight to date; continuing.—Welsheimer and Kendall.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

New Castle Pa., Nov. 12.—The revival with Crayton S. Brooks and De Loss Smith, is growing in interest; 14 added to-day, 52 in all.—W. L. Fisher, pastor.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 12.—Twenty-six added First church (Wallace Tharp, pastor) to-day; 141 to date; 128 in eight days; one minister among them, this being the fourth minister reached this year.—Chas. Reign Scoville.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Lexington, Ky., Nov. 13.—Twenty added yesterday; 168 in 21 days. Broadway church never had such a meeting nor did it ever have such crowds. James Small is a marvel of physical energy and delightful tact; Hackleman is pleasing everybody. We continue.—Mark Collis, minister.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Charleroi, Pa., Nov. 13.—Clarence Mitchell is with us in our simultaneous revival. The whole town is stirred. Many were turned away at Sunday's services; 35 additions to date, 23 baptized; hundreds signed a petition against the action of the Charleroi school board who have refused to have the Lord's prayer and sacred songs in the public schools.—H. G. Connelly, minister.

IOWA.

Fairfield, Nov. 13.—The Hamilton-Easton meeting starts with fine interest. Fifteen made the good confession and one restored yesterday.—H. C. Littleton, minister.

JAPAN.

Tokyo, Oct 24.—Baptized one man October 15 and one October 22—both college men. Audiences quite good. More interest in Christianity than before the war.—W. D. Cunningham.

KANSAS.

Halstead.—Closed a short meeting with eight added. Ninety per cent of the people are church members.—E. W. Brickert and wife.

Chanute, Nov. 6.—Four confessions last night, and one from the Baptists. One confession and baptism Nov. 3.—G. W. Kitchen.

Buffalo, Nov. 6.—I just closed a short meeting at West Buffalo, with 14 confessions.—Gilbert Park.

Arkansas City.—J. M. Lowe, of Galesburg, Ill., began a meeting October 29, but on account of diphtheria had to close at the end of the first week. Eight added.—C. C. Peck.

Winfield, Nov. 9.—We have 88 additions to date. We expect to close the meeting to-night. I go at once to begin a meeting in Beloit.—H. H. Northcutt.

Council Grove, Nov. 9.—The Updike-Webb meeting closed with 15 accessions, making 54 in all—41 baptisms, six by letter, seven reclaimed. Two came from Presbyterians, four from Methodists, and two from Anti's.—John Wesley.

Burlington, Nov. 6.—I closed a four weeks' meeting at Pleasant Hill, (P. O. Burlington,) with 27 additions; am now in a meeting at Strawn, with bright prospects for success. Allie P. Sherman, pastor at Hartford, is singing for us this week.—A. B. Moore, pastor, Victor L. Goodrich, evangelist.

Humbolt.—R. H. Tanksley has had 52 additions in his pastorate during the present year.

Belleville, Nov. 6.—Evangelist Clara H. Hazelrigg, of Topeka, held a meeting. There were 27 confessions and eight received by statement, and $375 were raised on church indebtedness; good feeling among the members and renewed zeal. We start the year free from debt.—R. C. Harding, minister.

KENTUCKY.

Henderson, Nov. 9.—I preached 18 nights at Backett; 42 additions.—Wm. A. Ward.

Mayfield, Nov. 9.—Our meeting closed with 60 additions; 31 baptisms, five restored, 24 by letter and from other bodies. Eld. W. J. Hudspeth, south Kentucky, evangelist, assisted.—Roger L. Clark.

Cropper, Nov. 3.—J. L. Greenwell, of West Point, Miss., is now with us in a meeting; 15 additions to date.—John M. Alexander.

Augusta, Nov. 6.—I began a meeting yesterday with L. N. Early. We hope for a good meeting.—C. H. DeVoe, evangelist.

Owensboro, Nov. 9.—Our meeting, lasting two weeks, closed Nov. 5 with 51 additions, 36 baptisms, two from the Catholics, four from the Baptists, two from the Methodists, and the rest by letter and statement. This was one of the 12 simultaneous meetings conducted in the city. Brother Hudson was the evangelist. The music was in charge of LeRoy St. John, of Terre Haute, Ind.—R. H. Crossfield.

LOUISIANA.

Jennings, Nov. 6.—My wife and I are in a meeting with H. M. Polsgroni; meeting seven days old, with twenty-two accessions.—John A. Stevens, cor. sec.

MISSOURI.

Eldon, Nov. 10.—Our Etterville meeting five days old with 10 additions. It is being held under the auspices of the Missionary Board of the State. There is no church of any kind in the town. We hope to be able to organize at the close of the meeting.—S. J. Vance.

Hunnewell, Nov. 7.—A meeting of 19 days resulted in 34 additions—24 confessions, 3 by letter, 6 by statement and 1 reclaimed. The church reorganized by choosing 3 elders and 8 deacons; also reorganized a Christian Endeavor society of 41 members. R. B. Havener did the preaching.—F. D. Bezona, minister.

Buckner, Nov. 8.—Closed a three weeks' meeting with nine accessions—seven by confession and baptism and two by statement. Dr. W. H. Embry, of Rosedale, Kan., is the beloved pastor of this congregation.—L. B. Coggins, evangelist.

Plattsburg, Nov. 1.—Secretary G. L. Snively as preacher, and J. W. Bailey, pastor at Frankford, as singer, assisted me in a two weeks' meeting. Baptisms 35, by letter two. I wish space permitted me to speak of these two helpers as my heart prompts; not in eulogy but genuine commendation. We "also thank God and take courage." Though the meeting was short in duration, it will prove long in enduring power for good.—J. O. Pinkerton.

Frankford, Nov. 5.—Our four weeks' meeting closed Oct. 29, with 31 additions—25 confessions, 6 by letter, and the church strengthened. J. M. Elam, of Carthage, Ill., was the evangelist, and J. M. Bailey, the pastor, led the singing.—Wm. E. Jones, elder.

Canton, Nov. 12.—Fifteen additions at morning services, others at night, also baptism in Mississippi. Additions or baptisms every Sunday that I have been here, over two months, often also at prayer meeting.—Albert Buxton.

Kansas City, Nov. 5.—H. G. Bennett, of Jefferson City, is in a meeting with us fourteen nights; 28 additions. Interest growing.—Arthur Stout.

Centralia, Nov. 6.—Our meeting closed last week with 56 additions. R. E. L. Prenty, of Brookfield, assisted us.—E. M. Smith.

Norborne, Nov. 7.—In a two weeks' meeting here with home forces we have had 12 additions—8 by baptism and 4 by letter and statement.—C. C. Taylor.

St. Louis, Nov. 6.—One addition at Hallsville yesterday.—W. H. Kern.

West Plains, Nov. 10.—Our meeting conducted by B. E. Youtz, Des Moines, Iowa, is 16 days old with 17 accessions—one by statement, 16 confessions. Interest growing.—L. Z. Burr, minister.

Kansas City, Nov. 7.—The Scoville-Smith meetings a glorious success. Large audiences throughout the meeting.—There were 297 accessions.—George H. Combs.

Kirksville, Nov. 9.—I just closed a two weeks' meeting at Brashear, with 7 additions—4 from the Methodist and three confessons. F. M. O'Neal, of Springfield, had charge of the music.—J. L. Hollowell.

Bolivar, Nov. 5.—I closed a meeting Nov. 5, with 7 added—5 by letters and 2 confessions. The weather was unfavorable. The church has extended me a unamious call for 1906.—J. H. Jones.

Fayette, Nov. 13.—John L. Brandt, of St. Louis, closed an 11 days' meeting with the Fayette church, on Oct. 27. The congregation was greatly edified. There were 11 accessions. Nov. 12 the congregation employed R. B. Helser, the present minister, for another year, with increased salary. The work is progressing.

Thayer, Nov. 10.—Just closed a 12 days' meeting here with 24 additions—18 baptisms, two reclaimed and four otherwise. I preach at Washington, Ind., Nov. 12.—E. E. Davidson, evangelist.

Trenton, Nov. 8.—We closed a 25 days' meeting, Oct. 25, which resulted in 90 additions to the church. W. E. Harlow did the preaching and R. C. Harlow led the song services. We have ministered to this church 11 months. During that time there have been 115 additions to the church; $3,500 paid on the church debt; an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. organized, which now has a membership of 40; the Y. P. S. C. E. has increased its membership 300 per cent.; a Junior Endeavor has been organized and now has a membership of 50. We are hopeful for better work the coming year.—S. J. White, minister.

St. Louis, Nov. 13.—We have had five additions at Tuxedo this month—three by confession and baptism and two by letter—J. A. Bennett.

St. Louis, Nov. 13—I visited Moscow Mills last Wednesday and took ten confessions. Five were baptized in the river near by. There was also one added by commendation. The others will be baptized on a future visit.—G. A. Hoffmann.

Butler, Nov. 9.—I closed two weeks' meeting with home forces at Elizabeth chapel, with twelve additions. The meeting was interrupted by bad weather. Work in fine shape.—H. W. Hunter, pastor.

Windsor, Nov. 9.—I just closed a meeting at Hunnewell, with thirty-four additions—twenty-four by primary obedience, one reclaimed and nine by letter or statement. We organized a Christian Endeavor Society. Brother Bezoni is the pastor. This is the third meeting in Shelby county, with sixty-eight added.—R. B. Havener.

Kansas City, Nov. 13.—Two more additions at Louisburg—one confession, one by letter. Both the churches at Louisburg and at West Line have called me by unanimous consent to continue with them through next year. Our work is very prosperous at both places.—Clyde Lee Fife.

Richards, Nov. 6.—Two confessions at Brother Sterling's regular appointment.—O. L. Fonts.

Mt. Grove, Nov. 6.—Sam I. Smith, of Greenfield, closed a two weeks' meeting at Willow Springs with five additions: one reclaimed, two by letter, two by statement. I preached at Mt. View, Oct. 29; three additions: two by statement, one by confession. —E. W. Yocum.

Weaubleau, Nov. 10.—J. D. Babb and myself closed a 12 days' meeting at Hermitage, the county seat of Hickory county. There were four added—three baptisms and one by statement. Also a mission band of 30 children was organized. Sister Ross Coon is superintendent. Also a Ladies' Aid of 17 members was organized. This church was organized in March and they will be able to employ a preacher one-fourth time next year. J. D. Babb is now in a meeting at Aldrich. This is another houseless little band of Disciples. I was at Calhoun and preached two sermons this week. They are wanting a preacher next year. I may preach for them.—S. E. Hendrickson.

NEBRASKA.

Lexington, Nov. 8.—We closed at Longmont, Cal., November 1, with thirty added —thirteen baptisms. We began at Lexington, Neb., November 5, with good audiences; interest already excellent; one addition by letter last night. D. B. Titus is the pastor. Our song leader is Mrs. Ernest Hannel, of Ulysses.—Joel Brown, evangelist.

NEW MEXICO.

Roswell, Nov. 6—We had five additions yesterday; thirty-seven since September 1; 160 since I came to Roswell. We have begun to plan for a great revival for next April, with R. A. Omer as evangelist.—C. C. Hill.

OKLAHOMA.

Norman, Nov. 5.—The work of the Master is moving forward under the leadership of R. E. McCoskle, our new pastor. Three confessions lately and twelve accessions by letters and statement. We are planning for an evangelistic campaign in the near future. J. C. Powell.

Hinton, Nov. 6.—A. C. Laymon, of Mound City, Kans., closed a two week's meeting last night, with eleven additions—six by baptism, The weather was unfavorable, but the cause is greatly strengthened and the congregation put in good working order. Brother Lamon has been engaged as our pastor. J. V. Updike will hold us a meeting in December.—H. Caldwell.

OREGON.

Eugene, Nov. 1.—Four additions at Dallas in the last two weeks—two confessions, one reclaimed and one from the Methodists. —G. L. Lobdel, minister.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Elwood City, Nov. 6.—Our meetings are growing and the interest manifested is good. One confession and baptism. The weather has been unfavorable.—Fred H. Schultz, minister.

Uniontown, Nov. 5.—Two baptisms, and one letter from another communion:—J. Walter Carpenter, minister.

TENNESSEE.

Memphis, Nov. 9.—We have just closed one of the greatest meetings we have ever had at the Mississippi avenue church. Austin P. Finley, of Lexington, Ky., was the evangelist. Our meeting began October 15, and closed November 8 and resulted in 47 accessions: 23 by primary obedience, 6 from the denominations and 18 to take membership. Our meeting may be characterized from beginning to end by the word Fidelity, both on the part of the church and the evangelist. The meeting should have continued longer, but Brother Finley's time was limited and he closed here to begin a meeting with Bro. J. E. Gorsuch and the Third church in this city.—Louis D. Riddell, pastor.

Jellico, Oct. 28.—My October report will show four points visited, one preacher located, one baptized, one Sunday school organized, one prayer meeting organized. Visited Williamsburg, Ky., and they are stirred up to secure a preacher; preached at Halsey, Ky., went to La Fallette, found six brethren and promised to hold them a meeting, beginning Oct. 28. Contract is let here for a $5,500 brick building, to be completed by Jan 15. All departments prospering.—Wren J. Grinstead.

Sherman, Nov. 4.—We are having a great meeting in our new building. October 22 was opening day, Hamlin, of Ft. Worth, and Daugherty, of Louisville, Ky., are the evangelists. Thus far in all ways, there have been 78 additions to the congregation. We will continue a week or two longer.—J. H. Fuller.

Garrison on the Holy Spirit.

Holy Spirit and his work in our salvation is virtually solved.

Another vital distinction made by the author, and one generally overlooked by the religious world is this:

"When the Spirit should come, his relation to the world would not be the same as his relation to the disciples, but he had a mission to both."

No man can ever have an adequate Scriptural view of the Holy Spirit in his activities in human redemption who fails to make that distinction. The author then argues that the work of the Holy Spirit in relation to the world is to convict and to convert sinners, and this he does by bringing the gospel of Jesus Christ to bear upon their minds and hearts, and this, again, is done, not by the Word alone, as is strangely advocated by some of our flippant scribes and professional debaters, to the great discredit of this reformation, but by various other consistent and co-operative methods. We here let the author speak for himself:

"In how many ways the Spirit of God may bring the truth to bear on human souls for their conversion we do not know, for we have not learned all the ways of the Spirit. We know that the silent, outraying light of a pure Christian life is, as Christ taught, a mighty constraining influence to lead others to glorify our Father who is in heaven. We know, too, that God uses the events of his providence and the experiences of human life to win men to faith and obedience, by preparing their hearts for the acceptance of the gospel. Nor should any of these instrumentalities be separated from the agency of that Spirit who breathes where he listeth in divine eagerness to infuse life into the barren souls of men."

Alexander Campbell, in discussing this feature of Christianity uses such expressions as the following to convey his idea of the active co-operation of the Holy Spirit with the Word of truth in the conversion of sinners: "The ministry of men," "the ministry of angels," "special providences," "suggestions," "impressions," "direct communication of original ideas," "bringing things to remembrance long since forgotten," "bringing men's minds to consider these matters," "removing difficulties," etc.

Mr. Garrison's position on this subject is in line with the teachings of our fathers and of the New Testament as we have read them, and any adverse criticism to his position will come from men clearly out of harmony with the true spirit and genius of our movement for the restoration of the Christianity of Christ and his apostles.

In chapter IV is considered the "Relation of the Holy Spirit to Christians." Here Brother Garrison is in his happiest mood. Both from a rational and Scriptural point of view, and with a most graceful literary style his theme is introduced, discussed and dismissed with remarkable perspicuity, brevity and completeness. His views on this topic and the topics of the remaining eight chapters of the book—"Blessings of the Holy Spirit," "Jesus and the Holy Spirit," "Significance of Pentecost," "Symbols and Metaphors of the Holy Spirit," "Spiritual Gifts," "Perfecting Holiness," "Christian Union and the Holy Spirit," "Perpetuity of the Spirit's Guidance"—are in accord with the general teaching of all Christian writers whose views are of any value in the world of religious thought. But, of the many volumes we have read on the subject of the Holy Spirit, we have found nothing equal to this little book for clear, concise, discriminating and sane treatment of its theme. Our only objection to the book is its brevity. The work ought to be revised at an early day, and enlarged to double its present size.

HOW TO GET GOOD OUT OF THE BIBLE. —Psalm 119:11, 97-104; Matt. 4:4, 7, 10; 2 Tim. 2:14-17.

1. By Study. There is honey in the flower, but the bee must seek for it, and extract it, or it can never feed his hunger. The word of God is full of sweetness and strength, but it cannot feed the soul that knows nothing of it. If we search the Scriptures, we shall find in them the sweetness of the honeycomb and the strength of bread (Ps. 19:7-11). Our faith will be established in the Lord, as was that of the Bereans, when they searched the Scriptures (Acts 17:11, 12). We find the way of life eternal, because we find in the Scriptures him in whom God has given to men that life (John 5:39; 20:30, 31). We are fitted for service, because only through familiarity with the Scriptures can we become skillful workmen, handling aright the work of God, which is the sword of the Spirit (2 Tim. 2:15; Eph. 6:14-17).

2. By Meditation. "Thy word have I laid up in my heart, that I may not sin against thee," says the psalmist (Psalms 119: 11, 97-104; 1:1, 2). When the citadel of the heart is occupied by the words of God, they are soldiers for defense against the enemy. Jesus answered every assault of the adversary with "It is written" (Matt, 4:1-11). Into the truth-filled spirit Satan seeks in vain to inject infidelity or lust. Were we more familiar with our Bibles we should not so often fall under the stress of temptation. The "Quiet Hour" of Christian Endeavor has given strength to many a young heart which otherwise would have found itself weak in the presence of trial. Meditation on the Word of God makes the life fruitful. It is "like a tree planted by the rivers of waters, that bringeth forth its fruit in its season." As the body must not only eat food, but assimilate it through digestion, so the soul must not only receive truth through study or hearing, but assimilate it through meditation and prayer (1 Tim. 4:15). "I have more understanding than all my teachers, for thy testimonies are my meditation," says the Psalmist. Wisdom, security and strength come from this communion with God through his Word.

3. By Obedience. "He that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them," says Jesus, is the wise and saved man (Matt. 7:24, 25). To know the will of God and not do it, is practical infidelity, and the world and the church are full of such (Luke 6:46; Titus 1:16). The tree of divine knowledge yields its ripened fruit only to him who gathers it by his own faithful keeping of the divine precepts. He only can be truly happy who does what he knows to be right. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them" (John 13:17). This, too, is the way of wisdom, for he only grows in knowledge who likewise grows in grace, through obedience to the will of God (2 Pet. 3:18). A great preacher left to us a sermon of wonderful power on "Obedience the organ of spiritual knowledge," based upon the words of Christ in John 7:17. If we must know in order to do, it is equally true that we must do in order to know. Obey what you know of God's will, and your knowledge will be increased thereby. Like the body without the spirit, like faith without works, so knowledge without obedience is dead, being alone. Study, meditate, obey, are the three steps to a wise, happy, useful and triumphant life.

ABSTINENCE FOR THE SAKE OF OTHERS. - 1 Cor. 10:23-33.

(Temperance Lesson.)

The fundamental reason for temperance in eating or drinking or any other indulgence is a very practical one. It is that intemperance is injurious. However it may be with some of the other obligations of morality, we have to do here with an obligation which rests wholly and directly upon consequences. It is the law of nature, as it is the law of God, that unrestrained indulgence brings disorder, weakness, pain. This is the law of temperance that is written in the nervous system as clearly as in a book and as indelibly as if it were carved on tables of stone.

If man's obligations, therefore, were only to himself, to get the most out of life, to conserve the powers of mind and body, to escape needless pain, to gain the maximum of pleasure, to attain the highest perfection of individual manhood—if that were all, the matter of temperance would be relatively easy. One might do what he pleased, indulge as he pleased, if only he would stop short of injuring himself. As regards those matters which we more commonly think of in connection with temperance, it would reduce itself largely to a question of physiology.

But the case is not so simple. No man liveth to himself. One has a duty not only to his own body and brain, but to his neighbor. "Am I my brother's keeper?" Certainly. Otherwise there could be no society, but only warring individual units of humanity. The rule of consequences still holds, only it must receive a wider application. One must consider not only the consequences for himself but the consequences which will follow, even indirectly for others.

This is the teaching of Paul in this celebrated passage where he speaks of eating meats sacrificed to idols. The danger here was not of physical harm but of spiritual injury through entanglement again in the practices of idolatry. In Corinth, a city of many cults and many shrines, it was customary for meats which had been offered as sacrifices on pagan altars to find their way again into the markets, and in the popular thought those who bought and ate them were deemed in some sense participants in the sacrifice. But in buying meat in open market, or in eating at the house of a heathen friend, one could not be sure, without raising special inquiry, whether a particular portion of meat had been offered to an idol or not. The question which the Corinthian church asked Paul to answer was: Is it wrong to eat much meat?

Paul's answer was twofold. First, for those who are strong enough in the faith to understand that an idol is a mere figment of the imagination, there can be no evil result from eating; therefore it is not wrong to eat, so far as a man's duty to himself is concerned. But second, since some are weak and apt to be led back into heathen ways by misunderstanding this act, the rule of temperance and the law of love would forbid the eating whenever it might influence another to do what, for him, would be sinful

Note two things about this law of temperance or self-restraint, first as to what it is not, and second as to what it is. It is not a prohibition against doing what others would criticise. It is no counsel of cowardice to keep one away from all doubtful things. Still less is it an injunction to refrain from acts which others will seize on as an excuse (not a true reason, but only an excuse) for their own intemperate or evil acts. It is a law of love to hold one back from any act or indulgence which is apt to become a real motive or cause of wrong-doing by others.

GOD'S WONDERFUL WORKS.

Psalms 4:1-11.

(Thanksgiving Service.)

For the Leader.

Another one of our anniversaries has come. We have many days dear to our hearts. There are days that are not known beyond the limits of the one family, but they are dear to those who make up that family. Do you remember some day in your family? It may be a day of marriage. It may be a day of death. It may be a day of calamity. It is a day, nevertheless, which you will never forget. When it returns there is some way in your family of observing that day.

Nations, like people, are born. Days make up the onward march of kingdoms as they do the decline of families. Who can ever forget our day of national independence? Not one. But there is another day in the calendar of our nation. It has to do with thoughts as holy as politics. Yea, it has to do with the thoughts that are fundamental in every nation and in every family. This thought is religion. It is our relation to God. It is his bounty in his dealings with his peoples. This day is Thanksgiving Day. It stands for belief in God. It stands for trust in him. It stands against materialism. It stands against all that would rob us of the fullness and riches of spiritual treasure that has come down to us from the sturdy past of our history.

It is this we come to study and to discuss to-night.

Let each one show by his response his blessings from the heavenly Father.

For the Members.

1. True thankfulness is connected with a true conception of God as the father of us all and as the one ruler and supreme being of the universe. Had not our pilgrim fathers been a devout and a believing people, the day of thanksgiving could never have had the historic beginning with us that it has had. It was the faith in them that saw in the wonderful deliverance the hand of God. It was their faith and trust that turned them back to give thanks unto God. Faith in God is at the very root of all the greatness of our institutions. We are a Christian nation. We are a trusting people. Our thankfulness, our devotion, our faith wells up in us and must burst forth in the glad acclaims of a national day.

2. If we have rejoiced in a study of the results of faith in God in a whole nation such as ours, how also should we profit by a study in contrast as found in the barrenness of unbelief and infidelity. First, there is no one to whom we can go when there is no faith in God. Sorrow must be alone. Calamity has no one back of it overruling its issues for good. Death comes with a cold hand. There is nothing but a stolid and icy submission. We plod on through the weary days. Things come; things go. What does it matter? There is nothing personal, warm, living in the whole thing. There is a certain gloom overspreading all things. Sweet affection can not bud and blossom in this marsh land of the soul. Benevolence is poor and thin. No one to give; no one to thank. No one to love; no one to ask. No Father; no praise of the son. No divine providence; no thankfulness in the human heart. To say all that can be said, that is a cold, lean life.

3. There is a hymn which has in it the thought of counting one's blessings. Suppose we try to-night to count our many blessings. Shall we have time? Can the sands of the sea be numbered? Theoretically this can be done; practically, never. So our many blessings pile up before us as we begin to count them until the night comes on before we have made an end of counting. Another day dawns. It is long gone, and still the work is not over. So will it ever be. There is no end to the blessings and mercy of God toward us and upon us. Praise the Lord. Let all the earth sing his praises. He is God. He has redeemed us. He has liberated us from sin. Do we not remember that day? Yes, how well do we recall it. He has saved us from temptation. Can we not call up that day? And can we not remember the many times he has saved us from ruin? Do we not dwell to-day upon how wonderfully we have been blessed in purse and store and heart beyond our merits? If, then, the day seems dark brighten it up with the return of thanksgiving.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Current Literature.

Stork's Nest, by J. Breckenridge Ellis, illustrated by Elizabeth Ingham, New York. Moffat, Yard & Company, 1905. Price, $1.00.

This is the latest work from the pen of our well-known correspondent and conductor of the children's department of The Christian-Evangelist, and founder of the Advance Society. "Stork's Nest" is likely to prove the most popular of all the stories which the author has written. The scene is laid in northern Missouri, in the Grand River country. While the date of the story is not fixed, the conditions described point to an early period in the settlement of that region. It is a love story, of course, but in connection with it the author manifests real genius in depicting a number of different characters which stand out with great distinctness. The interest of the reader will be divided between his admiration for Benton Cabot and Emma Garrett, the hero and heroine, and his contempt and dislike for "Bije Stork" and "Si Stork," and pity for poor "Jim Whitlick," the orphan boy who was "bound out." There is a very interesting ghost story which figures largely in the narrative, and this, with a case of mysterious burglary, will not fail to excite the interest of the readers. It is scarcely necessary to say that the book is clean and helpful in its teaching, emphasizing the things which make for manhood and womanhood, and depicting in their native ugliness the vices of covetousness and dishonesty. The story soon gains a fast hold on the reader and he does not wish to tarry very long between chapters, until he has finished the book. A warning to all misers is given in a single sentence describing the death of one of the men who figure in the story: "But the money Si wouldn't let go of when a-livin', wouldn't let go o' him when dyin'!" The ambition of Emma "to be a Person," will appeal to the ambition of all young people who have a desire to make something of themselves. We hope our young author will work his Missouri field still further and that he may reap the fame and profit which his genius and character deserve.

Nature Cure, or Home Treatment Without Medicine, by Wilhelmine H. Kuepper, Nature Cure physician. The John C. Winston Co., Philadelphia, Chicago, Toronto. 1905.

There is a widespread interest just now in what might be called natural methods of curing and preventing sickness, such as pure air, water, sunbath exercise and proper diet. These things are all emphasized in this volume, which will prove suggestive and helpful, no doubt, to those who read and follow its suggestions. The work is illustrated, showing how to take exercise, how to meet certain emergencies from accidents, and how to treat children, and most of the ordinary ailments of life. A large number of hygienic cooking recipes in the latter part of the book will commend it to housekeepers.

The Modern Jewish Idea of Jesus, by Prof. Clyde W. Votaw, Ph. D., printed at the University Press of Chicago.

This is the publication in pamphlet form of the article which appeared in the Biblical World in August last, based on the new Jewish Encyclopedia which is being published by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York. This work is supposed to be a monument of Jewish erudition, and aims to give "a complete record of the Jewish people from the earliest times until the present." Of course the most interesting thing about the work to Christians would be the attitude which these modern Jewish scholars take toward Jesus and of Christianity. This view is clearly set forth in the pamphlet before us, with a few, brief, cogent statements by the author, pointing out the inadequacy and inconsistency of these views. The hopeful feature about this attitude of the Jews, is that Jesus is no longer regarded as an impostor, but as a good Jew, honoring the law, but not transcending the elements of the Judaism of the first century. This is probably the first step toward the true appreciation of the place of Jesus as a religious teacher. Those interested in that question will find an informing and accurate statement of the present situation in this pamphlet.

BAYS.

The world to-day mourns the loss of a grand and noble man. Davis H. Bays, born Mar. 5, 1839, departed this life Oct. 24, 1905 at the home of a daughter, Mrs. James Lang, Persia, Ia. Married to Mrs. J. Shearer, 1861, who died Mar. 23, 1884. He afterwards married Mrs. J. Brown, in 1890, who patiently and devotedly cared for him during his prolonged illness. As a minister of the Gospel, his activity and ingenuousness could not be excelled. His motto was "Prepare to meet thy God." He was conscious till the end came, and as he "walked through the valley of the shadow of death," his Saviour leading the way, truly could he repeat the well-chosen text, 2 Tim. 4:7, 8: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith," etc., etc. For the sorrowing heart-broken wife, children and friends, our prayers go up in tender sympathy, and may they ever remember that "Earth has no sorrows that heaven cannot heal."

ENNISON.

James Ash Ennison died at his home, four miles south of Wellington, Mo., at 10:45 o'clock Saturday morning Sept. 2, 1905, aged 81 years, seven months and 18 days. He was a son of Benjamin and Katherine Briscoe Ennison and was born in Scott county, Ky., Jan 15, 1824, and came to Missouri in 1850, settling on the farm on which he died. He was a Christian 65 or more years. He leaves a wife, one daughter, Mrs. Fannie Bumgarner, of Odessa, Mo., one son, W. B. Ennison, of Wellington, Mo., and one sister, Mrs. Martha McHatton. His eldest daughter, Mrs. Katherine Ragland, of Denver, Col., died four days after her father and was brought back to the Ennison home and buried one week after her father. Both were buried on Lord's day eve and services were conducted at the by home Bro. Frank Allen, our minister in Odessa. Martha A. McHatton.

HIGGINS.

It is with keen sorrow that I am compelled to report the departure of Wm. A. Higgins, of Cleveland, Ohio. He was a loyal member of the Euclid avenue church; a helper in every good word and work. He showed his deep love for the cause by making a bequest to the American Christian Missionary Society. He was a brother of Mrs Jabez Hall and Mrs. Benj. L. Smith. He was an officer in the Union army; a true man. His friends all loved to speak of his very sweet, happy disposition, his friendliness and his constant spirit of helpfulness. He seemed to have no deeper pleasure than to confer some pleasure, some favor, upon others. On Oct. 13, 1905, he was called home. Those who remain cherish the memory of a true Christian man, loveable, pure in heart and life, who loved God and little children. He was buried at the old home in Wheeling, W, Va. Benj. L. Smith.

MUNKRES.

John Munkres, son of Brother and Sister Benjamin Munkres, of Savanah, Mo.. was born Oct. 7, 1886, and died Oct. 30, 1905. He was a noble Christian young man and died in the full hope of immortality. N. Rollo Davis.

St. Joseph, Mo.

UNKEFER.

Mrs. Charity Keith Unkefer was born in August, 1838 and died in the same month 1905, aged 67 years. She was a good, Christian mother, a faithful friend, and for 50 years a devoted member of the church. For ten years she was a faithful friend to church and pastor at Cedar avenue, Cleveland. Her character was above reproach. She appreciated all things beautiful and good. She loved Christ and his church and plead for a deeper spiritual life in the church. Funeral services at her late residence, 45 Lodge avenue, Cleveland. O. E. P. Wise.

And never are two, by any chance,
Built exactly the self-same way.
They differ in form and size and strength,
Some are shallow, and some are deep;
Yet all may reach the same harbor at last
If steadily onward they keep Advancing.

We are children now, and we skim along
With the sails of Hope widespread,
And we shun the channels of Toil and Care,
And choose that of Pleasure instead.
The skies are bright and our hearts are gay,
And the breeze is fresh and sweet;
We wish that childhood and youth were o'er,
And the future we bravely meet,
Sailing.

But alas! there are storms, and our hopes are lost,
And the masts are lone and bare;
The winds blow fierce and drive our boat
To the dreaded channel of Care.
And backward we cast a wistful glance,
For we long for our youth once more,
With its quiet waters and clear blue sky,
And we sigh as we bend to the oar,
Rowing.

And now comes Age, and our bark floats on,
For the driving storms are past;
The waves are calm and the winds are still
And the harbor we see at last.
No longer the sun casts its fiery heat
On our heads now growing gray,
But sheds its soft radiance over the hill
As we go, with the dying day,
Drifting.

We reach the harbor for which we longed
When our eyes were growing dim;
We let fall the anchor at God's command,
Leave our boat to be with Him;
For when we wearily crossed the bar
Death brought us a sweet release.
In our Father's home, with our voyage o'er
Forever we'll dwell in peace.
Rejoicing.

Blush Roses.

Miss Rebecca Brackett wore steel-bowed glasses because she was near-sighted, and gold-bowed ones would have seemed an extravagance, and did her hair up in a tight little knob because it could be done quickly so, and there was nobody to tell her that it was unbecoming. And she walked very fast and straight when she went on errands, and nobody stopped her for a chat, because she looked as if she would resent such an interruption. To most people she was either forbidding or uninteresting. But most people had not seen her in her garden.

Passing Miss Rebecca's story-and-a-half house, spick and span in its coat of white paint, you never would have suspected the presence of that garden; for in front was only a narrow, grass-covered embankment with a small flowering quince on one side of the front door, and on the other an aged syringa-bush. But, once behind the house, something from the country seemed to have slipped into the midst of this New England city. Apple-trees and pear-trees dappled the grass with their shadows, grape-vines clambered lovingly over unsightly wall or shed, and a line of phlox marched beside the one garden path. In a corner where most of the day the sunlight fell full and warm was a clump of rose-bushes—blush rose-bushes—that had bloomed for forty years or more. Miss Rebecca's father and mother had set them out and tended them in their lifetime, and now Miss Rebecca pruned and watched over them. Each year they filled the air with their fragrance, and in due season were gathered by Miss Rebecca and were borne proudly to her church vestry, to be used as decoration for its June festival. It was her one vanity—to sit primly by and feel that on the many tables, with their spotless tablecloths and shining silver, there were no other flowers so beautiful as hers.

To this end she weeded and watered and fought bugs and blight, and, reckless of twinges in her back, coaxed the bushes with beguiling touch to do their utmost. And for one day, when the tender pink of her flowers shone out from bowl and vase, she bore an exultant spirit, a thrilling sense of public importance.

It was nearing the time now of this annual rose-gathering delight, and Miss Rebecca, at work in her front yard, felt her mind concerned with the number of basketfuls she would have. The season had been one most friendly to roses. Never had there been more buds; never had the bushes been more vigorous or free from blemish. She paused a moment while she allowed anticipation to have its way with her. Into the pause there came the sound of the gate latch being lifted. She turned toward the noise and saw a scantily clad figure wedging through the partly opened gate.

Now Miss Rebecca was not used to having small figures, scantily clad or otherwise, open her gates unbidden. She had waged a sharp but dicisive war against that very thing many years before, and the fame of it had not wholly died out. All newcomers on the street were cautioned against letting their children ask her for flowers or fruit. The children who disregarded warnings climbed over the back fence at night, and all the next day lived in terror of Miss Rebecca's avenging presence.

Miss Rebecca straightened up, scowled over her glasses, and groped round in her mind for the old phrase she had been accustomed to find effective on such occasions. It was "Run away, little boy," uttered in so severe a tone that seldom was anything else necessary. But the phrase had lain unused for a long time, and it failed, in this instance to respond before the little boy had wholly wriggled himself in and was standing beside her. He was quite dirty as to his hands and face, and very untidy as to his attire; but he smiled happily.

"You's got nice flowers," he said, pointing to the quince bush. "I like nice flowers."

Miss Rebecca relaxed her frown in pure amazement. "Little boys musn't come into people's yards without being asked," she heard herself say. "Don't you know that?"

The smile wavered uncertainly on the round face. "I likes nice flowers." There was a pause, then the smile shone out again brilliantly. "You give little boy a nice flower?"

Miss Rebecca tried to summon some other arrangement of words that should express severity, but failed. Here was something that didn't fear her. She moved toward the syringa-bush.

"Well," she said, "I'll give you one piece and then you must go right away."

She broke off a large spray and held it out to him. He took it in one chubby hand, but the other he reached up to her.

"Phank you," he gurgled. "I like to kiss you."

If the house had stood on end or the syringa-bush gone walking down the street, Miss Rebecca could hardly have been more astounded. A child wanted to kiss her! It was the first time in all her life that such a thing had happened; but she dropped her sickle, and, stooping awkwardly, offered her cheek to be hugged against a very wet kiss.

"Vat's a bear hug. Now I go home, but I come again."

He trundled off, and Miss Rebecca, still in a daze went slowly on with her work.

The birds sang blithely from the elms, the soft wind dallied with the grass, the bumblebees buzzed about the flowers. It was a very lovely day, thought Miss Rebecca.

By degrees she got back to her normal state of mind; and, when she went in to get her solitary dinner, she could say, with something of self-disdain, "What nonsense!"

But the next morning she was out in her yard long before her usual time, digging up dandelion roots that had grown there in security for many years. As she worked, she listened, and at first there came a sound—the gate latch clicked.

Miss Rebecca looked up. There stood the small boy, and with him another small boy. They both came in, boy number two hanging back and looking ready to run. That was the old-remembered attitude of children. It was what Miss Rebecca was accustomed to, but somehow it gave her a pang to see it. Would boy number one be affected by it? Apparently not; for he came straight on, dragging his companion after.

"This little boy likes nice flowers, too," he

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and can not compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

announced. "We's come for some."

Without a word Miss Rebecca went to her syringa-bush and stripped off an armful of blossoms for each. And of her own accord she knelt for the kiss.

"What is your name?" she remembered to call as they went out of the yard.

"Tommy," said boy number one, and "Jimmy," said boy number two.

The new day saw pretty much the same scene in Miss Rebecca's door-yard, and the next, and the next and the next, only with each new day the procession, headed by Tommy, was larger than the day before. Miss Rebecca gave and gave and gave. She finished the syringas and plundered the quince bush, until one morning she woke to the fact that the blossoms were almost gone. Another visit and she would have given her last spray, even of buds. And then the click of the gate under Tommy's fingers would sound no more.

The day suddenly seemed less bright, and the air grew heavy. She should miss Tommy.

Then she thought of her roses. They were blooming, now, in all their beauty. But her roses were for the church festival. It was impossible to think of their going elsewhere. No Tommy could not have her roses.

She gave the last of the quince blossoms to the outstretched hands, and worked the rest of the day with dull persistence. It was the last she should see of Tommy, she was sure of that. Still, when the morning came again, she took her sickle and made a pretence of cutting the grass. She trimmed the edges to the smallest spear of green, and let no dandelion or plantain leaf escape her; but no Tommy came.

So it went on for two long mornings.

On the second day Miss Rebecca put on her second best hat and dress and stood irresolutely at her front door. She would go and see the committee about her roses; perhaps she would go round by way of those back streets. She could just as well as not, and she hadn't been round that way for ages. There was no knowing what changes had taken place.

She peered over her glasses in the direction of the back streets, and her heart gave a thud; for there, trudging toward her, alone, almost at her gate, was Tommy.

"Ain't you got just one more nice flower?" he greeted her. "I's come for one more."

Miss Rebecca sat down abruptly on the top step.

"Tommy," she commanded, "come here."

Tommy marched up to her.

"You can go off and get all the other little boys you can find, and the little girls, and come back here quick, and there'll be some nice flowers: do you understand, dear, —all the nice flowers you can carry?"

What did one day of glory and self-importance matter! Tommy had come for some more flowers, and there were the roses. She would beg some for the festival, or buy some, or get them somehow; but Tommy should have hers.

She waited at the side gate for the small rabble that gathered at Tommy's summons, and, when they came, led them into the guarded region. And, while they rifled her bushes and climbed her trees and trampled her grass, she sat blissfully by watching the havoc. The angles softened in her face, and years faded from her eyes. And, when the laden and stumbling children went out, she drew Tommy to her side. She held him tight, while she said boldly, as one who might have known children all her life: "There'll be apples and pears and grapes by and by. You'll come and get them, won't you?"

"Yes," said Tommy serenely, "I'll come, and bring all the boys and girls." Then he smudged a kiss on the side of Miss Rebecca's nose and trudged off.

A belated sense of humor awakened in Miss Rebecca's breast.

"I shouldn't wonder," she sighed, "if the next thing I'd be putting up a sign, 'Wanted —boys to climb over my back fence and help themselves to grapes.'"—H. G. Duryee in Outlook.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

This is the heading of an article which appeared in The Independent of May 4, 1905. Preparatory to reviewing some of the books comprising our Constructive Bible Studies, the writer says:

> "The pressing need of improvement and reform in religious education is felt widely. The advance in psychology, which has led to the adoption of new principles of teaching in all secular branches, and the progress of biblical science, which has revolutionized the attitude of well-informed people toward the Bible, have compelled dissatisfaction with the methods of instruction based on different views of the Bible and outworn principles of education. Sunday-school workers, teachers of the Bible in schools, and thoughtful parents have all felt the need of new methods and new helps, and it may be said that no problems connected with the religious life are more pressing, and in no field does improvement promise more certain and beneficent results."

We believe we have made a real contribution in the attempt to solve this problem in our

Roosevelt's Way.

George Bird Grinnell, author and friend of President Roosevelt, writes in the November Country Calendar:

"Mr. Roosevelt once started on a hunting trip in Western Montana with an old fellow as a helper who from the start treated him as an absolute 'pilgrim.' The hired man did absolutely no work and spent most of his time in bed. On this trip, which was one of the most successful that Mr. Roosevelt ever made, and during which, if I recollect aright, he got his first buffalo, his first cougar and his first moose, he helped to pack the horses, brought the wood, carried the water, cooked the food, looked after the stock, and generally did any work that was undone. He was up before light in the morning, cooked his own breakfast, started out on his hunt and made his kill if he could; came back to camp, got a packhorse, took it out and packed in the spoils. In other words, in his hunting he possesses that adaptability to circumstances which we are likely to think is a purely American characteristic.

"A man of that kind naturally cannot be held down and is bound to be successful in hunting, as in other things."

Sports and Games in City Parks.

Even more remarkable than the growth of popular interest in sports in the larger parks has been the development in the last three or four years of scientifically arranged and conducted playgrounds for the poor children of the tenement house neighborhoods in certain of the smaller parks of the city. Here the municipality fosters games and sports of various kinds by providing not only the grounds, with suitable fixtures and equipment, but also the individual implements necessary, such as balls of all kinds, bats, dumb-bells, Indian clubs, and even tennis racquets; and, furthermore, it employs a corps of instructors to teach the children how to play the various games and how to get the most good out of their exercises.

These playgrounds are doing a splendid work in giving these poor children good physical constitutions and training, in reclaiming them from the evil street influences, in breaking up the fighting "gang" idea, and in starting them on the road to good American citizenship. So thoroughly convinced of this is the city government that the administration recently appropriated $1,300,000 for additional small playgrounds and athletic fields.—From "The Playground City," by G. W. Harris, in the "American Monthly Review of Reviews" for November.

The Bishop and the Waffles.

It would indeed be a queer bishop who could not tell a good story on himself. The late Bishop Dudley, of Kentucky, was wont to relate with much relish an interesting experience which he once had in connection with waffles.

At a fine old Virginia homestead where he was a frequent guest the waffles were always remarkably good.

One morning, as breakfast drew near an end, the tidy little linencoated black boy who served at table approached Bishop Dudley and asked in a low voice:

"Bishop, won't y' have 'n'er waffle?"

"Yes," said the genial bishop, "I believe I will."

"Dey ain' no mo,'" then said the nice little black boy.

"Well," exclaimed the surprised reverend gentleman, "if there aren't any more waffles, what made you ask me if I wanted another one?"

"Bishop," explained the little black boy, "you's done et ten a'ready, an' I t'ought y' woudn' want no mo.'"—Lippincott's.

The souls of little children are marvelously delicate and tender things, and keep forever the shadow that first falls on them, and that is a mother's or, at best, a woman's. There never was a great man who had not a great mother—it is hardly an exaggeration. The first six years of our life make us: all that is added after is vewoudn't want no mo'."—Lippincott's.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

SIXTH AFTERNOON.

Mace had hardly finished her offer of friendship to Arthur, when her family came up. They were sorry to have suspected Arthur of stealing the watch, and their remorse swept away from their minds and from his heart, the last feather of the white cock. The little musician was reinstated in the good graces of all. Indeed, he had risen several notches through their misunderstanding.

"But you know, Mr. Acre," said Mrs. Geraldine Woodney, appealing to the blacksmith, "that nobody could be expected to look for the watch in the coffee-mill."

"I am sure it would not have occurred to me to look there," Worth assured her.

"It was this way," Mrs. Geraldine continued; "I was in the heat of beginning my novel, and I was finding room on the table for my manuscript. We had just scoured the coffee-mill, and it stood on the table with the watch beside it. I remember thinking what a good place it would be to get the watch out of my way. I put it in the little drawer, and then forgot all about it. To-day Luther ground the coffee for us, and when I poured the coffee into the coffee-pot, I poured out the watch also."

"It has kept time ever since," said Mr. Woodney proudly; "it has not been out of order for about three years. Arthur, are you ready to go with me on that Sunday business I spoke of? We'll leave Luther with the women folk; it's only once a week they get a chance at him."

Arthur, gratified by the thought that he could be of service, took the blind man's arm.

"Take care of him," called out old Mrs. Woodney.

"I will," answered Arthur and Mr. Woodney at the same time, each thinking himself addressed. Worth Acre, who had that happy faculty which amounts almost to genius, of knowing when to go away, soon left the family group. Luther, his sister, mother and grandmother remained among the church ruins, talking over old times and building air-castles.

"Which way shall I lead you?" Arthur asked when he was outside the yard.

Mr. Woodney answered in a low voice, "Hush! to the saloon. I knew all the family would object, so we've run off."

Arthur, greatly astonished, ventured no question, and they passed the entire length of the village without conversation. "Here we are," Arthur said at last.

"Describe the situation," Mr. Woodney said in a low voice.

"The Hoogans live in the rooms back of the saloon," Arthur communicated. "Mr. Hoogan is sitting out by the side door in his shirt-sleeves, smoking a pipe and reading a paper. Mrs. Hoogan is on the doorstep with her baby, around at the side. I don't see any of the other children."

"Take me around to the side yard'" said the other."

"Well, how are you, Mr. Woodney!" said Mr. Hoogan in a hearty voice; "come right here and take this seat. Me and my wife are glad to have your company, if the saloon is closed up on Sunday. Of course, you understand we can't deal out drinks on Sunday. It's against the law, and I'm a friend to the law."

"I'm pleased to know it'" said Mr. Woodney. "Mrs. Hoogan, how is the baby?"

"Awful bad, Mr. Woodney," answered the mother sincerely. "It's the crossest thing that ever came into our family. It cries from morning till night, and the reason it ain't at it now, is because it's resting up to keep us walking the floor later on."

"Poor thing," said Mr. Woodney compassionately. "Something is wrong you may be sure."

"Yes, we'll all sign our names to that proposition," remarked the saloon-keeper dryly.

"It will outgrow it when its older," said the visitor. "My son Luther had the colic for six months. He'll outgrow it."

"May be so," said the mother. "I only hope we'll be alive when the day comes. How is your grass getting on?"

"We have a fine start, Mrs. Hoogan, and we owe much of it to you. I have come this afternoon on business, Mr. Hoogan, thinking I'd find you at leisure."

"Sorry," returned the saloon-keeper, "but can't do business on Sunday. If you want to talk about taking ice I'll be around early in the morning—say half-past four."

"No, I came on the Lord's business, Mr. Hoogan, and what is so fit for that as the Lord's day?"

Mr. Hoogan, whose tones had been cheerful and friendly to this point, suddenly looked very serious. He answered shortly, "I don't know, sir, as the Lord's business and Mr. Hoogan's business has much in common."

Mr. Woodney resumed cheerfully, "I am determined to have that church rebuilt, and in spite of many obstacles which have been thrown in my way, I believe I shall succeed. People are always better than the world thinks—even better than they know, themselves. I've made my appeal here and there, and some money is already in sight."

"Oh!" said Mr. Hoogan, evidently relieved, "if it's the question of building a church, you can count me in for something. I'm always ready to contribute to anything to help the village, and I'd help with a church or distillery—or anything to bring people here. I'm not a church-member, but my wife is. You can't expect me to give very much, because my wife belongs to a denomination that's pretty lonesome in these parts. Little as the village is, there are seven denominations, and the country folks about here belong to one or the other of 'em. But my wife, she's got a denomination that nobody in the country belongs to but her."

"Yes, sir," spoke up Mrs. Hoogan, with manifest pride, "nobody belongs to my church this side of the Missouri river, I do think!"

"My wife," resumed the saloon-keeper, "has her religion all to herself, you might say. She can't go in with nobody else. She baptizes and communes and joins and perseveres in a different way from any person in this section. But—how much have they been giving to your scheme?"

"I've had three offers of a hundred dollars each."

"Oh, I'll give two hundred dollars, and maybe more," said Mr. Hoogan, "I'm liberal."

"There is another matter, sir," said Mr. Woodney earnestly. "I have come to appeal to you to close up your saloon."

"I thought so!" exclaimed the other scowling.

"I wish to bring to your heart the young men who come here to fasten upon themselves the habit of drinking—young men who will one day be heads of families, and who on account of the liquor you sell, will not be able to support those families. And not only young men—men who have children depending upon them for bread, and wives who have taken a name that you are helping to soil with disgrace. Will you not think of your own children, who may one day die drunkards through your business?"

"Never you mind about my children," retorted the other, "I'll take care of my children, and 'tend to my own business, and you may do the same!"

"But this is my business," said Mr. Woodney, "and your children are as much on my conscience as any other young people. I want to bless their lives as well as the lives of the community, by persuading you to stop selling whisky. And I know if I can succeed in my attempt, I will be blessing your own life, which cannot be true and good while you are making your neighbors untrue and bad."

"See here, Mr. Woodney, I never drink, myself; I let everybody else do as they please. It's not your affair. If a fellow wants to make a fool of himself, it's his right. This is my business, to sell liquor, but what becomes of the stuff after it is sold is not my business.

"Mr. Hoogan, I can't see your face, but I feel from the tone of you voice—not from the tone you are using now, but the one you used to have for me—I feel that you are a kind-hearted man. I don't believe its your wish to curse the lives of all who come into contact with you. I don't believe you want to be a poisonous influence to your fellowmen. It's just come about, somehow, that you sell liquor, and you don't think much of its effect upon others."

"It's come about this way," said Mr. Hoogan, his voice suddenly growing gentler, for in truth, there was such a light on the blind face, and such a ring of earnest appeal in the blind man's voice, that the saloon-keeper found his anger gone. "I had to make a living for the old woman, and I just took up this business because it made the money. There's no question of it sir; it makes the money."

"But I do wish you made it another way," spoke up Mrs. Hoogan, "just as I often tell you, Mike."

"Oh, yes," retorted Mr. Hoogan, "you'd like for me to sell ladies' hats and feathers. Now, Mr. Woodney, it's just this way; you've spoken to me like a neighbor, and the same to you. As I never drink a drop, this business ain't hurting me, but it is feeding my family. It's a sure business, and I'm afraid if I went into something else, I'd fail. I don't mind to tell you that there's some things about my work that I don't like, and wish wasn't. But it pays, and its not hard work. I don't want to work myself to skin and bones, and all the time not knowing if both ends were going to meet. In my business there is lots of ease and leisure and money. And if I didn't run the saloon somebody else would."

"But Mr. Hoogan, don't you know money is the least reward life has to offer?"

"Well—no, Mr. Woodney, to be frank with you, I don't know it. Money is what I want, anyhow."

"Surely, it makes you unhappy at times to think where your money comes from, and what is left in its place," said Mr Woodney gently. "Your business pays from a money point of view, but you'd be much happier to make less in some other calling."

"That's what I tell him!" exclaimed Mrs. Hoogan.

"You find me some other business," said the saloon-keeper, "something that will pay, and I'll not run this saloon another hour. But I'm not going to have my family thrown on the world for no sentiment that was ever preached."

"Mr. Hoogan," said Mr. Woodney rising, "I will try to find you another business, and one that will pay."

Mr. Hoogan, considerably astonished, inquired, "You ain't in no paying business yourself, are you, sir?"

"Oh, no," said Mr. Woodney, cheerfully. "I never did make any business pay that I was in. But I'll try to find something for you to do, Mr. Hoogan' and I believe the Lord will direct me to it. Mrs. Hoogan, will you help me with your earnest prayers?"

"I will!" exclaimed the other, her voice trembling.

"It don't seem reasonable," remarked Mr. Hoogan, "that you'll find something for me when you haven't for yourself. But I will say that you're my kind of a man, Mr. Woodney, and I'll always be glad to see you."

They shook hands warmly, and Arthur led his blind friend away. "Now, we'll go back to the church ruins," said Mr. Woodney. "I know Luther and the women folks are building air-castles, and need our help."

BUSINESS NOTES.

—There seems to be no end to the demand for "The Holy Spirit," by J. H. Garrison, and "Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell. And at $1.00 each, postpaid, it is not surprising.

—Books for Christmas presents make gifts which are appreciated the year round, but a good book given on that happy day tells for time and eternity. We carry them in all prices from "ten cents to $10."

—Our new and reduced price list of Sunschool supplies is now ready, and will go to all requesting the same, clearly showing that we are leaders in prices as well as in quality, for this company always takes a pride in having the very best at the very lowest price.

—Many are taking advantage of our offer to put the name of any one on any one dollar book of our own publication or any Bible, providing the order comes in by or before December 1. One friend ordered six dollar books under this offer, another three, and many one or two.

—Send for an illustrated circular describing our handsome Cradle Roll Certificates—Primary, Junior and Intermediate Diplomas. These are of the very highest type of the printer's art, and at 36 cents, plus postage, or 42 cents prepaid, they are by far the cheapest and best on the market.

—We thank our friends for so patiently bearing with us in our anxious state when we were out of two or three of the Bethany books at once, but the rush was so "fast and furious" that we were out before knowing it, and we have had so many calls that it was with difficulty that we could get ahead at all; but now that we are "out of the woods," we hope to remain so for the remainder of the season.

—The "Gloria in Excelsis," in both the complete and the abridged forms, is in active demand and we are now on the fourth edition of this excellent church hymnal. The edition in boards, abridged, sells for $5.00 per dozen, or 40 cents each by the 100, not prepaid. The abridged in cloth sells for $6.50 per dozen, or 50 cents each by the 100, not prepaid. The complete book is not in boards, but in cloth, and sells for $9.50 per dozen, or $75 per 100, not prepaid.

—"The Disciples of Christ," by Errett Gates, is for busy readers and is not to take the place of the more pretentious books along historical lines. It is a popular edition of the "History of the Disciples of Christ" and as such we can very fully commend it to our readers and will promptly forward a copy to any, postpaid, at $1, the popular price.

—We wish our friends could see the many pretty Christmas cards; also, the Christmas Holly private postal cards, running in price from 1 cent to 10 cents each; also, our pretty stock of Christmas tree ornaments, including artificial snow, which sets off the tree beautifully. The same are fully described in our "holiday catalogue," which we hope to have ready by or before the middle of this month.

—Geo. B. Townsend, Troy, N. Y., orders another shipment of the Normal Instructor No. 2, "The Christ." He seems to lead the brotherhood in the size of his class. This is the booklet for you to use for a systematic study of the life of Christ in connection with the Bible school lessons for 1906, as the entire year is given up to the life of Jesus. The price is 15 cents single, postpaid, or $1.50 per dozen, prepaid.

—We have a remarkable Bible offer; the more so, as it is so near "Christmas." A fine morocco bound, leather lined to the edge, silk sewed Bible (publisher's price, $4.50) for $2.50. And we will put any name in gold on the front cover. The publishers have dropped this style, hence made us the offer, which we accepted. These books are also linen paper. Such a bargain was never put on the market before, and though we have a large stock, they will go rapidly at such a price.

—In the matter of song books, we are still "in the lead," and we mean to continue so. "Praises to the Prince," "Popular Hymns" No. 2; "Silver and Gold," "Living Praise," "The Gospel Calls," one or two, or combined, are what easily hold us at the front. These are bound in limp, boards and cloth, save "The Gospel Call," one or two, which are not in cloth, and "The Gospel Call" combined is not in the limp cloth. All save "The Gospel Call," combined, sell at $15 per 100 in limp, or $20 per 100 in boards, or $25 per 100 in cloth, excepting "The Gospel Call," combined, which sells at $40 per 100 in boards and $50 per 100 in cloth. Fifty or more at the 100 rate.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
  Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
  The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
  Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
  And the song of victory.

The Statehood Question.

The sentiment in favor of statehood for Oklahoma and Indian Territory is steadily growing and, in spite of the wise conservatism which now prevails in regard to the admission of new communities to the privileges of statehood, it cannot much longer be withheld. It is hard to find a public man who is willing soberly to declare that they are not ready for it. The two hindrances have been, first, the divided opinions as to joint or separate statehood for the two territories, and, second, the feeling that New Mexico and Arizona must receive the same treatment as Oklahoma and Indian Territory. The first point is a somewhat delicate one, and the local champions of single and separate statehood respectively, throw themselves so passionately into the argument that outsiders may feel it safer to avoid committing themselves on either side of the issue. Perhaps that is one reason why it is taking so long a time to get the matter decided by Congress. As to the other point, there is no just reason why Oklahoma should wait on New Mexico and Arizona. The latter territories, vast in extent, rich in resources and crowded with interest as they are, still lack the essential pre-requisites for statehood. It is no argument to say that either of them is more worthy of it than Nevada. That is true, but the statehood of Nevada is one of the standing jokes on our federal government. As compared with Nevada's 50,000 population (enough to make a New England mill town), New Mexico has a population of 250,000 (enough to make a middle-western city of the third class). Half of New Mexico's quarter of a million are Mexicans who neither speak our language nor have any more touch with our institutions than if they lived south of the Rio Grande; several thousand others are Indians—good industrious Pueblo Indians, but allied rather to Mexican than to American civilization. The Americans of New Mexico and Arizona are generally of an admirable type, well worthy of the privileges of statehood, the very stuff out of which strong states are made; not border ruffians, but the strong sons of the east who are conquering new conditions in the west. They are the right sort, but there are not enough of them. They are on the right road, but they have not yet arrived.

As bearing on the relative desirability of single and separate statehood for these two pairs of territories, it is worth remembering that when Texas was admitted it was given the privilege of dividing into four states. But Texas preferred to remain one, wisely believing that the advantage of size and strength was worth more than the privilege of electing and supporting six extra senators, three extra legislatures and three additional sets of state officers. The maximum of good government with the smallest possible number of officials and the minimum of politics, is an ideal worth keeping in mind.

Rate Regulation First.

Events indicate the President's firm determination to make railroad rate regulation the paramount issue in the approaching session of Congress. Last week a delegation of shoe and leather men called at the White House to present the arguments in favor of the free entry of hides and a reduction of the duty on leather. It was a fine chance for the President to make a statement on the subject of tariff reform and it was universally expected that he would embrace the opportunity. But he did not. He avoided committing himself on the question of tariff revision and talked about the regulation of railroad rates.

Another group of White House visitors was a delegation of railroad employes who came to present a protest against rate regulation on the ground that any general reduction of receipts will lead to a cutting of wages rather than of dividends, and that the employes will suffer more than the stockholders. The President's answer to this was: First, the employes are to be commended for their appreciation of the great economic truth that the interests of the employes and those of the wage earners are so united that any injury to one is an injury to the other; second, rate regulation does not necessarily mean a lowering of freight rates, for it may, in many cases, mean a raising of rates by the elimination of rebates to large shippers, and in any case its prime object is the equalization of rates; third, the administration's attitude toward corporations is not one of hostility, even when it is forced to attack some of their practices, but of impartial justice to all alike, and that the complete application of this policy to railroads and all other corporations, compelling them to perform their duties and compelling others to yield them their rights, will in the end issue in the best results for the wage earners.

Russia.

No signs of order have yet appeared in the Russian chaos. The revolutionary strike, which was supposed to be at an end, has broken out afresh, threateningly but not altogether successfully thus far. The beginning of a Russian winter is an inauspicious time for the beginning of a strike, and the strikers feel that they are at a disadvantage. They may be able to stand against any scheme of repression which can be executed by the Russian army, itself saturated and honeycombed with revolutionary sentiment, but the generals and the forces which drove Napoleon out of Russia are still active and efficient, as unsympathetic toward domestic sedition as toward foreign invaders, and an army of strikers would be their easiest prey.

The announcement of the Czar's intention to give a large part of the crown lands to the peasants ought to arouse real enthusiasm. It costs the Czar more than the grant of the franchise, for it makes an actual hole in his revenues. Of the area of European Russia and Poland, four hundred million acres belong to the Czar, the imperial family and the state. The policy has not been to throw the public lands open to entry, as our government has done, but to rent this vast acreage to tenant farmers, most of whom had very small tracts. The result was, an enormous revenue to the Czar and the grand dukes, and a peasantry groaning under the burden of rent in addition to the other quite sufficient difficulties of life. When the serfs were freed by Alexander II in 1861, they were given the privilege of buying land on long-deferred payments. The present plan apparently is the even more generous one of giving the land outright to the tenants, thus transforming them at once into landlords. It is a wise and necessary move. Economic liberation must go hand in hand with the growth of political liberty in Russia—as elsewhere. A man must eat as well as vote.

Count Witte says that Poland will not be given an autonomous government, as Finland will. To make this concession in Poland, it is pointed out, would be to invite the building up of the Polish nation again and its almost certain ultimate separation from the empire.

The Price of Diamonds.

The announcement of another five per cent increase in the price of diamonds will strike no terror to the hearts of most of us, not even when it comes just as winter is setting in. Sometimes, of course, one is subjected to a certain moral pressure which practically forces him into the position of the purchaser of a diamond, but in general the rising price of diamonds adds nothing to the burdens of the poor. If it were not for this fortunate fact, one might get up a good deal of indignation over the unnecessarily high price of diamonds. There is probably no article of commerce the price of which is fixed more arbitrarily or with less reference to the real facts of supply and demand. The production of diamonds is hedged about with great secrecy, every process of mining, transportation and cutting being hedged about with all possible safeguards to prevent the public from finding out the quantity of the product. As ninety-eight per cent of the world's diamonds come from the South African mines, which are controlled practically by one syndicate, this policy of concealment is not so difficult as it would otherwise be. There is, nevertheless, very good and substantial reason to believe two things: First, that the quantity of diamonds mined is only a small per cent of the possible output of the mines; second, that the quantity put on the market is only a small per cent of the amount mined. The truth is that the actual production of diamonds is very largely in excess of the demand at present prices, while the possible production is tremendously in excess of the demand. The output is artificially limited to keep up the price. There are unquestionably vast quantities of diamonds stored away in vaults, kept out of the market for fear of causing a slump. Sometimes it happens (or is said to happen) that a collector of rare books, finding a book of which only two copies exist, will acquire both and destroy one, thus leaving the other unique and more than doubling its value. On the same principle, one-tenth of the world's diamonds may be worth more in the market than ten-tenths would be. So the nine-tenths (or some other large fraction) are locked up or purposely left undug, and every man who buys a diamond pays not only for the one he gets, but for a number of others which are held in reserve to keep the prices up.

The Insurance Investigation.

The insurance investigation is losing the first thrill of novelty, but the interest in it during the past week was kept keen by the presence upon the witness stand of James Hazen Hyde, E. H. Harriman, Ex-Gov. Odell, and Senator Depew. Hyde's testimony involved Odell in serious charges, in particular that as governor he had threatened proceedings against the Mercantile Trust Company, through which one of the Equitable's unsuccessful deals was carried on and in which Odell was a participant, and that he had dropped the matter and left his threats unfulfilled upon receipt of a cheque for $75,000, which represented the amount of his personal loss in the transaction. Odell denies all the essential points in this narrative, asserts that his private interests had nothing to do with his action in the case and that he dropped the proceedings against the Mercantile Trust Company upon the advice of Attorney Jerome. Mr. Hyde and Mr. Harriman also handed to each other mutual accusations and mutual denials. Hyde represents his colleagues as having been suspiciously anxious to get him out of the way, persumably because his sturdy virtue and exhaustive acquaintance with the details of the business made him an impediment to their nefarious schemes. He did not exactly say this, but clearly that is the way he feels about it. He suggests that the plan to get him appointed Ambassador to Paris originated in their eagerness to have him away from New York. Doubtless the now famous dinner to Jules Cambon, French Ambassador to the United States had something to do with this. Senator Depew's testimony touched on the question of campaign contributions by insurance companies. He had honestly believed, he said, that such contributions were made in the interest of the policyholders but the wide and unfavorable publicity which these contributions had lately received altered the case and he no longer considered them advantageous to the company or its policyholders. Senator Depew's theory, then, is that the giving of campaign contributions is a good thing to do but a bad thing to get caught at. This evidently was the theory of the company, for it seems that the knowledge of the facts about the campaign contributions was confined to the smallest possible number of persons. Depew himself, a director and legal counsel of the company at a salary of $20,000 since 1888, knew of the contributions only vaguely and by hearsay and was not informed as to the amount, disposition or even the existence of the legislative fund. Did ever individual or corporation succeed more completely in keeping its right hand uninformed as to the transactions of its left?

Lawson's Libel Suits.

The long-expected has happened and an action for criminal libel has been begun against Thomas W. Lawson. The charge is preferred by Charles W. Barron, of Boston, who owns and operates a bureau for the distribution of financial news. Mr. Lawson said some things about Mr. Barron in a recent article in "Everybody's." Following that, Mr Barron said some things about Mr. Lawson in the market reports issued by his bureau and on the basis of that Mr. Lawson has brought a counter-action for criminal libel against Mr. Barron. Mr. Lawson has been arrested, technically, and is now out on $3,000 bail awaiting trial.

But frenzied finance is not the only thing that is getting shaken up. "Collier's Weekly," emulating "Everybody's" as a publisher of hidden scandals, is printing a series of articles on the abuses of college athletics and another series on patent medicines. Both are explicit and detailed accounts, with names, dates and places. We hear plenty about the physical dangers of college athletics, especially football. They are small in comparison with the moral dangers which surround the game, particularly the temptation to disguise professionalism under the pretense of amateurism. This is the topic treated in the articles referred to. The war on patent medicines also goes bravely on. If there are not damage suits from some of the proprietors, it will be a confession. But even confession could scarcely add to the certainty that many of the widely advertised nostrums are frauds.

International Education.

In the old days of medieval education, the seeker after learning migrated from one university to another, from one country to another, recognizing the international fellowship of letters and eager to get all that all countries could give him. Something of the same spirit survives in the practice of American students going to the German universities for graduate work, but it is not quite the same, for the migration is almost all one way. The Kaiser, who is really a man of very large ideas, has been interested in an attempt to make the academic bond between Germany and America closer and more truly mutual. The arrangement for an exchange of professors between Harvard and the University of Berlin is an outgrowth of this. It is now announced that James Speyer, of New York, has endowed the "Theodore Roosevelt Professorship of American History and Institutions in the University of Berlin," the fund to be held by Columbia University and administered by it in co operation with the Kaiser and the Prussian Ministry of Education. In return for this, the German government is to establish at Columbia University a chair of German History and Institutions. Professor John W. Burgess will be the first incumbent of the Roosevelt Professorship.

The Greek Church and the Crisis.

W. T. Stead appeals to Christendom on behalf of the Czar. Mr. Stead is a well-known Russophile, and he believes the Czar to be profoundly religious and upborne at the present time by a sense of consecration to his people's good. But those who have watched the course of events in Russia during the present Czar's reign must be aware that, if he has not been actually under the dominance of the Procurator-General of the Orthodox Church, he at least has not had the courage to oppose him. It is not a question of the Czar's goodness, but, rather, of his weakness. The Russian masses are religious, in the outward ceremonies at least, and it is certain that they would never have tolerated the terrible massacres that have been killing off a people alien in race and in religion were it not that the head of the Russian church gave no edict against such a monstrous iniquity. It is a good thing for Russia that Pobiedonostseff has resigned, for, while there have been horrible massacres of the Jews within the past few weeks, these have been incidental to the general uprising of the nation and the result of years of ill-feeling. Under the newly appointed Procurator-General of the Holy Synod instructions have already gone forth to the clergy to stop, in Christ's name and for his gospel's sake, the terrible wave of persecution. It is toward Witte, rather than the Czar, that the Jews must look for safety. With the church upholding the Russian leader's hands we have not a question that he will, just as soon as the government can control the situation, put a stop to these massacres.

President Roosevelt has appointed Thursday, Nov. 30, as Thanksgiving day.

William, of Germany, has ordered that all his chauffeurs must be total abstainers, and yet we have heard of him praising beer!

Two determined judges in Denver have just enforced the laws against gambling. It can be done when Christians are in earnest.

Agnosticism, says a London paper, may do much for the liberation of man's reason, but it has not the knack of producing Barnardos and Booths.

Reasons for Thanksgiving.

Among the many things for which Christian people may well give thanks at this Thanksgiving season, are the evidences of the progress of the kingdom of God. It would be discouraging, indeed, if, with all the time and labor expended by the church, there were no signs of improvement. But such is not the case. On the contrary, recent events have furnished the most satisfactory proofs that there is a rising tide of moral and religious sentiment that promises enduring results. We mention only a few of the more significant:

1. Recent exposures of corruption in the management of many of the great business corporations show that there is a rising standard of ethics in this country, which will make it impossible for these business methods to be continued. The same sentiment that has led to the exposure of these wrongs will be certain to prevent them in the future. It is certainly a matter of thanksgiving that light has been turned on these dark and devious ways, and that its revelations have awakened a sense of shame and moral indignation on the part of honest people, who are demanding a thorough investigation and condign punishment for wrongdoers.

2. The November elections have given fresh proof of the capacity of the American people for self-government. The fact that the people turned away from their party banners to oust political bosses and to rebuke corrupt political methods, has sent a thrill of joy to the hearts of honest people everywhere. There is an increasing number of voters in this country who will not stultify their conscience to vote the regular ticket, and they hold the balance of power. That fact was never quite so evident as it was made by the recent elections. Henceforth parties will look more carefully into the character of the men they nominate for public office.

3. But not only in the business world and in politics do we see these signs of advancement. In the religious world the signs are no less conspicuous and encouraging. Never was the tide of evangelistic zeal so high in the church universal; nor was the work ever conducted on so intelligent lines since the first century. In our own churches and in others the evangelistic ardor is growing, and many hitherto nonactive members are being enlisted as soul winners. Combination of effort in simultaneous revival services is becoming a characteristic feature of our modern evangelistic work. The ideal before the churches is to get each individual member to bring his own personality and personal efforts to bear in winning others to Christ. This means evangelism on a scale hitherto unknown to the modern church. It means much for the spiritual life of the church, too, for the church that devotes itself to the saving of men from the dominion of sin is bound to keep in close touch with Christ, and that is the very secret of spiritual growth.

Finally, the tide of union sentiment is steadily rising. The most conspicuous example of this fact is the great Interchurch Conference in New York City, in the midst of whose proceedings these lines are penned. The religious bodies here represented number eighteen million Protestants. What a mighty army for God, if they can but unite in pushing forward the interests of the kingdom of God! And they can and will unite in certain lines of work; and to perfect arrangements for such co-operation is the object of this great assembly. It would cheer the soul of any of our members who have been advocates of Christian union, through evil as well as through good report, to hear the ringing speeches made in this conference in favor of the speedy fulfillment of Christ's prayer for unity. A minister of another body said to us today: "Why, this conference is right in your line, isn't it?" Of course it is right in our line. And scores of our people are here participating in and enjoying this blessed manifestation of Christian fellowship and unity. We do not expect to see the oneness for which Jesus prayed realized in this conference, but we do believe that such a union will be greatly hastened by this great gathering. We are getting such a taste of "how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity" that we shall never again be satisfied to limit our labors and sympathies by denominational lines.

These are blessings to be profoundly thankful for. They claim precedence over full barns and material prosperity. They show that God is moving upon the hearts of his people, and is about to carry out some imminent advance movement in his kingdom. Let us give thanks to God for all his gracious gifts and lend ourselves readily to him to further his divine purposes in the world.

"Christians or Campbellites?"

"The Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate" of October 12, contains an article which harks back in its spirit and sentiment to what one would have expected to find a quarter of a century or more ago. It has the appearance of a gross anachronism to-day. After referring to the report that "Rev. E. Cookman Baker, pastor of the Independent Methodist Episcopal Church at Brooklyn, Anne Arundel County, Maryland, had gone over to what is known as the Christian Church, carrying his congregation with him, and ignoring his former baptism by sprinkling," the article proceeds to make several statements which indicate the lack of proper information and not a too charitable spirit. We notice a few of these.

> "It is said that the congregation decided to change the name of their church to that of Christian, believing it to be the only name a church should have. If this implies that all other churches that do not bear this specific name are not Christian it is a most uncharitable reflection upon other denominational bodies."

So it would be; but what excuse is there for any one not knowing that the name does not imply any such thing, but that it only implies that those wearing that and other New Testament names prefer them, as being more scriptural, more catholic, and forming no obstacle to union?

> "While the Christian Church claims that it has no creed but the Bible, and disavows all formulations of faith, yet Alexander Campbell defined his belief in eight distinct articles which his followers adopt as the basis of their organization."

This statement is wholly incorrect. We do not even know to what "eight distinct articles" this writer refers. The distinct creed which the body referred to acknowledges, is the old confession of faith made by Simon Peter, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God!" This divine creed, with the New Testament as the rule of faith and practice, constitutes the basis of their fellowship. A simple fact like that ought to be known by a contributor to a religious journal, and there is nothing to be gained by the misstatement of facts.

Again, referring to the plea of the Disciples of Christ, that there should be no divisions among Christians, this writer says:

> "This theory may seem to be very beautiful, but it makes no allowance for an honest difference of opinion among Christian people upon certain points of doctrine and polity, which will naturally express and embody itself in separate organizations."

This is another capital mistake. The New Testament idea of union, as presented by the Disciples of Christ, does make allowance for "honest difference of opinion." There is "one faith," but there are many opinions, and Christians are to be united in their faith, with charity for their differences of opinion. It is not at all necessary that this "honest difference of opinion" should "embody itself in separate organizations." That is just where the mistake has been made. This "honest difference of opinion" existed in apostolic times, but it did not "naturally express itself in separate organizations." There is no more reason why it should so express itself today than in the first century. What a misconception our writer has of Christian union when he thinks of it as possible only "when all Christians shall see eye to eye upon every punctilio of belief"! That never has been and never will be and is not at all essential to Christian union where love is the dominating factor.

When our critic says "the Christian Church has given a very poor illustration of the consistency of its views in this particular by itself adding another to the many sects of Christendom," he is perhaps wholly innocent of any knowledge of the fact that the separate position of the people whom he criticizes was thrust upon them by the intolerance of the ecclesiastical bodies of the times and was not a matter of their choice. No doubt they have "given a very poor illustration" of the plea which they make for Christian unity and the restoration of New Testament Christianity. This is because they are human. It does not follow, however, that their aim and plea are not divine.

The whole question resolves itself, after all, into this: "Is it the right and privilege of Christians today to stand upon the broad New Testament platform of Christianity, wearing Christ's name and seeking to be governed by his will, with minds and hearts open to all truth? Or must they attach themselves to some religious party, assume a party name, and make for themselves a denominational creed, and strive to build up a sect? This latter view seems to be the ideal of our contemporary, but the former is the ideal which the people known as Disciples of Christ, or Christians, have set before them.

Notes and Comments.

As all of our local churches have been asked to form local chapters, or leagues, to act in concert with our National Christian Business Men's Association, the question has come to us, "What can the local chapter accomplish for the local congregation?" The question is well worth raising and answering. We have more than once expressed our conviction that the national organization of the men in our churches is one of the most important movements which has taken place in our history. It differs from the other organizations, such as the Foreign Society, the Home Society, C. W. B. M., Church Extension, National Benevolent Association, Ministerial Relief, and the Education Society, in this: That while each one of these has its special field of work, this organization of our Christian business men stands behind every one of these national organizations, and is in harmonious relation with each of them. Its purpose is to mobilize—to use a military phrase—the business men in all our local congregations for active service in the Lord's work. It is designed to stimulate liberality toward all our general enterprises, on the part of these men.

Now, what the National Association of Business Men is to the church at large, the local league is to the local congregation. Its legitimate work will be to call into active service, in one way or another, every able-bodied man in the church. It will see that these men understand the nature and needs of our various general enterprises, as well as the local needs of the congregation, and will seek to enlist their active support in behalf of all these enterprises. It is a well-known fact that the very members who are most zealous in the work of the local church are those who must be depended upon for the support of our state, national and world-wide enterprises. In enlisting the men of the church in the active support of the local congregation, therefore, the local chapters will be serving the interest of the church at large.

Political parties have learned better than the church the value of organization in order to reach the individual members of their party and to secure their votes in any given election. The church is beginning to learn that it needs to carry its organization down to the local congregation in order to reach all the individual members and enlist them in active service for the Master. This it can do by ascertaining what the particular ability of each member is, and by assigning him some work which will develop his spiritual life, and bring him into active co-operation with the work of the local church, and, through that, with the work of the brotherhood at large. This is the meaning and intent of the latest of our organizations—the National Association of the Business Men of our churches—an organization that has in it "the promise and potency" of a great advance movement in all our general and co-operative work, as well as in congregational efficiency.

In this connection, the following editorial from "The Standard," of Chicago, is illuminating:

"One of the significant and hopeful signs of the times is the awakening of some at least of our Baptist laymen to a sense of their obligation and privilege. At many of the state conventions there was noticeable an increased attendance of representatives of the pew. Laymen were elected as presiding officers of state organizations. At several conventions important papers were read by competent speakers not ministers, while elsewhere separate meetings were held, in which important phases of work were discussed and the practical, common sense views of men of affairs were brought to the solution of denominational problems. We are not among those shortsighted people who are continually sneering at the business capacity of ministers. We believe that if it were not for the fact that ministers, as a rule, are good executives and administrators, many of our churches would be in financial and spiritual bankruptcy. But the conduct of the Lord's business demands all the ability and help and foresight which the churches possess, and, therefore, the assistance of the laymen, not only in the conduct of the affairs of the local church, but in the broader sphere of state and national organizations of the denomination, is something greatly to be desired."

"Ministers should not engage in politics." The poor pastors! But the politician's usual plaint is that the parson deals too much in "other-worldliness." When "the party" gets a smashing blow, however, as a result of a moral upheaval, some sensitive souls declare that ministers must not "talk politics."

In view of the discussion aroused by the ruling out of the Unitarians from the Federation Conference and the rather supercilious comments of some of the ministers of that body, the following quotation from Sir Leslie Stephen, a Unitarian, is pertinent:

"Many people draw the inference that it does not much matter which set of words we use; best, they think, use those which give the least shock to the vulgar. Against that doctrine I have tried to protest, in the interests of what I take to be honesty to ourselves and to others. But, at any rate, I confess that it appears to me to be a mere misnomer to call this body of doctrine Christian. And, therefore, I should be inclined to extend Strauss' answer to cover a still larger area. No! I should reply, we are not Christians."

Other people have their troubles too. We have nearly ceased from being worried by the "organ question" and such useless discussions, and we pray that we may be delivered from the "Amen Quarrel." Over in England such a disturbance has been raised over the singing of the word "amen" at the end of hymns that one of the papers describes it as "distressful enough and somewhat bewildering." A brother raises the point of its legality and demands to know whether the people are bound to "submit to the dictation of a form of service and to practices to which they object." It has been quaintly said of the Devil that he was the first person to be puffed up with pride. There are weak consciences, shocked at trifles, for which we can make allowances but oftentimes a protest is nothing more than an arrogant pride or a childish scruple which a man owes it to himself and to the church to get rid of.

Neither of the writers in "The Review of Reviews" for November, who deal with the early origins of the federation idea, goes far enough back. Mr. Campbell Morgan, for instance, was quite a young and unknown preacher when the seeds of this movement were being scattered among British denominationalists. Mr. Morgan has but a brief reference to the Grindelwald conference, and gives the chief credit for the idea to Dr. Guinness Rogers, who merely focalized a sentiment that had long been growing, and which was very largely the outcome, so far as human agencies are concerned, of the work done by the evangelists of our own Foreign Missionary Society, and which was unified in some articles in the "Christian Commonwealth" under the title of "A Working Basis." It was one of these articles which caused many good brethren on this side of the water to feel that the editor of that journal had departed from the faith. Dr. Guinness Rogers, Dr. Henry Lunn, Dean Farrar and many other prominent leaders in English church life were readers of those articles and participated in the discussion following their appearance. The outcome was the conference at Grindelwald, in Switzerland, where the possibilities of Christian union were discussed over the tea cups, as well as in set papers.

"The greatest of all missionaries to the heathen may prove to be the evangelist who never leaves his native land," says William Dawson. A converted America means nothing less than a converted world. State and city evangelization is one of the problems before the Disciples of Christ. We have the men and the plea. Shall we have the money needed? The true crux of the missionary problem today is the condition of the life and thought of our churches.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Our readers know that the Easy Chair is now on the eastern seaboard, in the metropolis of the new world, contributing its mite toward healing the hurt of the churches. It is a privilege which no true man will underestimate to mingle with the representative men of the great religious bodies, to see them, hear them, shake hands with them, feel the touch of their spirit, and compare views with them on the great questions of the times. And when one can do this, holding up his head and feeling that his own religious body has won the respect of all others, and, while loving the noble spirits of all names and creeds, and learning from them, yet thanking God for his own heritage of freedom and truth, such a fellowship is a continuous delight. Not a man we have met in attendance upon this great conference has once asked what the people with whom we are connected believe and stand for. They are the leading men of their respective bodies, and they know who we are and what we are pleading for. They know what we are doing for missions at home and abroad, and are especially impressed with our evangelistic zeal and success. How different is all this from what it was a quarter of a century ago! One reason for this is, we are doing vastly more for missions than we used to do, and the other reason is, we are not standing aloof, any more, from these great co-operative movements. If any other reason were needed, it may be found in the fact that we have passed through the belligerent period of our beginning, when we had to fight for the right to be, and have entered upon the constructive era in which we are cultivating fraternal relations with others, who also are seeking to build here on earth the kingdom of heaven.

And yet there remain a few belated souls among us who favor the policy of aloofness, and who glory in their "splendid isolation" from the great union movements of our time. Having all the truth they feel any need of, and fearing contamination by coming in contact with mere "sectarians," these modern Pharisees wrap their robe of self-complacency about them, and—plead for union! As if Jesus had said to his disciples, "Ye are the salt of the earth, and you must be careful not to mingle with others, lest ye lose your saltness! Ye also are the light of the world, and you must preserve that light by putting it under a bushel, lest it shine out in the darkness, and the darkness should not comprehend it!" It was something very different Jesus said, and it was something quite opposite to that which he did. He dined with Pharisees, but he sat also at the table of sinners and tax gatherers. When his disciples wanted to have a monopoly of casting out demons, and forbade a certain one doing that work in Christ's name, "because he followed not with us," Jesus rebuked their narrowness, saying, "Forbid him not." What if the man were not quite "orthodox" in his views or methods; if he were actually casting out demons in the name of Jesus, that was the kind of work Jesus was doing. Why stop him? Would not Jesus be in a great gathering like this, where earnest, consecrated men are trying to find a way of closer co-operation for casting out the demons of our modern society, in his name? Would he stop any church that was really converting people from lives of sin to lives of righteousness, because of some irregularity in its name, creed or form of government? They who think so have not learned the spirit of Jesus. Disciples of Jesus ought to cultivate the breadth of spirit which characterized their Master.

And yet let no one suppose that the Easy Chair favors that flabby sort of religious convictions which makes one equally at home anywhere, and not really at home anywhere. On the contrary, we have scant respect for the religion of any one who does not believe some things profoundly, and hold on to them loyally and consistently. It is this depth of religious convictions and fidelity to them that make men truly great and useful in the world. Let us believe in the principles we stand for, and advocate them on all proper occasions. If one only half believes them, he can only be half as useful as he otherwise would be, and often he is a positive stumbling block. The "Easy Chair" is easy, because its occupant believes with all the power of his intellect and of his affections in the principles and truths for which the people stand with whom he is associated. Otherwise it would be an uneasy chair, and would soon be a vacant one! And never does he realize the strength of his convictions in this respect so much as when he is in one of these great interdenominational gatherings. The very fact that the great leaders of the religious world can love and respect him while holding these convictions and stating them with all frankness, makes him love them for their breadth of fellowship and Christian spirit. It is a great mistake to suppose that a man must compromise his convictions to be acceptable in a meeting like this. On the contrary, such a man would forfeit the respect of such a body made up of such large-minded men. God forbid that we who plead for New Testament Christianity and are designated by Christ's name, should be less catholic in spirit and less Christlike in the breadth of our views and sympathies than others "who follow not with us"!

These paragraphs are written in the hurly-burly of the conference. There are from four to six addresses at each session, and three sessions a day. Besides this, there is committee work, which some of us have to do, and this leaves little time for writing, and no time for sightseeing. We have never heard a series of abler addresses than those thus far delivered in this conference. There are princely men here who would adorn the United States Senate Chamber, whose talents are devoted to Christ's service. Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Dutch Reformed, Lutherans, Congregationalists, Moravians, United Brethren in Christ, and so on to the end of the list, all speak in the same tongue the wonderful works of God, and exalt the name of Jesus Christ. The book which contains these addresses will be the best commentary on the unity which already exists. But this unity is the sure prophecy of a still more perfect union that is yet to be. Meanwhile let us thank God for what we already have, and make the most of it. This is what we are seeking to do. We are glad to see a large number of our preachers here, and every man of them is enthusiastic over the outlook. F. D. Power said: "Alexander Campbell would have traveled a thousand miles to attend such a convention as this." We shall tell our readers more about it all next week. We shall return via Pittsburg and preach for the brethren in one of their great down-town meetings in their evangelistic campaign, the fame of which has reached this conference, and is spoken of with admiration. God is doing great things for us these days, whereof we are glad.

OUR THANKS THIS YEAR.

BY WILLIAM WINSTON WHARTON.

Glad harps have played and hearts have hymned
The whole year through;
We have wrought with plow and sickle,
Thou with sun and dew;
'Til our granaries are bursting
And we're rich in "the accurst thing,"
So, we offer Thee the firstling—
More we can not do.

Yet not for grain and garlands green,
We tune our lyres;
Nor citadels, nor power, nor place,
Nor worthy sires;
But for the fairer fashioning,
Whereby we sing the songs we sing—
Our souls' sincerest offering,
Our deep desires.

We thank Thee for Thine Image, Lord—
The Spirit's seal;
In blood embossed at wondrous cost—
Thy last appeal;
And for life's real achieving,
For fragile Faith's believing,
Hope, sorrow's sweet relieving,
And soulful Zeal.

For these, dear Father Heart, we hymn
Thanksgiving themes;
Proclaim new notes and melodies
And visioned dreams;
Mix with the music of the spheres
And sing Thy love throughout the years,
'Til earth's autumnal hour appears,
And Death redeems.

Taking the Gospel on Wheels

There rolled into St. Louis one day last week "The Gospel Wagon of an aged couple on a long journey." That it attracted the curious gaze of the onlookers goes without saying, for on the one hand it recalled memories of the "prairie schooners" that made the long trip across the plains before there were railroads, while the peculiar combination of "Gospel" and "potato peelers" would be enough to arouse the wonder of the man on the street.

It is a remarkable journey that John W. Harrison and his wife have just made and the readers of The Christian-Evangelist will, we are sure, want to know something about the people who have made their home in a wagon traveling from New York to Atlanta, Ga., and back to New York and then from New York to St. Louis, with California as a probable goal; so when Mr. and Mrs. Harrison walked into the office of The Christian-Evangelist we, of course, interviewed him for the benefit of our readers. Brother Harrison has been known to the Editor and the assistant editor for many years. He has given much time and spent much money for our restoration plea and in his old age we bespeak for him and his wife a very kindly reception wherever they may go. He has two reasons for making his home in a wagon. It is, he says, "his palace on wheels," in which he and his helpmeet cook and eat and sleep, and from which he preaches as he has opportunity in the course of his journey across the country, and secondly, he undertook the journey for his health's sake. The wagon is cozily and conveniently arranged, but as the weather is now getting unsettled and too cold both for outdoor meetings and for comfort in travel of this kind, Brother Harrison would like to locate in a neighborhood where he could serve one or more churches without any other cost than the mere living expenses of himself and wife.

Our first questions brought out some of the life-history of one who has been prominently identified with our cause in England. "When and where were you born?" we asked, and the reply was:

"In Liverpool, England, seventy years ago next July. I was just a working man's son. I played truant from school a good deal. I served my time as a blacksmith. At nineteen years of age I left my father's house for the first time and went to Melbourne, Australia. I had the gold fever. When I got there I went up to the gold fields and roamed about a good deal. I took a little—but very little—taking up gold wasn't to my taste. It took too much working in water. Returning to Melbourne, I took a job as blacksmith at Enoch Chambers' forge. I worked for him seven years."

"What were your religious affiliations?"

"When I returned to Melbourne I lodged with some Liverpool people, and they were Church of England people, and I was supposed to be a Church of England man, having been born in England. I went to the same English church with them, paid 30 shillings ($7.50) per quarter for my pew rent, and paid my regular contribution every Sunday; went morning and evening. I was a life-teetotaler, having been educated in temperance principles, and I took a very active part in the temperance work in Melbourne. The temperance society had occasion to set a watch on a number of saloons there, and another teetotal brother and myself were appointed to watch a certain low-grade saloon Saturday night. While watching it I saw in the saloon, playing billiards, two of the deacons of the church where I paid 30 shillings a quarter for my sitting. When I saw that (those men, mind you, handed the emblems around), I didn't go to church for many months after. It so disgusted me to see those men there that I drifted into a species of infidelity for a couple of years."

"But how came you to be associated with the Disciples of Christ?"

"H. S. Earle came to Melbourne. My shop-mate told me about him, and I went to listen to him. The first time I heard him I said, 'That is what I want.' He was holding evangelistic services in St. George's Hall, and he was preaching. The church we attended then was a despised little band of ten or fifteen members, called "Service's Mob.' I have stood on the market place and seen this Service get his hat blocked and get a black eye, and I simply stood and laughed at it, because he was very extreme in his teaching. I never thought at that time that I would become one of them. And when Earle became preacher there he had to disassociate himself from these people. The following Sunday night I took my wife, whom I had married in Melbourne. She was from London. And we continued to go. Earle intimated in his addresses that if any one would like a conversation with him, it would be a sufficient indication if they would remain seated at the dismissal. So we retained our seats about the third night that we heard him, I think. I looked up Scriptures, you know, that he quoted, and I said to my wife, 'That is all right.' Then he visited us several times at our house, and then we saw our way clear to immersion. At this time the church was meeting in the Temperance Hall. So we were both immersed by Brother Earle. The first Sunday morning after I was received into the church Earle came to me and asked me to put people into seats, and he put me to work, and I have been working ever since. I stopped in Melbourne about nine and a half years; then returned to Liverpool and put in my letter with the Liverpool church—the 'Old Brethren.' Then I commenced in the crockery business on £20 ($100), and in nine years from that time I had the largest retail crockery business in Liverpool."

"Were the old English and Australian brethren alike in their views?"

"At that time great differences, as I understand, had not appeared. They were not exactly the same kind of folk in their belief, but the questions about organs, etc., had not risen in Melbourne, though these questions had occurred in Liverpool. There was a greater amount of liberality under Earle, in Melbourne, than there was in the Liverpool church. Now, I was the first to start the building funds to build the property in Thirlmere road and Windsor street, belonging to the 'Old Brethren.'"

"How came you, then, to break from these 'Old Brethren'?"

"On one ocasion I took a Methodist friend with me to our morning service, and, in my innocence, I thought I was doing a good work, because I felt I was going to get a Methodist to come right over to us, but, to my disgust and surprise and mortification, when the emblems of the Lord's supper were passed, they took them out of my hand and passed them around back of my friend to the next neighbor! I felt my hair like so many wires coming through my scalp. Then, when the collection box came around they did the same thing. They wouldn't allow him either to partake of the communion service or contribute to the funds. Well, sir, that disgusted me. Very shortly afterwards, Brother Earle came to Liverpool and I heard he was at Lawrence's Hotel; I don't know whether he knew I was in Liverpool or not. I went down to the hotel to see him, and insisted on him and his family coming to my house. They stayed with me two weeks, and I tried to prevail on him to start a cause in Liverpool, and I promised him all the help I could give him. He told me that he had consulted with a medical man, and his ailments necessitated his going to a milder climate, and he went to Southampton. At this time I heard of an American preaching in Chester, and after breaking bread with the 'Old Brethren' on the Lord's day morning in Liverpool, my daughter and I ate a hasty dinner, took the ferryboat across to Eastham, and walked to Chester, a distance of about ten miles. I introduced myself to Brother Todd, and found he was preaching just what I wanted. I invited him to my house, and he came on a good many occasions. Then I heard of W. T. Moore, at Southport, and I went up to see him. Of course, Brother Coop knew me well, because I often used to go up to Southport. And so I became acquainted with Brother Moore. He was preaching at Cambridge Hall, Southport, the first time I saw him. He came to my house, and we talked about starting a movement in Liverpool in St. James' Hall. We were glad to have the Moore family with us, and I was happy. I was maid-of-all-work to the movement; had to look after the collection, keep the door, keep the rowdies out, put the people in their seats, etc. They were glorious meetings! It was at these meetings, under the leadership of Dr. Moore, that James Small, Matthew Small and a lot of others got a little light through their skulls! Then we took the Alwyn Hall. Dr. Moore conducted these meetings, after the services in St. James' Hall. Then Dr. Moore left to go to London. One night, after we closed our shop on Saturday, we went to London, and got to Dr. Moore's house about five in the morning. So I was maid-of-all-work in the first meeting in Kensington Town Hall, London, at that time. Then I fixed my horse in a phaeton, and drove to Southampton, so that my traveling by wagon is not a new experience. Newington conducted the services in Alwyn Hall after Dr. Moore left, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Board sent their cheques to me to pay him his salary, which I did, and then sent them receipts. He continued until Brother Todd, of Chester, came. I bought, at the solicitation of Joe Coop, the land upon which the Parliament Street Church is built, for about $5,500. I started the building fund. I saw the cause firmly established."

"How came you to locate in this country?"

"I had so many Americans come to my house that I got infatuated with America, and came to this country. I located in Florida first, and there we all had the malarial fever; then from there we went to Atlanta, Ga., and I was appointed superintendent of the Sunday school in the Hunter Street Church. While there, I was ill, and was ordered by the doctor to go back to Liverpool, and went back an emaciated old man. I was ill for three months after arriving in Liverpool. I stayed in Liverpool about three years, and then returned to America. I landed in New York with nine shillings ($2.25) in my pocket. I left my wife and family in Liverpool with $25, which was all I had. I landed in New York in August, and by February 22 I had saved money enough to bring them from Liverpool to Philadelphia. We went from Philadelphia to Chicago, where we resided for 12 years, subsequently going to Newark, N. J., where my health broke down while I was manager of a factory."

"That was the beginning of your gospel wagon, was it not?"

"Yes, I was recommended an outdoor life, and, at my wife's suggestion, we built a wagon, and on October 19, 1903, said good-by to our children and started on a trip through New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. When we reached Atlanta, Ga., the mayor, E. P. Howell, one of the richest men in that city, entertained us. He is a member of our church. Then we returned through Tennessee, into Kentucky. We spent a week in Lexington with Brother McGarvey, coming through Ohio, and on home, having been gone a year and three weeks. I returned home as strong and vigorous as a young fellow of 25 years of age, which I am at the present time. After remaining with our family from October 12 to April 24, we couldn't resist the temptation of a second journey, and this time we started from New York, with the intention of going to California, reaching St. Louis and the office of The Christian-Evangelist November 14."

"How have you occupied yourself on the journey?"

"I have preached and held services not less than one hundred and fifty times, in churches and chapels and houses and in the open air, on this trip. We have taken up no collections, for we pay our own way as we go along. We depend entirely upon our own energy and our own work to pay our expenses, though in a few cases persons of various denominations have sent us little presents of preserved fruits, edibles, etc., and the Central Church, of Columbus, O., gave us a surprise by sending a number of pound packages of foodstuffs to our wagon on the morning we left that city. We have had no trouble of any kind, and have been interfered with by no one."

GOSPEL WAGON
AGED COUPLE ON A LONG JOURNEY
NEW YORK TO ATLANTA GA. BACK TO SAN FRANCISCO
POTATO PEELERS 10c

"How have the preachers treated you?"

"Some of our preachers have been extremely kind to us. We have used the trip as a volunteer evangelistic journey. I open my meetings by giving a few selections of music on the graphophone. After the graphophone, I give a short account of our travels and introduce the potato peeler, which we make. We give as our authority the fact that Paul was a tent maker, and labored with his hands to minister to his own necessities, and so we do with our own little article. Then we sell what we can of those goods, asking the crowd to remain. After doing my business, I then preach to the people. I get an extremely good hearing. I have never been once interrupted through wickedness or malice. People have asked questions, but always good naturedly, and my experience is that the people, if they can be got at, are ready and anxious for our plea. I believe that this method is not only a valuable one for reaching people, but we reach people who can not be reached in any other way. Give me the zeal of the Salvation Army—their self-devotion and self-denial—with our plea, and we will carry the world for Christ within a short time. I consider our brethren are committing a crime in depending upon pulpit oratory alone to reach the people. You have to carry the gospel to them. Every church ought to have an organized outside band for outside work. We have ladies' aid societies in the churches, but we have few churches where there is a men's society. Some of our preachers come along and tell me I am a crank. And I thank God that Paul was a 'crank,' and Christ was a 'crank,' in preaching to the woman at the well; and I love the same kind of work."

"What has been the effect of your trip on yourself?"

"Didn't you see me at dinner table today? I don't want a better life than this. If I had to give up my wagon I would do so with great regret. What I most want to impress on my brethren is this: I am not carried away with the enthusiasm of this little journey. I have been speaking in the open air for years. We need to be discreet in our open air work and not talk travels too much, because if we do we will damage the cause of Christ."

Brother and Sister Harrison are what their own countrymen would call "a jolly old couple." They preach the gospel of optimism, a gospel much needed and all the more acceptable when it comes from age that has experienced trial. A man and woman who will sell potato peelers in order to preach the gospel are living examples to some of us.

Amateur Reform.

The mission workers on the East Side frequently see the humorous as well as the sadder side of life. A man prominent in reform work recounts the experience of a certain young woman, new to the task, who set about posting herself as to conditions in a neighborhood near Avenue A.

The ambitious missionary had entered the house of an Irish woman, and had made some preliminary inquiries, when she was suddenly interrupted by the woman, who said,

"Say, youse is fresh at dis business, ain't youse?"

The amateur in mission work blushingly admitted such to be the case, adding, "I have never visited you before, Mrs. Muldoon."

"Thin," explained the Irish woman, "I tell ye what to do. Ye sit down in that chair there, ye read me a short psalm, ye gives me fifty cints, an' thin ye goes."—Harper's Weekly.

Learning Contentment

A THANKSGIVING SENTIMENT

By Geo. L. Snively

Contentment was the first virtue Satan wrested from the human heart. Since that evil day history and romance record little else than attempts by men and nations to regain that of which they were despoiled in Eden.

Abel dashed dew from young pastures to find it at early altars; Jacob thought it the birthright; Alexander would circumscribe it with universal empire and discern it in the tribute of mighty kings; the rabbis sought it at the feet of sages; the Argonauts sailed afar to find it the sequel of fabled adventure; Solomon, finding it neither in wisdom, wealth nor fame, vainly sought it in voluptuous revels; Crœsus believed it to lurk in an abundance of the things Thrift might lay at the feet of Avarice; Ponce de Leon believed it laved in the fount of perpetual youth; Epicureans vainly would possess it through satiety, and the Stoic by the atrophy of all desire. Sailors sought it beyond strange seas, miners in the gleam of gems, chemists in retorts, philosophers in caves, our forefathers in the temple of liberty, reformers in new creeds and simpler faiths.

For it, men have offered all—merchants, their goods; dogmatists, their theories; kings, their thrones; but it eludes them. Bacchus has not distilled it into the flowing bowl, nor Mammon made gold its talisman, nor Mars plaited it into the victor's wreath, nor Mercury made it part of oratory's spell. It is not the flower of power, the luster of wealth, the sheen of glory, nor poverty's balm.

Yet it is the guest of some rare hearts, not a chested treasure the world has vainly sought, but a beautiful grace that is to faith, hope, and love as benediction to availing prayer.

Hear, ye heartsick, wailing, "All is vanity," the thrilling words of martyred Paul: "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." Nor is this blissful state attainable on apostolic heights alone, for there is Scriptural admonition for us to be content. Nor do we need more than we now possess, for it continues—"with such things as ye have."

No scrutiny of the life of Paul can be too painstaking if only it reveal to us the secret of his contentment amidst homelessness and cruel persecutions. Our search is quickly rewarded, for in three confessionals he makes known to us contentment's way.

Writing to the Corinthians, money-mad and mart-hunting, he declared he has nothing, yet possesseth all things. Since the flower is contentment, let us study the root of this new economy. He owns nothing. Things committed to his care are not his, but God's. Thus the oppressive responsibilities of ownership press not upon him, though he forfeits naught of the privileges and opportunities of control.

But he also is God's, and assured of care divine. For what he is to have he trusts the inviolable promises, and all anxiety is assuaged. And all that others seem to have is also God's, and to them, as a child of God, he has better title than earthly deeds convey. He knows that from his Father's unwasting fullness, all will come to him that is best.

How this view of earthly chattels changes our relation to them!

My friend has a vast estate rolling back from the river to the mountain. How delectable and enviable! But fences and drains must be repaired, houses erected, wastes stopped, boundaries determined, taxes paid, titles defended, tenants satisfied. It is called his farm, but I enjoy its flashing streams, flower-spangled pastures, the blue haze of its hills and all the varied witchery of its landscapes with a zest unknown to my care-burdened friend.

My neighbor is a mighty merchant. He gathers tapestries, curios and the peculiar treasures of east and west into his store house, and then, with extreme kindness, skillfully selects the best and arranges them in the display window to delight my eye; and each time I pass the scene has changed. If fire destroys this store of mine, I have only to claim my interest in the one across the way to be rich as before. This is real ownership; moth can not corrupt nor thieves break through and steal its wealth. The contentment it brings is well expressed in Mackay's song:

"Cleon hath a million acres—ne'er a one have I;
Cleon dwelleth in a palace—in a cottage I;
Cleon hath a dozen fortunes—not a penny I;
But the poorer of the twain is Cleon, and not I.

"Cleon, true, possesseth acres, but the landscape I;
Half the charm to me it yieldeth, money cannot buy.
Cleon harbors sloth and dullness—quickening vigor I.
He in velvet; I in fustian—richer man am I.

"Cleon is a slave to grandeur—free as thought am I;
Cleon fees a score of doctors—need of none have I.
Wealth surrounded, care environed, Cleon fears to die,
Death may come, he'll find me ready—happier man am I.

"Cleon sees no charm in nature—in a daisy I;
Cleon hears no anthem ringing in the sea and sky,
Nature sings to me forever—earnest listener, I;
State for state with all attendants, who would change? Not I."

Another element of the Pauline philosophy of contentment is his appraisal of himself as a bond servant of Christ's. This rendered him immune from all ambition's pangs, for he sought not his own, but another's, glory. As sonship placed the burden for what he had on the Father, so servitude made the Master responsible for where he was.

Whether his servants are in foundation, wall or turret of the temple of Christianity, they account it equal honor, if only they well support the weight upon them and murmur not. Whether guarding the frontier, in the trenches or chieftains' council, consecrated soldiers of the Cross reckon only whether they are where the Captain would have them, and whether they are fighting well the good fight of faith; knowing well that as his share is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his be that tarrieth by the stuff, and that awards go not to rank, but fidelity in the day of battle. Take from the heart all of self-seeking's varied stings, and we are entering well into the contentment that is the daily portion of the sons of God, who recognize that they have also been bought with a price.

The completion of his triumph over the atheistic demon of discontent came with his vision of the eschatologies: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give to me at that day, and not only to me, but also to all them that have loved his appearing." We are on a pilgrimage intended to show us the rigors of a life away from God. If the traveler, homesick and weary, has but enough to carry him to his journey's end, he asks no more. Soon, very soon, we, too, shall all reach home. Sonship, servitude, and the home vision are ours, and also our victory over Goliath discontent.

"Wherefore, we faint not; but though our outward man is decaying, yet our inward

PASSING OF PORRIDGE.

Makes way for the Better Food of a Better Day.

"Porridge is no longer used for breakfast in my home," writes a loyal Britain from Huntsville, Ont. This was an admission of no small significance to one 'brought up' on the time-honored stand-by.

"One month ago," she continues, "I bought a package of Grape-Nuts food for my husband, who had been an invalid for over a year. He had passed through a severe attack of pneumonia and la grippe combined, and was left in a very bad condition when they passed away.

"I tried everything for his benefit, but nothing seemed to do him any good. Month followed month and he still remained as weak as ever. I was almost discouraged about him when I got the Grape-Nuts, but the result has compensated me for my anxiety.

"In the one month that he has eaten Grape-Nuts he has gained 10 pounds in weight, his strength is rapidly returning to him, and he feels like a new man. Now we all eat Grape-Nuts food, and are the better for it. Our little five-year-old boy, who used to suffer from pains in the stomach after eating the old-fashioned porridge, has no more trouble since he began to use Grape-Nuts, and I have no more doctor's bills to pay for him.

"We use Grape-Nuts with only sweet cream, and find it the most tasty dish in our bill of fare.

"Last Monday I ate four teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts and cream for breakfast, nothing else, then set to work and got my morning's work done by nine o'clock, and felt less tired, much stronger, than if I had made my breakfast on meat, potatoes, etc., as I used to. I wouldn't be without Grape-Nuts in the house for any money." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. There's a reason.

man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is for a moment, worketh for us, more and more exceedingly, an eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things that are seen, but at the things that are not seen; for the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal."

If amidst Thanksgiving homecoming and going, the feasting and social cheer, the counting of blessings and their higher appreciation, the giving of thanks to God and thanksgiving to his poor, we catch the spirt of Pauline contentment, the day will have been among the holy ones of our calendar, and prove worthy its historic and sacred associations.

St. Louis, Mo.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

It may seem absurd to speak of the utility of drunkenness. People who never get drunk—temperance advocates who oppose the manufacture, sale and consumption of liquor, imagine there is nothing to say on the other side of the question. A pamphlet was recently published in this city, and sent to me, entitled "A Defense of the Liquor Traffic," in which the writer says: "In the interest of justice, religion and progress; in defense of a legalized business; inasmuch as the Bible places strong drink among the useful creatures of God," and because in a long life he has seen "as good Christians in the traffic as out of it," he undertakes its defense. He laments, in a most pathetic way, the untold misery heaped upon the country through the professional agitator, predicts teachers of temperance will bring on a fraternal war in this land, very tearfully and distressfully bemoans the unsexing of women in this business and quotes Paul against them that "it is a shame for them to speak in public," denounces prohibition as the very anti-Christ of this era, pictures in very touching way the drunkard as pleading with his wife and mother to call in the aid of Congress to enable him to stop drinking, and declares he would not give a fig for virtue which is the fruit of prohibition, and that moral is no less repulsive than physical slavery!

Think of it! And you have been accumstomed to suppose nothing could be said in favor of drunkenness. The trouble with you is, you don't read the other side. You think it has no defense. You are like the old Vermont farmer, who came home drunk over night, and found himself full of an irresistible desire to get more drunk, and so he brought out the wagon to drive over to town for more whisky. As about to put on the finishing touches in harnessing his beast, he said to himself· "This horse is got horns," and bringing out the lantern, found he had harnessed the cow! The thing has horns: it can defend itself.

Why not speak of the utility of drunkenness? Since all the world knows drunkenness is the direct, legitimate, inevitable and universally expected result of the liquor traffic; since the liquor business, to which all this drunkenness is to be referred, is supported, sanctioned and sanctified by law, and since law and its administration are supposed to have for their end the good of the people, it certainly ought not to be such a monstrous conceit to believe there must be a certain utility in drunkenness. In fact, looking at the vastness of the liquor business, the power it wields in the state, and how strongly it is cherished by statesmen of high claims to intelligence and patriotism, and how the leaders in the army are laboring to restore Uncle Sam's lager beer saloon, we should, in all reason, conclude the utility of drunkenness is great and of vast benefit to society. Is not this a government of the people, by the people, and for the people? Is not the people's good the law of political action and the quintessence of political creeds? Are not political parties moved only by purest motives of virtue and benevolence toward the nation and all classes and conditions of men? And would men so persistently and devoutly encourage this vast sway of drunkenness, whereby 100,000 voters go down to the grave yearly, by steadfast legalized support to its unquestioned cause, were there not some great utility, individually and nationally, in drunkenness? Wherein, then, does this utility consist? Not long ago a writer in a London magazine, discussing this subject, argued that man, like other animals, has a tendency to multiply more rapidly than the means of supporting his increased numbers can be multiplied; that, as among the lower animals, this excessive burdensome number must be killed off in some way; that by this over-multiplication a struggle for existence is superinduced in consequence of which inferior and unsuitable individuals are weeded out and the survival of the fittest necessarily follows; that heretofore this struggle was waged and ended in behalf of those whose brutal or physical energies best enabled them to contend with the physical difficulties of their surroundings, the strongest and most violent human animal was then the fittest and survived accordingly; that the business of our better society now is to kill off, or, euphemistically, "eliminate," the coarser, more brutal or purely animal specimens of humanity, and leave the field to the more intelligent, refined and altogether distinctive human specimens better fitted to rule the world.

Now, we have not been accustomed to think all who fall into the liquor habit are brutal and animal. Bright intellects and noble hearts and lofty specimens of humanity are often brought under the curse. The terrible effects are seen in the men and women created in God's image and capable of nobler development of character, hurled from their high throne and made beastly by the poison of body, mind and soul; and that not alone to those who come under its baneful sway is alcoholism demoralizing and destructive, but to society, families, communities, generations yet unborn.

Some are disposed to think cigarette-smoking young men are of the spider-legged, Grecian-bent, peak-headed class, who wear a single eye-glass and draw inspiration from the head of a stick, and have an "Aw! Aw! Aw!" "Don't cher know?" in their utterances, and to congratulate themselves that the coffin-nail habit will weed out the undesirable class. If that were so, there would be some compensation for the abominable odors that rise from these gutter-made nuisances; but the trouble is, thousands of young men and boys, whose heads are better shaped than these fraudulent exhibitions of alleged humanity, are brought under this habit, and damaged in body and mind.

So of strong drink. If it carried off only the coarser natures there might be something in the argument for the utility of drunkenness, but the premises are unsound. Then, how would this Satanic system of self-elimination work upon the men who make and sell the rum? Is it necessary and fit that they should survive? If the business of self-immolation worked well, would it not begin with the specimens of humanity who are so brutal as to traffic in the

SOUND SLEEP

Can Easily Be Secured.

"Up to 2 years ago," a woman writes, "I was in the habit of using both tea and coffee regularly.

"I found that my health was beginning to fail, strange nervous attacks would come suddenly upon me, making me tremble so excessively that I could not do my work while they lasted; my sleep left me and I passed long nights in restless discomfort. I was filled with a nervous dread as to the future.

"A friend suggested that possibly tea and coffee were to blame, and I decided to give them up, and in casting about for a hot table beverage, which I felt was an absolute necessity, I was led by good fortune to try Postum Food Coffee. For more than a year I have used it three times a day and expect, so much good has it done me, to continue its use during the rest of my life.

"Soon after beginning the use of Postum, I found, to my surprise, that, instead of tossing on a sleepless bed through the long, dreary night, I dropped into a sound, dreamless sleep the moment my head touched the pillow. Then I suddenly realized that all my nervousness had left me, and my appetite, which had fallen off before, had all at once been restored so that I ate my food with a keen relish.

"All the nervous dread has gone. I walk a mile and a half each way to my work every day, and enjoy it. I find an interest in everything that goes on about me that makes life a pleasure. All this I owe to leaving off tea and coffee and the use of Postum, for I have taken no medicine." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

souls of their fellows? Would the liquor men consent to such a plea as a basis of their business and feel themselves general benefactors of human society and government because engaged in such a work?

Well, if this be not the good of drunkenness, what is? If this grim and terrible argument for its utility be not well taken, where shall we find the reason for the liquor crime? Why do the drunkard-makers do their work? Is it merely for the sake of personal liberty? Then, why grant to some the personal liberty to rob multitudes of their freedom? Is it for the sake of the financial advantages of the liquor traffic to the state? What of the tens and scores of millions which the liquor business entails upon the state for every million of revenue thus secured?

What is the utility of drunkenness? What is the moral and material excellence of the liquor business? What is the red, ripe, perfect fruit of this tree? What is the compensation for the army of drunkards, loss of respectability and property, health, happiness, liberty, souls; the poverty, misery and shame brought upon families and society; the crimes, expenses of jails and penitentiaries and asylums; the vices, iniquities, disasters, hatched out by this egg of all crime? Is it possible the liquor traffic is licensed by society for the relief pointed out by our social philosopher, namely, the elimination of the coarser elements? Then, what does society do but legalize murder? What, pray, is the advantage of the saloon? What is the utility of drunkenness? What is the fruit of this Upas tree? Experience points with infallible testimony.

Is Unbelief Dying?

By William Durban

I have, for some time, been led to think that there never was, since the very beginning of Christianity, so much and such wonderful encouragement for the advocates of true religion as in these days. Not long ago I wrote a description of the lifelong efforts of Haeckel, the arch-priest of the modern school of German rationalism. This founder of the fantastic system of atheistic thought, called Monism, is still lecturing and writing at the University of Jena. He has been severely taken to task by some of the ablest of his Teutonic contemporaries. His elaborate attempt to prove that this universe has managed to manufacture itself out of some extraordinary commodity called Urstoff, has bewildered many weak minds into belief in his unbelief. This Urstoff has greatly tried and tormented Haeckel and his followers. They can neither get hold of any specimen of it, nor imagine what it would be like if they did. Haeckel used to call it Bathybius, which, of course, means "deep life." Now this Bathybius was imagined to be an oozy, wriggling, restless, slimy substance down in the deepest and darkest recesses of the ocean. This appalling sort of marine protoplasm was imagined to be a juice of life. So Haeckel had discovered in the ocean the secret of creation, and his disciples were delighted, and their minds reveled in this slimy Bathybius. But, after all, Haeckel had only evolved it out of the mysterious depths of the ocean of his own imagination, and it has not gone entirely out of fashion in the circles of unbelief.

TWO MIGHTY BOOKS.

On my reading desk lie two extraordinary volumes, just issued from the press. One is entitled "Supernatural Religion, an Inquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation." This is a new and cheap edition of a work of 936 pages, which was issued in very expensive form over ten years ago, and had a wide circulation, creating a great sensation, because of its elaborate and smart attack on orthodox and evangelical belief. Its re-issue at a low price is a sign that there is still some courage left in the Jericho of Skepticism. But what this amounts to I will try presently to show. The other new volume is a fresh work from the pen of W. H. Mallock one of the most gifted and famous of English critics, and is entitled "The Reconstruction of Belief." (Harpers, 302 pages. Price, $1.75 net.) It is a magnificent production, and though it has just appeared, it has at once attracted the attention of the reviewers. It is a volume of apologetics. Mr. Mallock is universally acknowledged to be one of the most brilliant men of letters and clearest thinkers of our time. The value of his new book is that it strives to answer in a philosophic manner certain questions which most perplex all devout minds.

THREE GREAT INITIAL DIFFICULTIES.

Mr. Mallock looks in the face certain crucial problems, which are immediately encountered directly we begin to contemplate the great "Riddle of the Universe," to use the phrase which furnishes for Haeckel the title of his greatest book. The first question is, How can we feel certain of the existence of God, in face of a positive science which sees no trace of God in this our world, and which rigidly eliminates the supernatural from its explanation of organic and inorganic life? The second question is, If the existence of God, and of a righteous, all-powerful and all-good God, be proved, how can the existence of evil be reconciled with it, seeing that evil is the opposite of good, and that the same God who made good must also have made evil? And the third question is, In a world which appears to be one of cause and effect, where each act depends upon the past and influences the future, how can man be a free agent, and how can he possess liberty of choice to sin or do right? These three difficulties have faced every thoughtful soul at some stage or other of life. If they can be solved, religion, as a dogmatic verity, rests on a secure basis. If they are incapable of solution, then religion must disappear, to give way to the "nightmare of materialism."

THE VICTORY OF CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY.

Now, Mr. Mallock triumphs all along the line. This masterly new book smites skepticism with blows that resound from every page. But Darwin and Spencer suffer as mercilessly as does Haeckel. Mr. Mallock quickly proves from Haeckel and Spencer that they are compelled to admit the existence of some power which they do not call God, but which is no other than God, in order to explain the universe. Mallock made the rationalists look utterly foolish, by meeting them on their own ground and demonstrating from their own writings that they absurdly contradict their own most vaunted theories. The conclusions at which these so-called scientists have arrived are ghastly, hideous, infernal, to speak the plain truth. For instance, the contention of such thinkers, determined to hurl God out of the universe, is that the latter is a vast machine, moving mechanically, each part interacting with some other part, like the wheels of a watch, the present movement remorselessly producing the future, as the past has produced the present. "Now, deny that this train of machinery has been set in motion by some intelligence," says an able critic in the columns of one of the London daily papers, "and what is there left to man? All morality vanishes; for machines can not be moral. All the higher pleasures of life disappear. Darwin admitted that, with his progress in the faculty of exact research, he lost the power of enjoying music." I entirely agree with this critic in the "Daily Mail." And I rejoice to note that in the daily papers in England there is less and less manifestation of sympathy with rationalists, and more and more with faith and its exponents. Mr. Mallock's book is being warmly received by the press.

WHAT IS CHANCE?

The gospel of chance is being boldly challenged. Mr. Mallock wants to know after all what is this dark thing denoted chance? Chance did this, and chance did that. It is curious, indeed, that if nothing made everything, yet chance meddled everywhere. Who, then, is this chance? Why does not Haeckel say? Why can nobody introduce us to the agent who did such wonderful things? If chance set evolution going, as we are so often told, then chance must be worth getting acquainted with. I should myself be grateful for some kind of introduction, for I am myself under a deep debt of gratitude for evolving me. I have had a very happy life. If chance arranged it for me, I should be most pleased to learn something definite about my marvelous benefactor. But Mallock says that when these men declare that chance is the author of cosmos, this is only equivalent to saying that some unknown cause brought things about; then I lose respect for men who avoid philosophically honest language. They should not hide and disguise their meaning under a shuffling vocabulary.

I turn to the other book, "Supernatural Religion." It is a big thing. And it is ably written, anonymously. But why is it reissued? I can not imagine. It is a vain attack on the miraculous element in Christianity. But it would be miracle on the side of unbelief if this book, though is has had a great vogue, could eliminate the conviction of the supernatural from the mind of the age. Man is himself a supernatural creature, with sphere which he for a time inhabits. And men by millions come deeply into the conviction that they are in some way related to immortality. Haeckel and Spencer would send us crawling in the dust, but the vast majority of men and women, including even multitudes who are not actively spiritual, refuse to be led recklessly into the mud and mire of the borders of the dead sea of negation. I predict that for one person who may be drawn to read "Supernatural Religion," the infidel book, hundreds will be induced to study the splendid vindication of Christianity by Mr. Mallock. Skepticism in Britain is now in a very bad way. Its lecture halls are closed. Its papers are poor rags. Its exponents have entirely lost popularity. And our difficulty is not with any active hostility, but with dull indifference and the absorbing nature of the cares of life.

Dr. Blosser, the noted catarrh specialist of Atlanta, Ga., is the discoverer of a wonderful remedy for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrhal Deafness. He has decided to send free a trial package of his remedy to any sufferer who will write him.

This remedy is a harmless, pleasant vegetable compound, which is burned on a plate, or smoked in a pipe or cigarette. It contains no tobacco. The medicated smoke vapor being inhaled, reaches directly the mucous membranes lining the head, nose, throat and lungs, making a radical and permanent cure.

If you want to give the remedy a free trial, write a letter at once to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga.

Torrey and Alexander: The Story of a World-Wide Revival, by George T. B. Davis. Fleming H. Revell Co. 256 pages. $1.00 net.

Since the days of the wonderful meetings of Moody and Sankey there has been nothing exactly akin to the evangelistic campaign that has been carried on by Evangelist R. A. Torrey and Charles M. Alexander, the singer. Mr. Davis has accompanied the evangelists in their recent tours through England and Wales, and this book is a record, in part, of that campaign, but it embraces also the wider field which the evangelists have covered. The writer is enthusiastic, and, possessing something of the newspaper man's point of view, he is able to set out the more striking incidents of what every one must regard as a very wonderful religious awakening. The book is well illustrated with photographs of the evangelists and incidents, places and men associated with the revival. It would do any evangelist or religious worker good to read it.

The Inner Chamber of the Inner Life, by Rev. Andrew Murray, D. D. Fleming H. Revell Co. 170 pages. 75 cents net.

Andrew Murray has won an established place as a devotional writer. He loves the Book, and the purpose of this volume is to restore in the life of the believer the inner chamber to the place which Christ meant it to have.

Applied Theology, by Rev. F. C. Monfort, D. D. Monfort & Co., Cincinnati. 234 pages. $1.00.

The author is well known as the editor of one of the leading Presbyterian religious journals. He is a graceful writer and has a very bright and fresh way of putting things. His subject being applied theology will not tempt one to take issue with some of the author's extremely conservative views. On many of the themes to which he directs attention he writes in the terms that one would expect a Presbyterian divine to use, yet, despite the fact that he is true to his up-bringing, we are glad to note that there is a breadth of vision in some of the chapters that is very encouraging and that will lead, we are sure, to practical results.

Primary Facts in Religious Thought, by Alfred Wesley Wishart. University of Chicago Press. 128 pages. 75 cents net.

These seven short essays are intended to state in a simple and practical manner the essential principles of religion, and to clear it from the confusion arising from theological changes and historical criticism. Dr. Wishart was formerly Fellow in church history in the University of Chicago, and his view point is the modern one we would expect to find from that association. He starts with the conception of religion as a universal, inevitable human experience; distinguishes it from other things with which it has been confused—as morality and theology; shows its intimate connection with the life of society and suggests how its essence may be kept in spite of changing views on minor points. The following quotation shows the practical aim of the author: "This is the real message of Christianity to mankind. The universal religious life reaches its supreme expression in human lives transfigured by this self-surrender to Christ. The Bible, the Christian Church, and all the forms and ceremonies of the Christian religion, are simply means to an end, and that end is—Christlikeness."

The Passion for Souls, by J. H. Jowett, M. A. Fleming H. Revell Co. 127 pages. 50 cents net.

The subject is one akin to the author's heart. Brilliant as he is in intellect, eloquent as he is in speech, the one thing that distinguishes the successor of Dr. Dale in Birmingham's pulpit is the passion for souls. These seven short discourses are full of meat and illumination.

Bee's Flower Children, by Frances B. Callaway. American Tract Society. Price $1.00.

The author of this story has passed into the great beyond, but she has left a fragrance behind her that will never pass away. She was a lover of flowers, and, having met with an accident to her spine when a little girl, she gave her heart to the works of benevolence as she grew to be able to do this through her literary work. She was the originator of the Loyal Temperance Legion Flower Mission, and it is on this work that this book is founded. The names are fictitious, but most of the characters and scenes are true to life. The manuscript was finished just before the brief illness which ended fatally for the writer. It is a beautiful story, as well as an interesting one, not only to young people, but to grown-ups as well.

Life More Abundant, by Henry Wood. Lee & Shepard, Boston. Price, $1.20 net.

This work aims, by application of modern thought to scripture truth, to "brighten and deepen" and establish more surely faith in the Bible. By displacing a false literalism and inerrancy which destroy "its harmony, beauty and unity," the writer hopes to recover these, and also to preserve "all that is intrinsic in the Written Word." Life more abundant is the world's need. The teachings of the Bible, and particularly of Jesus, "were living principles and morally contagious." These, when "brought into close contact with the human soul," by a vital interpretation, "kindle an inner spirit and life." The watchword is development. Revelation is progressive. Evolution, properly understood, is the handmaid of religion. There are some excellent chapters in this book, while some seem to savor of special pleading. To the conservative it should prove stimulating; to the less conservative quite acceptable.

Boys Who Became Famous Men, by Harriet Pearl Skinner. Little, Brown & Co., Boston. 221 pages. Price, $1.25. 12mo.

This book presents incidents in the childhood of eight celebrated men—poets, artists and musicians—that are woven into stories interesting for the story's sake. The boy who reads these chapters will follow them with all the interest he would fiction, while he will glean many biographical facts at the same time about such men as Handel, Coleridge, Gainsborough, etc. The book is illustrated.

Deerfoot in the Forest by Edward S. Ellis. The John C. Winston Co., Philadelphia. 366 pages. Price, $1.00.

This is the first of a series of books by a well-known writer of fiction, the aim of the author and publishers evidently being to issue something like the famous series of Fenimore Cooper. This book is one that will delight the boys, though it is entirely free from unhealthful sensationalism. From its title it may be surmised that it deals with Indian life. Deerfoot is a Christian Indian, who saves the lives of two boys who had gone on a hunting expedition, not knowing of an Indian uprising.

The Immanence of God, By Borden P. Bowne. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. 16mo. Price, $1 00 net.

This new work by Professor Bowne, of Boston University, is an effort to disillusionize two classes of persons: first, those who, through false conceptions of science and philosophy, regard nature as self-sufficient, mechanical and undivine; and, second, those who from the religious point of view, over-emphasize the unnaturalness of the divine. He gives us a more divine natural, and a more natural divine. His thesis is that the whole cosmic movement depends upon, and is the orderly expression of, the divine will and purpose. His is a popular treatment in clearest expression of a present-day problem in philosophy and religion.

In the Secret of His Presence, by Rev. G. H. Knight. A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York. 12mo. Price, $1.25.

This book aims "to set forth the sacred privilege of secret fellowship with God, and to urge the need of making that intercourse with him more frequent and prolonged." The stress of modern life and the tendency to over-socialize religion, render imperative "the quiet hour." The life and teachings of Jesus also emphasize the need and show the possibilities of this more intimate communion. "Alone with God" exalts our vision, produces humility, lays bare the soul, gives relief and rest to the troubled heart, renews strength, supplies courage, intensifies aspiration, expels selfishness, and yields the joy of perfect self-surrender. The conditions of this fellowship upon which these and other results depend are clearly presented. This book is calculated to stimulate and deepen the religious life.

Heart's Desire, by Emerson Hough. The McMillan Company. 367 pages. Price, $1.50.

This story is the outcome of a number of stories that have appeared from time to time in the magazines about a little frontier town called Heart's Desire. So successful were they that Mr. Hough was persuaded to weave them into a continuous story. The result is a delightful book, sunny, and as full of abandon as is the southwest itself. It is certain the discerning reader will come to the conclusion that the author is picturing some of his own experiences. Whether or no, he can draw what he has seen in other men's experiences, for Heart's Desire, though it be not located on the map under that name, is surely a real place, and while the instinct of the story-teller is seen in these pages, there is also in them the real life of the west. Here we see what a miracle can be wrought in a vacant Eden, the incomplete Paradise, of a frontier town, when a woman from the old settlements is introduced. The story is one that appeals to men and women alike, and it will hold their interest until after the last page has been read.

Yolanda, by Charles Major. The McMillan Company. 407 pages. Price, $1.50.

The author of "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" and "When Knighthood Was in Flower," has created in his latest book a character that has much of witchery in it. The story deals with the fortunes of the young Count of Hapsburg, who leaves his craggy dominions to see the world, and, perchance, win the famous Princess of Burgundy, whose father, Duke Charles, had sought his hand in marriage for his daughter, and then spurned him How the young count goes forth incognito and encounters a beautiful girl, who is known to him as Yolanda, for whom he would give up all thoughts of the greatest princess in Europe, we must leave the story to tell. The style of the book is an improvement on any that Mr. Major has hitherto written. The interest is well maintained and there is just enough of the swash-buckling element in it to make the hero manly without discounting the dignity of the romance. Yolanda is a delightful young lady, and the story about her will attract a large class of readers.

SIDNEY: HER SUMMER ON THE ST. LAWRENCE, by Anna Chapin Ray. Little, Brown & Co., Boston. 332 pages. Price, $1.50.

Miss Ray has achieved decided success in what are known as the "Teddy" stories, which have delighted many thousands of readers. This new story, intended for girls and boys, takes up a new scene and an entirely new set of characters. The heroine is true, helpful and earnest and this description of her summer home on the St. Lawrence, with her cousin and their friends, is one that will delight the young people.

UNDER THE LILACS, by Louisa M. Alcott. Little, Brown & Co. 302 pages. Price, $2.00.

A story by the author of "Little Women" needs no commendation, yet that is a part of the function of the reviewer, and we must say that "Under the Lilacs" is a book that will appeal to all young folks and many grown-ups. It is put out in a handsome edition, beautifully illustrated with eight original full-page pictures by Alice Barber Stephens, who has shown such wonderful ability in delineating other characters of Miss Alcott's creation.

MAGAZINES.

REVIEW OF REVIEWS.—The most prominent topics of discussion in the November issue of this indispensable periodical are the independent tendency in American politics, as illustrated in Mr. Jerome's fight for election in New York, and in other local campaigns; the question of insurance management; a very interesting article by Mr. W. T. Stead, who has followed the movements of Russian thought and action with great interest for many years, on the first parliament of that awakening nation; contributions made by Jews to our national life (an extract from this article appeared in our columns last week); the present condition of rural Ireland, and what is of especial interest just now, the movement for church federation in America and England.

THE WORLD OF TODAY.—With the November issue this monthly concludes its ninth volume. It has come to occupy a place of its own, and the distinctive Christian tone that characterizes it raises it to a plane above the ordinary magazines dealing with secular affairs. Of the special articles in this month's number, one by Lewis Gaston Leary, entitled "The Glory of All Lands," picturing both by word and illustration the beauties of Palestine, is worthy of particular note. "Reforming Athletics," by the editor, as well as an editorial on "Thanksgiving: Is it Hypocrisy?" are needed words just now. Chicago's traction question, of course, appeals to a smaller constituency than some other articles, though it is of vital interest to the people who live in the Windy City. There are many other articles of interest and value.

THE CRITIC.—One could almost wish that such a magazine as 'The Critic" would not lend its pages to advertising a man who, it declares, "does his own booming." Mr. Bernard Shaw has had all the advertising, surely, that even his eccentric genius deserves. It is merely spoiling worse a man who is badly spoiled, but, in this month's "Critic" Mr. Strachey writes upon the popularity of Mr. Shaw, and seems to find a reason for this in the hypocrisy of a large class of English people and the effort to be "superior" of the American. We have every belief that the day will come when it can be said by every man what Mr. Anthony Comstock said to a "Times" reporter: "Shaw? I never heard of him in my life; never saw one of his books, so he can't be much!" "The Critic," however, is a most useful periodical, and, indeed, almost indispensable to one who would keep up with the best in the world of books. One of the features of this number is an interesting article on "New Orleans in Fiction."

Our Budget.

—The Lord's day before Thanksgiving is designated by the American Christian Missionary Society as Rally Day in all our Sunday schools, when an offering is to be taken for the purpose of advancing our work in the home land. Let every Sunday school fall in line.

The Editor-in-chief, who has been attending the great Federation Conference in New York, will stop in Pittsburg on his return, and probably preach there today. The Centennial Committee has been called to meet in Pittsburg, to settle some things that were left undetermined at the meeting in Cincinnati last week.

—A great meeting is being held at Canton, O.

—Just as we go to press we have received the following telegram from the Editor in New York: "We are having a great conference." In a personal note to his assistant, written about midnight on November 16, Dr. Garrison says: "We have had a busy day. A day of great speeches. My session was a glorious one; the best line of speeches, my own excepted, I almost ever heard."

—In this issue we present pictures of some of the chairmen and officers of the federation conference. In our next issue, in which we hope to present the cause of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, we expect to give also some report of what was said and done in this great conference and picture some of the leaders among the churches outside of our own brotherhood, who took part in it.

—An item of great interest to many of our readers is the information that the twentieth anniversary of the pastorate of H. O. Breeden, of the Central Church, Des Moines, will be celebrated on December 1. Former pastors and evangelists, as well as members and friends, are invited to be present or to send a word of greeting. Frank A. Rice is chairman of the committee on invitation.

—E. H. Kellar is building up a new work at Los Angeles, Cal.

—W. S. Willis has resigned at Ironton, O.

—A new church is being planned at Kirksville, Tex.

—W. A. Fite has accepted a call to the church at Windsor, Mo.

—Macon, Mo., will have I. T. LeBaron, of Milton, Ia., for pastor.

—H. R. Trickett, of Macon, Mo., will take the work at Monroe City.

—Our new building at Jacksonville, Ill., will be dedicated about March 1.

—The church at Wolcott, Ind., has secured L. W. Sexton as minister.

—J. J. Taylor was ill much of the time during the meeting at Ludlow, Ky.

—The corner stone for a new church building at Utica, O., has been laid.

—The churches at Maysville and Hazel Green, Ky., are without preachers.

—C. Monroe will begin a meeting at Bingham, Ill., on Thanksgiving day.

—Charles R. L. Vawter has accepted a call to Shelby, O., and is now at work.

—The church at Ashland, Ky., under W. S. Gamboe, is doing successful work.

—Our church at Newport News, Va., will be ministered to by D. S. Henkle, of Harrisburg.

—Clarence H. Poage is now working with the churches at Radford and East Radford, Va.

—John Giddens has resigned at Gravett, Ark., and Pape, Mo., and is working half time for the church at Eldorado Springs, Mo., which is his home town.

—Edward O. Sharpe has taken the pastorate at Winchester, Ill., succeeding W. W. Wharton.

—S. P. Telford has been asked to remain the third year at Toluca, Ill., with increase of salary.

—Marshall G. Long has begun his work at Warsaw, Ind., where he feels the outlook is bright.

—J. A. Shoptaugh writes that his church at Peublo, Col., was to burn a $400 note last Lord's day.

—C. D. Haskell has entered upon the pastorate at Williamsville, Ill., having left Ft. Madison, Ia.

—S. W. Crutcher, after three years of labor at Lamar, Mo., is expecting to seek another field for 1906.

—The brethren who organized about a year ago at Iron Hill, Ky., are now building a new house of worship.

—The church at Columbus, O., has more than $30,000 in bank, and is now seeking a location for a new building.

—Otto Shirley has accepted a call to Burrton, Kan., where he will begin December 1 with encouraging prospects.

—John T. Brown reports that the prospect in New Zealand that "no license" will carry in the next elections is very good.

—Evangelist Scrimsher reports that in visiting ten churches he found no one at six or seven of them who could offer public prayer.

—J. W. Marshall will hold an evangelistic meeting following the dedication of the new building at Marion, O., about January 1.

—J. T. Lockhart paid THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a visit while passing through St. Louis, after a successful meeting at Tyler, Texas.

—W. M. Baker, minister of our church at Meridian, Miss., reports that they have just raised $207.50 for the National Benevolent Association.

—The Indian Territorial Christian Ministerial Association will meet at Roth, December 5-7. All preachers of the territory are asked to be present.

—A little chapel will soon be built at Lawnsdale, a suburb of Knoxville, Tenn. Brother Myhr will hold a meeting for this mission at an early date.

—J. T. H. Stewart, who recently had a serious accident, hopes to be ready shortly for evangelistic work. His address is 123 Sycamore street, Washington C. H., Ohio.

—For a distance of about two hundred miles in a beautiful valley of Montana, A. C. Downing, at Kalispell, and C. W. Martz, at Spring Creek, are the only preachers.

—L. C. Howe is delivering a series of Sunday evening addresses on "Studies in Old Testament Characters and Events." The prospects at Newcastle, Ind., are very good.

—The auxiliary of the Central Church, Lexington, Ky., I. J. Spencer, minister, has become a living link in the C. W. B. M., and will support Miss Ada Boyd, Bilaspur, India.

—A beautiful little building has been dedicated as a church home for the brethren at Dufur, Ore. P. P. Underwood has served there for more than seven years, and to him much credit is due.

—The church at Bethany, Mo., takes its missionary offering in good time. For state work it gave $153.50. Last Sunday it took a good collection for the C. W. B. M. It is about to begin a series of evangelistic services, with R. H. Fife leading. Oren Orahood is the minister.

—B. H. Melton has just entered upon his fourth year at the Marshall Street Church, Richmond, Va., which is enjoying a period of unusual prosperity. Over two hundred have been added, for the most part at regular services, during his ministry.

—A new building at Jellico., Tenn., will be finished by spring. Wren J. Grinstead, the pastor, has just visited a neighboring town—LaFollette—and after four nights' service in the Congregational church, a Christian church was organized, with ten members, and there is prospect of a building in the near future.

—We hear excellent reports of the work at North Side Church, Kansas City, Kan., where C. P. Smith has been in charge for the past four years. Beginning with a small membership, without a dollar in property, there are now enrolled nearly four hundred, and $10,000 have just been expended on a fine stone basement, in which the congregation will worship until it is able to put on the superstructure. Brother Smith is the oldest Protestant minister, in point of service, in the city. Eight preachers hold membership in his congregation, and Brother Smith has the good will and cordial support of all of them.

—B. F. Cato will soon enter upon his third year as minister of the Central Christian Church at New Albany, Ind. The work he is doing there is the most delightful in which he has ever engaged.

—We regret to hear of the death of W. G. Walker, of Bluefield, W. Va., who died of typhoid fever. Brother Van Voorhis, of Toledo, O., conducted the funeral. There will be given in another column some particulars.

—The Auxiliary and Mission Band of the Christian Church, of Paris, Ky., of which Carey E. Morgan is minister, have become a living link in the C. W. B. M., and will support Miss Nora Collins, Bayamon, Porto Rico.

—The students of the Disciples' Divinity House, Chicago, have contributed about $60 toward the furnishing of the dining room of the new dormitory of the Hazel Green (Ky.) Academy of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

—J. G. Creason commends very highly a lecture on "Wonderland," delivered at her home town, Lathrop, Mo., by Miss Mildred Doherty, a graduate of Christian College, Columbia, who has made special preparation by extensive reading and travel.

—J. B. Lockhart is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons at Unionville, Mo. They are, in order, "Civic Righteousness"; "The Card Table in the Home"; "The Modern Dance"; "Parental Authority." They have elicited many favorable comments.

—Roger H. Fife, of Kansas City, is to begin a meeting with Oren Orahood at Bethany, Mo., November 26. Brother Fife has been engaged in the Pittsburg campaign since concluding his meeting at Little Rock, Ark. He has open dates for February and March, 1906.

—The Christian Woman's Board of Missions is arranging to purchase an additional one-half city block on Isaac Garza and Roble streets, Monterey, Mexico. This will furnish a fine location for the enlargement of the rapidly growing work in Monterey.

—Sidney E. Fisher, of Champaign, Ill., adopted the plan of sending out a circular letter, in view of the stormy Sunday on state mission day, to all who did not participate in the offering. He reports that the idea of a living link has proven popular with his congregation.

—Joseph Gaylor writes that the Dade county, Mo., convention was a very enthusiastic meeting. One hundred and fifty dollars were pledged for county work, and the board was instructed to employ an evangelist. Lawrence county is ready to employ a man, and Newton county has one now in the field.

—We regret to hear from such secretaries as have reported to us that the state mission offerings have been very much below expectations. In many places the weather on state mission day was not favorable to a full attendance. The importance of this offering ought to insure every church's having a part in it, even though it cannot give a large collection.

—A. L. Ferguson sends us an interesting communication from La Junta, Col., where he recently went from Macon, Ill. He finds the brethren there a noble band, with fine opportunities, but he also has found quite a number of Disciples who have not put their letters into the church, some of them living in tents. He would be glad if anybody going there for health's sake would communicate with him. There are nine churches there, and a ministerial alliance has recently been formed. Brother Stivers, who lately relinquished his pastorate, has just closed a very successful meeting at Raton, N. M.

—George Darsie is beginning his ministry for the First Church at Akron, O., with a protracted meeting. He is doing the preaching and is being assisted by Leonard Daugherty. W. E. M. Hackleman had been engaged to lead the music but the prolongation of the meeting with the Broadway Church, Lexington, Ky., has prevented Brother Hackleman from assisting Brother Darsie. This Akron church has a membership of nearly a thousand and a Sunday school attendance of some 600. It supports three foreign missionaries and two home missionaries, and is interested in all our organized work. It has a men's monthly meeting, the membership of this organization being 125. In view of the revival Brother Darsie has published a little leaflet in which our plea is succinctly set forth.

—F. F. Grim, formerly one of the editors of "The Christian Century," has been for the past year in Texas whither he went for his health. He is now located at Leaday, Coleman county, and is engaged in an effort to promote the religious education and social welfare of that neighborhood by adapting the methods of the institutional church and social settlement to a rural community. A Christian settlement is being organized on a large ranch. Brother Grim is to read a paper at the Texas Christian lectureship, and he has chosen for this theme the important subject, "What Shall Be the Place of the Disciples of Christ in the Next Great Awakening?" We feel sure he will give us something to think about.

Cancer of the Breast Cured Ten Years Ago.

West Bridgewater, Mass., Dec. 28, 1895.

Dr. D. M. Bye, Indianapolis, Ind.:

Dear Doctor—It is with a heart of gratitude to you and to the dear Father above that I have the pleasure of informing you of the entire removal of that cancerous growth which had for six years been preying on my system. When I commenced your treatment on June 6th, the hard bunch on my left breast could scarcely be covered by a pint bowl; my body was much bloated, and I could only take liquid or the softest of solid food. On December the 6th, the last of the fungus growth came out, my body has resumed its normal condition, and I can eat anything I wish with relish and pleasure. Our physician says, "It is wonderful!" My neighbors say, "It seems a miracle!" Words can not express my gratitude, but I will, whenever and wherever I may, proclaim the good news. Truly and gratefully yours,

MRS. NANCY F. BILLINGS.

Free books on cancer will be sent to those interested. Address the Home Office. DR. D. M. BYE CO., Drawer 105, Dept. 411, Indianapolis, Ind.

—Claris Yeuell, who has recently taken charge of the work at the Christian Tabernacle, Randall street, Baltimore, reports that the congregation there is threatened with the foreclosure of the mortgage held against the building, and must find help before December 1. The resources of the membership, he says, are exhausted, and he pleads with the brotherhood to come to the rescue.

—B. W. Huntsman, who has been on a visit to Australia, is preparing to return to this country to take up his former work at Adrian, Mich. The church there is being cared for until his arrival by Bro. F. Cook. Brother Huntsman has had a delightful time visiting his relations. It was his privilege to be one of the speakers at the annual convention of the South Australian churches, held in Adelaide.

—Percy G. Cross writes of the work at Hope, Ark., stating that while they are not having a "revival" in the common acceptance of that term, at every meeting those present are there to do God's will; therefore results come. From his description one would suppose that a big protracted meeting was in progress. This, he declares, is due to the fact that "the people are thinking upon eternal life.'

—Earle M. Todd has been called to the church at North Tonawanda, N. Y., and has accepted. This church, from which Bro. W. C. Hull recently resigned, will, we are sure, prove a fine field for a man of Brother Todd's qualities It is spiritual, alive, missionary, expectant, and perfectly harmonious. From what we know of Brother Todd we are sure that the brethren have secured a man of high ideals and good equipment to lead them forward.

Dedications.

Ladonia, Texas.

On November 12, I assisted the brethren at Ladonia, Tex., in the dedication of their new home—a thing of beauty. The cost of the house and furniture was $12,500. The $3,000 debt was all raised. At night, C. M. Schoonover, of Gainesville, preached a fine sermon. The minister, A. C. Parks, is well beloved and doing a great work.

CHALMERS MCPHERSON.

Waxahachie, Tex.

North Platte, Nebraska.

November 12 was a red letter day for the little band of 35 Disciples at North Platte, Neb. Their beautiful house of worship was formally opened and dedicated. A debt of $1,500 was more than provided for. Frequently $15,000 or $20,000 are raised at a dedication service that do not begin to represent the liberality or sacrifice that these brethren made. L. Foreign Society Rallies.

The Foreign Society is arranging for a series of rallies, to be held in the month of December. January and February will be given up to rallies also. The rallies in December will be at the following places:

Indiana: Greencastle, Dec. 4; Bedford, Dec. 5; Vincennes, Dec. 6; Terre Haute, Dec. 19; Crawfordsville, Dec. 20; Columbus, Dec. 21.

Illinois: Centralia, Dec. 7; Du Quoin, Dec. 8.

Tennessee: Memphis, Dec. 11; Paris, Dec. 12; Clarksville, Dec. 13; Nashville, Dec. 14.

Kentucky: Princeton, Dec. 15; Henderson, Dec. 18.

The president of the society and Secretary Corey will attend these rallies. All the churches within reach of these places will be invited to send representatives. All the preachers will be asked to assist. A rally is a national convention in miniature. The exercises may be of as high an order. Those who can not go far from home will have the privilege of attending these rallies at their own doors.

A Bad Day in Kansas.

State mission day was a stormy one. It has now been ten days since the first Sunday and only 22 churches have remitted. Last year 25 remitted during the first two days after state day. The future of our work for the year depends upon this offering. The state board is helpless as matters now stand. The state convention said, "Enlarge the work," and yet it now seems that the churches are saying, by their meager contributions, "Retrench."

We have gone to considerable expense to advertise the "day," and to get the importance of the state work before the brotherhood. We plead with you, brethren, do your duty during November.

Western Washington Organized.

The Western Washington Missionary Society was organized at the convention held in Tacoma October 25, 26. About sixty Disciples from outside the city were present. The following officers were chosen: President, F. Walden, Seattle; first vice-president, W. A. Moore, Tacoma; second vice-president, C. H. Hilton, Ellensburg; third vice-president, A. D. Skaggs, Vancouver; secretary, O. W. McGaughey, Everett; corresponding secretary, R. E. Dunlap, Seattle; treasurer, N. E. Harmon, Chehalis. The next convention is to meet in Seattle in June.

The Home Missionary Society has already appropriated $400 toward the employment of an evangelist, and steps are being taken to employ a strong man to give all his time to this field. W. A. Moore.

Some Recent Comments on "The Holy Spirit."

I have just read the book at one sitting. I have read selections and single chapters from it before. To say that I enjoyed this morning's reading is to put it mildly. It is as fascinating as a romance, and I wish every member of the church would read it. * * * I wish I could have read such a book 25 years ago. It would have saved me from many mistakes. F. N. Calvin.

It will do a good deal toward deepening the spiritual life of the brotherhood. The theme has not been emphasized sufficiently among us, I fear; perhaps, because we preachers thought we did not know enough about it. I think, however, that the vital point in our ministry and in the work of the church is a recognition of the ministry of the Holy Spirit in our individual lives and the work of the kingdom of God. W. A. Fite.

We will do well to place this book among our religious neighbors. * * * No one can fail to recognize the strength of thought, the reverent spirit and the well-balanced judgment that pervades its every page. T. Henry Blenus.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Southwest Missouri Notes.

The recent county convention in Lawrence county, held at Mt. Vernon, will mark a new era for the work in that part of our district. Horace Pearce, of that place, is the president for the coming year.——Joseph Gaylor, the district evangelist, is making the work of county conventions hum. In many counties enough money is being raised to sustain county evangelists.——S. W. Crutcher, the veteran, is doing a good work at Lamar. His hatred of the liquor business is deep grained and will be lifelong.——New pastors in these parts are as follows: W. E. Reavis, Webb City; Brother Sims, Carthage; F. F. Walters, Neosho; George L. Prewitt, Aurora. Welcome, brethren.

J. W. Baker, of South Joplin, has just closed a fine meeting at Duenweg, eight miles east of this city. That church is just a year old, yet they have a fine new building.

The writer was with Bro. D. W. Moore and the South Street Church, Springfield, for 11 days, with 9 added, making 37 additions from the time the union meetings started there some weeks ago. That is a splendid church, and Brother Moore is very much in the hearts of the people. Brother Moore comes with us today for a meeting in this, the First, Joplin. We started with great audiences yesterday, and 11 added. One main object with us this time is the spiritual culture of the hundreds received here the last two years. W. F. TURNER.

Illinois.

The little town of Woodhull, some twenty miles south of Rock Island, was the boyhood home of Oliver W. Stewart, ex-chairman of the national executive committee of the Prohibition party. The place is still pointed out where, my guide said, he used to come over to the lyceum exercises and down their best orators. The Christian Church was ready, at the proper time, to teach him the gospel, and so encourage him as to turn him into the ministry of the gospel and to be the leading advocate of his day in the temperance cause. Every Woodhull citizen seems proud of Oliver. Out from this church, never large or strong, came also the Roach boys. A. C. practically founded the churches at Wyoming and at Kewanee, and has held several successful pastorates in the state. His brother is a Christian business man of Kewanee and greatly aids the church. Mr. Hiller, a lawyer of no small ability, received his early training in this church. F. M. Burgess, whom the C. W. B. M. has recently made principal of the Southern Christian Institute at Edwards, Miss., grew up in the Woodhull church. Bro. T. J. Mansfield, a former trustee of Abingdon College, was the church's leading spirit. Since his removal and the death and removal of several other leaders, there is but little left to continue the very fruitful work of the past.

At Cambridge, also, the cause has been almost destroyed by removals and death. It was here that Bro. Fred E. Hagan, now our missionary in Tokio, Japan, obeyed the gospel. Here, also, Mrs. R. F. Thrapp, the pastor's talented wife, of Jacksonville, Ill., was raised. Both these and those mentioned of Woodhull, were all educated in Eureka College, in whose noble and useful lives the college greatly rejoices.

At Erie, the little church has faithfully labored for half a century. Sister C. C. Babcock has preached here about twelve years at different times. She is very highly respected for her work's sake. The church numbers about fifty members, with as many in the Sunday school, and about twelve in the Endeavor Society. Removals and the shadow of death have somewhat discouraged some of the faithful, but if the right minister can be secured, there is no apparent reason why the church can not be made strong in Erie. The building has been made almost new and modern recently, and nearly all indebtedness is paid.

At Tampico, also in Whiteside county, a church was organized about five years ago. They erected an elegant church, on which is a small indebtedness. There are only about twenty-five members, but they have about fifty in the Sunday school. They are looking for a preacher to labor for them half time at least. They are a most deserving people and a bright future seems to be before them. S. V. Williams, their last minister, did them fine service, and is much loved.

The little church at Fulton has a pleasant little house, and paid for. The church is young, but fairly vigorous, and many are making liberal sacrifices. Victor Johnson, a young and competent minister, of Clinton, Ia., preaches part time at Fulton. The brethren of the First District deserve much credit for planting and fostering the work here and at Tampico and other places in the district.

The work at Savanna was planted through the influence of the same district board. H. E. Monser held a meeting and gathered together some forty souls, who are worshiping in a third-story hall. If the samples I met represent the whole there is a fine nucleus for a good church. A house is the great want, and already attention is given to supply it. Bro. N. H. Robertson is preaching most acceptably to the church, while taking some work in Chicago University. This church now is in that stage of trial and anxiety through which almost all churches have passed.

This is the special mission of the Christian Endeavor Societies of Illinois, and a place in which many will feel a just pride in the years to come. Every society in the state should make a liberal offering to this work. It would not be difficult by planning a little to do it. It is needy, worthy and pleads for the help.

Thomson, for more than five years, has been the home and field of work of C. C. Carpenter. He and his noble little wife have wrought a great change in the spirituality and public enterprise of the church. The house of worship has been thoroughly repaired, a parsonage provided and the membership enlarged. Happy and prosperous are the people who faithfully cooperate with a wise and spiritual leader through a long pastorate.

Coleta organized a church November, 1839, which has ever been steadfast and has enjoyed, through all these years, a quiet, substantial prosperity. It is a country church, in a village of 150 people, but six miles to the railroad, and whose members are nearly all on farms. C. W. Marlow and his devoted wife have been serving the church most acceptably for about four years. Scattered as the 100 members are, they maintain a Sunday school, enrolling about 75, an Endeavor Society of 15 and an enthusiastic C. W. B. M. of 22. Brethren, a few samples like this spoil the apology so often heard that such auxiliaries are impossible in country churches. I think it is still true that "All things are possible to him that believeth." The C. W. B. M. made the pastor's wife a life member last year.

We are glad that Missouri failed to capture M. H. Cannon, of Lincoln.——Northern Illinois is rejoicing in acquiring W. F. Shaw, of Charleston, for the North Side Church, Chicago.——The marriage of B. H. Sealock to Miss Irene Ridgely, of Eureka, puts a full team in the work at Polo.——We are sorry to lose A. L. Ferguson from our state.——R. E. Thomas, an excellent minister, can be secured by some church wanting a minister; address Tuscola.——M. D. Sharpless, of Blandinsville, is also thinking of change.——A splendid class of young preachers is in Eureka College this fall. Churches in reach can get excellent service. J. G. WAGGONER.

Eureka, Ill.

Southern California.

H. Elliott Ward has been employed by the Highland Park Church to labor for a time. This is where his untiring services have been rewarded in the institution of a new congregation and the building of a house of worship.

F. M. Dowling has secured an orange ranch at Covina, and located there. The Ontario Church has induced him to act as their minister. The result is the congregation is already anxious for a larger house. Brother Dowling's health continues to improve.

The church at Pasadena continues to be ably served by Sumner T. Martin. Recently he took time to enter Northern California, and hold a meeting at Napa, with good results.

Clark H. Marsh, of Illinois, has come to California to take work as a minister. He has supplied a number of pulpits, and will locate as pastor at Monrovia. The church at Monrovia is getting things in shape for a forward movement. They are just completing a very neat chapel, which will be dedicated some time in November.

A. K. Wright resigned some time ago, his work at Monrovia, and has been supplying pulpits under the direction of the evangelizing board. He is at present supplying at Bakersfield.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS, 37Y East 18th St., New York

[illegible] at San Bernardino. Their church has again been enlarged and in part newly furnished, and they are looking forward to a great meeting with Scoville and Smith in January. The Christian church in San Bernardino is the strongest congregation in the county. A new work is developing under Brother Wilhite at Rialto.

The church at Santa Paula has engaged J. P. Ralston as pastor. He and his wife have been enjoying a vacation in their old home in the mountains of Colorado.

A good man has recently gone home to his heavenly reward—Bro. A. H. Thomas, of Santa Ana, who, in the very truest sense has for years been a faithful elder in the Church of God, and who was also a member of the State Board of Evangelization.

Evangelist DeForest Austin and his singer, McVey, are expected in Southern California to conduct an evangelistic campaign under our sunny skies. They have a fine, large, new tent, and will be able to use it effectively in this splendid climate. Those desiring to use them may communicate with the secretary.

R. P. Shephard is president of the County Sunday School Union in Los Angeles county, and enjoys the reputation of being a well-informed Sunday school man, and also has the unique distinction of being called in from Pomona once a week to conduct a Sunday school teachers' union meeting, which is largely attended.

Singer J. Walter Wilson has decided to spend another season on the coast, and is ready to serve any church in his capacity as song leader for gospel meetings. His presence another year with us will continue to please our churches.

Clark H. Marsh has been assisting Carl L. Green in a meeting at Azusa.

The ministering of R. H. Bateman at Whittier continues to be greatly blessed. The congregation is growing and the church has been enlarged to nearly double its former seating capacity. It has also been refurnished. C. C. Chapman, of Fullerton, was master of ceremonies at the dedication.

J. F. Tout, of Ventura, has gone to the new country at Imperial, where he has assumed charge of the church.

J. R. Jolly, of Artesia, has been assisting the Hollywood church in a meeting. These special meetings have been under the direction of the young people of the congregation. Splendid results accompanied this work.

There are opportunities for good pastors to locate in Southern California just now. A number of pulpits are being temporarily supplied by Sunday preaching. These places can pay about $700 a year. This is only a modest living for a preacher and his wife. The secretary would be glad to correspond with any who may care to consider these fields. In writing please enclose stamp and credentials. Grant K. Lewis, Secretary.

Kentucky Bible School Notes.

Rally Day for Home Missions: that is all that we know this month. We are endeavoring to reach every school in the state with a personal letter, bringing the workers into direct contact with each other concerning the mighty claims of this day.

Undoubtedly this is to be the largest observance of Rally Day that Kentucky has ever seen. We are expecting fully $2,000 on this day. All schools, strong and weak alike, are realizing that strength and inspiration come from caring for home missions. Many schools that can not give the full exercise, will at least take an offering, an intelligent offering, we call it.

Again, let us remind you that the offering must be sent promptly to Bro. B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. building, Cincinnati, O. He will return half of it to us, and this half will count on your apportionment for state Bible school work.

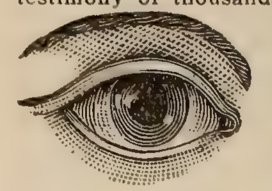
North Carolina State Convention.

The convention of the North Carolina Christian Missionary Society met with the church at Lagrange, October 24-26. It was my first meeting with the brethren of the "Tar Heel" state, and I found them very cordial. The first day was C. W. B. M. day. About twenty auxiliaries were reported. The officers are: Mrs. J. B. Jones, president; Miss Kate Barnes, corresponding secretary; Mrs. H. Edmondson, recording secretary; Mrs. Calvin Woodward, treasurer, and three vice-presidents. Miss Alice Hines is state superintendent of the Young People's Department.

The president stated that reports of the year's work were very encouraging. Mrs. P. B. Hall read a paper on "The Universal Christ," and Mrs. H. H. Moore gave an address on "Mission Work Among Women." Mrs. Travis Hooker rendered some sweet solos, and Sister Ida Harrison, of Kentucky, gave at night an excellent address.

At night the convention moved to the Baptist meeting house, which is much larger than that of the Christian congregation, and the next day we moved to that house for the rest of the convention. This courtesy of the Baptist brethren was much appreciated.



Eye Glasses Not Necessary

Eye Sight can be Strengthened, and all forms of Diseased Eyes Cured without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in the great majority of cases, has been proven beyond a doubt, by the testimony of thousands of people who have been cured by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." Actina also cures sore and granulated lids, Glaucoma, Iritis, etc., also removes Cataracts and Pterygiums without cutting or drugging. Over seventy thousand of the Actinas have been sold, therefore it is not an experiment but an absolute fact. The following letters are but samples of those that are received daily:

Mrs. M. E. Champney, 242 West 135th St., New York City, writes: The "Actina" cured me of Iritis, after the doctors said there was no cure outside an operation. I have been entirely well for over four months, can see to read and sew as well as before. I can honestly recommend "Actina" for all afflictions of the eye.

Emily Kapp, 1920 Galena Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, writes: The "Actina" I purchased from you a year ago saved my brother's eyesight. My brother was near-sighted, wore number five and six glasses, and now he can go to school and do all his work and study without glasses.

E. R. Holdbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "Actina" has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office.

Actina is not a drug or lotion, but a small pocket battery, which can be used by old and young with perfect safety, as it is impossible to do any harm with Actina. Every member of a family can use the one Actina for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, or Throat, or Head. Actina will last for years, and is always ready for use. Actina is sent on trial postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the New York & London Electric Association, Dept. 203 N, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely FREE a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General, and you can rest assured that your eyes can be cured, no matter how many doctors have failed.

At the opening session of the North Carolina Christian Missionary Society, D. H. Petrie, minister at Lagrange, welcomed us. H. H. Moore, of Greenville, responded. E. A. Moye gave his address as president, and P. B. Hall, of Kinston, gave a thoughtful, well-prepared paper on "The Holy Spirit," which awakened an interesting discussion. He indicated three periods in the progress of the restoration movement. The first established doctrine; the second saved us from narrowness by organized missionary work; we are in the third, the emphasizing of the importance of the working and influence of the Holy Spirit.

I gave the address for the A. C. M. S. on "A Great Work," and in the afternoon A. B. Cunningham, of Washington, N. C., gave a strong paper on "The Model Church." He said: "It does not exist. While it is the aim of Disciples to restore the primitive church, they have failed in many respects. They have the only creed above criticism. The gospel alone must be our foundation."

Howard T. Cree gave an address on "Church Extension," making a strong plea for the sermon. At night, H. B. Atkins, of Richmond, Va., gave the address on "Foreign Missions." Thursday was largely given over to business. The corresponding secretary, J. B. Jones, made his report. Special effort was concentrated on Rocky Mount and Macclesfield, where new congregations were organized. About 1,000 members were added in all the state, and about $1,200 were raised for state work. R. A. Smith has been state evangelist.

Atlantic Christian College had a session. On motion of Pres. J. J. Harper, of the college, the trustees of the institution were authorized to issue bonds for a sum not exceeding $200,000, and the name was changed to Atlantic Christian College, Incorporated.

A. B. Cunningham made the address at night on "Christian Benevolence." The convention goes next year to Dunn. The officers, who were re-elected, are: E. A. Moye, president; C. W. Howard, vice-president; J. B. Jones, Wilson, N. C., corresponding secretary; L. O. Moseby, recording secretary, and H. E. Moseby, treasurer. The convention was a good one, and Brother Jones writes me they will do a large work this year. Most of the churches are in the eastern part of the state.

A district convention, planned to be held here October 27, 28, was not formally called to order, on account of lack of delegates, though some sessions were held, and the secretary, Brother Woolf, of Rural Hall, reported the churches in this section, and there are about eighteen. We hope to stir up this end of the state. About one hundred have been added at Spray by B. T. Bitting and J. R. Glenn. We can not secure Brother Yeuell for our meeting until May, 1906. We expect to have a short meeting this month. Four have been added here by letter in October, five, including the preacher, who brought his letter. We took an offering for church extension in September, and for state missions in October. The Sunday school will observe Boys' and Girls' Rally Day for America, as every live Sunday school should.

Lagrange is in a cotton section. A new sight to me was a mule, a cart, a bale of cotton, and a negro perched on it.

Well, the people here believe they have a great state. The president, on his tour, told us so. We believe it is so. We want to make it better. J. A. Hopkins.

Missouri State Mission Notes.

One of the darkest days in the history of Missouri missions was the first Lord's day in this month. We had been preparing for that day for four months; for two months the labor of preparation had been incessant. Then came that awful day, with its rain and storm and mud.

However, the gleams of light are coming from every part of the state. The faithful ministers are sending us word that they will take the offering at the first good day; some have already done so, and the reports, where the conditions were at all favorable, are very fine. It is such as these faithful ones that make successful mission work a possibility. We hope that every preacher in the state will remember that no other collection has the right of way until this one has been attended to.

Your secretary is confined for a few days with an attack of malarial fever. It is hard to be submissive and keep still just when the work needs us most.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

Mrs. Q. T. Hall, manager of First district, reports a new auxiliary of 30 members at Granville. The officers are Mrs. Rebecca Austin, Mrs. W. T. Gilmore, Mrs. James Evans and Mrs. Ed. Delaney.

Mrs. J. L. Moore reports new auxiliaries at Clark; officers, Miss Sallie Robertson, Mrs. George Hulen and Miss Dora Mare; also at Cairo; officers, Miss Etta Richmond, Miss Sophia Boucher, and Mrs. O. A. Wright. Both of these are in Randolph county. She organized, also, an auxiliary at Brunswick; officers, Mrs. Lou Plunkett, Mrs. Ella Merrill, Mrs. Alameda Williamson, and Mrs. George W. Cunningham.

A young ladies' mission circle has been organized at Memphis, with eight members; officers, Miss Mary Davis, Miss Myra Guinn, Miss Nellie Struble and Miss Dallie Pulliam.

We are happy to welcome all these into our state family of workers and pray that we may help them as much as they will help us.

Are you preparing for C. W. B. M. day? The exercises sent out by the national secretary are splendid. Send for envelopes to receive the offering. The pictorial sketch is very good and will arrest the attention of many. The membership cards will probably find members who hesitate to speak when the appeal for new members is made. Make December 3 a great day.

Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Washington, Pa., Nov. 20.—A great meeting at the First Church; immense audiences; eighty-five additions in the three weeks. We continue; O. P. Spiegel, Birmingham, Ala., evangelist.—E. A. Cole, pastor.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Charleroi, Pa., Nov 20.—Sixty-three additions in the meeting with Clarence Mitchell—46 baptisms; 22 in the last two days. This is the largest number of additions in any one meeting ever secured by any church in the town.—H. G. Connell, minister.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 19.—At the First Christian Church, Allegheny, twenty-two added today. We crossed the two hundred mark. We continue. Chas. R. Scoville is the evangelist. We look for a great victory.—Wallace Tharp.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

New Castle, Pa., Nov. 20.—Crayton S. Brooks and De Loss Smith are preaching and singing to packed houses and hundreds are turned away. Ten added Sunday, 13 Saturday night; total, 92. Close next Sunday.—W. L. Fisher.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Canton, O., Nov. 19.—Twenty additions today; five hundred and twenty-six to date. We are continuing; there are great crowds.—Welshimer and Kendall.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Lexington, Ky., Nov. 20.—Eighteen yesterday; 226 in twenty-nine days. Good work has been done by professors and students of the Bible College. Mark Collis has the church aroused to soul-winning. Bishop Burton is doing all he can to keep Episcopalians from baptism. In three hours of discussion with the evangelists in private, however, he admitted that there were no Scriptural examples or precepts for infant baptism. Continuing.—James Small.

ALABAMA.

Mobile, Nov. 13.—One accession by confession on Nov. 5; 2 by confession and 2 by letter on Nov. 12.—James H. Robinson.

ARKANSAS.

Hope, Nov. 13.—The Wednesday night meeting was a blessed one. Sixty present. Five additions—4 confessions (one from the Methodists), one reclaimed. Four confessions yesterday. Much interest aroused.—Percy G. Cross.

COLORADO.

Pueblo, Nov. 16.—One baptism last night, and 1 confession; will baptize again next Sunday.—J. A. Shoptaugh.

ILLINOIS.

Pekin, Nov. 13.—A three and a half weeks' meeting with the Bethel Church, near Emden, Ill., closed Nov. 1, with 3 additions, by baptism and otherwise. Two baptisms at Pekin recently, not reported.—J. A. Barnett.

Carbondale.—A meeting is in progress with the "Martin family" in charge. Thirty-five have already been added. The university, the high school and the Y. M. C. A. have each given the Martin family special invitations and great crowds. A. M. Growden is happy over the present and prospective gain.

Farmer City, Nov. 7.—Two confessions last Lord's day, making 5 since last report. Two by letter, one reclaimed.—A. Immanuel Zeller.

Clinton, Nov. 16.—Meeting two weeks old; 10 additions. E. A. Gilliland, minister, H. K. Shields, singing evangelist.—Edw. Allyn.

Mt. Auburn, Nov. 16.—My next meeting will be at Oswego, Kan. I begin there Dec. 3. My time is all taken till Feb 1, 1906.—V. E. Ridenour, singer.

Sterling, Nov. 13.—Two additions yesterday—one by statement, one from the Congregationalists.—J. W. Johnson.

New Douglas, Nov. 17.—Closed a short meeting, with 3 confessions.—C. Monroe.

Ludlow, Nov. 16.—One confession and baptism since last report. Our offering for state missions was $11; last year it was only $1.—Lew D. Hill, minister.

Springerton, Nov. 19.—Meeting 12 days old; 10 baptisms; great interest, good congregation. Increased offering for state missions.—W. S. Mesnard.

INDIANA.

Warsaw, Nov. 13.—Two added by letter yesterday.—Marshall G. Long, minister.

Portland, Nov. 14.—We began a meeting with home forces Nov. 12; 8 additions; fine interest, and audiences increasing each evening.—C. H. Trout.

Plainfield, Nov. 17.—Closed a short meeting here, resulting in 9 additions, 8 being confessions.—I. N. Grisso.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Tulsa, Nov. 13.—One addition at prayer meeting last week, and 2 more yesterday.—Randolph Cook.

IOWA.

Fairfield, Nov. 13.—Meetings opened Sunday. Sixteen additions during the day. Deep interest. House crowded. Hamilton and Easton evangelists.—H. C. Littleton, pastor.

Iowa City, Nov. 16.—We have had 5 additions recently; students in the university.—Percy Leach.

Marshalltown.—The church of Christ at Marshalltown has closed one of the greatest meetings of its history, resulting in 17 additions—9 by obedience and 8 by letter or statement. E. Van Horn served as evangelist. The number of accessions by no means registers the power and effect of the work. Our membership has been aroused to greater effort, and we are expecting great after-results from the meeting.—C. B. Van Law, chairman church board.

Des Moines, Nov 11.—At Grant Park Church during September one addition from the Methodists. On the first Sunday in October we began a successful meeting with J. M. Hoffman as evangelist. There were eleven additions—three from the M. E.'s, one from the Christian Connection, one by statement and the remainder by confession and baptism. Over six hundred dollars was raised during the meeting for seating and improvements. We had nearly one hundred dollars on hand in the bank. The C. E. society had undertaken to put in the furnace. This they have already let the contract for and work will be begun on it at once. The contract for the seats was let this week. We feel greatly encouraged with the work. When I took the work there one year ago the first of last February, Grant Park was a mission church. The following September it assumed all its financial obligations, and on the first anniversary of our ministry it was cleared of all indebtedness. All this notwithstanding I, as the minister, have been carrying full work as a student in Drake University since before beginning the work there. Bro. B. R. Astley, one of our members, recently started a Sunday school at Avon, a little town about four miles south of the city, conducting it in the afternoon. Later he began to try to preach to them each alternate Sunday night. The people soon began to confess Christ. The interest grew into a meeting and his last report was twenty-one baptized, three reclaimed and more confessions. We have no church at this place. His meeting continues. This meeting promises to build up a church and develop a preacher.—R. Tibbs Maxey, minister.

KANSAS.

Carneiro, Nov. 13.—We commenced our revival yesterday; good interest.—Geo. M. Reed, evangelist.

North Topeka, Nov. 14.—Two accessions by statement. All lines of work have taken on new life since our meeting. The attendance at all the services has increased very perceptibly.—F. H. Bentley, pastor.

Moundridge, Nov. 13.—Three additions at Burrton yesterday.—Otto Shirley.

Cherryvale, Nov. 13.—There were 8 accessions at Arkansas City. C. A. Shive is the much loved pastor. I am now in a meeting at Cherryvale.—J. M. Lowe.

Pleasanton, Nov. 17.—I began a meeting with R. A. Odenweller, pastor, Nov. 11; 9 added to date. All departments of the work are in fine condition. The meeting continues.—O. A. Ishmael.

Kansas City, Nov. 13.—Yesterday was another great day with the North Side Church. Our pastor, Bro. C. P. Smith, preached, and there were 10 valuable accessions to the church—Methodists, Presbyterians and Episcopalians each contributed 1; 5 were received by statement; 1 was reclaimed, and 1, a man of fifty years, made the good confession, making a total of 25 since our meeting opened two weeks ago. The majority of these are men and women, heads of families, who will be of great strength to the church. L. L. Carpenter, who has been assisting in the meeting, and who was called to western Nebraska to dedicate a house of worship, returned today, and will preach each evening during the present week.—J. T. M.

Winfield.—The Northcutt-Bentley meeting of 27 days has closed. It was the greatest meeting the church has experienced in years. Fourteen months were spent in planning and preparing for it. Ninety-seven were added—51 being by confession and baptism, 23 restored, 12 by letter, 7 from Methodist Episcopal, 4 from Baptist churches. The Winfield church is in better shape than for many years, and a new house of worship is a possibility in the next year or two.—Albert Nichols.

Burlington, Nov. 16.—I have just closed a short meeting with W. I. Thomas. There were 6 additions, 5 being by primary obedience. The church has changed preachers too often here, and as a consequence it is not in the best condition. Brother Thomas has been here but a short time, but is already accomplishing much. I sing at Vinton, Ia., beginning Nov. 26.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

KENTUCKY.

Latonia.—Sixteen additions in first four days of our meeting.—H. C. Runyan.

Elmville, Nov. 13.—The 2 weeks' meeting at Oakland Church closed last night with 19 additions—12 by baptism, 4 reclaimed and 3 from the Baptists. Our pastor, H. B. Gwinn did the preaching. Brother Gwinn's wife conducted the song service. This meeting has greatly benefited the church.—S. O. Wigginton.

Clintonville.—E. J. Willis, Carlisle, assisted in a two weeks' meeting; excellent influences; 2 reclaimed.—E. J. Fenstermacher.

MISSOURI.

Windsor, Nov. 13.—Four additions yesterday.—W. A. Fife.

Kansas City, Nov. 14.—Brother McLellan and I are in a good meeting at the First Church, with Brother Richardson; 48 added to date.—L. D. Sprague..

Verona, Nov. 15.—We began a meeting a few days ago. One addition to date.—J. P. Haner.

Higdon, Nov. 13.—One addition at White Water yesterday.—I. B. Dodson.

Kansas City, Nov. 14.—We closed a three weeks' meeting at the Forrest Avenue Church on Sunday evening, with 21 additions—11 by confession, 8 by letter, 1 from the Congregationalists and 1 from the Methodists. Our meeting was held by home forces and resulted in great good to the church. We raised $800 at our Sunday morning service, to be applied on the church debt. The brethren are encouraged, and the church seems to be entering on a new era of growth and prosperity.—H. M. Barnett.

Kansas City, Nov. 14.—In our city campaign for Christ I held a three weeks' meeting with home forces at Budd Park Church. Closed Nov. 12 with 24 additions. Have had 29 in all since taking the work here, Sept. 1.—B. L. Wray, pastor.

Sturgis, Nov. 15.—J. D. Greer, of Laddonia, is with me in a good meeting; 10 confessions in 8 days.—W. D. McCulley. pastor.

Grant City, Nov. 13.—One confession and two baptized last night. Raised three times as much for Missouri missions as in preceding years.—W. L. Harris, minister.

St. Louis, Nov. 16.—Recent brief meeting, S. R. Maxwel, city evangelist, preaching. Eleven additions—7 by baptism, 4 by statement. Five additions since the meeting—2 by baptism, 3 by statement.—G. E. Ireland.

Carrollton, Nov. 15.—We closed a meeting at Milan, Nov. 12. Seven added—5 by confession, 1 reclaimed and 1 by letter. J. W. Jennings led the song service. We are now in a meeting at Linneus. Miss Lula Gilliland is leading our song service. We hope for a good meeting.—J. J. Limerick.

Gallatin, Nov. 16.—R. A. Omer and G. A. Butler have been in a meeting 11 days, with 19 additions. Great audiences. We continue.—C. W. Comstock.

Buffalo, Nov. 13.—Our work is moving along well in our new field. We have the building of a parsonage on hand which will soon be completed. We have organized a prayer meeting and ladies' aid society, both of which are doing a good work.—J. Q. Biggs.

Holden, Nov. 15.—W. A. Fite, of Windsor, assisted me in a meeting. We closed Nov. 12 with 15 added, 11 by confession. The weather was unfavorable.—Geo. E. Dew.

Joplin, Nov. 16.—I began a meeting at Duenweg (an agricultural and mining town six miles east of here) Oct. 23, preached over two Lord's days, closing Nov. 10. Weather was very bad. Had 30 additions—18 confessions, 4 from the denominations, and 8 reclaimed. This church is only one year old; it has an excellent new house of worship worth $2,000 and a splendid working congregation of 109 members. At the close of the meeting we burned every obligation against the property except a $500 note to Church Extension, which is fully provided for and will all be paid within a year. Simpson Ely will preach for them half time next year.—J. W. Baker.

Brunswick, Nov. 18.—We have been in a meeting at Orrick, assisted by W. J. De Lane, which resulted in 24 additions—23 confessions, 1 by statement. I preach at Orrick one Sunday each month.—E. G. Merrill.

West Plains, Nov. 16.—Meeting closed Nov. 15—2 by confession 2 by letter. Five last report—4 baptisms, 1 from the Baptists, 4 by statement. Two household baptisms. L. Z. Burr is leading the forces onward to greater things.—B. E. Youtz, evangelist.

New London, Nov. 17.—I closed a two weeks' meeting at Mt. Zion Nov. 14 with 10 additions—9 baptisms and 1 by letter. C. A. Baird is pastor.—E. M. Richmond.

Barry, Nov. 17.—I am in a meeting with Robert C. Davis, of Kansas City. The meeting is 12 days old with 10 confessions. We continue. My next meeting will be with J. D. Greer, at Laddonia.—Simpson Ely.

Poplar Bluff.—I spent Nov. 12 with the congregation. Two added.—E. J. Fenstermacher.

Mexico, Nov. 17.—Twenty days; 50 added. Meeting continues. Kokendoffer minister and Fenstermacher evangelist.

Dayton, Nov. 15.—I closed a meeting of eight days tonight with 18 additions, 9 by baptism.—R. A. Thompson.

Chillicothe, Nov. 13.—Our meeting closed last night. Brother Wagner, pastor at Shelbyville, led our singing. We had seventeen additions. The attendance was uniformly large, but the large ingathering of last May caused us not to expect many additions this time. The church is at peace and at work.—James Norvel Crutcher.

Gallatin, Nov. 16.—I am now in the second week of meeting; 20 additions to date. C. M. Comstock is the minister. Church is in fine working order.—Omer and Butler, evangelists.

NEBRASKA.

Clay Center, Nov. 14.—I closed my meeting at Aurora, where Bro. E. von Forell ministers, Nov. 12, with 34 additions; 12 last day. Nearly all these were adults. Brother Forell came to Aurora five years ago and found a discouraged band of 55 members, and has labored and sacrificed, until today there is a membership of over 200 active Christians.—A. G. Smith.

OHIO.

Akron, Nov. 13.—Revival services began yesterday at the First Church. There were 9 additions—6 by confession and 3 by letter. The outlook is favorable. Geo. Darsie will do the preaching and Leonard Daugherty will have charge of the music.—William Spanton.

Athens, Nov. 13.—During October, 15 were added to the church. There were 326 present at the Sunday school rally yesterday and $22.26 collection. Professor Trendley and Miss Faris, both of the college faculty, are most helpful in the work. Miss Faris is superintendent of the primary department and had 126 present. We began our revival Sunday, with large audiences. —T. L. Lowe, minister.

Orrville, Nov. 17.—Closed a meeting at Blachleyville, Nov. 16, with 13 confessions. —A. E. Meyer, evangelist.

NEHEMIAH REBUILDS THE WALLS OF JERUSALEM.—Neh. 4:7-20.

We have already had the story of Nehemiah, at the Persian court, mourning over the disgrace and reproach which still lay upon Jerusalem in spite of the partial return from the captivity and the rebuilding of the temple; of his prayer of confession for his own sins and those of his people, that the cause of Israel's low estate might be removed; and of his petition to the king of Persia, whose cupbearer he was, that he might be allowed to lead an expedition with the avowed purpose of rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem. A few years before, a king of Persia had apparently feared that even the rebuilding of the temple might be a preparation for revolt, but now the reconstruction of even the wall and the stronghold is permitted and assisted (Neh. 2:8).

Nehemiah set out on his journey, in the year 445 B. C., with letters of introduction and commendation from the king and with a military escort. Either Nehemiah had not shared Ezra's shame in asking for an escort (compare Ezra 8:22), or the troops had been furnished without request. The city was duly reached. Conditions were found to be quite as bad as they had been represented. A tour of inspection made by night around the walls and battlements of the city, showed the utter helplessness of the place. The walls were fallen, the gates burned, the ways choked with debris. Nehemiah did not at once reveal his commission. When he had formed his own plans for the reconstruction, he laid the whole matter before the chief men, told them of his mission, that he was God-guided and king-sent to roll away the reproach of Jerusalem by rebuilding her walls, and called on them to support him in the work.

The response of the good people of Jerusalem in furtherance of the plan was not more prompt than the response of certain jealous and mischief-making fellows in opposition to it. Chief of them was Sanballat, the Horonite, of evil fame, whose name has passed into a synonym of meddlesome and malicious obstruction of good works. The work was thoroughly planned and each family or class was made responsible for a certain part of it. The apportionment is given in chapter 3.

The story of the building of the wall is a story of the overcoming of various sorts of opposition. There was first the opposition of mockery and contempt (2:19; 4:2, 3). Then the opposition of secret and of open violence and the threat of violence (4:7, 8). Then the opposition of treacherous and simulated friendship (6:2). Then the opposition of scandal and evil reports (6:10-13).

The faithfulness of the people in spite of these difficulties and their watchfulness against the enemy while carrying on the work are the chief themes of the lesson. There was the weapon in one hand and the tool in the other. There was industry and war. There was trust in God's protecting power and a keen readiness to protect self so far as possible. "We made our prayer to God and set a watch against them day and night"—an excellent text for a sermon or an exhortation on prayer and watchfulness. It suggests the wise and pious maxim: "Trust in God and keep your powder dry."

And so, by faith and work and watching, the wall was built. It was finished in fifty-two days (6:15). The reproach of Jerusalem in the eyes of its pagan or half-pagan neighbors was removed. The special work for which Nehemiah had come was done. It remained to bring about a further restoration, and for that Ezra again comes into the foreground.

Midweek Prayer Meeting.

THE GRACE OF RECEIVING.—Luke 17:12-19.

1. The Conscious Need. These ten men felt keenly their condition as lepers. They were outcasts from human society, shunned by their own families, and regarded as the objects of divine anger. Their malady was looked upon as incurable, unless by the direct act of God (2 Kings 5:7). They could not deceive themselves as to their condition, as do thousands of the victims of sin, whose spiritual uncleanness seems to them a matter of indifference. We need to thunder into the ears of the lost the words of the Holy Spirit. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die!" To make men realize their need of salvation is the first step in evangelism; and when they are ready to cry out, "What must we do to be saved?" it will be a simple thing to direct them in the way of life. See Acts 2:36-41.

2. The Earnest Prayer. "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us!" Doubtless these lepers had heard the story of the Savior's wonderful works, in healing those who came to him for help; and they were now emboldened to bring their wretched bodies to him, that he might give them relief. They make no plea of their own desert, but cast themselves upon his mercy. So may the sinner throw himself upon the love and compassion of the Lord Jesus Christ, who was known on earth as the friend of sinners. No plea of moral excellence will avail, for all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God (Rom. 3:9-12, 23). The gospel is for sinners, and our very need becomes an appeal to the heart of the Savior (Luke 5:30-32).

3. The Gracious Answer. "Go, shew yourselves unto the priests," said the Savior. They might have stopped to cavil at his words, for no leper was fit to present himself before the sanctuary until he was healed, and then he was to bring an offering and subject himself to the examination of the priest, and, after certain ceremonies of purification, be declared clean, and restored fully to the privileges of home and society (Lev. 14). Why should they start for the priest's inspection while the leprosy was still in their flesh? Could walking to Jerusalem cure them? So do men often stumble at the words of Jesus and his apostles, and hesitate to be baptized, because they can not see how that can bring them the salvation they seek. Yet his promise is specific, that the penitent believer shall find pardon in this act of obedience (Mark 16:15, 16; Acts 2:38; Acts 22:16). Naaman found it worth while to obey the command of the Lord, given through his prophet, and every soul that has taken Jesus at his word, and obeyed his command to be baptized, has gone on his way rejoicing.

4. The One Grateful Heart. The ten lepers obeyed the command of Jesus, and as they went on their way they were healed. But only one of them, and he a Samaritan, felt deeply enough his obligation to Jesus to turn back and thank him before pursuing his journey to Jerusalem. The great fact of his healing was accomplished by the word of Christ, and the formal showing of himself to the priest, for the ceremonies that would admit him again to the society of men, could well wait till he had poured out his heart to his deliverer. The other nine were so intent upon securing the coveted results of their healing in the legal certificate of the priest, that they hastened on, careless of thanking their deliverer. Are there not many who, in these days, are content with church membership, and the complacent satisfaction of knowing that they are enrolled upon its records and who rarely thank the Lord Jesus for his mercy and love that have secured their pardon, and his precious blood, that has washed their sins away? Salvation is to them a matter of security from evils which they have come to fear, rather than a craving of that full and wholesome life which the redeemed may share with the Son of God. When we realize the fullness of the divine purpose, to give us such abundant life as to make us partakers of the divine nature, then will we seek that close approach to the Lord Jesus Christ that will enable him to impart his blessed life to us. Only so can we learn truly the grace of receiving.

LET YOUR STOMACH HAVE ITS OWN WAY.

Do Not Try to Drive and Force it to Work When it is Not Able or You Will Suffer All The More.

You can not treat your stomach as some men treat a balky horse; force, drive or even starve it into doing work at which it rebels. The stomach is a patient and faithful servant, and will stand much abuse and ill-treatment before it "balks," but when it does, you had better go slow with it, and not attempt to make it work. Some people have the mistaken idea that they can make their stomachs work by starving themselves. They might cure the stomach that way, but it would take so long that they would have no use for a stomach when they got through. The sensible way out of the difficulty is to let the stomach rest if it wants to and employ a substitute to do its work.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will do the work of your stomach for you and digest your food just as your stomach used to when it was well. You can prove this by putting your food in a glass jar with one of the tablets and sufficient water, and you will see the food digested in just the same time as the digestive fluids of the stomach would do it. That will satisfy your mind. Now, to satisfy both your mind and body take one of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after eating—eat all and what you want—and you will feel in your mind that your food is being digested because you will feel no disturbance or weight in your stomach; in fact, you will forget all about having a stomach, just as you did when you were a healthy boy or girl.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets act in a natural way, because they contain only the natural elements of the gastric juices and other digestive fluids of the stomach. It makes no difference what condition the stomach is in, they go right ahead of their own accord and do their work. They know their business and surrounding conditions do not influence them in the least. They thus relieve the weak stomach of all its burdens and give it its much-needed rest and permit it to become strong and healthy.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50 cents a box. They are so well known and their popularity is so great that a druggist would as soon think of being out of alcohol or quinine as of them. In fact, physicians are prescribing them all over the land, and if your own doctor is real honest with you, he will tell you frankly that there is nothing on earth so good for dyspepsia as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Christian Endeavor.

By H. A. Denton.

December 3, 1905.

OUR ONE EXCUSE.—Rom. 14:1-12.

For the Leader.

This meeting might be called a pledge meeting. The thought is the keeping of the pledge, with the emphasis upon the one excuse, or, as it is better given in the pledge, "reason," if we do not do all the things promised in the pledge. This is the time for the consecration meeting. We, then, could not have a better topic for a consecration meeting than one that considers our solemn promise to walk before the Lord in an active Christian service. We are also judged by our fellows for the degree of faithfulness we show in keeping this promise. Sometimes this judgment is very harsh. That is, the judgment we pass upon others. Where could be found a more appropriate place for such a consideration as this than an Endeavor meeting? Then, there are two sides to this matter of passing judgment: We pass upon our fellows, but, in turn, they pass upon us. It might be well when we are passing upon some one else to stop long enough to think that some one else is passing upon us. It will at least incline us toward more charity.

For the Members.

1. It is a good rule to adopt—that one with which we are all familiar—that all the promises and commands of God are conditional. This holds good as a general rule. If our pledge had no conditions, it might be charged that it was not according to the divine plan, that it was contrary to our natures and abilities. It would make us promise without any condition to do many definite things without a single slip or omission. For even the gospel plan provides for mistakes, for slips, for occasional falling in the weakness of the flesh, in the instruction of Jesus to pray the Father in his name, and in the statement that we have in him an advocate with the Father. For what? To intercede for us when we go wrong.

2. Now the Endeavor pledge has one condition for us: "Unless hindered by some reason I can conscientiously give to my Lord and Master." This is all the condition. Is it enough? It would seem so, for a reason that one would be willing to take before the Savior must be sufficient to gain our consent. It is a proof of sincerity, if one who is trying to live a Christian life would say from his heart, "I am willing to take this before my Lord and Master." This is enough. Is it too much? There are those who seem to think the pledge exacts too much. They say it can not be kept, or that it is so close that it is not likely to be kept. To say this is to confuse one's ideal with the weakness of the flesh of the one who is trying to live up to it. When we cut garments we allow for the seams. If an ideal is something to be attained, it must be higher than the one adopting it. Else what point would there be to using it at all? Our excuse is not too much.

3. The one reason one can have, then, in the Endeavor Society for not taking part, or for not complying, upon some particular occasion, with some detail of the pledge, is to be one we could give to Jesus. That is the statement that takes the measure of the spiritual height of Christian Endeavor. It makes Jesus the model. It makes him the ideal. Could it do less and free itself from the criticism that it was not really a Christian Endeavor Society? If it were satisfied with less than Jesus as a model, then it would be less than a Christian endeavor that the society was making. Anything less is too little; anything more is too much. If we trust in Jesus, we must make him our model. If we take upon us his name, we must put him on in the fullness of his life. It is not a question whether we will be able at all times to keep the letter of this promise. But it is a question whether we are going to try. If I undertake less, my heart is divided. I am not, therefore, a consistent follower of Jesus. I must fail. If I undertake to follow him fully, and fail, he will forgive me, and will help me, and the true fellow Endeavorer will help me to get up and to do better the next time.

4. The one business of a Christian Endeavorer is to look well to his own ways. My time will be pretty well taken up if I give my attention to seeing that my ways are directed in all things by him. What sort of life am I in when I turn myself into a sentinel for God! Does he need my services? Can he not get on in the world without my criticisms of his children? Surely he can. The great thing for me to consider is with respect to my own steps. If I consider at all my brother's efforts at keeping his pledge, it must be in some official capacity in the society. When I do this, it will be as a member of the lookout committee, or as one of the prayer meeting committee. It will not be done as a critic. But it will be done as a tender ministry. The love of Jesus will be in my heart. It will be quite a different thing when I go about it in this way. Instead of being resented, it will be welcomed. Why should there ever be any question as to this? We can not be judges of one another. We are compassed about by limitations. We can not, or at least we do not, know for what reason one of our society should fail in some particular, and hence we can not become harsh judges. But let us be careful that we do not take up quarters behind this, and thus try to excuse a life that really does not aim at the highest.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Have I tried to so live in my society that my one excuse is the one that my pledge allows me?

Which of the Twain Was Justified?

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Just last month at the Punxsutawney fair, in Pennsylvania, occurred a trifling incident worthy of publicity. A Catholic priest and a Protestant preacher, representative of the two conflicting cults of America, chanced to pass a prominent thoroughfare.

The representative of Protestantism noticed that the Roman prelate was puffing vigorously at a Perfecto. The preacher pharisaically was thanking God he was not as other men—superstitious, clerical and pleasure-loving—when, presto change, he saw himself a sinner and the Catholic a saint.

Wrapt in thought, the Protestant had passed by on the other side of a man who had fallen victim to that dreadful thief that robs us of usefulness, for he was shorn of both hands and feet.

Wrapt in smoke, the Catholic had seen the scene of suffering through the wreaths of his sweet incense. He stopped and helped the helpless beggar with his alms.

The Catholic became the "Good Samaritan," and the Protestant the "priest," in the nomenclature of our Lord's parable.

The Protestant was right in precept, but the Catholic was right in practice. "Now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." Is a perfect faith placed above a perfect charity? Is doctrine more divine than deeds?

Which of the twain was justified: The debating Protestant preacher or the deed-doing Catholic priest?

Big Run, Pa. GEORGE B. LAWS.

From the Pew.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

One of the strongest, if not the strongest, elements of our plea is its simplicity. The directness with which we go at religious matters has been the leading force in our appeal to men. We claim to keep clear of metaphysical floundering. Seldom do our most effective evangelists indulge in abstruse dissertations which render doubtful their meaning; yet here are Brother Garrison, the leading exponent of our plea in the Mississippi valley, and Brother McGarvey, president of the Bible College at Lexington, going at each other about the Holy Spirit. Both are right, doubtless, in their minds, but seriously brethren, what good does all this do the average churchgoer? Brother Garrison, with his paper, and Brother McGarvey, with his school, are seeking to inform and elevate the lives of the masses of our Christian people. It is all right, I suppose, for preachers and those who are so deeply immersed in spiritual cogitations that the world seems separate and apart from them; but our place is side by side with people, keeping step with them, and not off in metaphysical flounderings. Better keep the fodder down so the cattle (we of the pew) can reach it. Of all the preachers I ever heard discourse on this subject, no two of them reasoned alike or held the identical theory, so how are we of the pew to get settled down on the right conception of this perplexing feature of our religious faith? Keep on the shore of that plain, practical logic most calculated to induce men to live right, and to keep their human spirit right and do not wade out too much into this maelstrom of perplexing mysticism.

Life is too short to try to look over into the mysteries that God has not quite made plain, while there are so many, many obvious ways in which we can use our plea and the English language to induce men to live right and do right in this world.

If we improve all our opportunities along this line, we can rest in the assurance that our Maker will see that all is well with us, whatever vaporous theory we may hold about the Holy Spirit. R. J. TYDINGS.

Washington, D. C.

[We wish to say, concerning the foregoing, that there is no "metaphysical" issue between the Editor of this paper and Brother McGarvey. We can not stifle investigation on this subject by crying "metaphysics." The doctrine of the Holy Spirit is vital to our Christianity. To think of it and speak of it as involved in a cloud of mysticism, is doing grave injustice to the New Testament, if not grieving the Holy Spirit himself. There are phases of the question which are metaphysical, the discussion of which would be unprofitable, but we are not concerned with these. The duty and privilege of praying for the Holy Spirit is not a metaphysical duty or privilege. It is one of the most precious of all the blessings of the gospel. Our desk is piled up with letters commending our position and stating how fatal it would be to the Christian faith and hope of the writers if such an idea concerning the Holy Spirit as that we have recently antagonized, should prevail among us. We regret that our brother feels that it would be better to be still and noncommittal on a question so vital as this. We can assure him that a great majority of "the pew" do not agree with him in so thinking.—EDITOR.]

The Symposium.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I have read with interest the Symposium on Evangelists which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of November 2. I noted with pleasure that one vital point was guarded by some of the writers—notably Brothers Ott and Haley. The point I allude to is individual liberty. Paul says, (Gal. 1:15-17), "When it was the good pleasure of God, who separated me, even from my mother's womb, and called me through his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the Gentiles: immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: neither went I up to Jerusalem to them that were apostles before me; but I went away into Arabia. . . . I was unknown by face to the churches of Judea . . . . they only heard say. He that once persecuted us now preacheth the faith of which he once made havoc." While the cases are not exactly parallel, the principle is the same. Every good man who is called of God to preach the gospel is as free to do so as Paul was and no local congregation nor other organization has a right or power to restrict such a man in the exercise of that freedom. If congregations and boards were infallible in all respects the case might be different; but those who know them best know that they fall very far short of being infallible in any respect. If Savonarola and Luther and Wesley and Campbell had been forced to secure the consent and endorsement of their churches before being allowed to deliver their messages to the world, where would the world be to-day? The man who has the message of heaven burning in his heart does not need to stop to confer with flesh and blood. His fitness is his best credential, and the only necessary one. Liberty is better than order. Order may be God's first law; but liberty is his final law. The world does not find its best men until its best men have first found themselves. This is equally true of the church. By independent effort Paul was forced to overcome the suspicions and the conservatism of the church and win its endorsement of his work as an evangelist. It is all right for boards to lend their endorsement to men who have demonstrated their fitness; but it is all wrong to hold that he should refrain from preaching till his fitness has been vouched for by some such board. A Baptist minister in Texas said, "I had rather have a fussing church than to part with the liberty that makes a fuss possible." So I had rather the churches would suffer from an unworthy evangelist now and then than to part with the individual liberty and independence that made a Paul and a Luther possible, and without which the growth of the Church would be practically arrested. Christian culture is the church's surest safeguard against unworthy men.

Cleburne, Texas. W. H. BAGBY.

To A Superior Person.

You think it a sign of superior mind
  To pursue in a purposeful fashion
The cult that is higher than culture, refined
  Beyond admiration or passion.

In political things and religious you stand
  On a basis of negative vanity;
But your constant abuse of your own native land
  Does not prove that you love all humanity.

We know that our country has faults of her own,
  But why should they specially hurt you?
And why should you dwell on each blemish alone,
  And never acknowledge a virtue?

But though all our customs lie under your blame,
  That does not decide their removal;
I dare say the land will survive all the same,
  In spite of your stern disapproval.

There isn't a label of party or sect
  That really will suit your complexion,
For in every communion you're sure to detect
  Some feature that mars the connection.

You never will study the things that unite,
  But only the points of dispersion—
The single defect where a hundred are right
  Arouses your animadversion.

You say that the highest are ever alone,
  Like the peaks and the stars that are lonely,
We agree that the region you claim as your own
  Be not simply your own, but yours only.

A Revelation.

By Mrs. Harriet A. Cheever.

Mr. Remington always maintained that the Lord himself set before him certain pictures of the night, in order to impress him with a right idea concerning some things wherein he was forming false conclusions. The year had been a prosperous one. Business transactions, important, but uncertain as to their issue in January, had resulted toward the close of November as it had been greatly hoped they would. It had been proven that measures seemingly judicious, yet involving considerable risk and boldness of venture, were judicious, and the crucial point having been passed, future success could be warrantably expected. Older partners had listened to the methods recommended by the younger man; in matters wherein both wisdom and foresight were needed, his advice had been followed to the letter.

The sermon to which Mr. Remington listened on the Sunday before Thanksgiving day gave him great satisfaction. The proclamation had been read from the pulpit, and, being full of a spirit of sweet content, Mr. Remington had heard it with pleasure. Then followed the text, "And men will praise thee when thou doest well by thyself."

The discourse that followed was an excellent one, no doubt; yet one listener failed to notice or to grasp some of its more salient points. Probably his mind wandered, for afterward, in attempting to repeat parts of it to his wife, who was not able to accompany him to church, he was somewhat disconcerted at finding that what he most clearly remembered was simply the text. But after sitting dreamily by himself for a time in the evening, he said to his wife as she came into the room:

"Well, my dear, I certainly have done well by myself this year, and men also have praised me. Rawlins, with all his experience and acumen" (he was senior member of the firm), "says he can not be too grateful that we took up the Lenox contract I insisted, in the face of outspoken opposition, was going to be a great thing for us. As to that last contract I secured, after hundreds of miles of travel and by exhausting every jot of argument and persuasion of which I was capable, it assures a degree of prosperity for next year exceeding by thousands of dollars what we shall have realized this one. Yes, I gratefully acknowledge that I have really done well by myself during this good year!"

Mrs. Remington stirred uneasily. Some sense of unacknowledged obligation and of unwarrantable self-gratulation occurred to her, but she remembered that her husband had really made unremitting effort while bringing about the state of affairs so satisfactory to the entire firm. And then, he had just said that he acknowledged gratefully having been able to do well by himself. That must mean he was grateful to God. It would be too bad to interrupt his pleasant musings by any reminder he really did not need.

For some unaccountable reason, Mr. Remington appeared at the breakfast table on Monday morning with an air so different from that of the previous evening that his wife asked with some concern if he had caught her headache of the day before. But his prompt, cheerful denial reassured her.

"After all, he was simply quiet and thoughtful," she reflected, as he started for the train, and so the impression passed.

Yet, this had happened:

Somewhere in the night, after the evening of "pleasant musings," Mr. Remington suddenly found himself again urging adoption of the measures which had resulted in so much financial prosperity. He realized, as he had before, that very much of financial standing, home comfort and business reputation depended upon his ability to convince his older partners that the move would be a wise one. He was very sincerely certain that he was recommending what was to be for the profit of all concerned.

Suddenly he became aware that he was not alone. A strong and potent Presence was lending weight to his words; was suggesting the best things for him to say. Deriving support and fearlessness from this felt power, he soon convinced his friends that the contract should be made, and the matter reached a successful issue. In his dream he said to himself:

"It was God who helped and guided me then."

With the swift transition of a dream, he next was traveling on the wings of the wind, as it were, here and there, taking hurried railroad trips, intent only on securing that great contract which was to mean so much for this year and for years to come. No thought of risk or peril along the road occurred to him.

Suddenly, he seemed viewing the flying train from outside. At a sharp angle in the road there came an unexpected jolt. None but the Almighty and the engineer knew how frightfully near they came at that moment to being hurled from the high bridge over which they rolled into the river beneath. The merest accident saved them. That Presence again! The dreamer murmured a second time:

"It was God who guided and rescued us then."

No conscious fatigue accompanies the vagaries of a dream. It was with vigor unabated and great strength of will that the next instant Mr. Remington found himself again in the office of the copper kings, wherein the second contract must be agreed to and signed. All the anxiety that had really possessed him, all the strenuousness of endeavor that had been brought to bear when he had actually forced perseverance to bring success, were actuating him in this fancied situation. Then the unseen Spirit again became manifest, helping, strengthening, inspiring. The compact was sealed. The hard strain loosened. With a ponderous sigh the man involuntarily paid just tribute for the third time that night to a friendly compelling force. The words were strangely familiar:

"It was God who helped and guided me then."

He must have spoken aloud, for at the sound of his own voice he awoke.

Every detail of his dream was clearly before him. It was as simple and natural as could be; no shock, nothing to disturb or haunt him, yet—the man all at once opened wide his eyes and clinched his hands.

"What kind of a man am I?" he asked. "What must the Almighty think of me? Taking every particle of credit and honor to myself for the outcome and success of the year's endeavors; giving never a thought to the Kindly Light that surely led me on. Forgetting there was such a thing as risk or peril when dashing about, trusting to wheels and steam to carry me hither and yon on errands of importance and absorbing desire. Neglecting to recognize the help and guidance that has been vouchsafed every step of the way. Saying, in the thoughtless pride of my heart, 'Yes, I have done well by myself.'"

It argued well for the man's heart that the dream troubled him; that it was not thrust out of mind, but that he lay awake, pondering, confessing and resolving. No wonder he was quiet and thoughtful at breakfast in the morning.

When the quiet evening came again, he told his wife of the dream he dreamed. She made a brief confession. Speaking with great gentleness, she said:

"When you were talking last night, a passage of scripture kept coming into my mind I did not like to quote, 'Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord.'"

"But it didn't occur to me, wife, that God had a hand in all these everyday occurrences that we men have to be engaged in."

Mrs. Remington smiled. "I don't know why not," she said. "Another verse says: 'In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths.'"

Mr. Remington spoke slowly: "Well, I profess to be a Christian man, and as such should ask and expect the help of a divine spirit." He spoke with animation as he added:

"God sent that dream, and he sent it with a purpose. I shall attend his house on Thanksgiving day in a spirit of deep and sincere thankfulness. And no small cause for thanksgiving will be that he has kindly, gently, but effectually, opened my eyes to the fact that if men praise us when we do well by ourselves, there yet is no such thing as doing really well by ourselves unaided by his kind and watchful Presence."

Mrs. Remington was silent and thoughtful for a moment. Then she said, impressively:

"Don't you think, my dear, we ought to go farther than that, and resolve that as God is the giver of everything we have, a certain portion shall henceforth be returned to him through charity and such avenues as are employed for the upbuilding of his kingdom on the earth?"

"Yes, I think perhaps I ought, wife."

"You know, in scripture days," Mrs. Remington went on, "a tenth of the increase was dedicated to the Lord. What do you think of following the old rule?"

For a moment her husband did not reply. Then he said: "I scarcely like the idea of settling upon any specific amount in dealing with a subject where conscience should dictate terms. I shall give a tenth, at least, of this year's income back to God. Perhaps another year I would give more."

He paused a moment, then added:

"Let Christian men resolve to give their Lord what their consciences approve, and there would be no more such urgent pleas from missionaries and Christian workers as we must often listen to now. That dream shall work into my private accounts hereafter. It meant more than I recognized at first."

"Keeping Up Appearances."

By Grace Boteler Sanders.

Since time immemorial it had been the custom of the Anderson family to meet at the old homestead on Thanksgiving day; but, as the children married one by one, leaving the vicinity, and death finally called the old folks home, the head of each new house revived the custom and visited with the children's children, as the feast of turkey appeared.

So rapidly had the family increased, and so elaborate was the menu, that each member, as it came his turn to entertain, groaned involuntarily at the labor Thanksgiving would bring.

On the day on which our story opens, Mrs. Lou Anderson, an energetic little body, was consulting anxiously with her husband on the much-mooted question.

"Lou," she broached the subject immediately after he had eaten the dainty supper which she had prepared, "do you know it's our turn to give the family dinner?"

Mr. Anderson frowned, but for a moment did not reply. Determination was written all over the face of his small wife, so the moment she asked the question visions of a much-needed overcoat, which had been flitting through his brain ever since the beginning of cold weather, faded regretfully away.

"I think you are scarcely equal to the task, my dear," he remarked, tenderly. "The impoverished condition of our bank account also makes it necessary for us to be careful. The rest of the family are wealthy. Every one tries to see who can get the finest dinner. We simply can't stand it this year, Edith."

The little woman's black eyes snapped.

"Lou Anderson, I've made up my mind to give that dinner, so you might just as well keep still! It's hard enough to see all the rest of the family have everything they want, while I do all my own work, besides sewing for other folks. We've been married thirteen years and going the rounds of Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners until we're indebted to them all a dozen times over. I'm tired of hearing people say, 'If I couldn't entertain, I'd just stay at home.' I work hard, Lou Anderson, without ever having one 50-cent piece for myself, and when I set my head—boo-hoo—on a Thanksgiving dinner, you've no right to deny me."

Mrs. Anderson buried her face in her blue gingham apron and, rocking back and forth, sobbed like a child. Her husband eyed her coolly as he lighted his pipe, and by the time the blue smoke rings were curling upward, Mrs. Anderson had ceased crying and was wiping her eyes slyly.

"It wouldn't cost more than $25, and the woman at the grocery would trust us. I know," seeing the shadow which passed over his face, "that you don't like to do a credit business, but it won't hurt us for once. We must keep up appearances, you know. Say, Lou, we have our own chickens; if we kill six, we won't need much meat. I can make the cakes and bread. Of course we must have oranges and candy and figs and dates for the children, too. I don't know; perhaps I could squeeze through on —let's say $15.

Mr. Anderson picked up his paper with a long sigh. "Well, do as you please about it," he said.

Having gained her point, Edith Anderson hurried to the kitchen and her busy brain kept time with the rattling dishes as she sang.

"I must clean house first," she thought to herself. "Beady and Jen have servants, but I don't want their house to look any better than mine. I'll wash the lace curtains tomorrow. Let's see, how many can I count on?

"There's Sue and John with their four children; George and Beady, four children—there'll be every bit of thirty-five. But I can manage that, all right.

"Lou, can you help me move the piano tomorrow?"

Mr. Anderson sighed again. "Say, Edith, it's four weeks till Thanksgiving," he growled, throwing down his paper. "Why, in the name of all that is wonderful, must we begin tearing up now?"

"Why, Lou, the house must be cleaned," cried his wife, reproachfully. It was ten o'clock when Mrs. Anderson crept to bed. Long after her husband was sleeping she kept turning over every detail, from furnishings to menu for the Thanksgiving dinner.

"I don't care," she whispered sleepily to herself, "we must keep up appearances. I'll get up early tomorrow."

But our plans do not always materialize. The sun, which she had hoped would shine brightly, sulked behind a somber cloud. The keen November winds whistled around the corners and whirled the hats of the passers down the street with every gust.

"I did hope it would be a pretty day. I hate to have my plans spoiled, but I'll invite as many as I can today," she mused, as she entered the car.

By night the nickels in the slender purse had dwindled alarmingly, and at five a tired little woman let herself in at the front door. She began preparations for supper in a half-hearted fashion.

"Ah, you're tired already!" called her husband, accusingly, as he entered the dining room. But Edith Anderson set her lips firmly, with a martyr's air.

"Well, the first step is taken, anyhow. The guests are all invited. What news today?"

"Nothing good. A cut of ten per cent in the factory."

The wife patted her husband's broad shoulder soothingly. "It won't be liable to catch us," she said. "If it comes to a pinch, I'll take in sewing enough to keep the table."

"Not yet." Mr. Anderson smiled proudly. Did ever one small body contain so much bottled up energy? Who was so saving, so bright as she? Well, Lou Anderson knew that, as a rule, he could trust his purse with her and every penny would be expended carefully. "We'll come out all right," he laughed.

The fall days passed quickly, fog and smoke, snow and ice followed each other in rapid succession. One dark morning Mrs. Anderson took the offending curtains from the windows, giving them a decided shake.

"Weather or no weather, I'll not wait any longer," she said. "Lou will be gone all day. I'll dry them in the house and no one will be the wiser."

Soon the small kitchen was filled with steam; the curtains emerged from their soapy bath snow-white, and were carefully rinsed and carried to the dining room, where, before the open grate, they were fastened to the stretchers.

"I must have the windows open," she added.

From the hot, steaming kitchen to where the November winds were chasing each other through the rooms, Edith Anderson hurried, perspiring, chilling, sneezing.

At four, she breathed a sigh of satisfaction. Seven pairs were finished. "That's better than leaving them dirty. Lou would take a fit if he knew I had the windows open, but it had to be done."

When morning came, with aching limbs and husky voice the culprit crept to the kitchen.

"I must—ahem—get breakfast, somehow," she groaned, holding her aching head with both hands. "The plum pudding must be made today. I will go on."

And so it was, until the day before Thanksgiving the family laundress appeared with her basket of neatly ironed clothes. She hesitated in the pleasant kitchen, watching the lady as she boiled, brewed and baked.

"I haven't anything for you this year, Lizzie," looking up from the dressing she was mixing. "Times are so hard that we have only chicken ourselves this year."

The woman smiled wistfully. "Such a load of stuff," she said to herself as she hurried along in the gathering gloom. "And she didn't even pay. I think I'd settle with my laundress before I had a houseful of stylish company."

Edith Anderson felt some pricks of conscience, it is true, but she excused herself by muttering crossly:

"That's the way with some folks; if you give 'em an inch, they want a yard. As for the money, it's the first time she ever had to wait."

Thanksgiving day was cloudy and cold. At ten the guests began to arrive, and while Mrs. Anderson and her husband stewed over the stove, their guests dawdled over drawn work, discussing a choice bit of scandal, or the proper way of hair dressing.

But all things must come to an end. As the triumph of cookery was placed on the table, Edith Anderson saw her childhood's home. Then she had accompanied her gray-haired father to the village church, where every member gave thanks for the blessings they had received.

"I declare," she voiced her thoughts aloud, "it's a mockery the way people give thanks nowadays. I'll never do it again,"

Mr. Anderson thought of the expenses which the day brought. "Well, it will be done with, anyhow," he said.

Edith Anderson never knew how it occurred, but during the conversation of the afternoon, a storm arose and soon it was upon them. The enraged guests hurried from the house, vowing never to return, and amid the ruins of the dearly bought feast lay Edith Anderson, like a crushed lily.

Many days of sickness followed. November days dragged on toward the Christmastide, and still the relatives for whom she had almost given her life, remained away.

The husband said little of the bills unpaid and clothing needed. He knew the bitter lesson had been well learned and pitied the lonely little woman who called him to her on Christmas eve.

She had wrapped the little gifts which she prepared before the quarrel and bade him distribute them to their owners.

"I can't hold malice on Christmas day, Lou," she pleaded. "Ask the girls to forgive."

The shame-faced relatives crept back and the quarrel was forgotten

A twelvemonth rolled around, finding Edith Anderson and her husband in the church on Thanksgiving day. The months of sickness and debt were passed at last, but with the bitter memories lingers the never-to-be-forgotten lesson: There is a wrong way and a right way to celebrate Thanksgiving.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week with the Woodneys.

SIXTH DAY DRAWING TO A CLOSE.

"Do hurry up!" called Mrs. Geraldine Woodney, as her husband appeared at the gate, his hand upon Arthur's arm; "we are building air castles."

"Of course you are, my dear," rejoined Mr. Woodney. "I was telling Arthur how you would be engaged." Mace and her brother sat in the window sill of the wall that had been left standing, while Mrs. Geraldine and her mother-in-law were seated upon stones facing them, with a semicircle of charred debris and broken bricks heaped at their backs. Arthur led Mr. Woodney to a seat near Mrs. Geraldine, then perched upon a broken beam, which ran out at right angles to the wall. Mace had on Luther's hat and looked like a different girl. Arthur was almost startled when he regarded her. He wondered how many Maces there were. Mace with the kitchen apron on, and sleeves rolled to the elbows, had seemed to him too useful a person to be very attractive. Mace, in the new white dress, had seemed distant, unfriendly and strangely pretty. Mace, with her brother's hat on, was still a mystery. He awaited developments. In the meantime he was noting the sparkle in her eye, the roguish smile at the corner of her mouth and the somewhat boyish way in which she swung her feet.

"We are high up in the air," said Mrs. Geraldine, "and you will have to climb up, Benjamin. The air castle is half finished."

"Let down the balloon," said Mr. Woodney.

"I will; it's this: my novel has been published and has sold like wildfire. I get 10 per cent royalty, and as there are 100,000 sold at a dollar and a half a copy, I have received exactly—how much is it, Luther?"

"Fifteen thousand dollars," said Luther, "and I don't think it's too high an estimate. Lots of novels reach a hundred thousand copies; and all the writers get 10 per cent; and that's bound to be $15,000!"

"Simple arithmetic," said Mace, swinging her feet and feeling in Luther's pockets to "see what he had."

"I've divided it all out," said Mrs. Geraldine, "but now that you and Arthur have come, there are six to hold equal shares. How much will be that be apiece?"

"Twenty-five hundred dollars," said Luther.

"It was $3,750 before father and Arthur came," said Mace, "and I don't want to give any of mine up just because they have come. I've already spent $3,000."

"Don't be selfish, Mace," said her mother, reprovingly. "We will begin all over."

"If we have only twenty-five hundred apiece," said old Mrs. Woodney, "I think we'd better not spend a cent, but put it out to interest."

"Oh, mother," expostulated Mrs. Geraldine, "you would even be practical with air castle money! Remember, all our property is not invested in air castles."

"Most of it is," said the other. "And I believe this thing of spending air castle money, which has gone on in the family ever since I can remember, has led to spending what might have been saved."

"If I had $2,500 to do what I wanted with," said Mr. Woodney, "I would buy some business—say the store here, or a share in a bank."

"Why, Benjamin!" exclaimed his wife, "I wouldn't think you'd want another store after almost giving away the one you had."

"I don't want it for myself; I'd put Mr. Hoogan in it. Then he'd give up the saloon, and be in a reputable business, and this county would be blessed by the removal of that blot on the village."

"That's just like father, to always think of the best thing to do," cried Mace; "but this time I mean to beat him, so I'll just build up this church again, with my money. There—it's all gone! Isn't the church beautiful? Listen to the bell, it is calling us to afternoon meeting!"

"No, we don't want to stay here," interposed Mrs. Geraldine. "This village is not large enough for us. We go to the city and take rooms in a fine hotel. We pass the winter season there, and see life in all its varied aspects. Then I write another book, all about it. I put the whole city in my book. It will be a very large book. We will go to Europe, too, and see where Dickens lived, and where Mary, Queen of Scots, was imprisoned, and where Alfred the Great watched the spider weave its web."

"So your money is gone," said her husband, with a sigh of regret. "But a trip like that was well worth it! Well, Luther, have you turned miser?"

"Oh, no," said Luther, with a start. "I was just thinking that if I had so much money, I would be in a situation—" he paused, and looked all about, and blushed.

"But you are already in a situation," returned Mace.

"I would be in a situation to marry!" Luther declared, firmly.

"Oh, Luther Woodney," cried Mace, while the others laughed, "would you pay $2,500 for a wife?" Mace was indignant, and, doubling up her fists, pushed Luther off the window sill.

"I don't care," said Luther, climbing back, "that is what I would be; I would be in a position to marry."

"Yes, and the girl who would marry you for $2,500—what kind of a girl would she be?" cried Mace. "Oh, Luther, to give all

True Economy

The difference in cost between an alum baking powder and the highest-class cream of tartar baking powder would not amount for a family's supply to one dollar a year.

Dr. Price's is the standard cream of tartar baking powder. It makes the food delicious and healthful.

NOTE.—You cannot, if you value good health, afford to use cheap, low-grade, alum baking powders. They are apt to spoil the food ; they do endanger the health. All physicians will tell you that alum in food is deleterious.

your money for a wife!"

"I wouldn't be buying a wife, and she wouldn't be marrying me for my money," said Luther, argumentatively, "but I'd be in a situation to marry."

"My son," said Mrs. Geraldine, "do you wish to marry?"

"How can I marry, mother, when I have nothing, and work as a farmhand?"

"But would you like to marry?" persisted his mother.

"I want to be in the situation," returned Luther; "in the situation to marry."

"My boy," said Mr. Woodney, gravely, "is there some lady who has led you to think you could be happier walking by her side, as I have walked so long beside your dear mother?"

"There isn't any lady," persisted Luther; "I don't care for anybody that way, and never did, but I'd like to be in the situation to marry if I had a mind to. I haven't a mind to, but if I had, I'd like to go and do it. My money will put me in that situation, and that's what I want it for; so I can marry if I want to."

"Still," said Mrs. Geraldine, with great relief, "you don't want to, my son, and I'm glad to know it!"

"I don't know whether I'd want to or not, if I was in the situation to do it," returned Luther, "and that's why I want to be in the situation."

"Arthur," said Mr. Woodney, giving his son up in his present state of inflexibility, "how will you spend your property?"

"I would take Anna Zuccarini from that New York milliner's store," said Arthur, clasping his hands, and gazing into the future, "and give her a little home where she would never have to work, but could sing every day. And I'd bring her father and mother back from Italy to live with her. And I would like to be there when they meet. It would be like heaven!"

"Would you want to stay with them," asked Mace, "and leave us?"

"We could all live in the same town," said Arthur.

"How old is Anna Zuccarini?" inquired Mace, with a sidelong glance at her brother. "Maybe Luther could marry her."

"It isn't any particular person," said Luther, "I just want to be in the situation."

"Children," said old Mrs. Woodney, rising, "we've stayed in the air castle so long that I'm catching cold. Tomorrow's September, and that means early dew. Now the book's sold and the money's all spent for other people; we are just where we were before, except that I've saved my share."

"Oh, grandmother, what will you do with it?" cried Mace, as they walked from the ruins.

"I don't know, but it shall be employed some way to build up the Woodney family," said the old lady. "People will find out if the Dobneys with all their money are worth as much as the poorest Woodney!"

"Who knows," murmured Mrs. Geraldine, "but my book will sell just as I have said, and we will spend our money just as we have planned!"

"But if you do," said her mother-in-law, "we will be just as poor as ever, for not a cent was spent to help us."

"We'll be mighty happy," answered Benjamin, "just as we've always been." Mrs. Woodney gave his arm a squeeze. Luther held out his hand to Mace, but she drew away. "I'm afraid of young men who are so anxious to be in a situation," she said, mockingly. They crossed the street and walked slowly homeward. "We'll go around to the barn first," said Luther, "and see if Bonaparte is doing all right! Then I'll have to start out for the Mancey farm, as it's a six-mile walk."

They went to the barn, and Arthur, who reached the door first, exclaimed, "There is no horse here!" Sure enough, the bed of hay was deserted. The frayed ends of some ropes swung from the beams.

"That beast was stronger than I thought!" cried Luther, in great admiration. "But perhaps he chewed the ropes in two."

"I wonder where he could have gone?" said his mother, looking helplessly at the vacant bed.

Luther shook his head. "I don't know," he said, cheerfully, "but we do know that wherever it is, it isn't far."

"We'll scatter in all directions," Mace suggested, "and beat up the game."

"Now, my advice," said old Mrs. Woodney, firmly, "is, to keep perfectly quiet and if that horse can drag itself away, let no one hinder. Let it escape."

"Let it escape!" cried Luther. "No, indeed, that is a present to father and Mace."

"Such is my advice," said the old lady, walking stiffly toward the house, followed by Mr. Woodney, "and I tell you plainly that if that horse was before my very eyes, I wouldn't tell a soul."

"Mother," said Mr. Woodney, in a low tone, "I am afraid you'll make Luther feel bad."

"I was speaking for the good of the family," said his mother, firmly, "and I shall always do so. Well! They have left open the parlor door! It should have been locked, and we've been gone at least an hour and a half. Who knows but the Tumbletons have rifled the house?" She hastened her steps, while her son followed cautiously. In the meantime Luther, Mace and Mrs. Geraldine were searching the alleys for Bonaparte. They were suddenly recalled to the cottage by a wild shriek from the front yard. They hastened back to find old Mrs. Woodney in the yard, wildly waving her apron.

"Mother, what is it?" shouted Mrs. Geraldine, as she began to run.

"The thing is in the house!" cried old Mrs. Woodney. "It is in the kitchen, working at that pump!"

"What thing?" demanded Luther.

"Your horse!" shouted his grandmother.

"It must not be in the house!" cried Mrs. Geraldine, increasing her speed. "It must be taken out, immediately."

Luther began to laugh as he rushed up. "Grandmother," he panted, "I thought you said you wouldn't tell us where he was if he was before your very face."

"He'll break everything in the room," exclaimed Mrs. Geraldine, reaching the front door, and looking in. "Mace, run for Mr. Acre!"

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

The German Tariff.

The new German tariff, which will go into effect next March, is one of the factors to be taken into account by Congress in determining what measures to take in regard to the revision of our own tariff. Of course it would be far beneath our national dignity to be coerced into making tariff concessions, but perhaps we are not altogether above being influenced by existing facts. The recently adopted German tariff is constructed on the maximum and minimum principle. That is, it provides a complete double scale of tariff rates, the lower rate in each case to be allowed on imports coming from countries which offer corresponding concessions or with which Germany has a special commercial treaty, the higher rate to be enforced against all others. The American theory of the tariff has always been that, whether high or low, the same rate must always be collected upon the same class of goods regardless of the country from which they are imported. Unless a tariff treaty with Germany is entered into or some special concession granted, American goods sent to Germany will be compelled to pay the higher rate of duty. The German tariff was skillfully constructed to set before us this alternative. Shall we follow Germany in the adoption of a maximum and minimum tariff? The scheme has its advantages. It provides the basis for an easy and automatic system of reciprocity and thus tends toward a general lowering of rates. But the advocates of the sky-high tariff have a way of turning to account even such a proposition as this. They are prepared to insist that, if the maximum and minimum plan is adopted, the present rate shall be the minimum. Can it be possible that the long anticipated and long delayed tariff revision will issue in another revision upward?

A Republican Opinion.

Governor Cummins, of Iowa, originator of the "Iowa Idea" and exponent of tariff reform, especially the reduction or removal of the protective tariff on articles produced by trusts and monopolies, is being taken to task for the following statement: "The total life insurance grafts for all time have not been one-fifth of the annual amount of which the people have been despoiled by excessive tariff rates." The special indignation of the critics seems to rise from the fact that such an opinion should issue from one who claims to be a Republican and has borne office as the candidate of that party. Governor Cummins professes to be both a Republican and a protectionist. Why not? Does it seem inherently absurd that a Republican should think that his party has gone too far in any policy, or that a protectionist should think a given schedule unjustly high? A tariff schedule is always the result of compromise and adjustment. We know the processes by which schedules are shaped and how (not to mention lobbyists) Congress is full of members looking after the special interests of some particular group of constituents and demanding for their protection a high rate on some class of imports in exchange for their support of some other congressman's demand for a high rate for the protection of the interests of some particular group of his constituents. The tendency in such a case is always toward a rate too high for the common good. Is it treason to the party or to the principle of protection for one to say so? We should hope not. Governor Cummins' comparison is a very vivid one just at present. Whether the figures would bear out his statement of proportion between life insurance graft and tariff spoliation, it is not easy to say, especially since it is impossible to determine with mathematical accuracy just how much of the tariff does in any true sense represent spoliation. But we hope the time has not yet come when a man can be read out of his party for venturing to doubt the plenary inspiration and infallibility of the Dingley Tariff Law.

The Weakness of Wills.

An item in the daily papers of two or three weeks ago, deserves a comment even at this late date. It was to the effect that a flaw had been discovered in the will left by the late Edward M. Paxon, Chief Justice of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, by which his bequest of $3,000,000 to found an agricultural school was rendered invalid. The obvious thought which occurs to laymen in the law is that if even a chief justice can not draw a will which will hold water and will secure the disposition of his estate as the testator desires and expects, the rest of us have a much smaller chance of being able to do so. The dispatch stated that the heirs would probably carry out the wish of the judge, in spite of the flaw in the will. That is slightly reassuring and speaks well for the heirs. And yet, those of us who wish to leave our millions, or our thousands or hundreds, for the endowment of educational or missionary or benevolent enterprises would prefer not to leave it to the discretion and generosity of our heirs to carry out these purposes or not as they see fit. This is not meant as cheap raillery against the law and its intricacies and technicalities, most of which are far more useful than the majority of us are ready to admit. But it serves to illustrate the wisdom of making one's benefactions before the day of one's death. The best of all ways to give money for any good cause is to give it outright and at once, so that it may at once begin its beneficent work. The next best way is an annuity gift, which has all the advantages of a bequest from the standpoint of the donor in leaving him in possession of the income, and has the additional very great advantage that it cannot be broken or revoked after the death of the donor. The third best way (best of all for the lawyers but third best for the giver and the receiver) is by bequest.

Hazing.

Again and again are right-minded young people and nearly all middle aged and old people disgusted with the reports of college hazing. Now it is an initiation, wherein a group of boys inflict indignities and even dangers upon one whom they have chosen as worthy of intimate friendship and whom they really like. They wish to prove his courage, they say, and while doing so they usually prove their own cowardice. The spectacle of a dozen fellows abusing (even playfully) one with his hands tied and his eyes blindfolded is not an exhibition of the mettle of the twelve however it may be of the one. Or again it is the hazing of Freshmen to punish them for the crime of being Freshmen. Sometimes it gets serious. Two or three cases are just now in the public mind. Usually it is only silly. But do we think it is a modern folly? It is not so. About the year 355 of our era, when Athens was still the world's intellectual center, there was in what we may call the University of Athens a student named Gregory Nazianzen, who afterward became bishop of Constantinople. Among his fellow students were young Prince Julian who became the apostate emperor of Rome, and one Basil who also became a bishop and a saint. Gregory has left some account of the college life of his time, including the practice of hazing. He says:

> "Whenever any newcomer arrives and falls into the hands of those who seize him, either by force or willingly, they observe this Attic law of combined jest and earnest. He is first conducted to the house of one of those who were the first to receive him, or of his friends, or kinsmen, or countrymen. He is next subjected to the raillery of any one who will, with the intention, I suppose, of checking the conceit of the newcomers and reducing them to subjection at once. The raillery is of a more insolent or argumentative kind, according to the boorishness or refinement of the railer, and the performance, which seems very fearful and brutal to those who do not know it, is to those who have experienced it very pleasant and humane, for its threats are feigned rather than real. Next he is conducted in procession through the market-place to the bath. When they have approached it, they shout and leap wildly, as if possessed, and at the same time frighten the youth by furiously knocking at the doors. Then allowing him to enter, they now present him with his freedom and receive him after the bath as an equal, one of themselves. This they consider the most pleasant part of the ceremony, as being a speedy exchange and relief from annoyances."

And Gregory tells us that when Basil came to enter as a student, he persuaded the others to let him off from hazing and "to accord him greater honor than belongs to a Freshman's position." But of course the Freshmen of to day and to-morrow think it is all new and immensely clever.

Marriage and Art.

The press reports that the president of the Academy of Fine Arts, at Paris, speaking recently to a group of promising young artists who had won the Prix de Roma, advised them never to marry. His argument was: "If you marry richly, you will be caught in the social whirl fatal to real and honest toil toward perfection. If poorly, you must paint for money, not for perfection, and your soul will wither under the blight of financial strain." In such a case one well might pray that he be given neither poverty nor riches. One has not quite exhausted the possibilities when one has mentioned marrying rich and marrying poor. Besides, the assumption that an artist's (or anybody's) financial and social status is to be determined solely by his marriage, is naive and unfounded. But supposing that the argument is sound and the advice wise, why should it apply only to artists? Why should the artists arrogate to themselves the distinction of being the only men for whom both poverty and riches lay snares? Is not the grinding poverty or the sordid spirit which leads a man to think only of his wages or his profits as fatal to perfection in any other sphere as in art? Can one teach, or preach, or practice law, or heal the sick, or sell life insurance, or raise corn, or play the man in any useful fashion if he thinks only and always of money? If the fact is more obvious in the case of artists, we should be thankful to them for reminding us that both the pursuit and the care of money are dangerous to those who are seeking the best things. One of the greatest services which art renders to life is that it helps to keep alive the spirit of joyous work, the quest of perfection without over-much care about the cash payment. Only it will not do to give the artists a monopoly on this spirit, any more than it will do to turn over religion to the priests and preachers. As to the argument from these data to the folly of marriage—that is another matter.

A Sea-Level Canal.

The board of consulting engineers for the Panama canal has reported in favor of a sea level canal as opposed to one with locks. This, however, does not mean that the canal will be built that way. The board of consulting engineers is a body of thirteen eminent engineers, eight American and five foreign, whose duty it is to advise the Isthmian canal commission on technical points. The commission is not bound to accept their advice. This particular question, for example, can scarcely be settled on the basis of the purely professional advice of civil engineers. It has already been decided that both plans are feasible. It is not impossible to construct a canal with locks, and it is not impossible to construct one at sea-level throughout. The questions of relative difficulty, safety, expense, etc., can be determined by the engineers. They may even advise as to whether, in their judgment, the more expensive construction will be worth the difference in cost. But it is not for them to decide whether the additional expense is to be assumed. An architect may be quite sure that a brick house is more desirable than a frame house, even at the necessarily greater cost, but it is for the client to decide which he will have. In this case, the client, namely the government, may be inclined to hesitate before agreeing to furnish the additional sixty or eighty millions which a sea-level canal will cost. The chief engineer, Mr. Stevens, is reported as being decidedly opposed to the sea-level plan, on account of the cost and of the time that would be required for its construction. One item in the work is the excavation of a ledge of granite twelve miles long and forty feet deep. This alone, he estimates, would take sixteen years. It is noteworthy that five of the eight Americans among the consulting engineers opposed the sea-level plan. The majority in favor of it was composed of the five foreign members and three Americans who had already committed themselves on the subject.

Trade-Marks.

With the growth of advertising, there has come a great increase in the value of trade-marks and in the necessity for giving them full legal protection as property. If a firm spends half a million dollars a year in advertising some one article, as many firms do, a large part of that expenditure represents the cost of hammering into the public mind one word or formula or symbol which stands for the advertised article. The money which might have been spent in building an enormous factory is spent in creating a nation-wide or world-wide acquaintance with a trade-mark. It is as much an investment in one case as in the other, and the result of the investment has as good a right to legal protection in one case as in the other. At the last session of Congress there was legislation on this subject, but not enough to satisfy the wishes of the owners of trade-marks and perhaps not enough to meet the requirements of complete justice. The matter will come up again before the coming Congress. It is especially desired that it be made possible to take criminal action against any one who fraudulently and intentionally makes use of another's trade-mark. At present a party so injured may secure an injunction to compel the offender to stop, and may collect damages by civil process, but one who is so inclined can safely steal his neighbor's trade-mark, get what temporary advantage he can out of it, and, when an injunction is issued, drop it to take up another or to change his field of labor. People of this class are often not financially responsible and damage suits against them are small satisfaction. If they could be treated as thieves (which they are) and dealt with accordingly by criminal process, it would be a much more effective protection against fraud.

The Cost of Living.

We have been talking about the increased cost of living. Everybody realizes that the prices of commodities have risen. The Bureau of Labor has just issued a report, dealing with the retail prices of food from 1890 to 1904. During the last four years the increase in these prices has been especially great. Out of 30 principal articles enumerated, only four have decreased in price, while 26 were higher last year than the average for the decade 1890-1899. For example, bacon has increased over 37 per cent, and corn meal and potatoes over 21 per cent. For the United States, taken as a whole, the average cost of food per family in 1890 was $318.20. In 1896, the year of lowest prices, it fell to $296.76, and in 1904 it reached the highest point of the period, $347.10. This was $50.34, or 17 per cent greater than in 1896. In 1900 the average family expenditure for food was $318.20; in 1891, $322.55; in 1892, $316.65; in 1893, $324.41; in 1894, $309.81; in 1895, $303.91; in 1896, $296.76; in 1897, $299.24; in 1898, $306.70; in 1899, $309.19; in 1900, $314.16; in 1901, $326.90; in 1902, $344.61; in 1903, $342.75; in 1904, $347.10. Secretary Wilson is quoted as saying that "production of food supplies has been decidedly heavier this year." In consequence, he predicts lower prices during the coming winter for meats, poultry, dairy products and other table necessities.

Sound Economy.

Some years ago the traffic in the city of London became so congested that it became necssary to cut, through a crowded portion, a new street. The property that had to be sacrificed for this undertaking was very valuable, being estimated at upwards of twenty-five millions of dollars. Among the buildings doomed were a number of "public houses" and others enjoying the privileges of liquor licenses. At once the question rose as to what should be done with these licenses, and the City Council decided to abandon them. In all, 51 saloons were affected. It was estimated that if the vacant sites of the houses, with the licenses attached, had been sold, the additional value, due to the existence of the licenses, would have amounted to about nine hundred thousand dollars. The council decided to sacrifice this amount of money rather than engage the city in complicity with the business of liquor selling. That this was sound political economy will hardly be questioned by those who are acquainted with the facts. As the liquor traffic is the greatest pauper-making business there is, and as London already has 100,000 men and women who are practically charges upon the public, for the city itself to debauch others of its inhabitants, and take from its treasury money to support them, would not be according to sound business sense. This action of the London City Council in considering the morals and souls of its citizens of more value than money derived from licenses is worthy the attention of every municipality.

A Step Toward Christian Unity.

History is not always repeating itself. It does something more than mark time. For awhile events may seem to have a circular movement, but in the fullness of time a step of real visible progress is made. It has been so in the movement for Christian union. For a long time the sentiment of union has been gaining power, and it has found expression on platforms, in resolutions and in newspaper articles. In later years it has found expression in tentative efforts toward practical co-operation in local communities and some states, and this culminating at last in a national federation movement. But there was nothing very decisive in all these attempts, as regards the co-operation of the religious bodies themselves, toward bringing about a closer unification in order to promote the kingdom of God. The time had come for a step forward.

This step was taken at the Interchurch Conference which concluded its sessions in New York City on Tuesday evening of last week. Composed of representatives from thirty religious bodies, representing eighteen million Christians, this conference adopted, with practical unanimity, a basis of federation to be submitted to the various Christian bodies represented in the conference for their approval. We publish this plan of federation elsewhere, and commend it to the study of our readers. We reserve comments on it for another place, and in this article would call attention to the characteristics of the conference itself—its spirit and some of its leading ideas

This great gathering of representative men from the Protestant bodies of this country was a unique event in the history of the world. We venture the prediction that it belongs to a class of events which require the perspective of history to reveal their true greatness. Its object was nothing less than an attempt, on the part of the Christian bodies represented, to find a way for the fulfillment, as far as possible at the present time, of the prayer of Jesus, our divine Lord, for the oneness of his followers. From beginning to end this was the keynote of the conference. In no convention, not even in any of our own which we have ever attended, was the prayer of Jesus for the unity of his disciples so often quoted and so fervently dwelt upon as expressing a desire for unity whose fulfillment was necessary to the conversion of the world. This fact in itself, when we consider the large number of religious bodies represented, is enough to make the heart of every Christian rejoice who believes in and is laboring for the unity of a divided church.

It scarcely needs to be said that in the judgment of a large majority of the speakers the union which Christ prayed for does not involve the dissolution of denominational organizations. Many of them took occasion to say that they did not believe that organic union was feasible, meaning by organic union the formation of one great ecclesiasticism embodying all Christendom. Of course, those of us who have been pleading for Christian unity for these many years do not believe in, or hope for, any such ecclesiasticism. What we mean by organic unity is an organism, not an organization. In other words, we mean such vital relation between Christ and his disciples as will involve the unity of his disciples. This does not mean uniformity of beliefs in doctrines, in forms of organization, or in modes of worship. It does involve, however, according to Paul, one body, one Spirit, one hope of our calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and one God and Father of all. Organic unity of this kind involves the truth that a member of any one local church is, by virtue of that fact, eligible to membership in every other local church, and that there are no barriers to mutual fellowship and co-operation.

The distinctive forward step which has been taken by this conference is this: The several religious bodies, through their delegates or representatives, said, by the adoption of this basis, that they were ready and willing to subordinate their denominational peculiarities to the common and fundamental interests of the kingdom of God. They said to one another, by this act, "We will meet, not upon our differences, but upon the great vital truths which we hold in common, and co-operate, as far as possible, in promoting the moral and religious welfare of mankind. The things we hold in common are vastly more important than the things about which we differ, and while we do not see our way clear as yet, nor do we now feel it to be necessary, to abandon our local organizations, we do feel the time has come when we should manifest to the world our unity in the things which we hold in common and to make common cause against common foes." This is an immense gain. It is a long stride forward in the direction of Christian unity. None of us sees fully, perhaps, what will be the outcome, but we all feel sure that the Lord is leading us into greater brotherliness of feeling, into greater unity of faith, into a better understanding of each other, and a greater respect for each other, and hence, into a closer unity for the advancement of God's kingdom in the world.

The spirit of this meeting was most fraternal and Christian. The fellowship was delightful. There was a glow of brotherly love that seemed to pervade all hearts. Before this rising tide of unity, denominational divisions seemed to sink out of sight. At the close of an impressive session a prominent Methodist, at the head of one of the universities in the country, sitting just in front of us, turned toward us and said: "Would you love me any better if I were a member of your church?" He then added: "If my son were preparing for the ministry, I would just as soon he would enter the ministry among the Disciples of Christ as in my own church. This is what this conference has done for me!" Another of the great leaders of one of the religious bodies said, as we introduced him to some of our ministers: "I ought to be ashamed to confess it, perhaps, but I must say that your body has risen upon my horizon very largely since we began the preparation for this conference." This sort of feeling was mutual and very general. No one could hear the great addresses of the great men who spoke on that platform and feel the touch of their spirits, without having a greater respect for the religious bodies they represented. This mutual respect for each other, as every one must see, is a necessary condition of that closer unity which our Lord desired and prayed for.

But, with all this spirit of brotherliness and Christian love, and catholicity of spirit, there was a clear and frank recognition of existing differences without any diminution of respect and love because of such differences. In other words, liberty was just as much in evidence as unity. No unity was advocated at the expense of freedom of thought and expression. The union advocated was not one, as Bishop Vincent put it, "of judicious silence." Every man is to be permitted to utter the truth as God gives him to see the truth. We have reached a state of Christian manhood in which we can differ and be brothers.

It is scarcely necessary to say that the representatives from our own churches were delighted with the spirit and sentiment of the conference, and were of one mind, as far as we heard, as to the great door of opportunity opened for us as advocates of Christian unity, and of our duty to enter heartily into co-operation with our Christian brethren of other religious bodies in bringing about closer unity among the people of God. The religious body that stands aloof from this great movement of Protestantism toward unity would be certain to brand itself as a sect unmoved by the rising tide of union sentiment that is drawing Christian people into fraternity and co-operation. Every Protestant body in Christendom must go on record on its relation to this movement of the churches for the fulfillment of our Lord's prayer "that they all may be one."

Plan of Federation.

In another place we print the plan of federation adopted by the Interchurch Conference in New York City last week, to be submitted to the representative gatherings of the various religious bodies for their approval. This plan or basis of federation is remarkable quite as much for what it omits as for what it contains. Notice the absence, for instance, of any formulated creed. "The essential oneness of the Christian churches of America," is not in any creedal statement, but "in Jesus Christ as their divine Lord and Savior." Notice, too, that it is to be a federation for the co-operation of "the churches of Christ in America." Notice, further, that the term "Christian bodies" takes the place of denominations. There is a coming back here to Scriptural terminology that is refreshing. The heart of this federation is to be found in the preamble which states the basis of unity, and in the objects it proposes to promote. No one among us, least of all, can find any objection either to this preamble, or to the five specified objects to which this federation looks. The remainder of the plan is details of organization, with the exception of articles four and five, which relate to the authority of the council and the representation of the various bodies in it. It will be seen, as a matter of course, that the Federal Council which it is proposed to form shall have no authority "to draw up a common creed, or form of government or of worship, or in any way to limit the full autonomy of the Christian bodies adhering to it."

It is difficult to see how a simpler plan could be formed that would make an efficient organization. Nor could it be made broader without letting down the bars entirely and making no distinction between those who acknowledge the divinity and Lordship of Jesus Christ, and those who refuse such acknowledgment. We believe this basis of co-operation will serve the purpose of bringing the evangelical Protestant bodies into closer unity and into more efficient co-operation, leading to a better mutual understanding which will lead on ultimately to the more perfect union for which we and our fathers have been pleading for nearly a century. We can not doubt for a moment that God is in this movement, and that he is going to use it for the unity of his church, for the evangelization of the world, and for the glory of his blessed name. This being the case, it is of the very first importance that we, who represent the religious movement that has for its central purpose the unity of God's people, should give no lame, halting or hesitant endorsement to this movement, but enter into it heartily as being in the direct line, so far as it goes, to the object which we have in view. This should be done at the very first opportunity, as a notification to all the other Protestant bodies that we who have been leaders in the agitation of this question are also at the front when it comes to any practical plan of co-operation that will manifest more fully our unity to the world and will tend to the cultivation of a still more perfect union.

In an informal discussion among our own representatives, during the conference, one of our strong young men of the East, Brother Bates, expressed the situation in a very lucid way when he said that there were three steps to be taken in order to union among the various Protestant bodies. The first of these is comity, or the treatment of each other with mutual respect. The second step is federation, or working together according to some plan for the promotion of common ends. The third step is what we call organic union in which denominational lines shall be so far obliterated at least as to offer no obstruction to the fullest fellowship and co-operation among all the followers of Christ. We have passed the stage of comity and have now entered upon the period of co-operation, and this, it is hoped, will lead to a still completer union. It is impossible to reverse the order of these steps, or to omit any one of them. The chief obstacle, he said, in the way of present organic union between the Disciples of Christ and the Free Baptists is that we have been trying to pass at once from comity to organic unity without the intervening step of working together so far as possible, in order to understand each other.

In the light of these truths—and they seem to us to be self-evident truths—the folly of standing aloof from all co-operative movement until the religious world is ready for organic union is apparent. It is like trying to swim without going into the water—an experiment, we believe, that has never proved successful in a single instance. The significance of the adoption, by the Interchurch Conference, of this plan of federation is, that it means that the various Christian bodies mentioned are now ready for the second step, and in this we all should not only rejoice, but thank God and take courage for the unfinished work that lies before us.

Conference Notes and Comments.

The hospitality of the New York churches in entertaining the delegates to the Interchurch Conference free of cost at the hotels, and in otherwise caring for them, could not be exceeded by any western or southern hospitality. Their liberality was on a scale commensurate with the greatness of the occasion and its deep significance. All honor to the enterprising business men of the churches whose liberal gifts made it possible for many delegates to be present at the Conference. The beautiful button in gold and blue, representing the right hand holding the seven stars, with which each delegate was decorated, is said to have cost $1,200, and to have been the gift of one man. These will be preserved, no doubt, as perpetual mementos of a historic meeting.

The following representatives from the Disciples of Christ, or the Christian churches, were present at the Conference, besides a few others whose names we do not recall: H. C. Kendrick, E. C. Sanderson, G. B. Townsend, E. J. Teagarden, Phil. Parsons, J. B. Lichtenberger, — Rowlinson, E. T. C. Bennett, S. J. Marshall, C. A. Young, S. F. Willis, A. E. Corey, T. E. Cramblet, W. D. Ryan, B. O. Aylesworth, M. L. Bates, J. M. Van Horn, F. D. Power, W. T. Moore, M. L. Streator, Robert Moffett, S. H. Bartlett, B. S. Ferrall, L. G. Batman, H. L. Willett, F. D. Kerschner, J. H. Garrison, M. E. Harlan, J. L. Garvin, Hill M. Bell, Robert Christie, S. H. Hunt, Dr. Eli H. Long, A. J. Wilson and Herbert Martin.

Dr. Roberts, permanent chairman of the Conference, made an admirable presiding officer, and the success of the Conference is largely due to his wisdom, and labor, aided most efficiently by Drs. Sanford, North and Ward. He told us one day he had formed an "organic unity" with the Disciples of Christ. On inquiring how that was, he replied, "My son has married one of your members—a Missouri girl, who is a reader and great admirer of your paper. You must meet her." And we did meet her and found her a most intelligent and zealous young woman from some of our best Missouri blood—the Caldwells, Robinsons and Foxes, of Paris.

We have made no attempt to follow the order of program, in reporting the Conference, as the speeches are all to be printed in a book and we hope to make extracts from them, from time to time, as opportunity may offer and occasion may demand. The publication of that volume will give a mighty impetus to the sentiment and conviction in favor of Christian union, and every one specially interested in that cause should procure a volume when the work is printed.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair has been on wheels for the last two weeks. It has traveled much, seen much, enjoyed much and learned much. It is always an interesting experience for a man of the West to visit the East. The change is sufficiently marked to make the trip restful, even though it be full of multitudinous duties. The scenery is different, there is a difference in climate, and people are sufficiently different for any observing man to know what section of the country he was in if he had no other means of locating his whereabouts. But the greatest difference one sees, as he goes East, is the larger number of people to the square acre or mile on the Eastern seaboard. There are crowds of people jostling each other everywhere. They crowd the hotels, throng the streets, and seem to fill to overflowing, the elevated, the subway and surface street car lines. For the most part they are a well-dressed and a well-behaved class of people, wonderfully intent upon going somewhere and doing something. When one of our Western secretaries tells of the territorial greatness of his field, and how many New England states it would have room for without being crowded, an Eastern secretary matches it by telling how many thousands and millions of people there are in his diocese; and if their accessibility by the gospel were equal to that of the people of the West, the argument would be irresistible. But the Westerner comes back with a plea for his territory because of the new and formative condition of things, where we have but to sow and reap, as against the stable and settled condition of things in the sturdy East. The final answer, however, is that we need churches East as well as West to bear testimony to our plea for the unity of the church on the New Testament foundation of faith in Christ and personal loyalty to him.

In speaking of the differences, however, between the East and the West, another fact which strikes the Westerner on his arrival in New York is, that he is among a foreign people. Everywhere he hears his mother tongue spoken with a foreign brogue, or else he hears men speaking in unknown tongues. Only about twenty per cent of the population of New York City is native born. There are thirty-five daily newspapers published in other tongues than the English. It is the meeting place of the nations. Very truly did Bishop Galloway, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in his eloquent address before the Conference, say that "the problem of the negro in the South sinks into insignificance in comparison with the stupendous problem of the foreign population in the cities of the North and East." It is in the presence of so great and serious a problem as that of foreign immigration that the federation of American churches appears to be so vastly important. If we do not stand together in the face of the manifold perils which threaten our Christianity and our Christian civilization, how can we hope to avert the dangers which threaten us? If Jesus Christ be the Savior, not of individuals alone, but of states and nations as well, it is infinitely important that those who hold to the Lordship and saving power of Jesus Christ, should combine their forces to spread his Gospel throughout our nation and the world. The problem of Tammany in New York City, finds its solution in the united and spiritually-quickened church to antagonize the evil forces which co-operate for the supremacy. And yet, in spite of Tammany and the foreign element, no American can fail to be proud of the magnificent metropolis of the New World. Its splendid palaces of trade, its beautiful thoroughfares and parks, its system of rapid communication, the great ocean steamers that land at its port, and the constant swarm of vessels, large and small, that throng the Hudson and East Rivers, the great hive of human industry, where Commerce has its seat and Capital its headquarters, make it a charming place for one to live who prefers the noise and bustle and activity of a great metropolis to the quieter and less strenuous life of the country or a smaller city.

It was the privilege of the Easy Chair Editor to preach twice upon the Lord's day during the Conference. In the morning we preached at the First Free Baptist Church, in Brooklyn, whose pastor, Dr. Lord, made a special request for us to do so, in view of the fact that a half dozen members of the committee of the Free Baptists to confer with a similar committee of the Disciples, would be present. The ministers received the sermon very cordially and seemed satisfied with its orthodoxy. While speaking of the Free Baptists we may say that we had the privilege of acting as proxy in the meeting of the committees in three of the four sessions which they held. The chief obstacle in the way of getting on very much, is the lack of acquaintanceship between the two bodies. The Eastern wing of the Free Baptists, especially, are conservative and know little of our preachers by actual contact with them. They have heard, however, that we unduly stress baptism and do not sufficiently emphasize the spiritual side of Christianity and they are, naturally, cautious about forming an alliance with people who they fear would be champions of the externals in religion, at the expense of its more vital part. An interchange of pulpits, of literature, and a mingling together in conventions, would do a great deal to relieve their minds of this impression, which was never true of the representative men of the body, and is less true today than it ever was in our history. Plans were agreed upon, however, for continuing the communication between the two committees, and it is to be hoped, without any hurry or undue anxiety on the subject, a mutual understanding may be reached. It was a great pleasure to speak for Brother Lichtenberger's congregation at Lenox Avenue & 119th Street, in the evening. There was a fine audience and a most cordial and brotherly response to the sermon and to the personal greetings which we bore from their former pastor, Dr. J. M. Philputt, to the congregation which he served so long. This church expects to have Brother Scoville in a meeting with them in February next. We also met with Brother Christie of the 56th Street Church, which is at present without a pastor, and Bro. S. T. Willis, of the 169th Street Church, and a number of young ministers who are taking special courses of study in Union Seminary and Columbia University. These New York churches have problems with which our churches in the West and middle West are wholly unacquainted.

Our trip East and return led us through our National Capital, and, of course, we paid our respects to Bishop Power, the man who tells our readers, weekly, how the world looks "As Seen from the Dome." It is always a pleasure in passing to run out to 1307 Wallach Place and see the quiet, unostentations home-life of the good bishop and his wife, and to sit at their table. This we did both going to and returning from New York. On our return trip we had the pleasure also, under the guidance of Brother and Sister Power, of participating in a turkey dinner at the 9th Street Church, where Bro. E. B. Bagby presides over the largest church, numerically, we now have in the capital. Brother Bagby, like Brother Power, has become a great power in Washington and has built up one of the strongest churches of the brotherhood. We also had time, before our train left, to visit a reception at the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, for which Brother Power has been the pastor for thirty years, where Brother Wilson, a rising young lawyer, and an efficient teacher in the Sunday school, was holding a class entertainment. Brother Power showed us through the splendid building where President Garfield, before and during his presidency, used to sit. A silver plate on the back of the seat bears his name, with date of his birth and death. This is the Garfield Memorial Church, as it is sometimes called, which the brethren throughout the country helped in some measure to build. It was a great investment. It would be difficult to overestimate the good influences that have gone forth from this church and its presiding bishop, not only in Washington, but throughout the country and the world. We are glad to know that Brother and Sister Power are to go on the oriental cruise with Bishop Tyler, of Denver, in February next, to be absent about seventy days. These venerable young brethren need the rest very much, and our readers need the good things they will write about during their travels

At this writing the Easy Chair is located in the city of Pittsburg, the scene of the most remarkable simultaneous evangelistic campaign ever held by our churches. It is nearing its close, at this time, and we are tarrying here a few days on our homeward journey for the double purpose of meeting with our Centennial Committee and preaching a few times in the down town meetings which are held at noon each week day, except Saturday, and at three o'clock in the afternoon on Lord's day. We shall have a full report of the results when the meeting is completed, and perhaps in time for the news department of this issue: so we shall only take space here to say that the brethren of Pittsburg and vicinity have set before the brotherhood an inspiring example of what a well-planned, united and vigorously-executed campaign can accomplish in the way of converting sinners, edifying the churches and making a permanent impression upon the religious life of the city. These splendid results have not been achieved without systematic work, personal sacrifices and liberal support. Already more than 1,500 additions have been won to the churches co-operating—a much larger growth, within the past four weeks, than was made for the first fifty years of our work in this city! Isn't that a most impressive object lesson of the value of co-operation in an earnest aggressive evangelistic campaign? Preparations are now complete for a great union communion service at the down town meeting at the Nixon theatre on tomorrow, the Lord's day, and this, with the evening service, will close this historic campaign, and concerning it we shall have something to say later.

We have only space here to say, concerning our joint meeting of the Centennial Committee and the local committee in and about Pittsburg, appointed by the San Francisco Convention, that we had a full meeting, and outlined a great work for the next four years.

W. R. Warren, who has been the secretary and one of the leading spirits in this simultaneous evangelistic campaign, was elected as the leader of our Centennial Campaign and will enter upon his work the first of December. All our missionary and other general organizations and colleges have been asked to co-operate in furnishing the necessary funds to carry on a vigorous campaign for the next four years, looking to the enlargement of our work along every line—evangelization, home and foreign missions, college endowments, benevolences, newspaper circulation, Bible reading, deepening the spiritual life, bringing into line our lagging churches, increasing our Sunday schools in attendance and efficiency, and strengthening all the weak places in our line of battle. It will require the co-operation of press, pulpit, and business men, to make this campaign achieve results worthy of the event we celebrate—the completion of a century of history as a religious movement.

THE FAITH AND WORKS OF WOMEN

Matt. 15:28

By Walter Scott Priest

The Old and the New Testament Scriptures are redolent of the perfume of the faith and love and service of Godlike and Christlike women. No story is more thrilling in interest, or of deeper significance, or more lasting in value, than the story of the devotion to truth, the unwavering fidelity, the undaunted courage, of womankind in all ages of the world. How she has illuminated the dark pages of history! How patiently she has borne whatever burdens she has had placed upon her! How she has influenced the world for good! In the ongoing of the world, in the progress of the race in the sciences, in literature, in the arts, in her guiding and lasting influence in the home—in all these varied fields of human endeavor how woman has wrought for the uplifting and saving of the sons and daughters of men! Brilliant are the pages of Holy Writ with the name of Eve, the mother of the race; Sarah, the faithful wife of Abraham; Hannah, who dedicated her son, Samuel, to the service of the Lord; Deborah, who judged Israel and prophesied; Ruth, the charming Moabitess; Esther, the patriotic queen, and hosts of others recorded in the Old Testament. In the New there are the Marys and Marthas, the Elizabeths and Annas, the Dorcases and Lydias, the Priscillas, the Loises and Eunices, the Phoebes, the Tryphenas and Tryphosas, and many others whose life was filled with good deeds, who labored in the Lord, who have entered into their rest, whose names are in the Lamb's book of life!

The Christian religion has always appealed successfully to the heart of women. It is no wonder that so many millions of them have given their lives in faith and devotion to the service of the Son of God. Jesus may well be called the great Emancipator of womankind. Until he came into the world not a nation on earth, with the single exception of the Jewish—and even that not so perfectly as might have been—regarded woman as the equal of man, created to stand by his side, his complement, was assured that her daughter would be the boasted qualities of man-made religions—and we freely acknowledge all the good in all systems of morals and religion—they have always regarded woman as an inferior creature; as something to be bartered, to be abused, to be put out of the way upon the slightest pretext. She is the slave, the toy, the plaything of her lord. It remained for the Christian religion to teach that in the beginning God created the male and the female equal; that the two are made one flesh and that together, sharing each other's joys and sorrows, supported and supporting, they are to walk hand in hand down the stream of time, working out the great problems of life and destiny. Nor is it a matter of surprise that in the various avenues of Christian service woman finds such a fruitful field for the exercise of her wonderful heart-power, her love and patience, her kindness and gentleness, her devotion and sacrifice in the preaching and teaching of the Gospel of Christ. In visiting the sick and ministering to the dying; in feeding the hungry and clothing the naked; aye, in multiform ways, she is helping onward the kingdom of God. In the churches of Christ this activity has, in recent years, been most wonderfully augmented, and most successfully prosecuted through the organization known as the "Christian Woman's Board of Missions." Organized in 1874, it has gathered into its ranks more than forty thousand of our sisterhood, raising annually nearly $200,000, and preaching the gospel at home and abroad. The Lord is blessing in a most signal way the labors of these consecrated women, and our devout prayer today is that their numbers may be very rapidly increased, their knowledge and vision of the world's need enlarged, and their liberality multiplied in this glorious work. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has accomplished wonders, viewed from every standpoint. Of some of these I wish to speak.

1. It Has Discovered Woman to Herself—If it had never done anything else, this would have been sufficient to demonstrate its worth. For many years the Church of God suffered and was hindered in its conquest of the world for Christ, because all the powers of woman's faith and love and devotion lay dormant. It was taught that woman must keep silence in the churches—and silent she was, save in the one act of singing. Overlooking the fact that the Prophet Joel had said: "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions: and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit. And I will shew wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come. And it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered; for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call." Forgetting that it is Paul, who is always quoted as saying: "Let the women keep silence in the churches, for it is not permitted to them to speak," who says in 1 Cor. 11:5: "But every woman praying or prophesying with her head unveiled, dishonoreth her head," a very wise admonition to the Christian women in that day, for the unveiled head was a sign of unchastity; and, naturally, the apostle did not wish the character of those who prayed or prophesied in public called in question. In spite of the fact that Phoebe was a deaconess in the church in Cenchrea, commended for her faithfulness in that office by Paul, and that the Tryphenas and Tryphosas, and others who labored with him in the Lord, were worthy of all praise and help by the churches—in spite of all these clear evidences that the women in apostolic times did pray and preach and labor much in the Lord, it was held by some that she had no right so to do, and that all the praying and preaching in public was to be done by the men. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions and other agencies, along with a better interpretation of the Scriptures, have shown that women may, as opportunity presents itself, declare the unsearchable riches of Christ to those who know him not, and in a variety of ways make known the Gospel of our Lord Jesus.

2. It Has Increased Her Faith—The very fact that woman has been shown what she can accomplish in Christian service has had a tendency to increase her already large stock of faith. This is always a result of engaging in Gospel work and produces the same effect on men and women alike. I dare say that every man who does something to advance the cause of Christ in the earth will have his own faith increased in proportion as he labors. Perhaps the reason so many men in our churches have so little interest and so little faith is because they do not work at religion very hard—like the little boy who was once asked by a gentleman to what church his father belonged, and replied: "He is a Mefodis', but he don't work at it very hard." The story of our text tells the same truth I am now emphasizing. The Syrophenician woman, in our text, had her faith most sorely tried by the apparent harsh reply to her request that the Lord would cast the demon out of her daughter. When he said to her: "It is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it to dogs," quick as a flash she replied: "Truth, Lord; yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their masters' table." Nothing could drive her from the divine Healer's presence until she was assured that her daughter would be released from her dreadful thralldom. She was tried and not found wanting. So has the sisterhood of the churches of Christ been tried, sometimes as if by fire, and it has come forth with increased faith.

3. It Has Afforded Her a Special Field of Labor—The chief business of the Church of Christ is to save men and women from sin and the consequences of sin. In a work of such magnitude every member of the body of Christ should be engaged, and there is an urgent call upon the sisters, because they may have a peculiar influence over women and children to bring them to Christ, and many of these may be approached by women who could never be reached by men. And then, again, the work of the auxiliary society may supply hands and hearts otherwise unemployed with some really efficient work. What a blessing it would be if thousands of Christian women who have wealth and social position would occupy their time in doing a work that would tell largely in the direction of religious culture, rather than spend their time in a round of social gaiety, in dress and receptions, in games and balls, which elevate neither the mind nor the soul!

Beloved sisters, let me plead with you to engage in this divine enterprise. Let me urge you to catch larger glimpses of the world's need of Christ and to behold the opportunities which are now placed before you in this enlightened and Christian age. Will you not break the alabaster box of your precious love and pour it out at the feet of the Lord? God has bestowed upon you most precious gifts of love and gentleness, of faith and devotion, will you not use these God-given powers to advance his kingdom in all the earth?

CHINESE MISSION.

The Chinese mission in Portland, Ore., was opened in 1891 by the First Church, while it was a mission of the Woman's Board. In 1892 the board granted direct help to the work. Later in the same year the board employed Jeu Hawk, a Christian Chinese, a graduate of Drake University, and placed him in charge of the mission. In 1900 he was succeeded by Louie Hugh and his wife, who are still working faithfully in the mission. Day school, night school, Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, street preaching and house-to-house visiting are the forms of work. The school enrollment for 1905 was 98. During the year 198 sick Chinese were cared for. There were ten conversions. Since the opening of the mission there have been more than 100 conversions. Several converts have returned to China as Christian workers, and the mission supports one of these. Each month the board receives an offering from this mission; in this it sets an example that is worthy of emulation in many quarters.

THE WORK OF THE CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS IN THE UNITED STATES

C. W. B. M. DAY.

The National Missionary Convention has set apart the first Lord's day in December for the presentation of the work of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in the churches and the taking of an offering to enlarge its field and forces. This is the one opportunity of the year to place before the people the great work that God has committed to this organization.

This opportunity means sharing in the opening of new territory to light, to right progress, to the attainment of the best ideals. It means childhood made happy; the sick and suffering ministered unto. It means Christian education for thousands of young people and a stronger and nobler manhood and womanhood for those reached by the ministry of this organization.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions works in the United States, Jamaica, India, Mexico, Porto Rico and South America, having three hundred and thirty-six missionaries, teachers and helpers in these fields. Its work is steadily growing, hence its needs are greater than ever before.

To every church this first Lord's day of December means that God will be satisfied with nothing less than our best efforts to make this a great opportunity to teach the people of this work and its needs.

Give an offering for this work. Forward it to the corresponding secretary,

MRS. HELEN E. MOSES, 152 E. Market St., Indianapolis, Ind.

The following are the states in which the work is conducted and the organizers:

An Important Mountain Work.

Two visits made to Hazel Green, Ky., last winter impressed me with the wisdom of our Woman's Board in establishing a school there. No better place for this work could be found, situated as it is in almost the very center of the mountain region of eastern Kentucky. I was asked to deliver an address on education to the students at the dedication of the Sarah K. Yancey dormitory. I prepared myself as carefully as I would have done had I expected to speak to our Kentucky University students; and I found the student body just as responsive, just as quick to see a point, as any young people I ever spoke before. Shortly after this visit, I returned to preach for ten days. The good impression made by the young people on my first visit was only deepened by this second visit. I never had more sympathetic audiences than I had there. A large number of students confessed their faith in Christ. We truly had a season of refreshing. The success of our little meeting was largely due to the co-operation of Brother Cord, Brother Derthick and the other members of the faculty.

This meeting gave me an opportunity to visit the class rooms. I was impressed with the thoroughness of the work done, and with the religious atmosphere that seemed to pervade the school. The young men and women who go out from Hazel Green are carrying with them such knowledge and such principles as will make them useful citizens and intelligent Christians. In the years to come they will be the better husbands and wives, the better fathers and mothers, because of the influence of this splendid institution. Eternity alone will reveal the good our women are doing at Hazel Green.

I have never been to Morehead. If I had, I have no doubt I could speak equally well of the work being done there. Let us enlarge the work at both places. The young people in these schools are blessing us for what we are doing for them, and thousands more are crying out for similar blessings. This is the day of our opportunity in the mountains of Kentucky. Mark Collis.

University Bible Work.

MICHIGAN UNIVERSITY.

At the state convention of Michigan, August, 1892, a committee was appointed to make arrangements for the endowment of an English Bible chair at Ann Arbor, in connection with the University of Michigan. This committee appealed to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions to undertake this work. The subject was considered and approved by the executive committee. At the national convention in the following October, the president, Mrs. Burgess, recommended that it be undertaken. It was a new departure, nothing like it existed. Mrs. Burgess said:

"The way is open, if we have the courage to undertake it, for the establishment of an English Bible chair at the seat of the University of Michigan. The great university is already established there, and the courtesies of the institution are offered to us. The demand for Bible study can be met by endowing a chair and putting a competent teacher in charge."

The recommendation was unanimously adopted by the convention, such men as J. H. Garrison, J. W. McGarvey and B. B. Tyler giving it hearty approval. The work was opened in October 1893, with H. L. Willett and Clinton Lockhart in charge. In 1895 G. P. Coler was called to the service of this work and is still in charge, assisted by the pastor of the church, A. C. Gray. In July, 1903, through the generosity of two friends at Detroit, Mich., a good home for the work was purchased.

Fifteen hundred students have been enrolled in the Bible chair classes. These are now in almost every state in the union, and in China, India, Japan, Africa, Persia, Turkey and Mexico. In all these lands they are giving a clear note of testimony to the truth of God's Word, as they go forward joyfully in his service.

THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA.

At the annual meeting of the National Board in 1897, Col. John B. Cary, Richmond, Va., presented the need for Bible teaching at the University of Virginia, and urged the board to undertake it. H. L. Willett was sent to Charlottesville that winter for a course of Bible lectures, which were well received. The following season the work was opened, C. A. Young being in charge. In 1898, Colonel Cary died. His family, knowing his great interest in the establishment of this work, gave the board $10,000 to establish the John B. Cary lectureship in connection with the university. An endowment fund of $25,000 was completed in 1901, twenty states besides Virginia contributing to it. No building is owned for the conduct of this work. Lectures are delivered and classes held in rooms furnished by the university. W. M. Forrest was placed in charge of this work in 1903, and still directs it.

THE UNIVERSITY OF KANSAS.

The auxiliaries of Kansas had been interested in university Bible work from its inception in 1892, and earnestly desired that such a work be established in connection with the University of Kansas. In February, 1900, G. P. Coler visited Lawrence to judge of the propriety of opening the work. He offered a series of lectures, and received hearty encouragement. He considered the opportunity most promising. In April, 1901, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Payne were placed in charge. Early in 1902 a home for the work was purchased through the generous gifts of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Buergan, Moline, Kan. In March, 1905, Mrs. Mary Myers, Philadelphia, Pa., gave $5,000 toward the erection of a Bible hall adjoining the home. Kansas friends have also contributed to this fund, and a building will soon be erected. This work has a fine place in the university, and receives the hearty support of the faculty.

THE UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS.

The Texas workers are always awake to every good thing, and were interested friends of the university Bible work from its beginning. In 1903 a promise was made the state officers that an experienced man would be sent to Austin to study the field and give his judgment as to the wisdom of establishing Bible work. In February, 1904, W. C. Payne was sent to Austin for a month. He advised undertaking the work. Mrs. M. M. Blanks, of Lockhart, gave her notes for $9,000, paying generous interest on them. She also gave lots valued at $7,000. In 1904, an excellent property, facing the university campus, was purchased as a home for the work, and in May, 1905, Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Jewett were placed in charge of the work.

The necessity for the founding of this institution grew out of the feudal conditions existing in Rowan county at the time. The most deadly of Kentucky feuds was then in progress. Many men on both sides of the conflict, known as the Tolliver-Martin war, had been killed.

The Work Among the Negroes

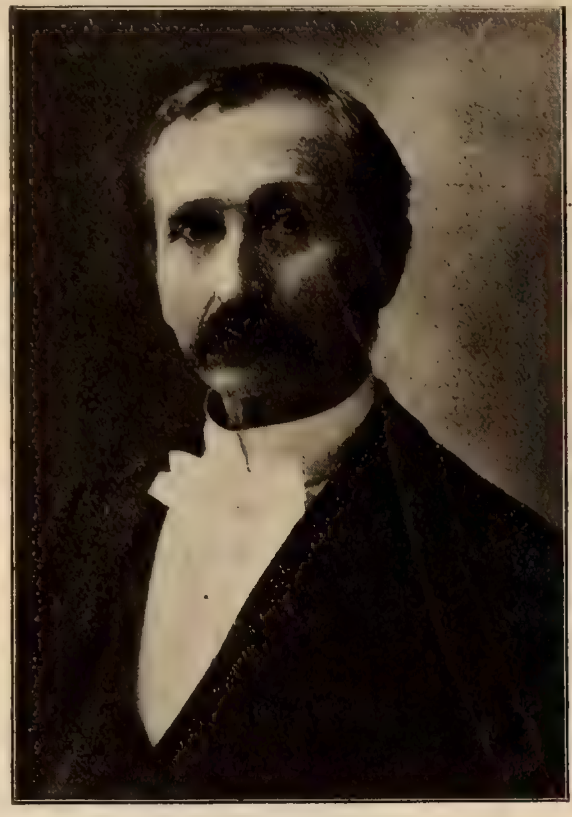
By C. C. Smith

This is but a brief sketch of the efforts of the Church of Christ in behalf of the negroes of the United States, the work which, in the fall of 1900, was assumed by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and which has since been directed and maintained by this board.

The first school established by the Church of Christ among the negroes of the United States was a Bible school, located in Louisville, Ky., opened in 1873, and conducted for four years. In 1875 the Southern Christian Institute was organized, and in 1882 the present site for this school was chosen, and from that time to this a school has been conducted on this site. In 1890 the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization was organized, and the Southern Christian Institute naturally came under the direction of this board. Under this board, before its work was taken by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, two more schools were established, and shortly after the work was assumed by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, another school was added, so that now there are four schools for negroes in the United States directed and maintained, year by year, by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. These schools are: The Southern Christian Institute, located at Edwards, Miss.; the Louisville Bible School, Louisville, Ky.; the Lum Graded School, Lum, Ala.; the Martinsville Institute, Martinsville, Va. Besides the work of these schools several states have been and are aided, year by year, in carrying on evangelistic work.

From the organization of the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization certain principles and ideals have obtained. The policy has been and is to train equally the head, hand and heart; to give a common school, an industrial and a moral education; to train the whole man, making him intelligent, skillful, moral and Christian. Not how much done, but how well done; not how many trained, but how well trained. Again, it has been and is the aim to conduct the work, as far as possible, in a manner acceptable to the Christian people of the south.

Guided by these principles, what is the accomplishment in this work? There is (as an outgrowth of it) a small army of trained workers, earning an honest living by the labor of their hands, and at the same time preaching the Gospel, building up churches, schools and homes, and becoming recognized leaders of their people. Again, there have been sent forth many well-trained young men into the ministry. We have property valued at more than the entire cash expenditure of the work; while training their hands to skill they have been led to minister unto themselves in building their own school houses, homes and churches. From the four schools, which it is the endeavor to have centers of knowledge, wisdom and the "Truth which makes free," many young negro men and women are going forth each year to minister unto others; to become leaders of their own race in the sections where their lot is cast; the little leaven which is to leaven the whole lump; the few by which the many are to become uplifted.



A. J. THOMPSON,
Principal of the Louisville Bible School.

The Ohio Sewing Room at the Lum Graded School.

We believe that the wisest, most Christian men, north and south, now fully believe that the surest, the quickest, the safest way to solve the "negro problem" is by Christian industrial education.

In this crisis of affairs, Gen. William T. Withers, of Lexington, Ky., who had been with Pemberton at Vicksburg, offered the Kentucky Christian Missionary Convention enough money to pay the salary of a teacher and preacher for Morehead. The offer was accepted, and the power of Christian education was put to the test in conflict with a mountain feud.

For 13 years it had been supported by the Kentucky Christian Missionary Convention. On July 31, 1900, it passed under the control of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Under this new and competent management the buildings have been repaired and enlarged, the number of teachers has been increased, the courses of study have been strengthened, and a new epoch in its history has begun.

The school began with one charity pupil in attendance the first day, but the past year 363 were enrolled, from twenty-one counties in Kentucky and five states of the union. There have been enrolled in the school since its founding 1,500 different pupils, of whom 500 have been teachers, and these have taught, at the least calculation, 100,000 pupils; so the work has multiplied itself many times. Though there are industrial features in the school, such as a printing office and broom factory, the service which the school renders in teaching teachers, and teaching them to be Christian workers in the communities to which they go, is the greatest office of the school. In this, also, we find the brightest outlook for the future. The Kentucky and West Virginia mountains will soon be served in a large measure by teachers of this and kindred schools, who will carry with them the blessings of Christian education and culture.

A Bible department is being conducted by the principal of the school, in which many young men and women are being trained for special work as ministers and missionaries. One young man in this department walked last year 180 miles to reach the school. F. C. Button.

What We Have Done and How We Did It

By B. B. Tyler

The last dollar of the indebtedness of the South Broadway Church, Denver, was paid Tuesday, November 21, 1905. The mortgage will be burned Lord's day evening, December 3.

William Bayard Craig organized the South Broadway Church, served for a number of years as pastor without salary, and led the brethren in the erection of their splendid house of worship. He will be the chief speaker at the time of the burning of the mortgage. The panic of 1893 was the occasion of this debt. Abundant provision had been made for the payment of all debts. No one is to blame for the fact that the church has been compelled to carry during all these years a heavy debt. No person foresaw the panic. No one could look into the future and see the protracted season of hard times that followed the terrific financial cyclone of '93.

Brother Craig laid wisely and well the foundations for our present prosperous work. As a pioneer in this part of the world he was broad-minded, sweet-spirited and far-sighted. He erected this fine stone edifice in our part of Denver before the people were here. Brother Craig is a man of visions. He saw the people coming, and prepared for them. He is aslo a man of unusual courage. He dared to attempt the apparently impossible. Under his skillful management the ideal becomes real.

There is not space in this connection to recite the story of Uncle John Sutton's liberality in those early days; nor is it necessary. The story has been told again and again of how Uncle John gave a little fortune—all that he possessed—to this enterprise, and then requested the privilege of serving the church as sexton. The story is one of supreme devotion and liberality.

Following Bayard Craig in the pastorate came Walter Scott Priest, now in Columbus, O., and Samuel B. Moore, now in St. Louis. Two better men never served any church. They held the pastorate of the South Broadway Church at the most difficult period in its experience. I do not see how the church could have been better served than it was served by these good men. In the more than five years that I have spent in Denver I have not heard so much as a single word of disparagement of these faithful brethren. I esteem it an honor to be a successor of such men as William Bayard Craig, Walter Scott Priest and Samuel B. Moore. But for their noble Christian lives and faithful services in Denver it would not be possible to write, on this twenty-second day of November, 1905, as I do, that the South Broadway Christian Church owns as beautiful a building as is owned by the Disciples, worth, at a conservative estimate, $65,000, absolutely free from debt. The man who is in at the hour of victory is too often the man who receives all the praise. This is not just. In the case at this moment under consideration it would be most unfair. In these words I am doing all I can to prevent this injustice. "Honor to whom honor is due." The honor of this great victory belongs to his predecessors—not to the present pastor.

Girls' Dormitory—Southern Christian Institute.

When I came to the South Broadway Church, in the month of October, 1900, there was a debt of $10,000 on the property, secured by mortgage. There was also a floating indebtedness of several hundred dollars. The original debt had been reduced to this figure by contributions and the sale of certain real estate which had been secured for the church by Brother Craig.

After carefully studying the field, and after becoming acquainted with the people, my plan of campaign was formed. The great task before us was the payment of this debt. I said: "The way to free the church from this incubus of debt is to build the congregation up in numbers and intensify the spiritual vitality of the body." This plan has been steadfastly adhered to. Two years passed before there was apparent any serious thought of freedom from debt. After about this period of time there began to be indications of interest in this matter. This interest was carefully watched and fostered. It began to be intense. A blind man could see that the time to strike was at hand. Sunday, December 7, 1902, was fixed upon as the date. Mr. Jospeh W. Powell, of Buffalo, New York, an expert in the payment of church debts, was engaged to lead us in preparing for the meeting to be held on December 7, and to make the appeal for money. Meantime, Mr. F. Peyton Woolston, a young business man brimful of energy and enthusiasm, and Mr. A. E. Fierce, an elder in the church, a man who has the confidence and love of all who know him, practically gave up their business for weeks in making preparation for the grand rally. The day came, and we were ready. Twelve thousand dollars were asked for—an amount barely sufficient at that time to cover all indebtedness. The response exceeded this sum by three or four thousand dollars. The pledges made on that day were to be redeemed in three years. The amount of the debt was put in the form of bonds, each bond representing $36. If a person subscribed for one bond, he became responsible for $36 of the debt, interest and principal. The sooner the bond

The Federation Conference AS SEEN FROM THE DOME

By F. D. Power

Doubtless one of the most remarkable meetings of the century was the "Inter-church Conference on Federation," which met in Carnegie Hall, in the great city of New York, November 15-21. Such a representation of the religious bodies of America has never been seen before in any convention of believers; nor have such pronounced utterances on the vital theme of Christian union ever been heard in any gathering of such diverse elements. It is questionable, indeed, whether such a meeting would have been possible until now. Those who undertook it surely had great faith and courage, and its success has surpassed the expectations of the most sanguine friends of the movement. Over six hundred delegates, representing twenty-eight leading Protestant bodies, got together, and two thousand or more church members gathered with them, the whole body standing for eighteen millions of communicants, and the great object before them being the breaking down of denominational hostility and the bringing of the churches into closer relationship. No one could look upon the great conference and listen to the fervent words of prayer and counsel and not be mightily moved. Alexander Campbell would have journeyed a thousand miles to attend it. In no religious convocation have I ever heard such stress laid on the Seventeenth of John. Many of the ablest addresses had a most welcome and familiar ring to those of us who have been schooled as Disciples of Christ. The fathers of our movement for Christian unity seemed to be presiding over the sessions; or, better still, the Spirit of God was evidently directing the servants of our divine Master in their deliberations and actions. The conference is one of the chief causes of national thanksgiving. This and the President's successful stroke in the settlement of the war in the east are the great events for which the doxology should be sung on Thursday, November 30, 1905.

The purpose of this federation movement is well understood. "To secure co-operation among churches and Christian workers throughout the United States for the more effective promotion of the interests of the kingdom of God," is the general aim. Distinctly has it been stated from the beginning that there is no intention of welding all churches into one, but to bring about a federation of denominations created by the denominations themselves. The basis is not one of creedal statement or governmental form, but of co-operative work and effort. The organization is to have power only to advise the constituent bodies represented. No man's conscience, no man's liberty, no man's individual convictions are jeopardized. The conference in New York declared that "in the providence of God, the time has come when it seems fitting more fully to manifest the essential oneness of the Christian churches of America in Jesus Christ as their divine Lord and Savior, and to promote the spirit of fellowship, service and co-operation among them." The thought is simply that the great Christian bodies of America should stand together and lead in the discussion of, and give an impulse to, all great movements that make for righteousness. Questions like that of the saloon, marriage and divorce, the desecration of the Lord's day, the social evil, child labor, relation of labor and capital, the bettering of the conditions of the laboring classes, the moral and religious training of the young, the problem created by foreign immigration, and international arbitration—all questions, indeed, in which the voice of the churches should be heard—concern Christians of every name, and demand their united and concerted action if the church is to lead effectively in the conquest of the world for Christ.

With a view to national federation a conference was held in New York in the winter of 1900. Then followed the assembly in Washington in February, 1902, which sent out the call for this New York meeting. Twenty-eight churches, or religious bodies, approved the call and sent their ablest representatives to the recent conference. Local federation has existed and successfully carried on its work in many sections of the country, and in many cities and towns for years. New York City has for a decade been organized, and a thousand churches are co-operating, and in spirit and scope include every interest for which the churches at present or in future can work together. Its declared purpose is to organize and assist the churches and Christian organizations in the city for co-operative work in behalf of the spiritual, physical, educational, economic and social interests of its family life, and to represent the Christian sentiment of the city in regard to moral issues. They have their primal Federation, and are working systematically, unitedly, effectively. One church, or even one denomination, is utterly swallowed up in the metropolis. Combined, they are felt as a mighty spiritual force. Such federative work for the common kingdom is also doing much in Maine, in Rhode Island, in New York state, and in India, China and Japan. In many cities and towns the federated churches have in concerted effort taken a religious census of the population, organized co-operative parish work, discovered and directed to the churches of their choice families that had dropped away from church attendance, directed concerted effort for the removal of social evils, the cleansing of centers of vice and corruption and promotion of temperance, observance of the Lord's day and general morality, and have worked together in the cause of civic righteousness. Co-operation has been sought after, not combination; practical service, not creedal or theological oneness. Our Washington churches, for example, co-operated in canvassing the city to see that the Bible was placed in every home, and in taking a religious census of all the population; and those of a single section in abolishing the rum holes of that section. Getting together for the accomplishment of the things on which all are agreed may not be all that is wanted to bring in the fullness of our Lord's kingdom, but it is a mighty step in the right direction.

The plan of federation adopted in New York of a "Federal Council" to express the fellowship and catholic unity of the Christian church, to bring the Christian bodies of America into united service for Christ and the world, to encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel, to secure larger combined influence in all matters affecting the moral and social condition of the people, to assist in the organization of local branches, etc., can not fail to meet the approval of all right-thinking and broad-thinking believers, especially when it is clear that the council "shall have no authority over the constituent bodies adhering to it," and "no authority to draw up a common creed, or form of government, or of worship, or in any way to limit the full autonomy of the Christian bodies adhering to it." Each Christian body shall be entitled to four members, and one additional member for every 50,000 communicants or major fraction thereof. The council shall meet every four years.

There were many notable incidents in the conference. The expression of sympathy for the Jews in Russia and appeal to the Christian sentiment of that nation to stay the hand of persecution was one. The President's letter of greeting gave indorsement of high authority to the work of the body. His reference to "the Christianizing of Japan" was criticised by some of the New York papers, and he was asked how he would feel if the Mikado should announce he was in the "highest sympathy" with the good work of "Shintoizing the United States." The New York papers are mainly comic papers, judging from their attitude toward such matters as the horse show and the prince, the election and the insurance investigation, the opera, the Four Hundred, and the football craze, over against such important, serious, wide-reaching and universal interests as those presented in the conference. About fifty representative Disciples were in attendance. The discussions were able and eloquent beyond those of any meeting it has ever been my privilege to enjoy. The finest bit of oratory was that of Bishop Galloway; the most unique speeches were those of Bishop Fowler and Dr. Buckley; the purest classics were the addresses of Dr. Faunce, Dr. Cuthbert Hall, Dr. Van Dyke and Professor Willett; the whole program of the fourteen sessions of three hours each, from the word of welcome by Mr. Littleton, the man who nominated Parker for the presidency, to the brilliant close at the Waldorf-Astoria, was remarkable for its strength and, most of all, for its irenic character. Not a note of sectarianism was sounded. The conference was Christian. Here is the leading thought:

"The world does not believe; after all we have written and said, it does not believe. Here and there a pilgrim joins our line of march, but the world, with its multitudes, surges past our churches. Our denominationalism has failed to check the world tide that runs out into darkness—failed to rivet high a standard of public morals and civic virtue. Our organizations and our messages at home and abroad are lamentably ineffective. It is even to be doubted whether intellectual religious convictions are as strong as they were a century ago. And what shall the remedy be? We must get together, but on a platform deeper and stronger than human kindness. Accept the philosophy of the Master's prayer. We must get together if ever the world shall believe. Accept the apostles' example. We must get together in spiritual perception and spiritual experience."

The Plan to be Submitted to Thirty Religious Bodies

PREAMBLE.

Whereas, In the providence of God, the time has come when it seems fitting, more fully to manifest the essential oneness of the Christian churches of America in Jesus Christ as their divine Lord and Savior, and to promote the spirit of fellowship, service and co-operation among them, the delegates to the Interchurch Conference on Federation assembled in New York City, do hereby recommend the following Plan of Federation to the Christian bodies represented in this Conference for their approval.

PLAN OF FEDERATION.

1. For the prosecution of work that can be better done in union than in separation a Council is hereby established whose name shall be the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

2. The following Christian bodies shall be entitled to representation in this Federal Council on their approval of the purpose and plan of the organization:

Baptist Churches of the United States.
Free Baptist General Conference.
Christians (The Christian Connection).
Congregational Churches.
Disciples of Christ.
Evangelical Association.
Evangelical Synod of North America.
Friends.
Evangelical Lutheran Church, General, Synod.
Methodist Episcopal Church.
Methodist Episcopal Church, South.
Primitive Methodist Church.
Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America.
Methodist Protestant Church.
African Methodist Episcopal Church.
African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church.
General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America.
Moravian Church.
Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.
Cumberland Presbyterian Church.
Welsh Calvinistic Methodist or Presbyterian Church.
Reformed Presbyterian Church.
United Presbyterian Church.
Protestant Episcopal Church.
Reformed Church in America.
Reformed Church in the U. S. A.
Reformed Episcopal Church.
Seventh Day Baptist Churches.
United Brethren in Christ.
The United Evangelical Church.

3. The object of this Federal Council shall be—

(1) To express the fellowship and catholic unity of the Christian Church.

(2) To bring the Christian bodies of America into united service for Christ and the world.

(3) To encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel concerning the spiritual life and religious activities of the churches.

(4) To secure a larger combined influence for the churches of Christ in all matters affecting the moral and social condition of the people, so as to promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life.

(5) To assist in the organization of local branches of the Federal Council to promote its aims in their communities.

4. This Federal Council shall have no authority over the constituent bodies adhering to it; but its province shall be limited to the expression of its counsel and the recommending of a course of action in matters of common interest to the churches, local councils and individual Christians.

It has no authority to draw up a common creed, or form of government or of worship, or in any way to limit the full autonomy of the Christian bodies adhering to it.

5. Members of this Federal Council shall be appointed as follows:

Each of the Christian bodies adhering to this Federal Council shall be entitled to four members, and shall be further entitled to one member for every 50,000 of its communicants or major fraction thereof. The question of representation of local councils shall be referred to the several constituent bodies, and to the first meeting of the Federal Council.

6. Any action to be taken by this Federal Council shall be by the general vote of its members. But in case one-third of the members present and voting request it, the vote shall be by the bodies represented, the members of each body voting separately; and action shall require the vote, not only of a majority of the members voting, but also of the bodies represented.

7. Other Christian bodies may be admitted into membership of this Federal Council on their request if approved by a vote of two-thirds of the members voting at a session of this council, and of two-thirds of the bodies represented, the representatives of each body voting separately.

8. The Federal Council shall meet in December, 1908, and thereafter once in every four years.

9. The officers of this Federal Council shall be a president, one vice-president from each of its constituent bodies, a corresponding secretary, a recording secretary, a treasurer, and an executive committee, who shall perform the duties usually assigned to such officers.

The corresponding secretary shall aid in organizing and assisting local councils, and shall represent the Federal Council in its work, under the direction of the executive committee.

The executive committee shall consist of seven ministers and seven laymen, together with the president, all ex-presidents, the corresponding secretary, the recording secretary and the treasurer. The executive committee shall have authority to attend to all business of the Federal Council in the intervals of its meetings and to fill any vacancies.

All officers shall be chosen at the quadrennial meetings of the council, and shall hold their office until their successors take office.

The president, vice-presidents, the corresponding secretary, the recording secretary and the treasurer shall be elected by the Federal Council on nomination by the executive committee.

The executive committee shall be elected by ballot after nomination by a nominating committee.

10. This plan of federation may be altered or amended by a majority vote of the members, followed by a majority vote of the representatives of the several constituent bodies, each body voting separately.

11. The expenses of the Federal Council shall be provided for by the several constituent bodies.

This plan of federation shall become operative when it shall have been approved by two-thirds of the above bodies to which it shall be presented.

It shall be the duty of each delegation to this conference to present this plan of federation to its national body, and ask its consideration and proper action.

In case this plan of federation is approved by two-thirds of the proposed constituent bodies the executive committee of the National Federation of Churches and Christian Workers, which has called this conference, is requested to call the Federal Council to meet at a fitting place in December, 1908.

Country Life. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York.

The November issue of this firmly established magazine has as its leading feature an article on fox hunting in the Genesee valley. One may not be especially interested in following the hounds, and yet thoroughly enjoy the very lifelike and, indeed, unique photographs that illustrate this article. For pictures of the horse in the attitude of leaping they have not been equaled. The mangrove as an island builder is pictured in so striking a way that little descriptive matter is necessary to explain the fascinating life history of the tree that makes land out of sandbars and coral reefs. In the series of illustrated articles on "Country Homes of Famous Americans," that of James Madison, at Montpelier, Va., is presented this month. The housebuilder will find a number of articles of peculiar interest to him, while those who delight in such different subjects as bantams, cocker spaniels, perennial garden phlox, will find articles and pictures that will interest them.

Our Budget.

—Next week our Holiday Number.

—C. W. B. M. day next Lord's day.

—Give the good sisters an opportunity to present their work.

—By word and picture we give some account of what the organized women of our churches are doing to spread the Gospel.

—We have given emphasis in this number to the work in the homeland. It should not be forgotten, however, that the C. W. B. M. supports many workers in the foreign field, and photographs of some of those who have recently gone out we present on another page.

—S. G. Fisher will go to Detroit about January 1.

—Rock Rapids, Ia., gets L. E. Huntley as pastor.

—E. M. Flynn takes the work at Tekoa, Washington.

—Marcellus Ely has returned to his work in New Orleans.

—W. L. Post has left Keosauqua, to take work at Kellogg, Ia.

—D. S. Thompson has gone from Whiting to Scranton, Ia.

—J. K. Ballou is doing an aggressive work at Sioux City, Ia.

—A new church was dedicated at Batavia, Ia., last Lord's day.

—F. M. Branic has entered upon the pastorate at Concordia, Kan.

—T. D. Butler has entered upon the pastorate at Batavia, Ill.

—F. C. Wing has resigned at Bailey, Mich., to go into business.

——J. T. Adams, of Hartsville, Ind., has accepted a call to Bluefield, W. Va.

—L. H. Kurtsinger has preached his farewell sermon at Nashville, Mo.

—C. O. Burton closes two years' work at Roachville, Ind., in December.

—George D. Weaver has accepted a call to the Second Church, Little Rock, Ark.

—Mrs. Rijnhart's book, newly published by the Foreign Society, is selling very rapidly.

—John S. Sweeney has been holding a meeting at the University Church, Waco, Tex.

—The Foreign Society has received a gift on the annuity plan from a friend in Indiana.

—The church at Primghar, Ia., needs a preacher, J. P. Childs having closed his work there.

—V. E. Hoven, pastor of our church at Garfield, Wash., has just taken unto himself a wife.

—The work at Lewiston, Idaho, where H. H. Hubbell has just located, is taking on new life.

—The church at Pine Run, Mich., has been remodeled. The brethren need a regular preacher.

—A new house of worship is completed at Rogillioville, La., and is to be dedicated early in December.

—The opening of the new building for the School of the Evangelists is scheduled for January 2, 1906.

—We have a John Wesley among us, and our church at Council Grove, Kan., claims him as pastor.

—Who has not missed Sunday school for twenty-one years? John Hay, Jr., of our church at Tonawanda, N. Y.

—The little American congregation recently organized at Monterey, Mexico, is rejoicing in the first confession.

—Edward Wright, who has been engaged in evangelistic work, would now like to locate in a regular pastorate.

—F. E. Day reports bright prospects at Knoxville, Ia., where it is hoped a new building will be erected next year.

—The Georgia state convention next year will meet at Valdosta. Howard T. Cree has been chosen as the president.

CASPAR C. GARRIGUES.
(See "An Aggressive Church," page 1559.)

—The two oldest preachers in Georgia, James S. Lamar and M. B. Doster, were present at the recent state convention.

—The new church at Waverly, Wash., has been enclosed, and an effort will be made to build at Cunningham ere long.

—Colfax, Ia., will have a vacancy in its pastorate, A. Lyle DeJarnett having decided to go to California for his wife's health.

—The enrollment in the courses in the Texas Bible Chair has reached 40. More than 30 other students are reached weekly.

—We are glad to report that G. T. Black and wife are recovering from a recent sickness. They have just moved to Quanah, Texas.

—G. A. Farris has returned from the convention in San Francisco, and has again taken up his work on "The Christian Courier."

—Occasionally we get announcements of a debate on the organ question. One is to take place at Barnard, Mo., beginning December 5.

—G. Washington Wise has accepted the pastorate at Leesville, La., and F. M. McCarthey has taken Brother Wise's place at Monroe.

—One of our southern educators has just added $200 to his annuity account with our Benevolent Association, bringing the total up to $1,000.

—It is reported that J. J. Lockhart will, on January 1, take up the pastorate of our church at Tyler, Tex., where he recently held a meeting.

—The church at Aurora, Mo., has just given a reception in honor of their new pastor, George Prewitt, who is getting a hold on the work.

—Miss Cora Shafer, a graduate of the School of Pastoral Helpers at Des Moines, Ia., has become assistant to J. N. Jessup, at Little Rock, Ark.

—J. W. Holsapple is on his annual visit to his mother in Kentucky. J. C. Mason occupied his pulpit at Greenville, Tex., during his absence.

—The meeting just closed at the University Church, Des Moines, only marks a special stage in the work of the congregation, whose ideal is constant evangelism.

—President Hill M. Bell was included among the guests of Andrew Carnegie, November 25, the occasion being the meeting of the trustees of the $10,000,000 fund for teachers.

—W. S. Dickinson, who has been for many years a member of the Central Christian Church, of Cincinnati, O., has just presented it with a beautiful individual communion set.

—The Jefferson Street Church of Christ, Buffalo, N. Y., takes considerable pride in being known as the "homelike church." The family idea is dominant throughout the congregation.

—A reception was recently given by Brother and Sister S. C. Toof, of Memphis, Tenn., in honor of the pastors of the three Christian churches of that city. It was a delightful occasion.

TEXAS BIBLE CHAIR HOME.

—J. W. Davis leaves the church at Hazel Dell, Knox county, Mo., after 16 years of labor and nine protracted meetings. He leaves the church out of debt, strong and hopeful. This is a good record.

—The annual report of the Foreign Society has been issued. It is a document of 174 pages, and embraces much valuable information. It is sent free to contributors; to all others the price is 25 cents.

—At the prayer meeting gatherings of our church at Chillicothe, Mo., for the next three months the subject to be considered will be the Holy Spirit. The Editor's new book on this theme will be one of the text books.

—The church which was organized by John T. Stivers at Raton, N. M., is now ministered to by R. A. Staley, an excellent young man from Yosemite, Ky. It is expected that a building will be erected next year.

—The Bible department at Drake University has an increase this year of 27 per cent. More than forty of its young preachers are working for churches within a radius of one hundred miles of the university.

—Joseph Gaylor writes that with such men as E. J. Church and Brother Walters at work, something will be accomplished in Newton county. The work of Robert Simon, at Monett, Mo., seems to be prospering.

—Our church at West Point, Ill., has withdrawn fellowship from W. H. Van Denson, who has been its pastor for a short time. The Official Board claims that his conduct has been unworthy that of a minister.

—The work of J. H. Hardin is opening up well. He will begin the Kansas City campaign early in January, and a campaign in St. Louis in February. He is now laying the foundation for a teacher-training department.

—Any church or Endeavor Society in Iowa wishing to arrange for an evening's entertainment, may get a special rate from the Department of Oratory at Drake University, Des Moines, by addressing Frank Brown, the principal.

—Evangelists and singers engaged in the Pittsburg campaign had a delightful holiday occasion in a visit to Bethany College. A number of the students recently visited Pittsburg, also, with a view of studying the methods of the campaign.

—Joseph Gaylor reports that a Brother Yarbrough, who has been a Methodist Episcopal evangelist of some note, recently united with our church at Avilla, and has been assisting W. B. Cockran in a meeting at Exeter, Mo.

—Chalmers McPherson has received an invitation from our church at Burkesville, Ky., to hold a meeting. This was the boyhood home of Brother McPherson. There he was ordained, there he preached his first sermon, and there he was married.

—At the new church which is nearing completion in Parsons, Kan., there will be a hospital department. A complete line of drugs will be kept and a room prepared to receive persons injured. This institutional feature is due to C. E. Pile, the minister.

—In a note warning contributors to write plainly, "The Christian Courier" says that a writer recently had occasion to speak of the alabaster box, and the printer, thinking everything in religion should be proof against fire, set it up as asbestos box.

—"The Pacific Christian" announces the resignation of W. M. White from the pastorate of the West Side Church, San Francisco. No reasons are given, and it is to be hoped that the matter can be so adjusted that Brother White may remain in San Francisco.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST office was favored by visits during the past week from three brethren interested in the education of our young preachers—President R. E. Hieronymus and J. G. Waggoner, of Eureka College, and E. C. Sanderson, of Eugene Divinity School.

—One of the Sunday schools on the Pacific coast has decided to become a living link in the Foreign Society. The enterprising superintendent has hung a chain of 600 links on the walls of the church. Each link represents a dollar. The children are taking them rapidly.

—John A. Stevens has recently been at Rustin, La., which, although a town of 5,000 people, with an industrial college having an attendance of 900 young men and women, has never heard a sermon by a preacher of the New Testament order. We will have a church there next year.

—Lee H. Barnum has resigned at Caldwell, Kan., to take effect January 1, and will take up the work at Great Bend. He reports that the church in Caldwell is in good condition. Improvements have been made on the building, and a pastor will be needed to take his place.

—Thanksgiving day came early to J. M. Plummer and family. The members of the Christian church at Howard, Kan., to the number of 50 or 60, completely surprised the pastor and wife by invading their home, stocking their larder, and leaving two nice rocking chairs as permanent mementos of the visit.

—W. T. Miller has resigned at LaHarpe, Kan., and will close his work there January 1. There have been 76 additions to the membership during the past 16 months, and every department of the work has progressed, though the missionary interests are not what they should be. He prefers to work in some western field.

—C. C. Chapman, one of our business men whose heart is in Christian work, has just purchased two fine lots in Los Angeles, at a lost of $2,500, for church purposes. A great tent meeting, with Austin Hunter and a quartet of singers, will open a campaign to build up another church in one of the best parts of the beautiful Angel City.

—C. K. Marshall, who was the predecessor of J. G. Sweeney in the pastorate at Paris, Ky., is now in Texas, and is thus described by one who has recently seen him: "Though past his three score and ten years of age, he is as straight and active as an Indian hero, as square and graceful as a Chesterfield, as bold and loud in the faith as Raccoon John Smith.'

—Clarence E. Hill and wife, who, about five years ago, began to devote all their time to evangelistic work and who, owing to Brother Hill's illness, had to relinquish most of their engagements during the past year, are now getting started again. They have recently held good meetings at Girard and Herrin, Ill. They can furnish excellent references, and may be addressed at Piqua, Ohio.

—A fine program has been arranged for the Texas Christian lectureship, which is to be held at Denton December 11-14. Among the speakers on the program are F. F. Grim, Hiram Van Kirk, J. T. Ogle, C. M. Schoonover, J. B. Eskridge, W. H. Bagby, Chalmers McPherson, Bruce McCully, A. E. Ewell and W. S. Bullard. All these addresses are to be discussed and the occasion ought to be a very profitable and interesting one.

HODSON HALL, MOREHEAD, KY.

—Inspired, no doubt, by the great Federation Convention in New York, J. E. Dinger, our pastor at Chandler, Okla., suggested a convention to be held in that town to devise a plan of Christian union, and invited the preachers of other churches to speak on forms of baptism, human names for divine things, human creeds, the plan of salvation, as being the things that have tended to divide, selecting for his own theme, "Christian Union." We have not heard the result of this effort.

—W. G. Surber, of Moberly, Mo., has been preaching constantly in this state for thirty-six years. There are not more than five ministers in the state who have such a record. While Brother Surber has labored for some of our leading churches, such as Sedalia, Mexico, Monroe City, Slater and Gallatin, much of his time has been given to our country and village churches in monthly and semimonthly visits. This has been in the face of taking care of an invalid wife. We learn that a portion of his time for the coming year is still unemployed, and as Brother Surber is a preacher of strength, churches within reach of Moberly needing the services of such a man will do well to correspond with him.

—O. M. Thomason, who is now ministering for our church at Davis, I. T., tells how he got tired of wearing a yoke "more tyrannical than any servant of the Pope of Rome ever wore." Brother Thomason was first associated with what are generally known as the "anti" brethren. He writes: "I became disgusted with the jargon and wrangling of the 'loyals.' I am burnt out on theological hair splitting. I got tired trying to determine which faction of the 'loyals' was the right one. There was the re-baptism faction and the formal-confession faction, and the no-Sunday-school faction, and the order-of-worship faction, and the no-college faction, to say nothing of the horde of smaller fry. I was hampered on every hand in preaching the Gospel. If I had success in a meeting I had no assurance that the fruit would be cared for. I did not know what moment some little notion would strike some 'good brother' and he would want to force every one else into his strait-jacket and ruin the congregation. I longed to preach the Gospel in peace. I wanted to see the Gospel preached to all the world, and I wanted to contribute my mite to that end." Brother Thomason has not left the old paths, though he has become an aggressive preacher. As he says, he is not an "anti" or a "sound brother," but just a "Christian."

—A newspaper clipping indicates that George Ringo has resigned the pastorate of our church at Riverside, Cal. The anniversary sermon he preached was a very admirable one, and in closing it, Brother Ringo outlined to his church the plans on which he has been working, saying that when he entered this pastorate, and throughout his service, one great purpose had actuated him, namely: The winning of souls for the kingdom and the building up of a church, strong in membership, strong in organization, and strong in spiritual power. Preliminary to the highest success in this, he recognizes as necessary four things, namely: (1) To inspire confidence in the church itself; (2) to secure in larger measure the confidence and respect of the community for the church; (3) to change to a more favorable location; (4) to provide facilities in building and equipment for the great work the church is destined to do. During the four years, 264 have been added to the church—83 under evangelistic co-operation, and 181 at regular services. Fifteen thousand dollars were added to property values, and $10,000 raised for local and missionary work. There has been a 50 per cent increase during the four years in the regular receipts. From a personal note we gather that Brother Ringo, under the direction of our Southern California Board, is trying to start a new Christian community.

—David R. Francis is to engage in evangelistic work. There are at least two men by that name. We can hardly imagine the president of the World's Fair preaching the Gospel, though he is a good platform speaker. But there is another David R. Francis, who is just as big a man, and not unlike the other in appearance, and he has been engaged for many years in preaching the Gospel. This David R. Francis, who, about seven years ago, joined our brotherhood, having until then been a lifelong Congregationalist, served the church at Newcastle, Ind., for two years, and for the past four years has been pastor at Sullivan, Ind. Over 200 members have been added to the church there since he took charge. Brother Francis has just tendered his resignation, and now intends to enter the evangelistic field. He does this with the hearty concurrence and advice of such men as A. McLean, W. J. Wright and T. J. Legg, while it is a pleasure to note that his congregation stands behind him, not only thoroughly endorsing him and his wife for the work they have accomplished at Sullivan, but recognizing the distinct evangelistic gifts possessed by Brother and Sister Francis. The latter is a fine soloist, and possesses special talent as a worker with the children. With such commendations for doing work that there is abundant room for among our churches, we feel sure that Brother and Sister Francis will find the opportunity.

Centennial Celebration Committee.

The committee appointed at the Omaha convention to arrange for a fitting celebration of the first centennial of this restoration movement, to be held in Pittsburg in 1909, held a very interesting and important meeting in that city on November 23.

In order to help forward achievements worthy of celebration by a people now become so great in all resources, the committee engaged W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg, to act as its general secretary, to do what he can through the press and correspondence, at our conventions and by personal intercourse, to greatly increase the revenues and endowments of our various missionary societies, benevolences, church extension and colleges; to urge our congregations to build better church homes where needed, and to free themselves from indebtedness; to enlarge the circulation of our church papers, and to encourage Bible reading and the establishment of family worship; to stimulate the evangelistic zeal of our people, to the end that our membership may be at least 2,000,000 Christians, highly developed in grace and knowledge, by the close of this first century. Brother Warren is eminently qualified for the work committed unto him, and we bespeak for him the cordial support of every Disciple of Jesus.

The special committee in charge of the Pittsburg convention, consisting of W. R. Warren, Robert Latimer, W. H. Graham, Wallace Tharp, J. G. Slayter, G. T. Oliver, T. W. Phillips, O. H. Phillips and M. M. Cockran, was asked to co-operate with the centennial committee, consisting of J. H. Garrison, chairman; Helen E. Moses, A. McLean, B. L. Smith, G. W. Muckley, W. R. Warren and Geo. L. Snively, in carrying out the will of the Omaha convention that instituted the celebration.

It is to be hoped our people will generously contribute money to the support of this propaganda that under God will greatly redound to his glory through the upbuilding of his church and the salvation of undying souls.

J. H. and W. E. Garrison were asked to write a history of the first century of this restoration movement and to have it ready for distribution by the time of the convention. All will be pleased to know these brethren accepted the commission.

J. A. Lord was invited to deliver the convention address and was asked to make it an historical resume of the work of the Disciples through the century. This address will be one of the classics of literature.

The committee has great encouragement to believe as much will be accomplished for the Master in the realm of missions, Christian education, benevolences and intensification of the Christ life in the world by our people in the remaining four years of the century as in any previous twenty-five of our history.

The committee adjourned to meet at the call of the chairman.

Could Not Conscientiously Use the Single Cup.

Mr. George H. Springer, 258 Washington Street, Boston, Mass., received the following letter from a large church in Pittsburg, Penn. The contents of the letter will be interesting to those that have either opposed the system or favored it.

"The Individual Communion Set ordered from you last week by telegram came in good time for use on Sunday. I need not say that we are pleased with it, as I knew what it was before ordering it. You will no doubt remember me as having ordered a like set about three years ago. Coming here, I found the 'single cup,' and I could not bring myself to the place where I could conscientiously use that system. The time was short. I got my Board together, and we decided to install the Individual. I suggested your house, and my Board had me order quick."

An Aggressive Church.

In 1840 there was organized in Albion, Edwards county, Ill., a Christian church. This church continued, with varying fortunes, until the year 1877, when, on August 23, the members of the then divided congregation agreed "to unite together as a Christian congregation for the purpose of building up the cause of our Savior." The membership of this reunited congregation was 142. Alfred Flower, now living at Worcester, Mass., and Caleb Edwards and James C. T. Hall, deceased, were chosen elders.

Other brethren who have ministered to this church are R. A. Gilcrest, J. E. Prophater, J. S. Rose, Philo Ingraham, J. C. Smith, J. C. Hall, M. J. Adams, Zac. A. Harris, C. C. Cline and Willard McCarthy. Among those who have assisted in special evangelistic meetings are James C. Creel, W. F. Richardson, John M. Goodwin, W. C. Swartz, J. H. Stotler and J. V. Coombs.

The present minister, Caspar C. Garrigues, of Philadelphia, Pa., began his labors here October 23, 1904. His first year has been a gratifying one. Extensive repairs and improvements have been made to the building, and the work has been strengthened in every department. A deep interest has been shown in the missionary and benevolent enterprises of the brotherhood, more than $230 being contributed to them. The Y. P. S. C. E. is supporting an orphan boy in India, and all other organizations in the church have established new records in missionary work. An interesting class in mission study was maintained last year. The class for the ensuing season numbers twenty. The present membership of the church is 258.

Herbert H. Saunders, singing evangelist, of Noblesville, Ind., has been secured to assist Brother Garrigues in a three weeks' evangelistic meeting, to begin Lord's day, December 3. Thorough preparations have been made, and it is hoped that these meetings may mean much in the way of internal development for the church and in the winning of lives to the Savior of men.

was paid in the less interest there was to pay. The interest was at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. This was afterwards reduced to 5 per cent. This plan made it possible for almost every person to participate in the enterprise. Three hundred persons, speaking roughly, took bonds. If you desire the details of this plan do not write to me for information; address Mr. Joseph W. Powell, Buffalo, New York. His work for our church was eminently satisfactory.

The South Broadway Church is made up of persons in medium circumstances. There is not in the congregation a man or woman of wealth, as wealth is counted in this prosperous land nowadays. Not more than two or three families employ help in their homes. Our homekeepers do their own housework.

But now to secure the payment of these obligations it was necessary to keep the subject before the minds of the subscribers. This has been done in various ways. There has not been a Sunday since the first Lord's day in December, 1902, that money has not been contributed to assist in the payment of the mortgage debt of the church. The money has come in, for the most part, in small sums and Sunday after Sunday.

The Gospel, meantime, has been preached, converts have been made, and the water in the baptistry has been frequently stirred. As a result, we have come to the close of this campaign for dollars in a religious spirit. The church is, in fact, in a much better spiritual condition than it was when we began this business.

No dependence has been placed on popular entertainments to obtain money. The people have been encouraged to give as an act of worship. Since entertainments, as a means of raising money, have been practically abandoned, the church treasury receives dollars where it formerly received dimes and quarters. Preach giving as we used to preach baptism, and as sensitive a conscience can be developed in respect to the right use of money as has been developed in respect to the form and purpose of baptism.

You may be interested in a statement of the amount of the offerings week by week since, say, October 1. Remember, please, that there was no special appeal for money. The minister did not say: "Today we must have $200; who will give $5?" Nothing of this kind has been done. A brief statement has usually preceded the collection as to what we were trying to do, as to how we were getting along, with, probably, the recital of an incident or two connected with this effort, after which the plates were passed in the usual manner. The receipts have been, of late, as follows: October 1, $209.60; October 8, $285.07; October 15, $180.62; October 22, $199.70; October 29, $313.85; November 5, $201.30; November 12, $408.56; November 19, $800.

The church was strengthened by S. M. Bernard, of Boulder, Col., last winter, and Homer T. Wilson, of San Antonio, Tex., recently, in model evangelistic work.

Last year, that is, from Sunday, October 23, 1904, to Sunday, October 22, 1905, 191 persons came into the fellowship of the church. Since October 23 the record, in the way of additions, has been maintained. The evangelistic fire has been kept burning during the debt-paying effort. The additions during the last two or three years have been very helpful in freeing the church from debt. But for their assistance it would be impossible, at this time, to make this report.

During the last months of this strenuous campaign the church has been fortunate in having a finance committee whose names ought to appear in this statement. This committee consists of C. W. Keith, W. H. Paul, D. J. McCanne, A. M. York and W. H. Kilpatrick. The work of this committee has been a happy blending of wisdom, conservatism and enthusiasm.

This, in brief, is what we have done and how we have done it in the South Broadway Christian Church.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Word from Dr. Rijnhart.

The following are some extracts from a recent letter written by Dr. Rijnhart, our missionary to Tibet:

"La Chien Lu, August 14, 1905.

"I think I told you about the three dear people who were baptized some weeks ago—two women and a young man. They are doing so nicely. The board is sending out Mr. and Mrs. Ogden to work here. They are to sail in September, the date we do not yet know. When I told Man Yeu—my girl pupil—they were coming, and asked whether she had any message to send them, she told me she would pray every day that God might take care of them every day while they were traveling. Was not that beautiful?

"Brother Yang, our evangelist, has gone home, and we miss him very much. His old mother had no one else to take care of her if he and his wife were up here, so he felt it his duty to go and look after her until she died. He went three days after the baptisms I have mentioned. We scarcely know how to get on without him, but, you know, 'Necessity is the mother of invention,' and we change the last word to 'adaptability,' and rest there.

"I am at the king's summer palace for a few days, and we are having quite a change and enjoying the hot baths. We have worship every day. One of the Christian women is with me. She is not well, and I am giving her good food so she will be benefited by the change, I trust. It is just ten miles from home, and I have my horse with me.

"The only safe way to send parcels is to register them. We have found that out to our cost.

"There was such a nice family of girls—four sisters and their mother—here a few days ago. They were very friendly, and I hope some day they will love the Savior as we do. Is it not a joy to be members of one body whose head is the Lord Jesus? My message is, There is no friend like Jesus. Lovingly, Susie C. Rijnhart."

Oregon.

The outlook for our work grows still brighter. There are, however, a few things to discourage and a few places that need to hear the trumpet call to a renewed life.

The time allotted for a complete canvass of the churches was too brief. Some of the churches' turn will come later. A list of the offerings will be published, and all gifts from each place will be credited to the church at such place in the secretary's annual report.

By the time this gets a hearing, we shall be on the "home stretch" with our $10 pledges on the debt fund. We are just one short of the first fifty. We hope to have a full hundred by July 1. If at all within your power, just send me your promise to add your $10 between now and "Turner '06." The preachers should lead in this matter. "Like priest, like people," and the largeness or poverty of the offering will be determined by the loyalty or the lack of it on the part of the ministry of the state.

Before we can do any great work in Oregon we must free the state organization from debt. Our zeal for winning Oregon for the Christ shall be measured largely by our gifts to the work. Remember, "1,500 souls for Christ and every obligation fully met."

The month of October witnessed the holding of three distinct conventions, and one missionary meeting. The conventions were held at Grant's Pass, Coburg, Pendleton and Brownsville. The meeting was held at Springfield, by Brother Muckley, of Portland First, resulting in 17 accessions to the church. The proceeds of this meeting will be devoted to state missions. Other such meetings have been held this month. Let the good work go on.

Watch the papers for reports of the splendid work being done by Brother and Sister Handsaker, eastern Oregon "living link" evangelists, and Brother Conder, our efficient Bible school evangelist.

Finally, brethren, if you are not fully satisfied with the offering from your church, try it again or send in your pledge, to be paid later. F. E. Billington, Cor. Sec.

Nebraska.

Cyrus Alton has visited Eddyville. Brother Alton will probably move to his old home in Elmwood before long.

N. T. Harmon has held a meeting at Trumbull. He can be had for meetings in the state. Address him at David City.

One added at North Side Church, Omaha, October 29. H. J. Kirschstein is the minister.

Austin and Young have been at Virginia in a meeting, and go directly to southern California for winter work in the new tent.

Ansley, where Bro. O. A. Adams preaches, has built an addition to the parsonage. The work is reported as moving nicely.

The state secretary has planned a trip into the northwestern, north and northeastern parts of Nebraska. Will be gone nearly two weeks. If correspondence remains unanswered during this period the reason will be apparent. Will be at Gering November 12. At Chadron and Norfolk during the week, spending Lord's day, November 19, at Gross and Pleasant View and Spencer, in Boyd county. On the return trip, will stop at Pender, where we have a few people, and consult about Florence on the way in. This trip has been gathering for some months, and is now undertaken because it can not consistently be delayed longer.

Mrs. Floy Hormel, of Ulysses, is a new recruit to our singing evangelists.

State mission day was a wet and disagreeable one in many parts of Nebraska. This matter of the weather, no one can help. But it remains for the churches to look after the offering personally, if any effort was made and the amount not reached. Some churches put it off, which was wise. This matter should not be allowed to go half done, simply on account of weather. Let the offering be brought in sure.

H. A. Lemon is available for Sunday supply. Write him at Bethany.

The call of the secretary to scattered Disciples to contribute to state missions was answered first from Ponca, where we have no church, the father, wife and daughter were all represented in the offering. Shall we not hear from others similarly situated?

R. F. Whiston closed the Harvard meeting, and began at Wymore on November 19. We hope much from this meeting for the little church at that place.

Lincoln, Neb. W. A. Baldwin.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

Here is a Simple, Quick, Effective way and COSTS NOTHING—Send for it and see.

Those who suffer with it know well the miseries of catarrh. There is just one thing to do—have it cured. It can be done. To prove it to you, send your address and the means of a quick and safe cure will be sent to your home free in every way. The idea in giving it to you free is to prove to you that there is a home cure for catarrh, scratchy throat, asthma, stopped-up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, etc., etc., and that the remedy that does it is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, the eminent southern doctor and minister, who has for over 31 years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its worst forms.

His discovery is unlike anything you ever had before, as it is not a spray, douche, ointment, atomizer, salve, cream, or any such thing, but a genuine tried-and-true cure that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choky, spitting feeling that all catarrhal sufferers have. It will save the wear-and-tear of internal medicines that only ruin the stomach. It will prevent colds and heal up the mucous membranes so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery and know that you need such a cure, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and a thorough free trial treatment and also an elaborately illustrated booklet, "Plain Facts About Catarrh," will be sent you at once, free, so that you can begin to cure yourself privately at home.

Now write him immediately.

Eugene Divinity School.

Eugene Divinity School now has 38 students enrolled in the regular course—the largest enrollment in the eleven years' history of the school. More are expected soon. This has been a good year. Several thousand dollars have been added to the endowment and support funds. About 500 volumes have been added to the library, making about 2,400 volumes; perhaps, the best Biblical library on the coast.

My work is delightful. I have never known a happier or more enthusiastic body of students. But we ought to have twice as many students to supply preachers for this great and rapidly growing northwest.

The Divinity School owns a block of ground, with excellent buildings, free from debt, just in front of the University of Oregon, a school noted for high ideals and good work. Our church here is the strongest in the northwest. This is a splendid place for our young people. There are 17 Christian churches in the county.

All of our preachers should preach a sermon on the ministry and lay upon the hearts of our young men the dignity and intrinsic value of the Christian ministry.

At the very outset of our proposed evangelistic campaign, our Bible colleges should be filled with students. All of our schools could have twice their present number with but little increase of expense.

Seventeen Days on the Pacific Ocean.

This article finds me in Wellington, the capital city of New Zealand, where I have ended my long and most interesting journey of more than 10,000 miles. Sailing from San Francisco on the Sierra, owned by the well-known Spreckels family, and making regular trips every 21 days between San Francisco and Sydney, Australia, touching at the ports of Honolulu, Pago Pago, Samoan Islands, after 17 days, I landed at Auckland, New Zealand. The weather during the entire trip was simply ideal, with the exception of a day and a night after reaching the winter climate near the end of the journey. For 24 hours we had it sufficiently rough to diminish the number of passengers who usually showed up at table d'hote in our cabin. One of the most amusing things on such a voyage is to see how easily old Neptune, with just a slight effort, can turn a laughing, jovial company into the stillness and sobriety of a Quaker meeting. The stomach is where he does his work. We had a gentleman in our cabin who became so seasick during the spell of rough weather he thought it advisable to consult the boat's physician, who carefully examined him and gravely informed him that the real seat of his trouble was his stomach! On learning the doctor's decision in this Londoner's case, a large number of us came to the conclusion that we had the same disease, for all of our symptoms were exactly like his, and all pointed directly toward our several stomachs. I did not consult the physician, but remained nearly all day in my bunk, and pulled through without anything serious—not half as bad as what I anticipated when passing through the Golden Gate to begin this lengthy sea voyage.

The personnel of our company, of a little less than one hundred in the second cabin, was most unique. I do not think I ever saw so many dissimilar persons in a company of the same size anywhere before. As to country and nationality, they came from Norway, Albania, Germany, Scotland, Ireland, England, Newfoundland, Canada, Alaska, Australia, New Zealand, Samoan Islands, and quite a number of our different states of the union. As to religious belief, we had Jews, Episcopalians, Seventh-day Adventists, one Salvation Army officer, Disciples, Comeouters, Theosophists and Mormons. There were six young men, Mormon missionaries, on their way to different islands in the Southern Pacific to devote their lives to the propagation of the falsehoods of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young. Three of these left our company at Pago Pago, Samoan Islands, where the Morman church is operating on a large scale among the natives. They have at that port a good church and school building, which are now the headquarters of 29 of their missionaries. We had also in our peculiar family one Seventh-day Adventist preacher and his family, who left us at Honolulu, to begin work somewhere in those islands.

Three Sundays came around during our voyage, but the last one had to be called Monday, on account of our having crossed a certain geographical line, where one day has to invariably be counted out in sailing westward. When the first Sunday came, seeing no signs of any religious exercise on our boat, I secured the assistance of the Seventh-day preacher and the Salvation Army lieutenant, and we arranged an evening meeting for singing, Scripture reading and prayer, with three short addresses. Many of the passengers seemed pleased to join with us in the service. After leaving Honolulu I made no further effort to hold such a service, owing to the fact that part of our company left us at that city, and among them some of my main helpers, above mentioned.

After being on shipboard for a week or so, on such a long voyage, time begins to drag somewhat heavily, and the majority begin to long for the freedom of land once more. People even cease to get much enjoyment from reading or the few games that usually belong to an ocean steamer. When one is free from seasickness, the one thing that most tends to break the monotony is the ringing of the gong, three times a day for meals. Sleeping and eating became largely the order of each succeeding 24 hours. Many of the passengers on the Sierra ate six times a day, and I think some few had food brought to them before leaving their bunks, besides.

Two events on this journey greatly helped to enliven it and break up the monotony. I refer to our 12-hours' stay at our beautiful city of Honolulu, and the four hours at Pago Pago, where also floats the Stars and Stripes. Honolulu, especially, was a perfect delight to us all; and I can assure the reader that I made all out of the stay that was possible. On leaving Honolulu I really felt somewhat disappointed on account of not having time enough to make a complete tour of these most wonderful islands, lying in the midst of the great Pacific ocean, and now a part of Uncle Sam's possessions.

While in Honolulu I had the pleasure of a short visit at the home of a good sister by the name of Evans, who has for some time resided there, and who was a well-known member of the Monroe Street Church, in Chicago, when C. C. Morrison was the pastor. After a delightful tropical dinner at her comfortable cottage home, she invited me to attend the prayer meeting with her at the First Christian Church, where she worships. I spent a most delightful hour in one of the best prayer meetings I have been in for a long time. This church, I think, numbers about one hundred, and of the number there were nearly forty at the prayer meeting. In this small company various nationalities were represented—Americans, Germans, Chinese, Japanese and Canadians were there. The brother who led the meeting had come all the way from Summerside, Prince Edward Island, where such men as A. McLean, the late Neil McLeod, A. Linkletter and the writer got their start in religion, to Honolulu, to learn the way of the Lord more perfectly. He is a son of the late Thomas Hall, of Summerside. Brother Snodgrass, our missionary at Honolulu, and Brother Crabtree, of California, who was spending his vacation there and preaching for this church, were both out of the city, which was somewhat of a disappointment to me. From what I saw and heard I feel satisfied that our work at Honolulu is in every way a success.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS
37Y East 18th Street, New York

Our stay at Pago Pago, Samoa, was too short to enable me to see everything. Here we were taken ashore in large boats by the great, muscular, copper-colored, tattooed native men, who wear no clothing except a small breech-cloth. Tattooing and bleaching the hair to a light copper color seem to be among the fine arts practiced among the aborigines who inhabit these islands. The town of Pago Pago, if you can call it such, has residing in it an American governor, has a number of stores, a post office and several churches, one belonging to the Mormons. I am told that this people are meeting with considerable success among the natives of these islands in the Southern Pacific. Pago Pago was our last call before reaching the beautiful harbor and city of Auckland, New Zealand, where I received a most hearty welcome by loving Christian people, who at once made me feel that I was not among strangers.

In another letter I shall have something to say about this strange country, where summer in the homeland is winter here, and where the sun passes around in the north, instead of the south.

Hugh T. Morrison.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidently made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this recipe free, only asking two 2-cen tstamps to pay expenses. This herb also cures Night Sweats, Nausea at the Stomach, and will break up a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Owenton, Nov. 20.—Since last report we have had 3 additions—2 by statement and 1 by confession. I recently closed a short meeting at Ball's Landing (this county), where I succeeded in organizing a congregation, with 18 charter members. Four confessions during the meeting, and the prospect is bright. We hope soon to have a church home for the congregation, and then we believe the cause will grow rapidly. Brother Lawson, of New Liberty, was with us a few days and helped in the work.—W. J. Clarke, minister.

Corydon, Nov. 12.—We closed a 2 weeks' meeting last night, resulting in 25 additions; 16 by confession and baptism. I will close my labors with this congregation at the end of the calendar year. Have been here five years.—J. W. Ligon.

LOUISIANA.

Alexandria, Nov. 20.—Wife and I closed a three weeks' meeting last night at Jennings, with 41 additions—38 baptisms and 3 by statement; 18 males and 23 females; 15 new families entered; 8 from the denominations, including 1 Catholic. H. M. Palsgrave took the pastorate at Jennings just before the meeting began. He is giving fine satisfaction. Wife and I have done 10 weeks of protracted meeting work in Louisiana, and had 122 additions, 104 baptisms.—John A. Stevens, Cor. Sec.

Leesville, Nov. 22.—The church here had been pastorless for almost a year when we came, three weeks ago. Our audiences were small at first, but are increasing. We organized a Christian Endeavor Society with 17 members. The outlook is good. John A. Stevens and wife will assist us in a meeting soon.—George W. Wise, pastor.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston, Nov. 21.—Since the opening of the work in September, we have had 14 additions to the St. James Street Church. The Sunday school is larger than ever before. The auxiliary of the C. W. B. M. held a fine meeting recently. We are now trying to reduce our debt.—A. L. Ward.

MISSOURI.

Bonne Terre, Nov. 20.—Two additions by letter recently.—John G. M. Luttenberger.

Richards, Nov. 20.—One by confession and baptism at Brother Sterling's regular appointment.—O. L. Fouts.

Hannibal, Nov. 21.—A three weeks' meeting has just closed, with 29 accessions; nearly half of these by baptism. This was one of the simultaneous meetings in 8 churches. G. W. Taylor did the preaching. —Levi Marshall, minister.

Kansas City, Nov. 20.—We have just closed a meeting of 4 weeks, in the First Church, resulting in 71 additions—31 by confession and baptism, 40 by letter and statement. Our evangelist, Hugh McLellan, of Richmond, Ky., impressed the people. L. D. Sprague, of California, Mo., directed our chorus choir, and sang solos enjoyed by all. The meeting has left the church much stronger in every way. The simultaneous campaign, of which our meeting was a part, will be reported by the secretary of our alliance.—W. F. Richardson.

THE CHURCH'S GREATEST NEED. —Rom. 9:1-5; 1 Cor. 9:16-27.

What is this greatest need? Evidently, solicitude for the salvation of men. This was the consuming passion of the Apostle Paul, as it was of his Master before him. His "heart's desire and prayer to God" was for the salvation of his people Israel, and to accomplish this he would even become accursed from Christ himself (Rom. 10:1; Rom. 9:3). Jesus submitted to the cross, which was to the Jew a sign of shame, that he might deliver us from the curse of sin (Gal. 3:13, 14). Even so Paul "counted not his life dear unto himself," if only he could by spending it redeem his fellow men unto God (Acts 20:22-24). The supreme sin of the church today is indifference to the lost world around her. She is too often content to enjoy her spiritual privileges, by Sunday attendance when convenient, and leave the world to go as it will on the downward way. A few are agonizing over a lost world, while the many are complacently jogging along on the smooth road of perfunctory religious living, heeding not the cries of lost souls all around them.

How can this need be supplied? Only by burning into the heart of the church a few forgotten truths of the Gospel. The first of these is, That men are lost without Christ. When we come to realize that millions of human beings all around us are already lost, because of sin, and doomed to eternal woe unless they can be persuaded to accept the salvation of Jesus Christ, we can hardly help feeling solicitous about them. The second truth is, That the church is the divine agency for this work. It is the "pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. 3:15). It has pleased God to save men through the preaching of the Gospel, and only the church can be depended upon to send this Gospel to the unsaved (1 Cor. 1:21; Rom. 10:12-15). The third trust is, That neglect of this duty will be fatal to the church herself. To dispense the Gospel is to live and grow. To withhold it is to languish and die. Grain must be scattered or it will sooner or later become musty. Sown in the field, it multiplies itself (Prov. 11:24, 25; 2 Cor. 9:6). Unless the church is engaged in saving others, she will herself perish.

How will this passion for souls manifest itself? Paul says that his desire to save others led him into hearty, faithful service and sacrifice (1 Cor. 9:19-23). The Master gave to the world a new ideal of greatness, and embodied that ideal in his own life. He came, not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many (Matt. 20:25-28). Paul became all things to all men, not by seeking to win their favor through compliance with their unworthy example, but by submitting to any hardship, any sacrifice of selfish ease or pleasure, whereby he could commend to them his Lord and Master. Though he was free from all obligations to others, according to the world's maxims, yet he made himself the servant of all, that he might win some to Christ. When the church is ready to sink self in service, and find her greatest joy in sacrifice for love of Jesus Christ, then will the world understand the true character of the Gospel, and multitudes who are now indifferent to its claims will come pressing into the Kingdom of God. May this greatest need of the church be speedily supplied, and the Church become such a light bearer as this darkened world can gladly welcome.

READING AND OBEYING THE LAW.— Neh. 8:8-18.

Memory Verses, 17, 18.

Golden Text.—Blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.—Luke 11:28.

The restoration of Jerusalem was now complete, on the outward and visible side. The temple had been rebuilt and the wall and gates had been repaired. The latter had been accomplished almost solely through the zeal and energy of Nehemiah. Nehemiah was not a priest nor a professed religious leader. His avowed purpose was to take away the reproach from Judah by building again the fortifications and giving the nation as much standing among the nations as it was possible for a conquered province to have. In this he was successful. His work was that of the practical man, the administrator, and it illustrates admirably how one who is not a professional religious leader or teacher may none the less serve the highest interests of religion.

But there was needed yet a moral and religious reformation. The very building of the wall had been made the occasion for effective exhortations to brotherly love, fraternal co operation, generous treatment of the unfortunate in the remission of interest, the return of property foreclosed under mortgage during the hard times following the return to the city, etc. The common work in which they had been engaged prepared them for further religious advance.

The reformation came now through the fresh announcement of the requirements of the law. It was to be reformation through restoration—always a popular and effective mode of presenting the appeal for a better and purer religious life, and usually an entirely justifiable one. Those who accept the documentary theory of the Pentateuch would say that it was at this time, or during this period, that the "Priestly Code" was formulated and incorporated into the older body of Hebrew law. However that may be, many of its precepts were now made effective for the first time, or for the first time in many centuries. From this time forward, the Levitical law occupied a larger and a more secure place in the scheme of religion among the Jews. The sojourn in Babylon, where they were without the privileges of Temple worship, had given them a new reverence for the word of the law. The restoration of the Temple and the rebuilding of Jerusalem gave opportunity now for a more strict and punctillious observance of the details of ritual and ceremonial than had ever before been practiced. The reformation which was carried out under the joint leadership of Ezra and Nehemiah was in part of this character.

It is worth noting that the religious revival was an occasion of joy. The people took it seriously but not sadly. They exulted in it. To them a holy day was a day of gladness. "The day is holy, neither be ye grieved." They made it a time of thanksgiving, and the feast which they now restored and celebrated took on something of the character of our Thanksgiving day. It was a time for "feasting and mirth," and a time for remembering the goodness of God to the nation. It was, moreover, a time for the revival of generosity and brotherly kindness. "Send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared."

THE CITY OF GOD.—Rev. 22:1-8.

For the Leader.

We have for our topic tonight the discussion of the city of God. We have heard much of the drift of the people to the great cities. The old home in the country is now rented, or else it is owned by some foreigner. Long since the occupants moved to town. The old folks, maybe, died in the town, but the young folks went to the city. Life was too dull for them in the county seat. The mad rush of the city was the thing they wanted. Smoke, dust, rush, cramped quarters, poor air, no vacation, poor pay, resorts, questionable acqaintances, the loneliness of the great throng, have come since the day the family broke up and left country side.

Well, tonight we can talk of a city that is not made with hands. We can think of the city that God is building for us over on the other side. Happy are we if the same desire for the city of God fills us as took hold of us when we decided to go to the great city here below. What if all men were crowding, one upon the other, in an effort to make off for the city of God? I do not mean by this an effort to die, to leave now; but an effort to get right in heart and life, so that citizenship in the city of God will be made sure for us. We are all going over the tide some day. Where are we going across that dark sea? We may say we do not know, but we do know if we will stop to think. We are not going to the city of God without knowing it. If one says, "I do not know where I am going," he is deceiving himself.

For the Members.

1. What means this vision in which the wonderful things concerning the saints are seen and told for our admonition? John, the beloved disciple, is the one who saw this vision recorded in Revelation. He was in banishment when he saw the vision. The fortunes of the church were at a low tide. The leader of the band was taken away from them. Would they ever see the light of triumph again? To assure them of this, in my opinion, this vision was given. Taken in this way, how it must change the hopes of the faithful! And if the belief that the symbols were understood by the Christians, and that they thus read in it a message concealed from the profane, be true, the book ceases to be a riddle.

2. This city is the form under which heaven, or the church triumphant, is described to us. The city of God. It was seen by the beloved as a city beautiful, coming down from God. Here is a great city. Its construction, its materials, its conditions, its rulers—all—are ideal. That is, they are as perfect as human heart can conceive. How wonderful must be the land of the blest! How beautiful must be the place where the Father reigns forever and ever! This is just what this wonderful description says to me. It was given to show the church what awaits her when she has put on the white robes of innocence. When we have faithfully kept the watches of this night of persecution, of sorrow, of trial, of temptation, and have won the victory of the faith, then we have this reign with God awaiting us.

3. Some may laugh at the statements about the river of life, the tree of life, the trees for the healing of the nations, the fruit for food, but this will not daunt the believers in the message God has brought to us concerning the other side. We do not know just how these things will be. We can not say just how our bodies shall subsist. We are not informed as to food in heaven. But this is sure: the person who undertakes to laugh these questions out of court has more daring than discretion. To say, as some do, "Why, we are to be spiritual beings," and to want that to answer all things, gives no relief. What is a spiritual being? Has it no body? Has it no means of sustenance? Has it no place of habitation? To say, "Heaven is a condition," does not answer anything. Are conditions independent of time and place? May it not be that this world, with all its parts, is a primer lesson in things as they shall be? The earth, the atmosphere, our bodies, our food, our occupations—all these things in heaven may move along much as they do here, but in what we may call ideal relations. This life is God's work. That is to be his. Is there not a presumptive evidence that he will proceed in the life to come much as he has in this life? It is this very presumption that John, it seems to the writer, takes for granted in this vision. The whole work is pitched upon the level of this view of the question.

4. Heaven, then, has not been robbed of its reality. Speak of it as real. Think of the city of God as the habitation of his children after this life. The comfort of those who are weary of the toils of this life. The dying thought of the saints. Yes, heaven, the place God has prepared for those who love him from the foundation of the world.

Into Christ.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

A man past eighty years said he wanted to be baptized, but did not know where he could find a "Hard-shell" to do it. "Would it suit your faith for you to baptize me, and I telling you I am to this day what my good parents taught me to be, a 'Hard-shell'?"

I told him we never baptized into doctrines, but into Christ, a personal Savior. He seemed very glad in obeying his Lord in Christian baptism. S. W. CRUTCHER.

Is It Doubting God's Word?

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Brother McGarvey informs us that to ask for the Holy Spirit "is to doubt the divine assurance that he who believes and is baptized shall receive the Holy Spirit," and that he shall abide "with him." If this statement is really true, then I must confess that I have "doubted the divine assurance." Now, if the Holy Spirit was a material substance and was really and literally poured into the recipient as water or milk is poured into a pitcher or jug, then Brother McGarvey's reasoning would be sound; but such is not the case, and, therefore, the promise of Jesus must not and can not be limited by any mechanical philosophy, however plausible it may appear.

Brother McGarvey actually feels the force of this promise, and tries to explain it away, but the explanation does not explain. To my mind, the whole context forbids such an explanation. In addition to this, Revelation 3:20, and more especially Ephesians 3:14-20, add weight to the position he opposes. To call up a parallel case: Gal. 3:27, "For as many of you as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ," says Paul. And, again (Rom. 6:3-6), "baptized into Christ." And yet to these very Romans he says: "But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ," etc. (Rom. 13:14). Now, according to Brother McGarvey's logic, Paul must have "doubted the divine assurance" that they had already put him on in baptism.

I wish to say again I can not accept his position, and I do hope it is not "our position" to any great extent. And yet, if any man holds it, I shall not "count him as an enemy, but will admonish him as a brother." I should be exceedingly glad if a number of our best scholars and leading preachers would express themselves on the point, now that the question has been raised. H. W. ROBERTSON.

Blackwell, Okla.

[Referring to the last statement in the foregoing, we will say that we have planned for an early symposium on the question herein mentioned, and will furnish the same to our readers as soon as the demands upon our space will permit.—EDITOR.]

AFFLICK.

Mary Snell Afflick, daughter of William and Bina Afflick, was born October 27, 1888, and died of typhoid fever, September 8, 1905. She obeyed the Gospel at the age of fourteen, and was a beautiful Christian. Her death was a crushing blow to the devoted family, and brought genuine sorrow to a very large circle of friends. E. M. SMITH.

Centralia, Mo.

MINNICK.

Frank M. Minnick was born in Wabash county, Ind., Jan. 25, 1858, and died at Spokane, Wash., Nov. 3, 1905. He became a Christian when seventeen years of age, since which time he has been active in Christian service. During the past thirteen years he gave his whole time to the ministry of the gospel, serving the churches at Corunna and Middletown, Ind., and at Anaconda, Mont. He was a preacher of more than ordinary ability, and was peerless in proclaiming the truth. Best of all, he practiced the truths of the Gospel, and was an example of holiness unto the Lord. He loved God and mankind, and was willing to make great sacrifices for the cause that was nearest his heart. He was one of the most unselfish of men. He was the soul of honor, and generous to a fault. No man who imposed confidence in him was ever disappointed. He was truly a man of God, an Israelite in whom there was no guile. The world has too few such characters; too few such are found in the service of the church. He leaves a wife, daughter, father, mother, three brothers and three sisters to mourn their loss. He was a brother of Harry Minnick, who was for years connected with the church at Lubec, Maine. The funeral was conducted by the writer in the Central Christian Church, Spokane, Wash. A. L. CHAPMAN.

Seattle, Wash.

PHILIPS.

David Philips was born near Canonsburg, Pa., March 6, 1830, and died Nov. 13, 1905. His boyhood and youth were spent in Ohio. For a number of years he taught and studied. His ambition was to improve himself intellectually. In 1855 he became a Christian. He was baptized by N. A. Walker. His confession of Christ was followed by a consistent life. David Philips was a good man. He loved the church and was liberal and constant in its support. Lord's day morning, Nov. 19, by his direction, $100 were placed on the contribution plate. He was anxious to see the mortgage indebtedness of the South Broadway Christian Church, Denver, paid. He did not live to see it, but there is now no debt on the church. Miss Mary Buchanan became his wife in 1860. In July, 1903, she fell asleep in Jesus. Brother and Sister Philips spent thirty-three years on a farm a few miles distant from Burlington, Iowa. They came to Denver in 1894. Their last years were spent in the hospitable home of their only son, Professor Homer S. Philips. The end of David Philips was peaceful. As a pleasant memory, as an example of probity to all who knew him, as an influence for good, he abides with us. B. B. TYLER.

Denver, Col.

WALTERS.

W. G. Walters, the beloved pastor of the church at Bluefield, W. Va., entered into the rest prepared for the people of God, Monday morning, November 6. The immediate cause of his death was typhoid fever and complications. Upon being told that the end was near, he replied, "I have tried to do my duty, and I am not afraid to die." Brother Walters was born in Montgomery Co., W. Va., thirty-two years ago. He was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. George Walters, who still survive him. He early gave his life to the Master. In the face of poverty and discouragement he prepared himself for his chosen work at Milligan College. During the fourteen years of his ministry he served the churches at Ronceverte, W.Va., Winston-Salem, N. C., East Toledo, O., Fostoria, O., and Bluefield, W. Va. While pastor of the East Church of Christ in Toledo, he was married to Miss Minnie McNaull, who was ever his worthy co-worker in the Master's service. At the time of her husband's death, Mrs. Walters was prostrate with the same dread disease that claimed his life. She bore her sorrow as a Christian, however, and is now in a fair way to recovery. The funeral service, in Bluefield, was conducted by R. E. Elmore, a lifelong friend of the deceased. The body was brought to Toledo for interment and a service was conducted by the writer, with other ministers of the city participating. The body was borne tenderly to its final resting place by the strong arms of the men of God who had labored with him in the Gospel. W. D. VAN VOORHIS.

Vale Mundo.

BY A. K. WRIGHT.

There's a promise of my Savior that is very dear to me.
For it strengthens and sustains me 'mid the struggle and the strife;
'Tis a scene of wondrous beauty that my soul shall surely see,
When we reach the heavenly city crowned with everlasting life.

"And the glory and the honor of the nations they shall bring."
When the storms of earth are wasted and the light of heaven's day
Breaks in glory all around us; songs of victory we shall sing
To the Leader of the legions; He's the Truth, the Life, the Way.

As I read the wondrous message from the Patmos Prophet's tongue,
And the fulness of his message tried so hard to catch and hold;
To the harp of Understanding seems another chord was strung,
As the new and deeper meaning down its length in rapture rolled.

For the "glory and the honor of the nations," don't you know,
Are the holy men and women who for Christ have lived and died;
'Tis a promise sure and steadfast they shall on to glory go,
Safely cross the stormy river, stand at last on heaven's side.

Palms of victory! crowns of glory! robes of spotless white, immortal!
Harps of gold and choir of millions—songs like voice of many waters;
Still they're coming—coming—coming—outward swings the pearly portal;
Welcome Home!" a Father's welcome—"blest on earth, my sons and daughters."

My soul, keep silence! Time is dead! Tolling!
No, the trump of God is sounding the resurrection call!
"Now gird thyself—be ready"—the clouds of heaven are rolling,
The Son of Man upon them sitting. Thou blessed Christ! My all in all!

The New England Thanksgiving.

By Gilbert Patten Brown.

While the soil of the old world is stained with the blood of the lovers of truth and human justice, the new world is made sacred by the lives of the men of Plymouth and their Christian compeers. It was in the cabin of the immortal Mayflower, as she swung at her anchor in Provincetown harbor on that Saturday in November, 1620, that it was found in the hearts of her passengers to give thanksgiving to God for his goodness. It is November 11, and we behold the first written constitution in the world, by men strong of heart and mind, as they are gathered around a little table in that unique cabin—"In the name of God, amen."

There is no day to the average New Englander held more sacred or with a higher pride than Thanksgiving.

At a recent date has been found the family Bible of William White, in which is recorded, "William White, married on ye third day of March, 1620, to Susannah Tilly. Peregrine White, Born on Board ye Mayflower in Cape Cod Harbor. Sonne born to Susannah White, December 19, 1620, ye six o'clock morning. Next day, we met for prayer and thanksgiving." We find that December 20 was not Sunday, but Tuesday. The Sunday previous, however, they had rested and held "divine worship." One narrator speaks as follows:

"So, in the morning, after we had called on God for direction, we came to this resolution, to go presently ashore again, and to take a better view of two places which we thought most fitting for us; for we could not, at this time, now take time for further search or consideration, our victuals being much spent, especially our beer; and it being now December 20."

The situation was a most critical one. The day was very cold, and in their midst was disease and starvation. For the curious reader, we quote Capt. John Smith, as follows: "After having been pested nine weeks in this leaking, unwholesome ship, lying wet in ye cabins, most of them grew very weak, and weary of the sea." They had been on the sea nine weeks.

In the following autumn there was held a "Grande Thanksgiving," the most condensed account of which can be found in a letter by Edward Winslow, dated at Plymouth, and written to a friend in England, in which he said: "Our harvest being gotten in, our governor sent four men on fowling, that so we might after a special manner rejoice together after we had gathered the fruits of our labors. They killed as much fowl as with a little help beside served the company about a week. At which times, among other recreations, we exercised our arms, many of the Indians coming amongst us, and among the rest their greatest king, Massasoyt, with some 90 men, whom for three days we entertained and feasted, and they went out and killed five deer, which they brought and bestowed on our governor, and upon the captains and others." In several ways it represented a feast of Biblical renown. The Indians were warmly welcomed. The savage of America greeted the Anglo-Saxon of Europe. The five deer killed by the natives, together with the fowl killed by the "four good shots from the colony," furnished food for the festivities that lasted for nearly a week. Games were played, athletic sports were enjoyed, and some little time was spent in military feats. The natives were much amused over the games of "stool-ball" and "pitch-ye-bar," as taught them by Governor Bradford.

The year 1622 brought distress and misfortune to the Pilgrims; crops were poor, the winter exceedingly cold, and they prayed "long and often" for their "dayly brade." The Thanksgiving of that year was also attended by several of the "most wise" Indians. We find it recorded that "a day was appointed by publick authority and set apart from all other employments," to pray to God for his favor upon an ill-fated people. The morning was a most beautiful one; the skies were clear; that whole day was spent in fasting and prayer. It then rained with "soft, sweet, moderate showers, mixed with seasonable weather, as it was hard to say whether our withered corn or drooping affections were most quickened and revived, such was ye bounty and goodness of God." It was amid these rains that Capt. Myles Standish went northward to secure provisions of the "friendly Indians." Upon his return, he brought a large amount of provisions. He also reported that the ship supposed to have been lost had been sighted. This gave great joy to the colonists. Relative to the same, we quote:

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

"Having these many signs of God's favor and acception, another solemn day was set apart and appointed, wherein we returned glory and honour and praise and thankfulness to our good God, who had dealt so graciously with us."

Each year, the Plymouth colony held thanksgiving. Passing on, we notice the arrival of John Winthrop and his associates, a very religious people. They, too, held a day of "public worship and thanksgiving."

We find that on February 22, 1630, the first Thanksgiving is proclaimed in Boston. The winter had been very cold and a hard one. Many deaths had taken place, the record of which is unknown to history. The Rev. Cotton Mather is probably the best authority of the times. He tells of one man who had invited his friends to dinner, and the only food upon the spacious table was clams. In asking the blessing at the family table, he thanked God, "who had given them to suck the abundance of the seas and of the treasures hid in the sands." All that spring, when the tides were right, they would rise before daylight, pray until it was light enough to fish, and hunt the shores for clams. One of the most charitable men of the times appears to have been Governor Winthrop, who was known to have given to a distressed neighbor "the last handful of meal," when a ship with supplies was sighted in the harbor.

Another interesting Thanksgiving service was held in old Scituate on December 22, 1636. The authority for this mention is the church record, as follows:

"In ye Meetinghouse, beginning some halfe hour before nine & continuing until after twelve aclocke, ye day being very cold, beginning wt a short prayer, then a psalme sang, then more large in prayer, after that an other Psalme & then the Word taught, after that prayer—& then a psalme. Then making merry to the creatures, the poorer sort being invited of the richer." This meeting is worthy of emulation. On October 12 following, services were conducted in the same manner. In the year 1642, Gov. William Shirley proclaimed two services. In 1746, the French fleet had threatened the colony, "a fast day of thanksgiving" was held in "ye old South Meeting-House," Boston. Thomas Prince stood up in "publick prayer," when in the language of the poet, the storm,

> "Came with mighty power,
> Shaking the windows and walls,
> And tolling the bell in the tower
> As it tolls at funerals."

Soon the "Sons of Liberty" were organized and divisions came among the churches, yet both "Tory" and "Rebel" held their annual Thanksgiving. It was in 1771 that Governor Hutchinson issued his famous proclamation, which, in part, said that he was thankful for "the continuance of our civil and religious privileges."

On November 18, 1777, the Continental Congress proclaimed the first national Thanksgiving day. We find that honorable body expressing profound gratitude that God had been pleased to "smile on us in the Prosecution of a just and necessary War, for the Defense and Establishment of our unalienable Rights and Liberties."

After the constitution had been adopted, a day was set apart, as resolved by Congress, that the people be thankful for the goodness of God. On November 28, 1789, it was voted that the last Thursday in November be set apart for a day of thanksgiving. Thus we have a national holiday for public worship. As each year came around, the day was more noticed by the members of all churches, until, at the present time, the pages of the leading magazines of the English-speaking people give space to the study of the origin of Thanksgiving, as set apart by the fathers of the movement.

The lover of the American past and the careful student of Christianity is pleased to thank God for the blessings of Thanksgiving; that on this side of the Atlantic a nation may stand for the highest type of manhood, as taught by the Carpenter of Nazareth, when the souls of men were tried.

Boston, Mass.

A Volunteer.

By "Viola."

No one would ever have suspected the Jeffreys of keeping a bank account. There was no intimation of money about the stern old place they called home. It never had been a thing of beauty, now, being old and dilapidated, it could lay no possible claims to it. Standing in the midst of the beans, cabbage and potatoes, it seemed to take on their own prosy aspect and become a part of them.

A few flowers planted about the house would probably have drawn the necessary line of distinction, but there was no time in Mother Jeffrey's life for flowers. It was all taken up with planting, hoeing and caring for the truck-patch, and most of all in peddling the things when at last ready for market. Through the long summer days she was busy, early and late; night invariably found her tired and weary.

Mother Jeffrey was a gray-haired woman of sixty, bent and wrinkled. She looked out upon the world through a pair of dim gray eyes that were seldom known to light up with enthusiasm on any subject. A widow for many years, she had known the hardships of rearing and educating, even in a humble way, her two children, Dan and Sammy.

Sammy, the younger and more brilliant of the two, had always been the pride of his mother's heart. He was a big, strong, good-looking fellow with winning ways, but with a marked inclination to shun hard work. How she had prided herself on that bright mind and strong body! She pictured him rising to some high position of honor, and coming some day to redeem them forever from the toils of the truck-patch. But hardly was he a man before he broke her heart by going off to some place unknown to them and shutting himself off entirely from communication with them. For a long while she bewailed him as lost or dead, but the mother faith was too strong to be extinguished, and ere long she found herself trusting again that he would return to her a stronger and a better man, and let the world know his worth.

After that her face grew rapidly older, and her eyes took on a cold sadness from which it was hard to arouse them. Of course there was Dan, not so tall or handsome or clever, but just plain, honest Dan, who vowed that, whatever he was, he would never break her heart by leaving her. So after that, Dan's going away was ranked among the impossibilities; but about the little farm there was the feeling that the ninety and nine had gone astray and the one lone sheep remained. And as Dan went about his work in his silent, uncomplaining way, he was thought to be satisfied with his position and attainments, but, in fact, the life was painfully oppressive to him.

In the first place, he thought the old house should be repaired, that it might be made warm and comfortable, and furnished with a few of the indispensable luxuries of life, but, no; it was met with her decided disapproval. She felt they could afford nothing beyond strict necessity. The only satisfactory plan to her was to deposit all money safely in the bank—half in her own name, and half in Dan's; consequently the house was cold, the chairs hard and stiff, the floors uncarpeted, with the exception of a single room which was never used. The kitchen was the cooking, dining and living room, especially in winter. So, when Dan longed for music, he loitered along the little brook that ran through the farm or listened to the songs of birds; and when he longed for people and the great world, he sat down and read about them in books.

One cool, autumn night, when the work was done, they sat together in the old kitchen. A small lamp burned on the bare table and threw its rays over the cleanly-swept floor and old-fashioned crockery. Dan had been trying to read a book, but, somehow, tonight his eyes kept wandering from the book to the faded cheeks of his mother; for tonight she sat, contrary to her custom, with hands idle in her lap. Seeing he was not reading, she broke the silence with these words:

"Do you know, Dan, what happened ten years ago this very night?" and her voice trembled as she spoke.

"Why, yes, this is October 27, isn't it? Yes, yes, I shall never forget it."

"Do you think he'll ever write to us or come back, son?"

"I do not know, mother. Let us hope that he will, but if he doesn't, don't you think we'll get along somehow?"

"Yes, ah, yes, but—" she shaded her eyes with her hand and did not finish the sentence.

They sat for a long time in silence, she thinking of her absent boy; he studying how he might get her away from all the work and worries of the place for a brief season of rest. Tactful enough, though, he concealed his motive by appealing to her loyalty to duty.

"Mother, there is to be a great convention over in Y—— next week, and our little church must send a delegate. Now, everybody in this place who is capable has served but you, and I think it is your duty to go this time." If he had asked her to deliver a sermon there she could not have been more surprised.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

"Me, Dan, your old mother!"

"Yes, yes, no one else, you will have nothing to do but to listen—no reports or anything of that sort."

"Ah, now, Dan, you know I couldn't do it! Folks would laugh at such an old delegate."

"No, they will not, either; if anybody does, just send them to me for a settlement."

"I could not go so far alone."

"I'll take you." There was no hindrance left undiscussed when Mother Jeffrey put out her light, somewhat later than usual, that night and crept up to bed.

The next morning, when she rose, an hour earlier than usual, to do some extra work, which she insisted would have to be done if she should go, he knew that he had conquered.

A week from that evening he helped her to pack her few plain clothes, and on the following morning they drove to the city, a number of miles away. He took her to the place where delegates were being assigned their places, and, having been satisfied that she was in good keeping, went back to his work and to the task of living alone.

As to her, it was all so new and strange that at first she felt uneasy; but gradually her fears subsided as she became aware that she was among friends, though strangers, and she composed herself to get the best out of it.

Now, it happened that this particular committee had never divined that the old and plain-looking delegates could be sent to the most uninviting places, for our old lady was assigned to one of the best homes on the list; and when she was at last stationed in what she was told was her room, it seemed that a fairy's wand must have touched her own dreary chamber and transformed it into this. Such a snowy bed, it seemed a pity to get into it. The rugs were soft to her feet and she sat down in a roomy chair which was drawn up to a little table on which were placed some cut flowers and a Bible.

"Just sleep as long as you wish in the morning; we will see that you do not miss the first service," cried the cheery voice of her hostess as she bade her good-night.

She was soon lost in deep sleep, for she was wearied with the day's bustle and travel. It seemed she had slept only a little while when she awoke to find the sun shining into her room, not so brightly as it shone down at the patch, but it was evidently time to rise.

"Must have got warmer," she said, as she missed the accustomed chill of the frosty morning, but, laying her hand on a stack of pipes, she exclaimed, "Ah, it's them!" Then there was the hot and cold water in the little bath room that opened off from her room, and she seemed like somebody else arranging her neglected gray locks in front of the long mirror.

When she at last descended the stairs, she wondered if she would be able to eat any of the breakfast, not having had a hand in its preparation; but it was an ideal breakfast, and in her own blunt way she complimented the cook without knowing it.

At last, she found herself seated in the great church, listening to the speeches. She had feared they would be beyond her, but she found that there was something in each of them that she could comprehend and take home with her. The climax of the convention came to her when a man who had been in a far-away land stood up and told his experiences among the sad people with whom he had been laboring—and then his call for volunteers! Nothing had ever touched her heart before as did that speech. She wished she were young again, just starting in life, with this vision of duty before her.

"Ah, can it be," she said to herself, "that I have lived so long, and never knew that my life might have been what this man's is? Ah, but it would seem strange to have no cows, no cabbage, no peddling, just doin' good all day long an' teachin' people about heaven!" and a little girl who was looking over the back of the seat in front of her wondered why the old lady was wiping tears from her eyes.

On returning home Dan thought his mother seemed refreshed by her brief change, as she showed more enthusiasm and interest in things in general than he had known her to do for years, but she said little about the convention or the speeches. Once he heard her remark, "I only wish I had attended a convention like that when I was a girl of twenty!"

A short time after her return home, Dan came in from his work in the field one day, to find the kitchen quiet and no preparation made for dinner, which was a most unusual thing. He began a search for his mother, looking into every room in the house, but no trace of her was found. Then, hearing a faint sound outside, he rushed out to find old Bob, the family horse, coming leisurely down the road, hitched to the peddle wagon. He nipped the grass along the wayside, and Dan perceived at a glance that he was without a driver. Then, catching sight of some form in the wagon, he ran to it, to find his mother lying unconscious there, trusting to Bob's faithfulness to take her safely home.

He lifted her carefully and carried her to the house. There being no place downstairs to put her, not even a couch, he carried her, somehow, up the stairs to her own bed, and then summoned a doctor. He soon came and, after a thorough examination, told him that it was a matter of only a few days.

Dan's heart grew sad. He wanted sympathy in his grief. He would have liked to send for Sammy, but where was he? He did not know even the state; so in the time that followed he simply sat by her side, hoping for a few rational moments. In this he was not disappointed, for once she opened her eyes, as if awakening from sleep, and, fixing them upon Dan, she said in a weak voice,

"Dan, I'm ashamed of my life; it has been a selfish one."

Dan was astonished that she should speak in this way.

"Your life selfish, mother?" he said. "No, no, it never was."

"Ah, yes, my boy, it has been selfish. I've thought so ever since the convention. Listen, Dan, I always thought I'd save the bank money for use in my old age, but, Dan, I'm not goin' to get much older. I won't need it. I'm goin' to give it to the missionary society. It ain't much, I know, but it's the best I can do."

Dan looked at her in surprise. Was her mind wandering? Were they the words of a delirious woman? She seemed perfectly sane and reasonable. He thought of the struggle it had cost them to save the thousand dollars—five hundred apiece—and never thought she would give hers up so easily. He laid his hand on her brow and said:

"You are better, aren't you?"

"Dan, I'm in earnest. Go, get it from the bank and send it. I want to give it and see the receipt with my own eyes while I live. Go, go, my boy."

He found that nothing else would satisfy her, so he started on his strange mission at the greatest possible speed, wondering whether there would be time to receive a reply from the society.

He reached the bank almost breathless, and told his errand. He stood aghast and sickened when he learned the truth. There was no money in the bank in his mother's name. Sammy had presented a check, on the previous day, for the full amount, signed by his mother.

"Ah, Sammy," he cried, "you broke our hearts by going away, but we never would have believed this of you! It is forgery. But mother shall never know it."

When he came forth from the bank his face was white, but not because he had sent his own little store off as his mother's gift. He hastened home and told her that he had complied with her wishes, and that he hoped the receipt would come soon. Ah, how long the time seemed! After all, what if it should come too late? But at last it did come, and when the letter of acknowledgment was read to her, she seemed eased and quieted by it. Then a sadness came over her as she said,

"If it could only have been my life!"

Dan looked about the comfortless room and out upon the dreary truck-patch. He thought of the years of hardship and toil, and then said,

"This money is your life, mother."

"My life! No, no, the boy is my life. If it could only have been the boy!"

"Mother, your boy has resolved to lead a better life, to try to be what you want him to be."

"Ah, do you know about him, then?" she said, eagerly.

"Yes, all about him."

A smile passed over her face, and then she seemed to go far away from him.

"I am happy," he heard her say.

He had not intended to deceive her, but he never had the heart to tell her that he had meant only Dan.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

The Advance Society.

Artelle Pierson, Des Moines, Ia.: "Is there room for two more members in your wonderful Advance Society?" (Of course there is; I'll ask Flossie Davis to move over.) "If so, just count in mamma and myself, hereafter." (Flossie, please move over!) "For many years we have read the children's page of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and enjoyed in succession all the stories" (it must have been just like an education to you) "and we have come to think of you and of the Av. S. as old friends" (but not too old, let us trust). "So we are confident it will be a pleasure to be with you." (Speaking of being with me, reminds me of Felix; I'll tell you about him, presently.) "Now you don't need tell the Av. S. rules this time, for I really think you would get tired of reciting them so many times. We are interested in Charlie and Drusie, the orphan and the missionary. And now, just two questions: Will any kind of history do? and since I have read Enoch Arden, Lady of the Lake, Evangeline, Hiawatha and Snow Bound, what poetry would you suggest to begin with? Mamma's full name is Mrs. Estell Pierson." (Any history will do except the one you and your mother are studying in school. The text book from which you recite every day to your teacher doesn't count. As for poetry, ever read Lucile, Bitter Sweet, The Princess, As You Like It, Rape of the Lock or Maud?)

Mrs. S. M. Gibbins, Cora, Idaho: "Enclosed find money order, 50 cents, which divide equally between dear little Charlie and our self-sacrificing and faithful missionary, Drusie Malott. May the loving Father bless her. And little Charlie—how my heart goes out in love and sympathy for him! I was much interested and not a little amused when reading of his summer's vacation. The Av. S. is doing a wonderful work."

New Honor List: Henry Asbury Stevens, Akita, Japan (6th, 7th and 8th quarters); Lillie Fisher, Dunlap, Mo.; Sadie Pugsley, Woodbine, Ia. (2nd); Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo. (8th); Mrs. F. A. Potts, Chattanooga, Tenn. (18th); Grace Everest, Oklahoma, Okla. (3rd); Beulah Shortridge, Glenwood, Ind. (7th); Flossie Davis, Des Moines (5th).

S. A. Seat, Hematite, Mo.: "Enclosed find 50 cents for our missionary, Drusie Malott. How does Felix like his new home?" Jasper Donalls, Newburg, W. Va.: "I am not writing to join the Av. S., but to respectfully inquire if Felix is satisfied with his change from Missouri to Arkansas. How did you take him? Did he stay?"

Just before we left Plattsburg, Mo., we got us a little box and nailed strips across the front, and put Felix behind the bars of his cage. Then we fastened a strap about the box so you could carry it like a valise. Felix was very indignant, and developed a new and unearthly kind of scream that did not sound respectable. We took him to the station, and when the train came that we were to leave on, Felix was put in the baggage car. Twenty girls came to the station to see us off, for most of my life had been passed in Plattsburg, and it was hard for them to believe I was going away, and they wanted to see it with their own eyes. As the train was late, they had a lot of fun making scissors (you cross two pins and put them on the track and let a train run over them and mash them together), and one of the little girls hurt her hand and had to have turpentine put on it, so we had a real good time, and they gave me their pictures to carry away with me, and all the time Felix was yowling and clawing at his cage.

At Kansas City we had to drive across the city to change stations, and after getting on our second train, Felix was a good deal subdued, so we risked carrying him in the palatial and luxurious chair car with the rest of the family. At four in the morning we had to change cars again, this time at Pittsburg, Kan., and Felix began to protest again, usually when the conductor was approaching. But my father found that by sticking a finger through the slats and rubbing the cat's back (he couldn't get more than a finger through) the yowling could be instantly checked. Two hours later we had to change cars again, and when we landed Felix on his fourth train, he had apparently resigned himself to fate. An hour or so later, we had to change cars again, now at Rogers, and by this time Felix was beginning to pluck up heart, and take a dazed sort of interest in his new life; for when my father would poke his finger through the slats, he (I refer to Felix) would slowly hump up his back to meet the touch of friendship half way. At last our cat was at the Bentonville lodging house, where we stayed several days till our house could be made ready. That evening we kept the old gold captain still boxed, but the next, we turned him loose in the room. He didn't say anything—just looked about in a half-interested way, and blinked his eyes at the fire. The way he drew his tail under him and crouched on it seemed to remark, "Well, if this is the delightful Arkansaw climate you were talking about, I don't believe it is half so rainy and cold and dismal in Missouri, and I wish I were back home, as far as I am individually concerned." Then he sneezed and crouched closer to the fire. We took him out in the yard several times, so he could learn the way, and he glared at the red ground and sniffed at it as if he imagined it some sort of raw meat. That night, after the rest of the family had gone to sleep, Felix crept from the house, and what he did and what he saw, you will have to ask him. So when he didn't come back the next day or the next, we bade him farewell. When we wrote our letters back home we told about Felix getting here safe, but we stopped the story there. We knew they would tell they hadn't believed he would stay, and that they would laugh and chuckle in a superior sort of way, and say something about practical common sense, etc. There's no use going to your friends for sympathy, for that's what they want from you.

At last our house was ready to move into (how quick that looks in print!) and we were ready to leave the lodging-house when, on that very last morning, here comes Felix, with burrs all in his hair and ears and tail—and even ticks, if you will excuse me for mentioning a species of the animal kingdom that is so unpleasant unless looked upon from a scientific point of view. How far over the Ozarks toward Missouri he had gone, I do not know, but he had certainly worked up an Arkansas appetite. I think the reason he could not find Plattsburg is because we had changed cars so often that it was confusing. Of course he could go to Rogers and maybe to Monett, but I doubt if he could get along very well in Kansas, being such a Democrat. Anyway, he has stayed right here at home ever since. Sometimes the sun shines and then he stretches himself in it. And when the climate is in its normal condition, he lies by the fire, or crawls under the porch and crouches with a deep, far-away gaze in his eyes.

When I left Plattsburg, Miss Sallie Alexander and Susie Scearce's mother each gave me a dollar for our orphan and missionary, and Mr. John Grayson gave me another five-dollar gold piece for Drusie. Since reaching Bentonville (where you will please address me) a five-dollar bill has come from one who does not want his name mentioned. I am bothered about our orphan. He is a good deal older than any orphan in the St. Louis orphanage, and it is a problem what to do with him, until he is old enough to make his own living. He is now fourteen. As he has but one leg and must go on crutches, of course he can do no hard physical labor. He wants a business education. The friends of the Av. S. have never sent in enough money to anything like pay for Charlie's board. I have saved up some, hoping to apply it on his education, but I don't know whether it can be kept or not. I am putting the problem before my readers. Have any of you a suggestion? I am not asking help for a boy who is able to rough it and make his own way, but who, until he has some sort of an education, is quite powerless to help himself. It is just barely possible that some of you know of a home that would take him in and shelter him for a time. Do let me hear from you all, and if you have no solution to the difficulty, even your expressed interest will help a good deal. I am sending another five dollars to Drusie. I could send ten, but fear there may not be any next month; besides, it is all the better if we can keep a little ahead. "A Week With the Woodneys" will end before Christmas; then we will want a lot of your letters to print; let everybody write to me—tell about what you are doing and reading, and what you think we can do about Charlie.

The friends we find, wherever we go, make us realize how much Charlie needs a home-place that he can look upon as his own. How cheerless to go through life with no spot made sacred by love! When we reached Bentonville some of the first people we met asked us about Felix. Some had even heard of me. Our guests asked to be shown the old gold captain, and, while he despises strangers and would slink away from company if he could, being so unlike the rest of the family in this respect—he has shed his hair on a good many whom we had never heard of before. One lady made us a present of a delightful little Angora pussy, thinking it would be company for Felix, and believing us so fond of cats. Angie mewed as regularly as the tick of the clock, and never stopped mewing except to eat. When Felix discovered Angie, he began to growl just like a dog. Then he walked to the door and said very plainly, "The world is wide. I do not have to live in Hackensack. Angie, or I, will have to go!" We paid no attention to Felix, but fed Angie to stop the mewing. It was wonderful how so small a beast could eat so much. It gulped down bones and all. My father named pussy after a preacher of whom he is very fond. He called it Pink. He was fond of the kitten, that is why he called it Pink; not because the godfather (I believe that is the proper connection) is an exceptional eater. Now that I think of it, though, Brother Pink does like good things. But who does not? Felix marched outdoors, still growling, "I do not have to live in Hackensack; one of us may go." By "Hackensack" he meant Arkansas. But it was raining outdoors, of course, raining on the red ground. So he slunk in and growled a deeper threat. The next day Angie, or Pink, was gone. As there was no fur, or bloodstains, I think it was what the lawyers call and you will learn what is the "power behind the dough." In the high-class powders it is cream of tartar, extracted from clean, delicious grapes, and that is healthful. In the low-grade powders it is "phosphate alum," or "sodium aluminum sulphate," which is also alum, a mineral acid, and that makes the food unhealthful.

Of what use are twenty-five ounces for twenty-five cents, if eight of these ounces are alum?

Food baked with alum baking powders is found to contain a portion of the alum unchanged!

The continued use of alum made food impairs digestion, causing dyspepsia. When buying baking powder, examine the label and take only a brand whose label shows it to be free from alum.

a peaceable ejectment. I am not very well up on legal terms, but I think peaceable ejectment will express it nicely. Since then, Felix has been a little more domineering with us than usual, and a little more impatient of our guests; but he reigns supreme, and takes down his Arkansas mice with a gusty relish.

Current Events.

Congress. The Fifty-ninth Congress assembled for its first (or long) session on Monday of this week. It is again pertinent to remark, as it has often been remarked before, upon the undesirability of so long an interval between the congressional election and the meeting of Congress. The Congress which is now assembling was elected thirteen months ago at the time of the presidential election. Enough time has elapsed for very considerable changes in political opinion and still greater changes in the issues which are foremost in the public mind. As a matter of fact, there have been no serious changes in this case. In the general election of 1904 the issue was Mr. Roosevelt. So overwhelmingly did his personality dominate the campaign that the platform became a relatively minor matter. A great majority of the Republican candidates for congressmen were elected not because they were Republicans, or because they were personally popular in their districts, but because they were on the same ticket with Mr. Roosevelt, and the Roosevelt enthusiast was too exuberant to do anything but "vote 'er straight." The present Congress contains more surprises than any of recent years. For example, the boy of twenty-four, who is not old enough to be constitutionally eligible to membership in the House of Representatives, who defeated the veteran Mr. Vandiver without making a campaign and after accepting the nomination only to accommodate the party and because he had nothing to lose by being beaten; and the young Bohemian bookkeeper who utilized his spare hours, without giving up his fifteen-dollar-a-week job, in making a campaign in a hopeless district in Chicago. Then there are some surprised patriots who accepted Republican nominations for Congress in Missouri and found that their self-sacrifice had been rewarded in the most unexpected way. Perhaps, after all, thirteen months is not too long a time to permit some of these successful candidates to recover from the shock of amazement at their own election.

The Republican majority in this Congress is rather too large to be handled easily. Party discipline breaks up in the presence of a top-heavy majority. The circumstances of the election, however, and the fact that so many of the members of the House owe their election to Mr. Roosevelt, ought to make it relatively easy for the President to get what he wants from that branch of Congress at least. The Senate is always a less tractable body, but even there, in spite of the President's attitude of open hostility to those especial interests which are so dear to the senatorial heart and so closely allied to the senatorial pocketbook, there is apparently an unusually generous disposition to support the administration.

Railroad Rate Bill. The President will not simply call upon Congress for legislation looking to the regulation of railroad rates, but he will cause to be introduced a bill embodying his wishes on this subject. The bill has been prepared and it will be introduced early in the session and will doubtless form the chief staple for discussion throughout most of the session. It represents a collaboration between certain members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the friendly members of the Senate committee, Attorney-General Moody and Secretary Taft, the latter as the President's particular representative. The bill is in the form of a series of amendments to the Interstate Commerce act of 1887. Among the points included in it are the following: It extends the jurisdiction of the Commission to include not only the railroads themselves but also those secondary agents of interstate commerce, such as private car lines and refrigerator transit companies, which have hitherto served as safe and irresponsible media for doing those things which railroad companies were not permitted to do. It enlarges the power of the commission by empowering it to make rates to take the place of rates which it finds to be unjust and unreasonable, to alter freight classifications, and to determine what allowance is to be made when the shipper furnishes any of the instrumentalities of transportation which are usually furnished by the transporting company. An important provision is that rates made by the Commission shall be valid for only one year, the assumption being that at the end of that time the play of natural forces will have restored the rate to a proper and equitable figure, and that if it has not done so the Commission may take the matter up anew. The purpose of this clause is evidently to prevent the rate-making power of the Commission from having a cumulative effect by which, in the course of time, the whole schedule of railway rates the country over would be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Insurance. "Keep up your life insurance" is the advice of the New York legislative investigation committee. Before adjourning for its Thanksgiving recesss, the committee issued an address to policy holders, warning them against panic on account of the revelations of the investigation. The following words are used in the message:

"Do not allow your policies to lapse on account of anything revealed by this investigation.

"Policy holders are in a better position now than before the investigation began and their position ought steadily to improve as our inquiry proceeds.

"The legislation we shall recommend will undoubtedly safeguard and strengthen the rights of policy holders, but those who suffer their policies to lapse will lose the benefit on what has been done already, as well as what we hope to accomplish.

"No sacrifice now ought to be made by policy holders, and patience and courage for a short time yet will not only prevent loss but enable the committee to render the best service to the greatest number."

The resignation of the McCurdy family from the Mutual, including Richard A. (father) as president, Robert H. (son) as manager, and Louis A. Thebaud (son-in-law) as general agent for New York, is one of the gratifying circumstances of the past week.

Mr. Lawson's Appeal.

Mr. Thomas W. Lawson is making a strong appeal to policy holders to send him their proxies and give him absolute power of attorney to care for their interests in an enforced re-adjustment of insurance matters. Mr. Lawson has contributed some very interesting and important magazine articles, and has done his share toward causing the general shaking-up in circles of high finance. For this we are duly grateful. We do not think he is a fakir. But he has not as yet demonstrated his possession of those qualities which would make a safe and suitable person to entrust with plenary powers for the reorganization of American life insurance or even to maintain the interests of a large number of policy holders. We would not expect any gross and palpable betrayal of trust at his hands, for such a course, after all the publicity he has had, would bring upon him a degree of obloquy for which any amount of financial profit would be but poor recompense. But one might reasonably anticipate that the principles of sound and conservative finance might be sacrificed for the sake of some spectacular coup whose ultimate advantage to the policy holders would be inconsiderable. We think policy holders will do wisely not only to keep up their insurance but to keep their proxies in their own hands.

The Sultan as a Nuisance.

The Sultan is the great international nuisance. He is worse even than President Castro. In the matter of sheer genius for getting at odds with all civilized powers, probably neither of these worthies can claim pre-eminence over the other, for each exhausts the full measure of his opportunities. Castro depends more on swagger and Abdul Hamed more upon duplicity and procrastination, but that is merely a matter of method and technique, and in such matters all great artists have their personal idiosyncrasies. Castro's policy is to threaten the whole visible political world, and all its armies, navies and airships, with instant destruction if they oppose his will, and then to side-step and subside when they do oppose it. The Sultan's method is to promise and procrastinate, to regret injuries and repeat them and promise again, and to make good only when the fleets of the European powers begin to show their bows around the corner of the Dardanelles. This is what is happening now. The Sultan has failed to comply with that portion of his agreement with the powers regarding Macedonia, entered into about two years ago, which has reference to the financial affairs of that province. The powers insisted, the Sultan resisted—in his usual polite and dilatory way. The warships were sent. The papers began to be full of pictorial and statistical representations of the strength of the fortifications along the Dardanelles. They are very respectable and modern fortifications and the strait offers one of the finest natural positions for defense in the world. Then the word came that the Sultan had yielded the point, and the ships will go home again. The Sultan reminds us of a boy shooting firecrackers and holding each one in his fingers with spluttering fuse until the latest possible moment before throwing it so that it will explode harmlessly but noisily in mid air. Some day the Sultan will hold his firecracker a fraction of a second too long and there will be an explosion with disturbing results. It is hard not to hope that such will be the case. But up to date he has shown only the highest skill in letting go at the last moment before danger begins.

Russia.

The situation in Russia is too dark to ignore and too uncertain to describe. The past week has witnessed the outbreak of industrial and revolutionary strikes with redoubled fury, and the rising of mutinies in the army and navy to the point of the utmost seriousness. The strike has effected a stoppage of telegraphic service so that southern Russia, the seat of the worst disorders, is cut off from St. Petersburg, and St. Petersburg is cut off from western Europe. Reports which came just before the communications were broken told of a terrific crash at Sevastopol between the mutineers and the loyal forces, resulting in a large number of fatalities, estimated as high as five thousand. It is reported that Moscow, the ancient capital and the true heart of the Russian empire, is in the hands of revolutionists after a bloody struggle, and that St. Petersburg itself is the scene of even more threatening demonstrations than those of a few weeks ago. For fuller reports we must wait until the telegraphic lines are open again. Lewis Nixon, who had an interview with the Czar the other day, states that he does not seem at all alarmed or worried, as the press reports have asserted, but that he seems calm, confident and cheerful. To which we can only reply that if the Czar is not worried, he ought to be. Of course it is gratifying to know that he is not in hysterics, but the ruler of a realm in Russia's present condition who can be cheerful and contented, is exhibiting not courage but a complete inability to grasp, much less to master, the situation. The task to which Count Witte set himself—namely, to create in place of the autocracy a government with as large an element of freedom as the people were fitted to receive and to win the popular confidence for this government—was one of tremendous difficulty from the first. Every disorder, every strike, every revolutionary and mutinous uprising has made it more difficult. Such events as those of the past week render it almost impossible. Almost, but not quite. There is yet hope. Nations are not born in a day, nor are national problems of the first magnitude solved between two issues of a daily paper, or even of a monthly magazine. Have we forgotten that our own problem of reconstruction kept us busy for many years and that some of us behaved very badly when matters were most acute? Let us be patient with Russia.

Football Reforms.

It begins to appear that the football obsession, at least in its present form, has reached its climax. Never before, since the game came into prominence and popularity, has there been such urgent demand for its reform or abolition. The indictments against it fall under three general heads: First, that it is brutal; second, that it is demoralizing to the colleges by reason of the great importance attaching to it in the undergraduate mind; third, that it is the occasion for various forms of dishonesty and grafting to which even the college authorities are in some cases suspected of being parties. To meet the first criticism, various changes in the rules of the game are proposed, such as Walter Camp's suggestion that the side with the ball be required to make ten yards in three downs. The purpose of this and other like suggestions is to make the play more open and prevent the heavy mass-plays. The statistics of the game show, however, that there are more injuries in open plays than in mass-plays. The latter look more dangerous than they are; the former are often more dangerous than they look. But in any case, reforms which have in view only the reduction of the number of injuries do not touch the second and third classes of criticisms. These are a much more serious matter. They have to do with conditions growing out of inter-collegiate athletics, which might be found in connection with any game but which in fact are most noticeable in football contests. Columbia University has solved the problem by prohibiting football as a "brutal and abominable game." One of the officials of that university declared it hopeless to expect reform from the athletic associations. "You might as well trust the cooking of a steak to a cage full of lions." (Perhaps the lions could be trusted to prepare the steak to suit the taste and needs of lions.) The University of Pennsylvania is sending out to the colleges of the country a series of suggested changes in the rules. Chancellor McCracken, of the University of New York, is calling a conference of eastern college presidents, which President Eliot of Harvard has already declined to attend on the ground that college presidents are not competent to discuss football. Anti-football ordinances have been introduced in the city councils of Boston and Chicago. The question is up. It ought to be kept up until some amelioration of present conditions is attained. Meanwhile the following statement of evils, by President Thwing, of Western Reserve University, puts in trenchant summary the adverse side of the case:

> "Among the evils of football, as now played, are danger to life and exposure to injury; temptation to fraud in making up teams; temptation to betting; temptation to brutality; enthusiasm becoming so great as to become a form of hysteria; disadvantages to the scholarship of some players; too great frequency of games; inability of athletic associations to handle properly large sums of money; the public exhibition of young men who are primarily students; reports in newspapers giving false interpretations and false impressions of college value."

The Holiday Season.

"Coming events cast their shadows before." Christmas is one of those events whose coming is looked forward to for weeks and months before its arrival. It breathes its spirit of kindness and good will through the preceding and the succeeding weeks. It is in recognition of this fact that The Christian-Evangelist issues its holiday number somewhat in advance of Christmas as a herald of its near approach.

It is no marvel that the coming down of the divine into the human, and the union of God and man in the person of Christ, should be the signal for a new era in the life of mankind, the keynote of which should be "peace on earth and good will among men." Just in proportion as God enters into human life does the spirit of good will and fraternity prevail among men. It is a blessed thing for the race that during this Christmastide men become more distinctly conscious of the meaning and significance of the incarnation, and the spirit of mutual kindness and of good will diffuses itself through all ranks of society. It is a prophecy of the better day coming when love shall triumph over hate; when the Golden Rule shall succeed the rule of gold; when peace shall prevail between nations and classes, and men shall learn war no more. We believe that each Christmas season, in the revolving years, finds us nearer to that glorious era.

Meanwhile, this spirit of kindness is manifesting itself in many ways. On the larger scale it is bringing the nations and sections into closer bonds of sympathy, and is drawing religious people of different names and creeds into closer unity and fellowship about him at whose birth was sung the heavenly carol, "Peace on earth and good will among men." In smaller ways it is now busying itself in the preparation or purchase of gifts to be exchanged between members of the family, and between friends and kindred. But this spirit, we are glad to say, does not confine itself within the limits of the family, or of kinship, or of friendship. Thousands of poor, neglected ones will receive benefactions from the kind-hearted which will give them a little of the joy of the Christmas-time, and make them feel that they, too, share in the benefits of a gracious providence and in the good will which came into the earth with the Christ-child. The children in our homes and our Sunday schools should be taught the blessedness of giving of their good things to the poor and destitute children who have little or nothing to brighten and cheer their young lives. The sweetest joy that is going to come to any of us this Christmastide will not be in the gifts we receive, but in those we bestow from a loving heart upon the needy and friendless poor who now, as of old, we always have with us.

Blessings, then, on the busy brains and toiling fingers which are at work in odd hours on little tokens of love and good will which will gladden alike the hearts of the givers and the recipients! May it be a season of joy and gladness to old and young resulting from mutual efforts to gladden and happify others! May the spirit of greed and miserliness, together with the spirit of hatred and strife, of envy and jealousy, be banished far from the abodes of all our readers, and the spirit of brotherliness, of peace and good will prevail among all!

"Passing of the Boss."

The "Christian Worker" of Pittsburg has a good editorial under the above title in which, after referring to the overthrow of certain political bosses at the recent election, it speaks of the same spirit having entered into Christianity, and predicts that the "boss-elder" has reached the end of his reign, and that henceforth those who fill the office "shall be humble, consecrated men, far more interested in the enlargement of the church than in the enlargement of their own power." But the end is not yet, according to the "Worker." It adds:

> "The editorial boss has about completed his course. The very egotism of it! The assumption that any man or any paper is the guardian of all pure teaching and that any departure from this measure is to be branded! Well, we are getting over it. The fulminations against this or that form of heresy don't scare any more. The average member is coming to his own and gradually these dictators of sound doctrine are being dethroned.
> "There is one source of pure doctrine. Each one has the inalienable right of reading that one book and finding out for himself. No one is under any obligation to use the filter of any editor or religious newspaper. It is gradually coming to the minds of average Christian thinkers that going to certain ministers and studying certain books and federating with other religious bodies do not incapacitate men for thinking soundly and living purely. In other words, the day of dictatorship as to what constitutes sound doctrine is over and these bosses are losing their jobs."

Gradually, it would seem, we editors are being shorn of our privileges and prerogatives. Formerly we had pretty free access to the railroads, but that has been cut down to a minimum. But we consoled ourselves that we were at least the sole guardians of the ark of the covenant, and "defenders of the faith." Now, however, it appears that this power is slipping from our grasp, and that we are not to be permitted any longer to tell the brethren what they shall believe and preach and practice, nor to lord it over God's heritage, calling missionary secretaries and college professors before our tribunals to rebuke them and otherwise regulate affairs generally. What is the use of being an editor, anyway, nowadays? One might as well be "the Czar of all the Russias, issuing daily manifestoes ceding away royal prerogatives, and being a mere figurehead, as to be an editor in these degenerate, democratic days, when the people are asserting their right to think for themselves!

But we are resigned to our fate. There remains one greater privilege than that of being boss, and that is to serve. "He that will be greatest among you, let him be servant of all." We editors are now going to strive to be the greatest by seeking to be servants of all. We see no other course left for us.

"On This Rock."

Never was the true foundation of the church more gloriously vindicated and exalted than in the recent Interchurch Conference in New York City. When the delegates to that gathering came to look about for some broad, immovable foundation upon which they could all stand and upon which they could unite in co-operative movements for the world's betterment, they found nothing else, and wanted nothing else, and needed nothing else, than Jesus, the Christ, who became incarnate and was crucified for us men and our salvation, and who rose again from the dead for our justification to die no more forever. No other personality in all the world's history possessed the magnetic and attractive power to draw around him the broken and scattered forces of a divided church. No other banner than that which has upon it the name and the cross of Jesus Christ was deemed adequate as a rallying center for the Christian world.

This was history repeating itself. When our fathers, nearly a century ago, determined, with God's help, to lift up the banner and plead for the unity of God's people, they found there was no other name given under heaven among men whereby a divided church could be united than the name of Jesus Christ; that there was no other banner but that which bears the star of Bethlehem, that could guide the church out of the wilderness of denominationalism into the glorious unity and liberty to which Christ had called it. Therefore, discarding human creeds, names and practices, they went back to Jesus Christ, "the church's one foundation," and on him made their plea for Christian union. Now that the sentiment of union among Protestants has become strong enough to compel some action looking toward closer co-operation, and representative men look about once more for a basis of such unity, they also find it in Christ Jesus, our common Lord and Master, and in him they agree to co-operate for the accomplishment of all those aims and objects which can better be accomplished by united than by separate action.

What if we do not all yet see alike as to some of the requirements which Christ makes of those who would be his followers? Is it not certain that those who take him as Lord and Master and follow his leadership will come to see, eye to eye, in all things essential to unity and co-operation? So we believe, and therefore we greatly rejoice at the outlook before the church. Never did the day of Christian unity seem so near at hand to us as it does today. We have only to "follow on to know the Lord," in order to see what great things he will accomplish in and through his church which he loved and which he sanctified by his own precious blood. It will be remembered by those familiar with our early history that the Campbells and those who stood with them did not know, when they adopted the principle of reformation, where it would lead them. Those who seek to follow Jesus Christ can not go far wrong.

A Unitarian Missionary.

Rev. Minot J. Savage, D. D., of Boston, Unitarian, has preached a sermon on "The Federation of Churches and the Unitarians," in which he fully justifies his name. The dark picture of Christendom which Dr. Savage draws, outside the Unitarian fold, is truly distressing. Evangelical Christians, he says, believe that "all the people that have ever lived on this planet during the last three hundred thousand years, at least until the past six thousand, are in hell." And what is worse, they were all damned because they did not believe the doctrine of the trinity as formulated in the creeds! So Dr. Savage tells his congregation. And this "metaphysical, unchangeable, cruel, hideous, immoral creed," he charges us with believing, who are not Unitarians! For once the Doctor seems to feel a spark of missionary zeal, and exclaims: "Let us go to work as never before to civilize and educate America!" It would really seem that those holding a creed so "cruel, hideous and immoral" need regeneration as well as education and civilization. But let that pass.

Now, we gently suggest to this Unitarian Doctor of Divinity that he and his brethren begin their mission work in a small way in one of the slum districts of Boston, and furnish an object lesson to the world of the power of Unitarianism to lift fallen men and women out of the depths of their degradation into the light and liberty of sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. It will be time enough then for them to lay their plans for the civilization and education of America, beginning on such barbarians as Bishop Vincent, Bishop Power, President King, Bishop Doane, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Dr. Roberts and other leaders of the conference!

No fair-minded person denies that there are many noble characters—even reverent and devout souls—among Unitarians. Nor will it be denied by those capable of judging that they have rendered genuine service to the cause of religion and of moral reform. It must be said, however, that those who have rendered any service, in a constructive way, to Christianity, have received an inheritance of truth from the past which is not characteristic of the modern radical type of Unitarianism represented by the speaker we have quoted. There is no reason why, in all movements for civic righteousness or in behalf of moral and social reform, Unitarians should not co-operate with other good people for promoting the world's advancement; but when it comes to a question of Christian union—union in Christ—for distinctively Christian work—that is another matter, and one in which modern Unitarians have little in common with those who accept the deity and lordship of Jesus Christ.

Against the extravagant utterances of Dr. Savage, we quote the wiser words of another Unitarian, Rev. F. A. Hinckley, of Philadelphia:

> "I think the action of the conference is all right. The evangelical churches believe in common in the divinity of Jesus Christ. The Unitarian Church does not. This federation is a move toward greater unity among the churches who believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ. And to my mind it is a very commendable thing, as is every movement toward greater unity which does not sacrifice principle. But if the Unitarians should come in there would at once be a difference on the one point upon which it is possible to have general unity among the so-called evangelical churches."

Notes and Comments.

We are informed that after the meeting in New York City of the committees of Free Baptists and Disciples with a view of effecting a union, a similar meeting was held between the committee of Free Baptists and the committee from the Baptists, having the same object in view. Writing of that meeting, the venerable Dr. Ball says: "For sixty years I have been laboring and praying that light and love might break down the barrier at the Lord's table. I have been well aware of great changes among Baptists in this respect, but was not prepared for the declaration which they made that close communion, or prohibitory communion, among the eastern, western and northern portion of the denomination was practically dead, and a matter of the past." The committee of Baptists "declared that they were not only ready to enter into organic union with us, but anxious to do so, and hopeful that such a step would quickly lead to a like union with the Disciples. A basis of union was quickly and heartily agreed upon." An attempt to formulate a creed statement was overruled, and "a basis was adopted which in substance declares that all the old conditions have passed away, and that no doctrinal or practical obstacle now exists in the way of organic union between the two bodies." It now remains for the two bodies represented by the committees to endorse this basis of union for it to become effective. We are sure our readers will rejoice with us at its consummation. We believe it entirely practicable for a union between either one, or both, of these two bodies and the Disciples of Christ to be effected on a similar basis in which faith in Christ and personal allegiance to him, shall take the place of any creedal statement. We trust our committee of twelve will keep in touch with the committees of these two bodies to ascertain if such be not the case.

As the Editor was passing through a corner of Kentucky a few days since he purchased a copy of "The Louisville Courier-Journal" and found that it contained a strong and vigorous sermon by our Bro. E. L. Powell, in which he made, as it seemed to us, a most effective reply to Editor Watterson's recent stricture on the ministers of that city for their participation in the recent elections. The editor, in a recent editorial, had lectured the preachers for "dabbling in politics," as the phrase goes, and the sermon was a strong assertion not only of the right but of the duty of a minister of the Gospel to declare the truth of God as it bears on the moral issues presented in political campaigns. He urged no claim for the right of a preacher to use his pulpit for the propagation of any merely partisan view on current political issues. It is only where the great principles of morality are involved that he claimed the right of the preacher to voice the will of God as he understands it. To the same effect as Mr. Watterson's editorial is an address which a friend sends us on "Church and Politics," by Hon. J. O. Trout, of Ohio, growing out of the election in that state.

We are likely to hear a great deal during this period of ethical revival in politics and business about keeping religion out of these secular affairs, and about the duty of preachers to stand aloof from these struggles. But as long as the preacher has the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount on his side, he may rely upon the support of all good citizens in his application of these truths to current political conditions. A partisan he must not be; but a prophet of God, speaking forth the will of God to men who have been trampling the principles of righteousness and justice under their feet, he must be, if he is a true preacher. One of the most impressive features of the recent Inter-Church Conference in New York City was the utterances it was able to give in behalf of our Protestant Christianity concerning some of the great moral issues of our time. There was not one of these resolutions that was not carefully weighed, both in a subcommittee and then by the whole committee of forty, and every phase and bearing of it throughly discussed, so that we do not believe there was an utterance that transcended the limits of such a representative conference speaking in behalf of justice, righteousness, peace, and the moral welfare of mankind.

* * *

The Secretary of our Centennial Committee has already reported some of the chief things accomplished by the recent meetings of the committee at Cincinnati and Pittsburg. As has been announced W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg, has accepted the position of Secretary of our Centennial work, and will be the leader of our propaganda for the next four years. A strong executive committee located at Pittsburg will look after the details of the campaign. The call is for a movement along the whole battle-line. Never was there greater need for united action on the part of all our missionary, educational, and benevolent organizations, our preachers, our press, and our Business Men's Association, to accomplish a memorable work in behalf of a great movement. Let no discordant note be heard in all our camp. Let personal ambition, and all self-seeking be remanded to the rear. If there be differences between missionary organizations, colleges, or newspapers, let them be settled privately, or by any tribunal agreed upon for that purpose. Let us present a united front to the world, the flesh, and the devil. Let us for once give an illustration of the kind of unity we are pleading for, in our joint efforts to accomplish the great ends outlined by our Centennial Committee. This object lesson in itself will be worth more than all the tracts we could write on the subject of unity.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair was in the city of Pittsburg at the last writing, participating in the closing up of the great down-town union meetings in connection with their simultaneous evangelistic campaign. The closing union service in the Nixon theatre where fifteen hundred of the new converts sat together on the main floor to partake, some of them for the first time, of the Lord's supper, was an impressive spectacle. To hear of fifteen hundred converts having been converted in a series of meetings, is great, good news; but to stand in front of them, and look into their bright faces reflecting the new-found joy in Christ Jesus, is an experience which one is not likely soon to forget. It was worth while to be in even at the close of these great meetings to catch the spirit of the workers in this great campaign. It was the most successful campaign, perhaps, which we have ever held, and for this reason we give considerable space elsewhere to a report of it. It was not without splendid local leadership, co-operation and the liberal use of money that this success was achieved. One can not walk its busy streets without being impressed with the tremendous wealth and commercial greatness of Greater Pittsburg. Here will be the scene of our great Centennial Rally in 1909. For the next four years it will be the center of our Centennial activities under the splendid leadership of Brother W. R. Warren who, at the sacrifice of his own personal plans, has accepted this responsibility and has already entered upon his work. To him all eyes seemed to turn as a leader in this great concerted movement among the churches.

Why is it that some people can endure affliction, be misunderstood, bear heavy burdens, and yet esteem their lot joyful and bear their sacrifices not only with resignation but even with joy? One who can live such a life must be able, by imagination, or, if you prefer it, by faith, to put himself beyond the fleeting, changing scenes of mortal life, in the realm of the spiritual and eternal, and look back from that lofty height upon this present world with its transient joys and sorrows, and see that the value of this life is not in its enjoyments and pleasures, its honors and its rewards, but in its power to build character, to develop the nobler qualities of one's personality, and fit him for a life that is eternal because it is ideal. No one sees this present world and his relations to it in the right light, until he sees it in the light that shines down from that other world which is spiritual and eternal. Those who, by lack of faith, shut out the light from that other world, and see only this present material world, are sure to fall victims of their lower nature and to live on the lower plane of life. It is well, therefore, to accustom ourselves, in every great problem of duty which confronts us, to ask how this matter would look as seen from above, when our present life is ended and we look back upon it from that world where mere material gains, earthly honors, and fleshly satisfaction do not count. How it would ennoble and dignify all our lives if we could live them in the light that shines out from the eternal world, reflected on the pages of Holy Writ and seen in its perfect beauty as it shines in the face of Jesus Christ!

The intuitive recognition of the divine by the human soul is perhaps its most wonderful endowment. Some souls are more highly endowed with this power of intuitive perception than others, but all possess it in some degree. One of the most striking illustrations in the New Testament record of this innate power to instantly recognize the true and the divine is the case of Nathanael. He had been having a season of meditation under a fig-tree whose thick foliage perhaps furnished him the needed seclusion from the world. Perhaps he was thinking of the coming Messiah, of whom he may have heard rumors that he was come. It is certain that he was engaged in religious meditation, and no doubt there had come to him a blessed experience in this communion with God, for a better knowledge of whom he had a deep longing in his heart. Soon after this his attention was called to Jesus of Nazareth, as the true Messiah, by his friend Philip. Nathanael received the announcement incredulously, asking, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Instead of arguing the mattter, Philip had the good sense to reply, "Come and see." When Jesus saw him coming he said, "Behold, an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!" "Whence knowest thou me?" "Before Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig-tree, I saw thee." "Nathanael answered, Rabbi, thou art the Son of God; thou art King of Israel." How long it took some of the other disciples, and how long it has taken many another soul since that day, to reach the conclusion to which Nathanael leaped at once by the power of intuition! He seemed to feel instinctively that one who knew his inmost thoughts and his secret communion with God, could be none other than the Son of God.

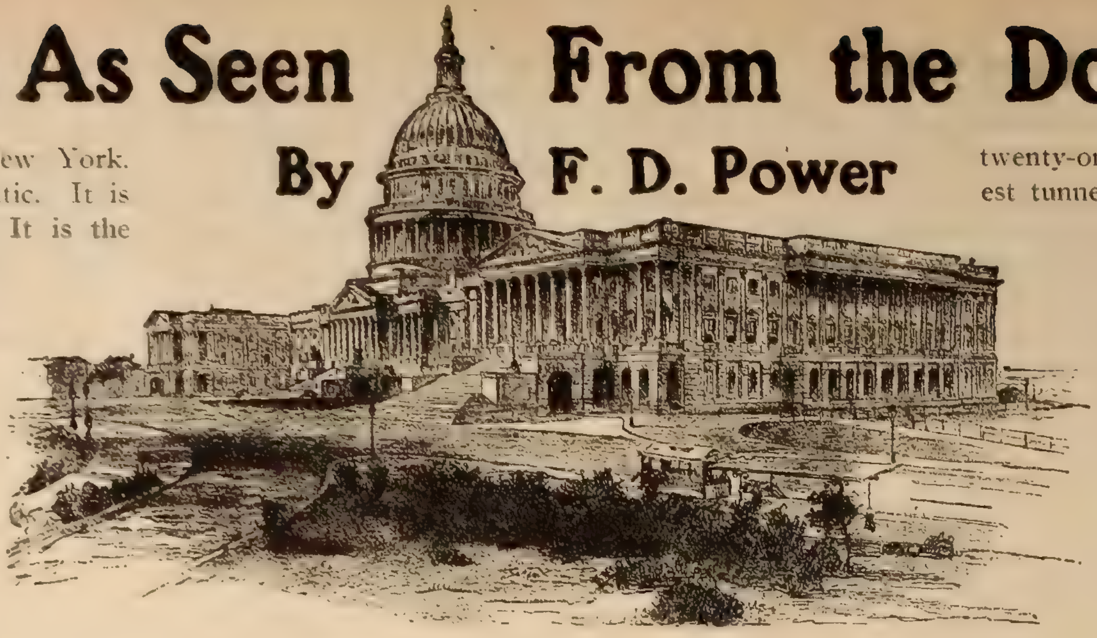
But we hear our readers saying: "We have no time in this busy, bustling age, for such fig-tree experiences as that of Nathanael. The day and much of the night is taken with our business, our household cares, and our social obligations and enjoyments." We know how true this is and "pity 'tis, 'tis true." We are sure that no one is prepared for the exactions of this busy life and is able to mingle in social intercourse with others with profit to them and to himself who does not spend a few moments each day in the quiet of his own reflections where he can think of his relation to God and the spiritual world, and of his obligations to his fellow men. It is in these quiet moments when the soul waits upon God that it gathers strength and spiritual vision for the difficult duties and tasks of life. To deprive ourselves of such an experience is to greatly impoverish our own souls and to incur frightful risks of being drawn away by the temptations and allurements of this present world from the path of highest rectitude. When we read of this or that church member falling in the snare of the devil, to the discredit of the church and of Christianity, we can not help thinking that if they had only taken time to meditate upon their course, and judge its moral character in the light of Christ's life and teaching, and to have questioned their own hearts as to their tendencies they would not have fallen a prey to temptation. There is much meaning in the hymn we sing: "Take time to be holy." That is exactly what time is for. It is a time when every Christian should examine himself, look well to his foundation, and watch with the carefulest scrutiny the tendencies of his life, whether they be upward or downward. And especially should one ask himself whether he, by what he is, and by what he is doing, is justifying the confidence which Jesus Christ has placed in him, in calling him to his discipleship and in entrusting him with sacred duties and responsibilities.

* * *

We are approaching the holidays. These ought to be holy days. They are often the very opposite. Why should the season which we associate with the coming of Christ into the world be often given to revelry and to excessive indulgence in eating and drinking? They should indeed be days of gladness and of good cheer, of innocent amusements and mirth, in the home and in our social intercourse; but this is no reason why they should be marked by excesses and indulgences which afterwards will bring sorrow rather than joy. The Easy Chair wishes all its ever-growing circle of readers great happiness in their preparation for and anticipations of the approaching Christmas. It enters heartily with you into all the innocent joys and hearty good will which belong to the season. It would heighten rather than lessen the genuine happiness of the Christmastide. For this reason we would have every pleasure we propose for ourselves, every entertainment we give or participate in, every gift we make, tested by the spirit of Christ to whom we are indebted for all the joy and blessedness of the season. Let it be a time of burying old enmities, of cultivating good will toward our fellow men, and toward all living things. Let us determine that some home or some individual heart shall be made brighter and happier by us during this Christmas season by some manifestation of friendly interest and kindly care. Let us not spoil our children by the miltiplicity of our gifts to them, when there are so many homes where there will be no Christmas cheer. We may rest assured that our homes will be the happier if we can make some other home happy by anything that we can do or give in the name of Christ. So shall we honor Christ and help fill the world with the joy of that sweet refrain of the angelic song, "Peace on earth, and good will among men."

New York As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power



Everybody is interested in New York. It is the metropolis. It is gigantic. It is potential. It is overwhelming. It is the biggest aggregation of capital and labor and people in the hemisphere. It has 40,000,000, only one city in the world exceeding it in population, and only four states in the union going beyond in the number of people. It is only 280 years old, and it is advancing with seven league boots, flowing over in all directions, and taking in everything, hundreds of thousands from the old world, and the best of all the brains and skill and wealth of America. It costs $100,000,000 a year to run its government, and it has over a thousand churches to look after its morals, and even then there is an occasional cry of "Graft!" and "Boodle!" and sin and need.

With the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST I left the City of the Dome and in a little time—a few hours' journey—we caught a vision of the steel sky-scrapers. The sky line is not an attractive one as we cross the ferry from Jersey City. The city appears as an irregular jumble of cubes. There is nothing just like it in the heavens above or in the earth beneath. The steel frame or cage is like a bridge set on ends and makes the sky-scraper possible while the elevator makes it usable. Some of these buildings go down to a depth of seventy or a hundred feet below the city streets. The Park Row building is thirty-one stories high, the height from the walk to the top of the towers is 390 feet, and from foundation to flagstaff, 552 feet, or the height of the Washington monument, and the cost of building and land was $4,000,000. It has 2,000 windows, 1,000 offices and 2,500 tenants, and its ten elevators carry up 8,000 people a day. The "Prow of Civilization," or the Flat Iron Building, Broadway and Fifth Avenue, shoots up to the stars and looks as if at any moment it might topple and crush thousands in its downward course. Lower Broadway is a canyon instead of a street, and one can but wonder what an earthquake would do if let loose in the metropolis. Still they are going higher. They tear down a ten story and thrust up a twenty story in its place, as in the case of the Plaza hotel, which cost $3,000,000, to erect on its site a building that cost $10,000,000. Such hitching of wagons to the stars is not to be seen anywhere else in all the world.

With our St. Louis man, eager to see something in the shape of a town, we hurried around the end of the little island and landed at the Brooklyn Bridge. Here is one of the wonders of the world, spanning the East river. Cæsar's pons asinorum, or the bridge over the Forth near Edinburgh, or the suspension structure over the Father of Waters can not hold a candle to this mighty bit of engineering. It was begun in 1870 and opened in 1883, and cost, with later alterations, the neat little sum of $21,000,000. John A. Roebling designed it. He met his death when they were starting it, and Washington, his son, succeeded him, who was injured in one of the caissons, and then from a window in Brooklyn watched with a telescope the details of construction, and, aided by his wife, completed it. Thousands of cars cross it daily, and in a single year, 1897, they carried over it 45,000,000 passengers. Up to '97 they had taken across 515,000,000 with only one fatal accident. The next trip I took with my St. Louis friend was over the new bridge, the Williamsburg bridge, "the Jews' Passover." This was opened a year ago. It is forty feet wider than the other, cost $20,000,000, and is bearing its part in the solution of New York's greatest problem—the problem of transportation. When we remember the surface and elevated cars of the city carried in 1889, 60,831,757 persons, and in 1890, 190,024,848, and in 1901, 550,610,435 and on a single day—"derby day"—1,200,000, some idea of the transportation problem may be formed. My friend was specially interested in the subway. He even went so far as to make this one of his Sunday studies between sermons. The subway is a jewel; clean, commodious, well ventilated and well lighted, where one sits at ease and thunders along at the rate of a mile a minute under great churches and palaces and skyscrapers for twenty-one miles, the longest tunnel, I believe, in the world. It cost $35,000,000. The city paid it and leased the road to the contractor, John B. MacDonald, for fifty years. In many places and for great distances the way is blasted through solid rock, sometimes more than 100 feet beneath the surface. Under the Harlem river the tracks are carried in great cylinders of steel tubes encased in concrete. It is a wonderful way, this subway. It helps mightily in the matter of transit. I stood on Broadway and Wall street at 8:30 in the morning, and the people swarmed up like ants out of the ground, as they poured in streams from the elevated and swept up from the ferries through the side streets in great floods. They can move now, in all ways, about 2,000,000 a day; yet the people multiply as rapidly as the means of transportation are multiplied. The flying machine is imperatively needed. The Pennsylvania Railroad tunnel under the Hudson and East rivers, which costs $50,000,000, is going to be a help, but when we remember 20,000,000 passengers arrive annually at the Grand Central Station, and the Erie, New Jersey Central and Staten Island Ferry bring 35,000,000 more, and there is no end to the folks that come through other channels, we see what a problem New York has on its hands when it shall number, as it soon will, 15,000,000 of souls.

I lost our St. Louis brother in Wall street. It would not be fair to intimate that he was interested in stocks, though I saw him at the exchange, and I heard him saying something about "Union," "Federated," "Consolidated," "B. & O.," etc. Wall street is one of the fascinating spots in the great city. It is in a sense the heart of the continent. They called it after the wall which old Peter Stuyvesant built in 1563 to protect New Amsterdam. The wall went two centuries ago, but the name survives. Facing it on Broadway is Trinity Church, above the top of whose spire tower the skyscrapers. It is a restful thing to drop into the old church, or stroll among the quiet tombs with all the din and rush surging without. Here are the subtreasury and the custom house and the chamber of commerce. Here is a little room in a single bank building which has in it one billion of dollars, and a small clearing house hard by which perfected exchanges in 1905 of $96,000,000,000. Here, on one side, is Newspaper row, with the great buildings of the great dailies which are among the mightiest forces in our civilization; and here, on the other hand, is the Battery, where the streams of immigration from all the rest of the world, save China, have poured in with a mighty tide. The Irish in the city number 275,000, enough for the police force of the whole land. The Russians and Poles are 200,000; the Germans are 325,000. Half a million a year are coming in, and New York speaks fifty tongues. I took one of the new city ferry boats and went down to spend the night with a friend on Staten Island, past the statue of Liberty and down to the Narrows, where the ships come in, and this lower part of the city and the busy bay, with their millions of lights and their bewildering traffic, make a scene long to be remembered, all light and color and motion.

The last I saw of my friend from the little provincial town beside the Mississippi he was trying to make himself at home in the great Waldorf-Astoria. New York is a city of great hotels and flats and boarding and tenement houses, not of homes. The greatest of these is on Fifth avenue, from Thirty-third to Thirty-fourth streets. No doubt it is the largest and most luxurious inn on the planet. William Waldorf Astor and John Jacob Astor put about $12,000,000 in it. It has 17 floors, 40 magnificent public rooms, and accommodations for 2,500 guests, and it is always full. Guests often pay from $100 to $200 a day for rooms, exclusive of meals; and the royal suites have brought $500 a day. And some rich folks pay here $100 to $150 a day the year around. There are 1,512 employes, and the annual pay roll runs over $1,000,000. They use 20,000 plates a day! We had 2,000 people there, at our little supper, and they did not seem the least crowded. Our St. Louis editor found room enough to stir around, and, after eating generously, said: "I will now speak to Mrs. Waldorf, and tell her I have had a pleasant evening, and go!" And that was the last I saw of him in the great city. I have reason to believe he escaped its perils and returned in safety to his western village.

New York is one of the best cities on the globe. Its moral and religious forces are mighty. It cared for the great conference in a most liberal and hospitable fashion. It has educational and charitable and religious institutions on the largest scale. It has single churches that give as much for home missions as the whole brotherhood of Disciples through their general society. It has schools and colleges and libraries and churches and chapels and hospitals and missions and settlements and good men and good women without number. It is not the New Jerusalem, but it is a great study and a splendid force in our civilization.

My Impressions of the Inter-Church Conference on Federation

By W. T. MOORE

It was difficult to form a just appreciation of the Interchurch Conference on Federation while it was in session. The atmosphere was so interpenetrating during the sessions of the conference that one might have been excused for expressions of sympathy which would not probably be entertained when away from the environment of the great speeches that were delivered. I preferred, therefore, to wait a few days before stating my impressions of the conference. I now think I can deliberately write down some of the impressions I received.

First of all, it is my deliberate conviction that, when considered from the point of view which the conference represented, it was, in many respects, the most notable gathering of Christians that has ever taken place in the history of the church. Nearly all the Protestant churches of the United States were represented in the conference. It may be true that all these representatives had not been officially chosen by their respective denominations, but in an important sense it cannot be doubted that the men who were there as delegates were, for the most part, representative men of their respective churches. All together they represented about eighteen millions of professing Christians, and this of itself is a startling fact. Some of us who have been pleading for Christian union for more than half a century could scarcely believe our own eyes and certainly our ears were bewildered with what we heard on the platform of that conference. It is true that the speeches were, in a large measure, from certain points of view, contradictory of each other. It was curious to note the different views of the union question which were presented. Some of the speakers heartily deplored the divisions of Christendom and made as earnest a plea for Christian union as was ever presented since the Church of Christ was divided; while others contended earnestly that the present divisions are all right, but these divisions should not hinder the "unity of the spirit in the bond of peace." While these different aspects of the union question were discussed with the utmost freedom, there was not a single note that did not vibrate toward a better understanding of the relation of Christians toward each other.

The following summary will indicate the main points of the impressions which I received:

1. The speeches, considered as a whole, were among the best I have ever heard on any platform in this country. Only in England have I heard them excelled. From every point of view the addresses were admirable.

2. The right spirit was manifested throughout the entire conference. Every man spoke his sentiments with as much freedom as if he were speaking before a conference of his own church. There was not the slightest disposition to interfere with the fullest liberty of expression.

3. The plan of federation which was finally adopted was, upon the whole, a noble deliverance in view of the present divided state of Christendom. It was more than could reasonably be expected when all the facts are taken into consideration.

4. The aim of the conference was not to effect Christian union at once, but undoubtedly it was a step in the right direction. For more than twenty years I have been pleading for a working basis as the true starting point for Christian union. We have long been discussing our differences, but while doing so we have been increasing the divisions of Christendom. Is it not time to begin at the other end of the line? Let us work together, and maybe, after a while, we will get nearer in our theological standpoints. Jesus said, "If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not, but if I do, and ye can not believe me, believe me for the works' sake." May we not try each other by the same rule? If we do not the work of Christ, then we can not ask other religious bodies to believe in us; but if we do his work, though they can not believe in our theological systems, they are bound to believe in the work we do. This is the true starting point, and when we believe heartily in each other's work the difficulty of settling our theological differences will be immeasurably decreased.

5. There were some objectionable features, which were perhaps inevitable with this first congress. In arranging the program there was no just proportion in the distribution of the speakers. Some of the religious bodies were represented more largely than they deserved, while others had slight recognition. For instance, the Disciples of Christ had only two speakers and one chairman on the program. However, we could afford to take a back seat in such a conference. It was perhaps well that those of us who have been pleading for Christian union as no religious people have done should be very scantily recognized on the platform of such a conference. We were simply delighted to hear those who, in former days, were bitter opponents of the very things Disciples have been contending for, committing themselves thoroughly to the principles of Christian union. Disciples can afford to wait. Indeed, it may be a wise policy on their part to occupy a somewhat back seat in the present movement for federation. Let others now do the work which Disciples have so auspiciously started.

6. Some of the resolutions passed at the conference may be justly criticised. However, resolutions by such a body are usually very perfunctory things. They are supposed to be necessary, but are scarcely ever heard of after they are passed. Except for this fact I would have taken strong objection to at least two of the resolutions which were passed—one relating to the Congo Free State and the

The Good Shepherd

By J. H. Jowett, M. A.

"I am the good shepherd."—John 10:11.

Where is the expositor who would not stand before this great and glorious word with feelings of almost utter impotence? The simplicity of the figure only increases the difficulty of the exposition. It is in unveiling the beauties of these marvelous simplicities that we so miserably fail. We are embarrassed by the abundance of our wealth. When I had meditated long upon the wonderful passage, and scarcely knew where to begin as guide to my people, I took down one of John Calvin's volumes from my shelves. John Calvin is far and away the most helpful commentator I have in my study, and every week he is to me a strong minister of enlightenment and cheer. But even Calvin seemed to fail in unfolding the glories of this word. And so with Augustine, and so with Westcott! When I had consulted them all I came back to the rich word, and felt that the beginnings of the evangel had scarce been told. So I can only pick out from the abundant riches one or two of the inspiring and consoling messages, and offer them to you as bread for the soul. Here, then, is the track of my thought: We have life through sacrifice; "I am the good shepherd, the good shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep." We have peace through intimacy: "I am the good shepherd and I know mine own and mine own know me." We have union through unity with the common head; "I am the good shepherd . . . and other sheep I have which are not of this fold . . . and they shall be one flock, and one shepherd."

We have life through sacrifice: "I lay down my life for the sheep." These words are repeated like a refrain. Three or four times there comes this solemn chime: "I lay down my life for the sheep." Now mark that the sacrifice of the Lord is a deliberate choice. "No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself." Our Savior came to die. He would have died had he never been crucified! The means of death is subordinate, the primary factor is that he died at all. We are perhaps too much limited in our conception by the wood and the nails and the spears. These are incidentals—almost accidentals; the great matter for you and me is that he died. If men had never put him to death he would have died. Had he died upon a bed the essential wonder would have remained unbroken. Whatever men had done or not done to him, I think he would have passed through the night of dissolution and awful abandonment, even though he had been surrounded with the comfort and support of earthly friends. "I lay it down of myself; no man taketh it from me." The never-ending marvel, in which we find the very secret of our redemption, is that our Savior deliberately died.

And the sacrifice is vicarious. "I lay down my life for the sheep." There was something the Lord passed through, passed through once and forever, something awful and unspeakable, in order that we might never share it. We Christians shall never die as he died. Our material bodies will wear away and cease, and they will be carried over the well trodden way to the cemetery. Men will speak of us as having died. But we shall never die as our Savior died. There was something in his death which his followers will never know. "He that believeth in me shall never taste death." My soul; come not thou into that secret!

From the Painting] "THE GOOD SHEPHERD." [By Frederic Shields.

And the sacrifice is complete; "It is finished." He died unto sin once. No other sacrifice is needed. No more altars are required. The service of priesthood is over. The great offering for me has been made. "It is finished."

Now see this wonderful conjunction. In verse eleven we read these words: "The good shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep." Contrast this word with the evangel of the tenth verse: "I am come that they may have life!" The Lord lays down his life that I may gain life. He not only lays down his life that he may take it again, but he lays it down that I might take it again. In the strength and efficacy of his sacrifice there is life for all the sin-consumed, guilt-burdened, habit-crushed souls in God's defiled and fallen race. A corn of wheat dies; the multiplied seeds are the germs of life for all the race of woman born. "I give unto them eternal life." It is the gift of a germ—infantile, undeveloped, immature. It is a gift that makes us "babes in Christ"; all our senses are still weak and unexercised. But the evangel pours out its wealth in richer measure; "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." The babe is to grow. He is to acquire finer discernment. He is to clothe himself in larger powers. He is to reach out in spiritual apprehension and comprehension. The initial germ is to receive multiplied accessions of life. The powers I have are to be unspeakably enlarged. New powers are to be given unto me. The growth will continue through ages and millennium, and in every succeeding accession I am to put on something of the glory of him who redeemed me. We have life through his sacrifice.

We have peace through intimacy. "I am the good shepherd, and I know mine own, and mine own know me." In this mutual knowledge we have the secret of a profound and fruitful rest. The finest peace is to be found where there is the richest communion. Take the fellowship of husband and wife. The communion is so real that the spiritual commerce proceeds even in silence. It is a rare restfulness that does not require the assurance of speech. Husband and wife can sit in delightful communion, and yet no word pass between them. As they walk along a country lane their fellowship is unbroken, even though it be not helped by speech. Each can say of the other: "I know mine own and mine own knows me." How different it is at a social party, where mutual knowledge is not so rich and deep! What little devices we create in order to "keep things going"!

A season of silence is regarded as a peril, and at all costs and by any means things must not be allowed to drag. When the soul knows the Savior there is a delicious and understanding silence. "Be silent unto the Lord!" This privilege of beautiful intimacy is the glorious secret of rest. The restfulness is deepened by our firm assurance of the Shepherd's strength. "None shall pluck them out of my hand." He knows when the wolf is near. He knows the power of the wolf. "I know." And because he knows, and is able to meet the approach of my foes, "I will fear no evil." That is the peace of perfect confidence, the peace which is born only of a saving knowledge of redeeming grace. And so we can sing as we sang in our childhood, and with meaning that has only deepened with the years:

"Jesus is our Shepherd,
Wiping every tear;
Folded in his bosom,
What have we to fear?"

And we have communion by a common devotion to the Lord. "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold." Yes, he has other sheep in other churches. He has other sheep outside the churches. He has other sheep in lands remote, among the tribes which have their home amid the Polar snows and among dense populations which roam the wastes under tropical suns. "Other sheep I have. . . and they shall be one flock.' How are we to find our oneness? There are two great characteristics of the Lord's sheep: "My sheep hear my voice," they have a sensitive listening of the ear; "and they follow me," they direct their feet into ways of obedience. An old Puritan has very quaintly said that the Lord's sheep may be recognized by their markings on the ears and the feet. They listen eagerly to the Shepherd's voice. They harken through intermediate voices for the Shepherd's tones. They listen with inquisitive ear that through the preacher's voice they may hear the calls of their Lord. They listen through the whisperings of nature in order that they may catch the voice of the great Eternal. Everywhere they incline their ear with great intentness, listening for the Shepherd's call. But the listening ear would be futile without the obedient feet. "They follow me." They are always ready to answer the call with devotion and sacrifice. "Their feet are shod with the readiness of the Gospel of peace." Now wherever we find a man who listens to the voice of his Savior, and who inclines his feet unto the Lord's testimony, we have one of the great Shepherd's flock. And the only real hope of union is to be found in the common possession of these cardinal characteristics. Where all are listening, and all are following, the sheep will know one another, as members of a common flock. The spiritually-minded will recognize the spiritually-minded as they gather eagerly around the one Lord.

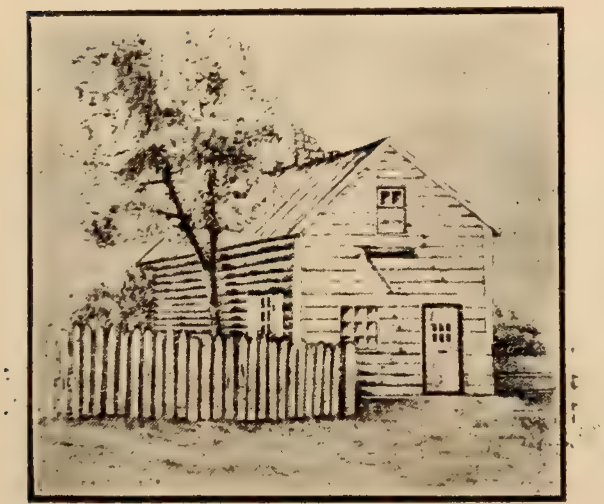
"Was there ever kinder Shepherd.
Half so gentle, half so sweet,
As the Saviour who would have us
Come and gather at his feet?"

A Western Declaration of Independence

By James Stephen Compton

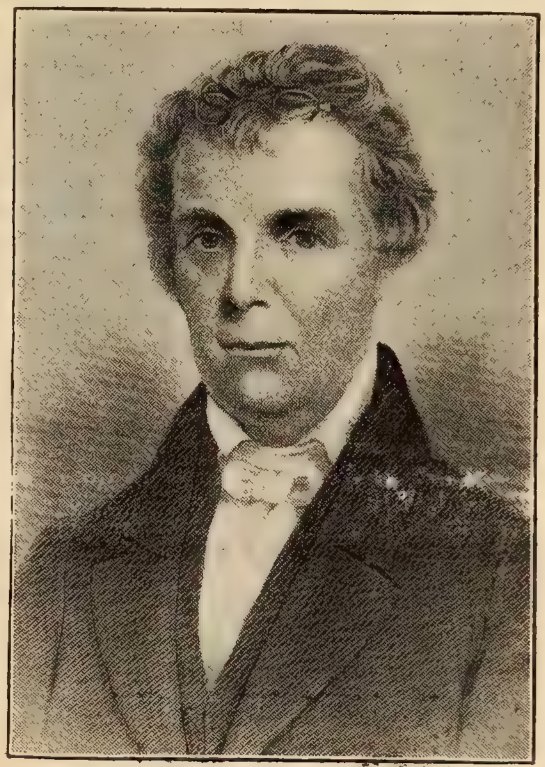
Revolutions come in pairs. Hutton and the peasants at the dawn of the Reformation were better students of the human heart and its purposes than Luther with all his study in cloister and cell. They saw him throw his challenge into the face of the Romish despot, and the courage shown struck a responsive chord in their beings; but when they, inspired by his example, rose against the lords temporal as he had done against the lords spiritual, instead of aiding them he turned away in disgust and shame. Blinded by the half truth he had found he turned his back upon the dazzling brilliancy of the whole truth, and German Protestantism was left to work its way to the light as best it could; he did not see that religious freedom without its political counterpart was as unthinkable a phenomenon as daylight without the sun.

The religious revolution in England was more fortunate; there were periods of advance and reaction, but each forward movement carried the nation one step nearer the light; sometimes the political phase was predominant, at others the religious; but whether Elizabeth or Cromwell was at the helm of the ship of state the general course was onward. The secret of the difference lay, doubtless, in the fact that the leaders were not only not antagonistic but were often mutually helpful, either unconsciously or from choice.



Brush Run, the first church of the Restoration movement.

In France the Huguenots were put down with a strong hand by the Bourbons; the cities lost their most industrious population; the nation lost its stable middle class upon which it must rest in every time of turmoil and testing. The coming of the revolutions was postponed by St. Bartholomew, as its planners intended; but, postponed, its accumulated force gave it those elements of terror and inhumanity that have made it the wonder and the horror of all the years that have come and gone since the French revolution. The liberal, freedom-loving spirit in the nation, denied its rational expression in Protestantism and constitutional liberty by the linked hands of Versailles and Rome, when once its shackles began to break, flew far away into the vagaries of atheism and the barbarities of anarchy.



BARTON W. STONE.

Cromwell and his compatriots settled their share of the perplexing problems that confronted them, but many of the most important were left to a new generation of men born and reared far from the dwarfing shadow of cathedral and throne. A vast waste of tossing waters separated the American colonists from the home land where their brethren for the most part still slavishly followed puerile precedent and vapid antecedent; but geographical barriers are not the strongest walls of partition, the love of freedom and disregard of the conventionalities of life that come from the struggle with the wilderness made the colonists a new race with a fresh view point from which to study the great problems of the time.

'Seventy-six came and went: Yorktown, then the treaty of Paris; the political revolution had been fought and won. Church and state were divorced; the first forward step had been taken in the New World. The leaders told one another that the last word had been said on the subject of human liberty, that the molds for the civilization of the future had been set. Like Luther, they could not see that it was not the last word that had been said on the question of religious liberty, but the first; the heavy hand of the government was lifted from the hearts and consciences of men: but the power of priestcraft remained untouched.

Cane Ridge Church.

Perhaps the most marked indication of the one-sidedness of the work done in the late political upheaval was the atheistic propaganda of Thomas Paine and his fellowworkers, or better, fellow scoffers. The patriotic stand for liberty that these men had taken before and during the war had won for them not only attention but much sympathy and support; the land listened with respect while they unfolded to the public the advantages of un-religion as professed and practiced by the Red Republicans of France. For a time the new movement swept all before it. To godly men who loved their country with a love only second to that they gave their Lord, it must have seemed that the first fruits of the tree of liberty in the New World were to be, not a refined and quickened faith in the Power that had brought them through the dark days of the revolution, but the Dead Sea apples of unbelief and infidelity. The closing days of the eighteenth century were indeed full of gloom; catechisms and creeds were revised to suit the needs of the times; after all was done priest and people had to acknowledge themselves defeated in their attempt to check the progress of the tide.

As the statesmen of the Atlantic seaboard taught the mossbacks of Europe some great and needed lessons in statecraft, so it remained for a band of disciples in the great region beyond the Appalachians to show their distressed, anxious brethren along the Atlantic the cause of their failure, and with the cause, the remedy. Truly "Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes."

In our zeal to do justice to the influence of the Puritans upon the religious development of our country we too often overlook or ignore the elements contributed by Old Virginia and her children. In 1792 a band of people from the Old Dominion, led by their pastor, Robert Findley, came into Kentucky and settled at Cane Ridge, Bourbon county. It was as true a religious migration as had been that of Thomas Hooker of Hartford (Connecticut) fame; zeal may not have manifested itself in quite the same manner as in New England, but it was there just as strong and just as true.

As soon as the men of the little settlement had built them houses to shelter their families from the weather, they came together and erected a church; and hard by it, near a spring, an academy where the studious youth might learn the elements of the ancient languages and theology. For some reason Findley became discouraged and left his flock in a few years and the members of the church called to the pastorate one Barton W. Stone, a young minister just out of college. The change was a happy one; under Stone's ministrations the band increased in devotion and spiritual culture as well as in numbers.

On the third Sunday in August, 1801, a revival broke out at Cane Ridge which became in a remarkably short time the wonder of the whole region round about; for ten days it continued, sometimes as many as twenty thousand people being in attendance at divine services at once; three or four preachers spoke at the same time from as many rude pulpits under the trees. The resources of the new country were rather limited at best, so this influx of strangers tested their hospitality to the utmost; but Cane Ridge responded nobly to the call, feeding, lodging and caring for the temporal wants of the visitors as best it could during the earlier part of the meeting. So great at last became the strain upon the community that food supplies gave out and some of the visitors were compelled to go away hungry.

There was no talk of "methods" or "means of reaching the masses," but plain, soul-searching preaching and personal work by men and women to whom religion was a real, vital thing. To the man who had walked forty miles to attend the meeting, Thomas Paine and his teachings were so insignificant as to be beneath contempt; in the cities might be found persons who would still care for finespun theories of a life and a world without a God, but here, under the spreading trees of the wilderness, the very surroundings told of the One from whom all life has come and back to whom all life will go at last. In the solemn aisles among the trees serious faced men spoke the message with fervor to a waiting people till the thoughts of heaven and the eternal destiny crowded out all else.

With the increase of religious feeling came strange sights. To quote from an observer: "Many, very many, fell down as men slain in battle, and continued in an apparently motionless and breathless state. . . . They would rise shouting deliverance, and then would address the surrounding multitude in language truly eloquent and impressive." The women were also affected; the hysteria or whatever it may have been that accounts for the phenomenon, was called "the jerks" by the people generally, from the peculiar actions of the persons under its influnce. To quote again from an eyewitness: "When the head alone was affected it would be jerked backward and forward, or from side to side, so quickly that the features of the face could not be distinguished. When the whole system was affected, I have seen the person stand in one place and jerk backward and forward in quick succession, the head nearly touching the ground before and behind. The long hair on the heads of the women would snap like a coachman's whip, only not so loud."

Denominational barriers fell before the spirit of the meeting. Calvinist, Arminian, Pedobaptist and Anabaptist with one accord worked for their fellows who had never known the Lord, caring not for the triumph of sect or sectism, but only that the souls of men might be saved for the Master of all. Hands hard and knotty with the struggle with the primeval forest, were raised in prayer; hearts that had known all the fierce passions and griefs incident to the wresting of the land from savagery and desolation, all the isolation and privation of the frontier, voiced their desires before his throne. From the crest of the wave of feeling generous souls looked over into the land of promise where sects are no more and all believers are one; with the glimpse came the resolve to work to liberate the minds of men from the oppression of priestcraft and bigotry.

The "jerks" and other evanescent phenomena passed with the revival; the interest in vital religion remained. God had visited his people; the generous uplift of the meeting was the leaven that was silently working to prepare the way for the new dispensation in which there was to be no priest nor layman, all were equal before his face. In June, 1804, came the aftermath of the revival, when the Cane Ridge church, under the leadership of its pastor, Stone, threw off all ecclesiastical shackles, renounced all human creeds, cast aside all human names for the name "Christian," and took the Bible and the Bible alone for their only rule of faith and practice. Paine and Owen had met their peers, not among the learned prelates of the east, but in this little band of backwoodsmen of central Kentucky.

Priestcraft fought the new movement with all the bitterness that is born of sectarian rancor and disappointment, but the free air of the new land worked with and for this last revolution, the fairest of them all. Out from the rolling uplands of the Bluegrass went men stalwart and firm in their conviction that men are equal in the church militant as well as in the church triumphant, out into the rapidly growing states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Missouri, buoyant with the apostolic faith, preaching the apostolic doctrines, reaping apostolic harvests. With every new migration westward the movement swept along without direction of church or council, for this was pre-eminently a people's effort out and up to the light of true religious freedom.

With a grip on the central west and the Mississippi valley, it has spread into the north, the far south, and lastly, in these later days, is making itself felt as a factor

CHILDREN BUILT

The Certain Way to Grow Healthy, Sturdy Children is by Intelligent Feeding.

An Iowa mother tells of the naturally correct instinct of her 5-year-old boy. She says he thinks there is nothing equal to Grape-Nuts for breakfast.

"When he was a little boy he was puny and pale, and to find the right food to properly nourish him was a difficult problem. When he got to be about 12 months old we commenced using Grape-Nuts food in our family and I began feeding him a little moistened with milk. We all liked Grape-Nuts, but he liked it especially well.

"It agreed with him. He began to grow plump and rosy, and for years he has scarcely eaten a breakfast without a dish of Grape-Nuts, and he usually eats nothing else. He wants it and will take no substitute. He has never been sick and today is a remarkably robust child with a fine muscular development, and a quick, active brain—by far the healthiest and strongest, even if he is the youngest, of my five children.

"All this I attribute to his regular use of Grape-Nuts food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Centenary of the Great Sea Lord

By William Durban

All England has just been en fete. We have been celebrating the Nelson centenary, by which is meant the hundredth anniversary of the victory at Trafalgar, which was purchased by the death of Lord Nelson. Of course the head center of the celebration was Trafalgar Square, the spot sometimes described as the finest open space in Europe. The grand area close by Charing Cross was named after the terrific battle, and in the center of it rises the Nelson column, crowned with the figure of the hero known as "England's Darling."

A WORLD'S HERO.

Perhaps I should hardly devote a whole article to the memory of Horatio Nelson were he simply one of the celebrities of our insular country. But this marvelous modern Viking was the greatest seaman the world has ever seen. That is, at any rate, an American opinion, so I venture to repeat it. It is the opinion, that is to say, of no less an authority than Captain Mahan, the talented American sailor and author, whose "Life of Nelson" in two fine volumes I have recently treated myself to the immense pleasure of reading. It is the classic biography of the illustrious admiral. Every nation during the past century has been seeking for men who should emulate Nelson—every nation, I mean, that aspires to the possession of an efficient navy. The latest example is Japan. She has found her Nelson in Togo. And her Trafalgar was in the Battle of the Inland Sea, with this difference, that the hero was not slain in the moment of triumph, but has lived to celebrate his wonderful victory.

A SYNOPSIS OF HIS LIFE.

Probably many of my American friends may here welcome a brief summary of the wonderful career of this paramount seaman. Undoubtedly he changed the world's prospect by utterly destroying the colossal program of Napoleon. He saved England, and a man of whom such a statement can be made must be regarded as having exercised a stupendous influence on the destiny of all civilized nations. The Anglo-Saxon race possesses the command of the ocean solely because of Nelson's magnificent genius and indomitable courage. Napoleon had repeatedly said that if he only had the command of the channel for six hours, he would soon become master of the world and "England would cease to exist."

Apart from his astonishing achievements the career of Nelson was from his earliest years crowned with romance. Horatio, the sixth among eleven children of the Rev. Edmund Nelson, a Norfolk clergyman, was born at the rectory of Burnham Thorpe, on September 29, 1758. His mother died when he was only nine years old. The boy was puny and delicate. Ague had left its mark on his constitution, and he had none of the strength which is usually associated with heroism. When he was only twelve, and therefore very imperfectly educated, he joined the navy, under the care of his uncle, Captain Suckling, then in charge of the "Raisonnable" at Chatham, but as there was little or nothing in the way of experience to be gained on board, he was presently despatched on a voyage to the West Indies in a merchant vessel, that he might learn seamanship, which he did most thoroughly.

AMONG THE ICEBERGS.

Young Horatio was next given a commission in a ship sent out on a scientific expedition toward the North Pole, which nearly resulted in his being hugged by a Polar bear, and later on, being stranded or crushed with his vessel on the icefield. Nelson's whole career was full of these marvelous escapes. It seems as though a special providence watched over him and preserved him for the glorious work before him. From the Arctic zone he was transferred to the tropics and he spent eighteen months in the East Indies, where the climate broke his health. So low was he brought that he entirely lost the use of his limbs. As his only chance, he was invalided home. No wonder that he began to despair of ever rising in his profession. Yet this very despair led to the resolve, "I will be a hero."

THE TURN OF THE TIDE.

Suddenly the whole position changed. The promotion of the young sailor was phenomenally rapid when once he began to rise. He was post-captain before he was twenty-one. Said one who knew him, "Horatio was the merest boy of a captain he had ever seen." And a lady described him as "a little man and with no dignity." But Nelson, for all his insignificance, was one of the most fascinating figures of his time. Many of those who came into contact with him felt the magnetism of the "blaze of his blue eyes." Again and again he was invalided. He lost an eye in one battle and an arm in another. There is not space here for the multitudinous details of this strange and striking life. Nelson went on one dangerous expedition after another, fought a series of sea-battles against Frenchmen and Spaniards, and was always risking his life with the most absolute recklessness.

THE THREE GRAND VICTORIES.

Forever associated with the name of Nelson will be the geographical names of the Nile, Copenhagen and Trafalgar. The battle of the Nile was the first effective blow struck at the power of Napoleon. The French fleet was shattered off the coast of Egypt. As Nelson said himself, "It was not a victory; it was a conquest," and a conquest for which he desired every ship in the fleet to give thanks to Almighty God. Nothing so striking and dramatic had been known before in naval warfare, and Nelson's praise resounded through Europe.

LADY HAMILTON.

The infatuation of Nelson for Lady Hamilton, the wife of Sir William Hamilton, British minister at Naples, is a deplorable mystery. Historians are fighting battles all their lives concerning the nature of this friendship. There is no doubt that in Naples Lady Hamilton set herself to capture Nelson's affections, and that she succeeded. Then followed the battle of Copenhagen, which destroyed the great naval confederation of the north, arranged by the influence of Napoleon. Trafalgar was the climax and the end.

After all, what was the real secret of Nelson's greatness? Probably the simplest answer is the correct one. Nelson was idolized by his subordinates, not only because of his conspicuous genius, but because of his intensely human disposition. He was a hero not only of a special profession, but of humanity. Even in his faults and his weaknesses he did not forfeit the homage he had claimed. History knows only one Nelson. I have many times paused in St. Paul's Cathedral in front of the monument to Nelson, which is the companion to the memorial of Wellington, the greatest of English soldiers. That sumptuous temple is our national Valhalla, enshrining under its grandiose dome and in its crypt the remains of the majority of our most famous warriors of the land and sea services.

My Impressions of the Inter-church Conference.

other relating to the relation between capital and labor. Perhaps I would not object to anything contained in these resolutions. I simply think it was not a wise thing for the conference to make deliverances with reference to such controverted matters, and especially as these matters lie outside of the immediate work of the churches. But the resolutions will probably be a dead letter, and consequently they should be allowed to rest in peace.

7. My final thought about the conference is that it was a sign of the times. Even ten years ago such a conference would have been impossible. That it was possible in the year 1905 is the miracle of the beginning of this twentieth century. What does it indicate for the future? Evidently it is the beginning of the end of sectarianism. The forms of the hateful old thing may continue to exist for a while, but the spirit of sectarianism has already been cast out. Let us hope that it may never return again, and that soon we shall realize not only a federation of churches, but a union of all who love our Lord Jesus Christ.

A BUSINESS FRIEND

To be Counted on Under all Circumstances.

One of the bright business women of New York city who found that coffee was wrecking her nervous system, bringing on severe neuralgic attacks and making her "extremely irritable," writes that she has found a staunch friend in Postum Food Coffee:

"I left off the old kind of coffee completely and entirely. This I found was easy to do, since Postum was pleasing to my palate from the beginning. Indeed all my family are with me in thinking it delicious when it is properly prepared—and by that I mean boiled long enough.

"I have not had one single attack of neuralgia since I began to drink Postum some months ago, my nerves have become steady and the old annoying irritability has, thank Postum, passed away. I cannot withhold this acknowledgment which is made in all sincere gratitude." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Jesus of Nazareth. His Life and Scenes of His Ministry. By William E. Barton, D.D. Pilgrim Press, New York and Chicago. 558 pages. $2.50 net.

This handsome new illustrated life of Christ was not written, as the author says, to maintain a theory, but to make the life of Jesus seem real. Dr. Barton has been a successful writer of books, and he entered into the preparation of this volume with all the enthusiasm of the scholar and lover of the great person about whom he writes. But the book is not weighted down with the thought of the student; rather, it is a popular presentation of the life and scenes of Christ's ministry, and all the more valuable in that it is so very admirably illustrated. Indeed, we know of no volume that contains anything like so many rare illustrations entirely devoted to the life of the Savior and scenes in Palestine. There are 350 illustrations, 250 of these representing noted paintings, old and new. The chapters dealing with the Christ of Art are especially valuable.

The Messianic Hope in the New Testament, by Shailer Mathews. University of Chicago Press. 8vo. 330 pages. $2.50 net.

The author's view point may be seen from his last paragraph: "In a word, to remove or to allow for Messianism is not to destroy the essentials of the Gospel—the personality, the teaching and the resurrection of Jesus; a rational faith in God as Father; a certainty of divine forgiveness; an experience of the eternal life; an assurance of a complete life beyond and because of death. It is rather to make them more intelligible, more convincing, more certain, and more dynamic." Professor Mathews has won a high place as a Bible scholar, and he may be classed as a "higher critic" of the conservative type. In the eyes of the author and those who accept the critical conclusions the book is constructive; but even some who will go a long way with modern interpretations may think that Professor Mathews misrepresents the balance of emphasis. In this volume there is much that is valuable, much that will reward the student; but many readers will halt before the author's contention that with Jesus, as with the Pharisees, the kingdom of God was still future, and that the Messianic "hope" of the Old Testament developed into the expectation of the second coming of Christ.

The Freedom of Authority, by J. Macbride Sterrett, D. D. The Macmillan Company. 320 pages. $2 net.

The author of this series of studies can "say things." His aim is to maintain the reasonableness of a man of modern culture frankly and earnestly worshiping in some form of "authoritative religion"—in any form rather than in no form. Hence he strongly opposes the "mechanical view" of the universe, and seeks to vindicate the concrete rationality of the religious side of man's life. Professor Sterrett is a good counterbalance to those who have been bewitched by Sabatier. He takes up recent books by that writer, Harnack, and Loisy, and defends with great spirit and acumen external authority as against the tendency to magnify the authority of religious experience. Though he is a keen critic the spirit of Professor Sterrett's work may be gauged from this quotation: "To the religious man, the meanest flower of religion that blows should be regarded as sacred. With contempt for none and with charity for all, is a temper that will do more to promote the religious life of our generation than any form of intellectual reconciliation of religion with modern culture." It is in this spirit that he points out the weaknesses of a school of thought that has its strong side.

Russia and its Crisis, by Paul Milyoukov. University of Chicago Press. 590 pages. $3.

This book will not increase our respect for the Czar's government. It is a plea in defense of the revolutionary idea. But it is more than that. It is a presentation of conditions that would not pass the censor, yet a picture that in some respects is different from that in the eyes of most Americans. The author combats the view that Russia has been stagnant, either politically, socially or intellectually, and contends that there have been great and rapid changes. The volume is peculiarly timely in appearance, and it deserves more attention than we can give it at this moment.

An Introduction to the Old Testament, by J. E. McFadyen, M. A. New York: A. C. Armstrong & Son. 356 pages.

Professor McFadyen's volume is written for the man who desires to acquire easily a knowledge of the attitude of present-day criticism to the Old Testament as a whole. Its discussion is neither elaborate nor original. But the book serves well the purpose of the author. Professor McFadyen's success is in setting forth in an interesting fashion the salient arguments leading to the most probable conclusions of the higher criticism, and in his emphasis upon the religious value of the Old Testament, whether one adhere to traditional opinions or accept the critical views.

The Moslem Doctrine of God, by Samuel M. Zwemer. American Tract Society. 50 cents.

Unless we know the Moslem's idea of God we can not, as the author contends, understand his creed or change his philosophy, nor intelligently communicate our idea of God to him. It is to learn the extent and content of the one great truth, Monotheism, which is the strength of Islam, that this book is written. The differences between the two ideas of the Creator as presented in Mohammedanism and Christianity are strikingly set forth. No parliament of religions can reconcile such fundamental and deep-rooted differences. And how great a task the missionary who proclaims the Cross of Christ to the followers of the prophet has before him is made apparent in this book. But one who grasps these differences as presented by Dr. Zwemer will be the better equipped to overcome that which is, as Dr. Alexander McLaren has declared, a kind of bastard Christianity.

The Balanced Life, by Clarence Lathbury. Philadelphia: The Nunc Licet Press. 264 pages. $1.

A lover of "the good, the beautiful and the true," the author has given us a book that is delightful, inspiring, and that buoys us Godward. From the first page, where the doctrine that health is wholeness, to the last, where Walt Whitman's "Joy! joy! all over joy!" is hymned, the book is reverent and optimistic. The writer has style; indeed, for popular effect the diction is too ornate.

A very admirable edition of this always popular fairy tale of home has been prepared, the illustrations being by C. E. Brock.

The Aftermath of Slavery, by William A. Sinclair, A. M., M. D. Boston: Small, Maynard & Co. 358 pages. $1.50 net.

Though it be one-sided, this is a remarkable book. Forcibly, clearly, calmly, one of the race puts before us a study of the conditions and environment of the American negro. We may dissent from some statements. It is natural that a writer born in slavery, but who has won a white man's culture, should speak just as warmly for his race as a white man would under like conditions; yet there is not a great deal to take exception to in the matter of the advocacy. Facts are cited, quotations are made. It is the first book to give a complete review of the civil history of the negro since he has had a civil history.

Child Characters from Dickens. New York. E. P. Dutton & Co. Pp. 320.

L. L. Weedon has here resketched for children characters created by a great writer and without obliterating that writer's peculiarities and charm. The get-up of the book is fine and the illustrations by Arthur Dixon are excellent.

William Lloyd Garrison.—The centennial of the birth of the great moral crusader, William Lloyd Garrison, will be celebrated on Dec. 10. We are glad to call attention at this particular moment to two books published by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, of New York, which give a very excellent narrative and estimate of the life and works of one whom America ought to appreciate and receive inspiration from. The work written by Archibald H. Grimke is the fuller and deals more with the actual conditions and facts in the life of the abolitionist. That of Goldwin Smith is a biographical essay founded on "The story of Garrison's life, told by his children." This is a compilation of the larger work so far as the facts are concerned, but the Canadian writer adds an estimate formed from his own point of view which is the more valuable from the fact that it is as unbiased as it is perhaps possible to get from writers who have almost imbibed the air that Garrison himself breathed.

The Story of the Churches; The Disciples of Christ, by Errett Gates, Ph. D. New York: The Baker & Taylor Co.

This is a very attractive little volume of something over three hundred pages, in a series of brief historical sketches of the larger Protestant churches. They are evidently intended merely to afford a kind of bird's-eye view of the origin and principles, the growth and present condition, of these religious bodies. In some respects this volume is quite satisfactory, but in others it may justly be subjected to criticism. The story of the sources of our movement is exceedingly well told, and the early growth of the Disciples portrayed in evidently sympathetic spirit. But as the narrative advances the reader begins to feel that the author is slowly losing his admiration for the movement with which he at first seemed in perfect accord, and his criticisms become more frequent and severe. Without denying that they are in the main just, as statements of fact, it is a fair question whether it was necessary to devote so much space, in so small a volume, to telling of the bigotry and sectarian conceit that marred our noble plea for the union of the Christian world. It is not always wise to talk too much of family squabbles, for they do not always mean so much as would seem to an outsider. Hence, we believe Dr. Gates' volume is also open to criticism for the extended discussion given to the unfortunate vagaries of some of our editors, whose antics have indeed made high heaven to weep, and their brethren ashamed of them, but the permanent effects of which upon our movement are not so substantial as to warrant their lengthy discussion in a sober volume of history.

If Dr. Gates could rewrite the latter half of the volume, for the next edition, and, passing over these matters with but the briefest mention, give space to a fuller setting forth of the fundamental principles involved in our plea for the restoration of New Testament Christianity, as a means to the unity of the Church of God, and the conversion of the world to the Lord Jesus, his volume, in so many ways admirable, could take a worthy place in our literature, and be made an acceptable medium of indoctrinating the religious world in our position. Even with its faults, which I have tried to plainly, but kindly, point out, it is a valuable work, and one which our people ought to read.

The United States a Christian Nation, by David J. Brewer. Philadelphia: John C. Winston Company. 104 pages. $1.00 net.

This book consists of three lectures delivered to the students of Haverford College by the associate justice of the supreme court of the United States. Their value from the standpoint of practical Christian evidences is all the stronger seeing that their source is an eminent jurist and not a professional advocate of Christianity. In the first lecture Justice Brewer shows why our republic should be classified as a Christian nation. It has been so formally declared by the supreme court of the United States, by many of the highest state courts, by the colonial charters, from which the constitution of the United States is mainly derived, by nearly all of the state constitutions, by state legislation on Sunday observance, and by popular sentiment and practice. The author of the lecture cites instance after instance in the charters and laws of this land declaring that this is a Christian nation, and he further justly claims that he has made out a case showing that the principles of Christianity are uniformly recognized in our country. In the second lecture he addresses himself to the consequences of this fact and the duties it imposes upon all our citizens. He discusses the compatibility between Christianity and patriotism, and the reasons why Christianity is entitled to the tribute of respect. "The promise and possibilities of the future" is the subject of the third lecture which is an earnest and an eloquent exhortation to the young men of America to temper their devotion to country with fidelity to the teachings of the Gospel.

Our Budget.

—Christmas is coming!

—This number is to help you get ready for it.

—C. W. B. M. Day was well observed in St. Louis.

—St. Louis churches are planning for a simultaneous evangelistic campaign next fall.

—The dedication of the new church at Mexico has been postponed until December 17.

—The Editor had the privilege of enjoying a most interesting entertainment at the Hamilton Avenue Christian Church on a recent evening, in which the "Tenth Legion" and the "Dorotheans" gave a review of the Sunday school lessons for the past six months in a series of recitations. Following this was a temperance oration embodying the principles taught in the temperance lessons, the whole closing with a very interesting and animated debate between four of the young girls as to whether Vashti or Esther presented the higher model of womanly virtue, modesty, and heroism. Brothers Morley and Stockton, as grave and reverend seniors, were appointed tellers to take the vote of the audience on the merits of the discussion. Brother Stockton summed up the situation, and made the report for the organization for the coming year in a few appropriate and humorous remarks, which pleased the audience. The whole entertainment reflected great credit upon those participating, and upon the teachers, especially upon Brother Merryman, who gives no little time and labor to his class. The church expects to get into the basement of its new building with the Sunday school not later than January.

—Defiance, Ia., loses S. C. Shoup, who has gone to Anthon.

—A church has recently been organized at Ball's Landing Ky.

—C. W. Comstock will relinquish the pastorate at Gallatin, Mo., January 1.

—The First Church at Noblesville, Ind. will be served by R. W. Clymer, of Scranton, Pa.

—W. H. Hobbs of Eolia, Mo., will give two of his Sundays in each month to Paynesville.

—A new tabernacle will be erected for the brethren meeting at Frederick avenue, St. Joseph Mo.

—A. F. Ainsworth, of Goldfield, Ia., and W. C. Cole, of Jewell Junction, Ia., recently exchanged pulpits.

—A church has been organized at Ramsey, Ill., by C. Munroe, of New Douglas. The church needs a preacher to locate.

—P. W. Walthall has gone to Horse Cave, Ky., where he will live with his father, who is in poor health.

—J. B. Mayfield, Winchester, Kan., who was formerly minister at Gallatin, has been visiting and preaching in that vicinity.

—W. M. Long, who has had a successful pastorate at New Martinsville, W. Va., will take charge of the work at Perryopolis Pa.

—Thomas Martin, in Sandy Lake, Pa., has been delivering his lecture, "The Jerusalem Tragedy," with considerable success. He recently gave it in the Methodist church at New Lebanon, Pa.

—E. R. Clarkson has accepted a call to the church at Red Bluff, Cal., and is upon the field. He believes there is opportunity for a profitable ministry.

—J. W. Robins gave the brethren at Pana, Ill., great satisfaction in the Bible institute he held for them. He may be addressed at Harristown, Ill.

—The addition to the church at Mt. Vernon, Ill., having been completed, a very delightful dedication service has just been held and all the money raised.

—We regret to record the death of Mrs. Perry Wortman, the mother of J. M. Carpenter, pastor of the church at Virginia, Ill., who passed away at Cuba, Ill., Nov. 30.

—The new building at Woodbine, Ia., will be dedicated December 31, and the cost will be provided before that ceremony. Services are now being held in the basement. B. Franklin Hall is the minister.

—Edwin C. Boynton, pastor of the University Christian Church, Waco, Tex., writes enthusiastically of the meeting being held by John S. Sweeney, and expresses the hope that many of our churches will hear him.

—J. F. Findley has accepted a call from our church at Fort Collins, Col., and will take charge of the work there as soon as he has received his B. D. degree at the December convocation of the University of Chicago.

—E. C. Sanderson, president of the Eugene Divinity School, paid a pleasant visit to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST office on his return from a trip through the east, during which he was present at the Interchurch Conference.

—James H. Brooks writes from Blytheville, Ark., that a month ago there was no church building in Steele, Mo., but that a few faithful men assumed the obligation and a building is now nearing completion. A meeting has just begun.

—M. L. Buckley, after closing a five years' pastorate at Harrison, O., reports that he has found a good field and a loyal people among the congregation at Collinwood, lately served by C. A. Freer. During his six weeks' charge there have been nine additions.

—Claris Yeuell acknowledges gifts from the following towards the liquidation of the debt on the Christian Tabernacle at Baltimore: The Ladies' Aid, Footville, Wis.; Mrs. Emma Wetmore, Mattie L. Baily and Cloe Brazleton. "Who will be the next?" he asks.

—G. M. Reed reports that a jubilee service has been held at Peabody, Kan., and the mortgage, which has been burdening the church for a number of years, burned. Brother Reed has been there four months, during which time the church has been freed from debt.

—L. L. Carpenter recently visited the church at Mt. Byrd, Trimble county, Ky., and raised $1,150 to pay off an indebtedness of $1,000 which the church had been carrying on the parsonage. An old-fashioned Kentucky dinner was one of the features of the day.

—The church at Nevada, Mo., will hold a meeting in January, the pastor, W. W. Burks, leading. His predecessor, G. W. Edwards, did five years of telling work for the Nevada church, which is united, has a splendid house, is out of debt, and ready to move forward in every good work.

—A church of 47 members has been organized, as a result of the meeting at Hood River, Ore., held by T. S. Handsaker and wife. Another congregation was organized with 68 members at Odell, in the same territory. These churches have called W. A. Wood, of Fulton, Mo., to minister to them.

—F. E. Blanchard, who is now located at Smith Center, Kan., reports that as Brother Harding left the church there in fine condition his new work starts out very hopefully. The corner stone of the new church at Dewey, seven miles from there, has just been laid. The work of building will be prosecuted as rapidly as possible.

BENJAMIN L. SMITH,
Corresponding Sec'y American Christian Missionary Society,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

—We hear very good reports of Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, and we regret that we have not space to publish some of the figures of the collections that have been taken. All schools are expected to observe this day, and the offering should be sent promptly to Benj. J. L. Smith, American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

—The new building of our church in Sioux City, Ia., will be ready for occupancy about April 1. Since selling the old property the congregation has been meeting in halls. The building now reaching completion is in the most desirable location in the town. It has been a hard struggle but under J. K. Ballou, the present pastor, the outlook for a good work is most encouraging.

—The tenth anniversary of the wedding of Brother Earle Wilfley and his wife has just been celebrated by the members of the congregation at Crawfordsville, Ind. It was a very happy occasion, according to a lengthy account in the local paper, which makes it evident that Brother and Sister Wilfley have a warm place in the hearts of the membership. They were the recipients of many tokens of esteem.

—Under J. S. Raum our church at Saginaw, Mich., has prospered both numerically and financially. The current expenses have been paid, about $1,000 raised on an old church debt, and during the past two years 150 members have been added, while Brother Raum has visited other churches and held revival meetings, with 171 additions as the result. S. M. Martin is now conducting an evangelistic meeting for the church.

—In the course of the Interchurch Conference, Dr. Slicer, at a meeting of the Unitarian Club, made a statement which impliedly classed the Disciples of Christ with the Unitarians, and the matter was reported in "The New York Herald." Dr. W. T. Moore took the matter up and wrote a letter to the editor of that paper in which he pointed out that nothing could be further from the truth than Dr. Slicer's statement.

—Two young Chinese boys, Chu Fun and Chu Yung, of the First Church, St. Louis, are exceedingly anxious to obtain an education with a view to doing missionary work amongst their own people. They have been offered this by the Methodists, but they desire to go to one of our schools. Sister John L. Brandt wishes to find some one who will be responsible, wholly or in part, for the cost of sending these boys to one of our institutions.

—A very excellent little manual, entitled, "Four Weeks of Family Worship for Busy Homes," has been prepared by W. E. Barton, of Oak Park, Ill., to aid those who find it difficult to maintain family worship. A sample will be sent free to any one interested. As Dr. Barton bears the expenses himself we suggest that the nominal amount of ten cents to cover cost and postage, might reasonably be sent. If there is an immediate demand for the booklet Dr. Barton will have it reprinted.

—"I never knew Brother McGarvey so lame in any effort as in his attack on your book, 'The Holy Spirit.' C."

The best of men sometimes get on the wrong track, and make a lame attack. The man whose specialty is to point out flaws in the literary products of others is liable occasionally to let drive at imaginary mistakes. It serves a double purpose, however, in giving the critic a congenial task, and in advertising the work he criticises. "We have had ten single orders for 'The Holy Spirit' today," said the book man, a few minutes ago, and it is yet early. "A hundred orders this week."

—On Friday evening, December 1, the Central Church of Christ, Des Moines, Ia., celebrated the twentieth anniversary of the pastorate of H. O. Breeden. The occasion is well worth a celebration, for this union during a score of years between Brother Breeden and his flock has been most fruitful in results of far-reaching importance. He has shown himself a preacher of wonderful resources and administrative ability during these years of fruitful service, and the church has shown its wisdom in retaining his services through all these years. These lengthening pastorates among us are the best evidences of the growing spiritual life, both in our ministers and churches, and we congratulate both the church and the preacher on the happy occasion of this twentieth anniversary of their union.

SUFFERED 15 YEARS

From Itching and Painful Humor, Affecting Head and Body. Cured in a Week by Cuticura.

"For fifteen years I had eczema all over my head and body. Words cannot express how I suffered from the itching and pain. I had given up hope when a friend told me to get Cuticura. After bathing with Cuticura Soap and applying Cuticura Ointment for three days, my head was as clear as ever, and to my surprise and joy, one cake of soap and one box of ointment made a complete cure in one week." —We regret that owing to a clerical error the name of President T. E. Cramblet, of Bethany College, was omitted in the report from the names of the members of the Centennial Committee.

—The following note comes to hand as we close this week's paper:

"Brother L. C. Wilson passed to his reward in heaven on November 29. Services were held at the church at Cheneyville, La., on December 1, by me. Sister Wilson started for Indiana the next day with the remains, where they will be laid to rest in Cambridge City. Brother Wilson died of heart trouble, expiring in a few minutes.

"L. A. BETCHER,
"Minister at Alexandria, La."

Brother Wilson was quite widely known as a contributor to our papers and as the author of a work on the history of infant baptism. Our sympathies are extended to his bereaved wife.

—Referring to the position which THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has antagonized concerning our praying for the Holy Spirit, one of our ministers writes: "I would feel very badly indeed to know that it represents any considerable number of our ministers." We can relieve our brother's mind on that subject by assuring him that, so far as we know, there are very few preachers among us who endorse President McGarvey's position. Not a day passes that we are not receiving words of commendation of the position advocated in the Editor's book on the Holy Spirit, and by THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The investigation now going on is widespread. We hear of reviews of the book being written for ministerial alliances in very many of the states and in a large number of the cities. Investigation in the light of the New Testament is what is needed. If what Christ and the apostles say on this subject be accepted without evasion or reservation we have nothing more to ask.

—In another column we give some particulars about the movement that has been inaugurated for sending L. L. Carpenter to the Holy Land. We announced this project some months ago when it was first talked of. We are glad to see that under Brother Edgar F. Daugherty, the minister of our church at Wabash, Ind., where Brother Carpenter resides, definite action has been taken with regard to raising the necessary funds. Suggestions of this kind often end in talk. The matter has gone too far, and it would be unworthy a great brotherhood that this pleasure should not be accorded to one who has served our cause so long and so faithfully. The idea is to let Brother Carpenter and his wife start on February 8 from New York for a three months' trip, in company with B. B. Tyler, F. D. Power, and others. We suggest that, in addition to the personal offerings that may be contributed for this cause, a collection be taken in every church which Brother Carpenter has dedicated, and the proceeds sent at once to Brother Daugherty or Brother Newnan.

—Dr. B. B. Tyler, of the South Broadway Church, Denver, recently invited the men of the church to dine with him, and a hundred men sat down at the table. There were toasts to "Our Gymnasium," "Our Sunday School," "Our Young People," etc. It was at this meeting that the balance of the funds was raised for paying off the church debt. So successful was this meeting in every way that one enthusiastic brother proposed that they have "an annual dinner at least once a month"! Brother Tyler sails on his trip to the Orient on February 8. He earnestly solicits the company of other brethren besides those who have already agreed to accompany him. It would be a delight to make this trip in company with such men as B. B. Tyler, F. D. Power, Charles S. Medbury, Peter Ainslie, L. L. Carpenter, J. K. Hester, and others, and it will assist Brother Tyler, who, in consequence of the sacrifices he has made in behalf of the mortgage-burning at Denver, is entitled to this consideration, and to this rest. We only regret that circumstances make it impossible for us to accompany his party.

CONSUMPTION

Free for December.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is planning a vigorous canvass to increase its circulation during the coming year. With the view of introducing the paper to new readers we will send it FREE during the month of December to any one who will send us his name and address and request it. All papers so sent will be promptly discontinued at the end of December unless we receive orders for continuance. Any of our readers may send us a list of such names, but should notify the parties that the paper is sent on trial for December.

A New Hospital.

Yielding to a general desire on the part of the Indiana churches for the location of one of its emprises within the borders of their own state, our National Benevolent Association has purchased the splendidly equipped hospital at Valparaiso, and will maintain it for the benefit of the indigent sick of our churches. It is improbable that there is a better hospital in the state. It is believed this ministry will not only greatly help deserving poor, but also popularize the cause of apostolic Christianity with the people and glorify the King.

Any one giving $1,000 to this work may have a room and bed named for him or her. Geo. L. Snively, of St. Louis, will answer all correspondence in reference to the matter. Help of any kind will be greatly appreciated.

W. Daviess Pittman.

It is a pleasure to us to call the especial attention of our readers to the announcement of the W. Daviess Pittman Investment Co., which appears on the second page of the cover of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Brother Pittman needs no introduction to our St. Louis readers; he has been a resident of this city during his entire life, and since his youth has been, not a nominal, but an active and zealous member of the Christian Church. His unselfish work in behalf of the Second Christian Church is evidence of his earnestness. He has a national reputation also as Secretary of the Business Men's Association of the Christian Chruch. Brother Pittman has an unsullied reputation in the business world, and can safely be trusted to faithfully discharge any trust committed to him. His experience of twenty-five years has made him an expert in the investment of money in strictly legitimate and straightforward enterprises.

His advice concerning any intended investment would be honest, unbiased and valuable. When there are so many schemes of doubtful character being exploited, it is certainly the part of wisdom to secure the counsel and aid of such a man.

"A Service of Sentiment."

There is taking form a movement to send to the Holy Land, L. L. Carpenter—"The Tall Sycamore of the Wabash," "Prince of Dedicators," and "Father to Bethany Assembly."

Considerable publicity has already attended the suggestion, but the facts and plan of procedure are now made public. The initiative was taken by twenty preachers at Bethany Park last August, who promised two hundred dollars in pledges of ten dollars each. Frequent inquiries as to who were the responsible persons have indicated a general and hearty approval of the idea.

It was remembered in time that while Brother Carpenter was roaming the land in service for the cause, his good wife "tarried with the stuff" at home, and so the need of her presence with him was acknowledged. A thousand dollars will meet the expenses of Brother and Sister Carpenter and it is confidently believed that his many friends will immediately consummate the plan whereby this dream of his long life is to be realized. It has been a luxury unto which he could not, in his past experience, attain because of his busy life and lack of means.

W. R. WARREN,

Secretary of the Pittsburg Campaign, who has just been chosen to be Secretary of the Centennial Fund.

If any of the matter-of-fact in disposition should be disposed to ask, "To what purpose is this waste?" when calls for missions and benevolences are so many, sufficient answer is to be found in recalling him who first asked the question, and the service that prompted it. No less than Mary's alabaster box of ointment for her Master will this service to the venerable dedicator be for him a service of sentiment from a brotherhood not without appreciation.

It is a service for his friends to consummate. Let no one think his contribution will not be needed. In whatsoever heart the impulse may rest to have a share in the fellowship of this beautiful, timely service, let the impulse arise to immediate action. It is to be made a Christmas greeting to him who has served the cause well. Today is the day to manifest your faith that such a service is not superfluous. Correspondence in regard to the plan has been mailed by its secretary, E. F. Daugherty, the pastor of the Wabash, Ind., church. Either he, or the treasurer of the fund, C. B. Newnan, 1126 Park avenue, Indianapolis, will faithfully receipt for every assistance to this "Christmas Greeting."

Brother Carpenter's friends are too numerous to be all reached by personal appeals in letters from the secretary, so this announcement is made in the religious press that "whosoever will" may manifest a financial, no less than a sentimental, approval of the plan.

A National Enterprise.

After a personal examination, thoroughly believing in the strategic value of a strong church centrally located at Hot Springs, Ark.—a national sanitarium—we offer the use of our columns to present the claims of this work to the brotherhood. The brethren there have purchased a lot in a fine location for $5,000. Two-fifths of this has been provided for, leaving three-fifths to be provided for. The diagram explains the situation. There are fifty squares. Each one represents $100. The twenty white ones represent the part of the lot already paid for. The thirty dark squares represent the part to be provided for. The object is to chase the dark shadows from these thirty squares and make them white. Every $100 raised will whiten one square. Will you not help in this good work? We give below a few words from brethren who know the needs and urgency of the situation:

"Having made several visits to Hot Springs, I can speak from personal observation of its claims as a mission point. There is not a place in the United States that affords a better opportunity to preach the Gospel to every nationality than this famous health resort. The work at Hot Springs is worthy the aid of every Disciple of Christ. N. M. RAGLAND,
"Fayetteville, Ark."

"With this number, as you will see by the above statement, of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, an effort is to be made to save our church lot, which is endangered by the great fire of last February. The necessity of this effort grows out of the importance of Hot Springs as a mission field and our great loss in the big fire. There were six hundred homes and one hundred hotels and business houses burned, with a property loss of $2,000,000. We purchased the lot two years ago, have paid $2,000 and still owe $3,000. Nineteen of our families and parts of families lost their homes and business in the fire, and for this reason can render but little aid in this hour which tries men's souls. We can not do what has often been suggested to us—that is, sell the present location and buy a cheaper one. We tried to do this immediately after the fire, but were unable to find a site that would do at all. There now remains but one of two things for us to do—either pay for the one we have, or turn it back to the parties from whom we purchased it, and abandon Hot Springs as a mission field. I am sure that it is the wish of all that we do not give up the fight, but that we hold the fort, despite fire and water; if so, send us reinforcements, brethren, at once. It would be a shame to abandon a field like this for the need of $3,000. Who would care for our sick and needy? Who would preach the simple Gospel to the 125,000 visitors who frequent this great health resort each year? Who would work for our boys, who come here to the number of 23,000 yearly? Abandon the field because the home church has had a fire? God forbid! There are thousands of brethren, any one of whom could give this amount and be richer in faith for the gift. Let us make short work of raising this money. We can do it. Let 600 brethren send us $5 this week, and the work is done; or, 300 $10 each, and the cause is saved. Send all contributions to in the religious life of the East. Distinctly American, in its origin, it partakes of the plainness of the "plain people," as Lincoln called them; universal in its scope, it has dug down under the frippery and rubbish of ecclesiastical courts and councils, past confessions, hoary with age, down to the bed-rock of a human faith in a divine revelation, and there it stands with its face to the future. Another forward step has been taken toward that golden age when the invocation of the Lord's prayer will be an abiding reality and not a hollow mockery, as it has been throughout so many of the centuries that are gone. What the American revolution did to emphasize the fundamental truth of the democracy that all men are equal before the law, this movement is doing to make all men equal in the church; when its mission has been accomplished the religion of the future will be, not a chain to bind man to the skeleton of dead forms, but a silken cord to draw him closer to his Maker.

The large and enthusiastic body of people who claim to be "Christians only," represent only a small part of the good that has come out of the movement into a larger religious life and liberty; many who do not see their way clear to join the "Disciples" contend for the same freedom of thought in their respective communions; others in the various young people's organizations are working toward the same end, the democracy of believers.

The day is surely coming when many a tradition fondly cherished from the days gone by because of its association with some hero of a sect, many a shibboleth of party manufacture that has kept apart earnest, God-fearing men, will be dumped along with caste, aristocracy, and the divine right of kings, into the rubbish heap where lie alike the crutches and the handcuffs of the past. In those days a more mature generation will assign to its proper place alongside of Wittenberg and its immortal theses and Geneva with its incomparable institutes, the little log church of Cane Ridge, Kentucky, and its far-reaching declaration of independence.

Planning Great Things in Evangelism

By W. J. Wright

"Expect great things of God; attempt great things for God."

These were the two ideas developed by William Carey in the sermon which may be said to mark the beginning of the era of modern missions. They are the fundamental propositions in every advance movement of the kingdom of God. To expect great things of him reveals the child's trust in the loving Father; to attempt them for him reveals the abiding conviction of the co-laborer and partner of God who has laid to heart the promises regarding the absolute certainty of the ultimate success of the kindgom: "My word shall not return unto me void"; "Greater works than these shall ye do."

But expectancy should be unlocked only by the key of attempt. Let no man hope for more than he is willing to try; for to reap not only what we have sown, but also in proportion as we have sown, was taught men both by nature and reason long ere it was written in the Book.

Our brethren in western Pennsylvania have rightly combined hope and help, expectancy and enterprise; they planned great things in evangelism; they worked their plans; they waited on God. Belief plowed and scattered. Trust confidently awaited the harvest. Men of faith planned, prayed and wrought while ever looking to God for increase.

The plan was a great one: Meetings to begin simultaneously in all our churches in western Pennsylvania where a preacher was regularly employed; meetings to be held in the best theater of Pittsburg on Sunday afternoons, and great overflow meetings arranged for; noon meetings daily in one of the greatest auditoriums of the city; singers of national renown secured to sing the Gospel; evangelists and preachers, the peer of any in the land, provided for the various congregations; a down town office established and maintained with all modern equipment for the dispatch of business; advertising generously done, so that a single insertion cost a hundred or more dollars; daily reports expected at headquarters from each meeting, and daily reports sent from headquarters to each meeting, so that the inspiration of the whole movement should, as far as possible, be brought to every person in the campaign.

W. J. WRIGHT,
Superintendent of Evangelism, who is planning great things in aggressive Christian work.

Without doubt they planned great things in evangelism, for there was scarce a thing which would have added to the effectiveness of the organization which had not been anticipated and provided.

Here are some of the fruits:

1. More churches engaged in the campaign than at any time in our history. Indeed, I know of no such evangelistic movement in the ranks of any religious people.

2. The preparation was the most complete known to me, it having commenced nearly fifteen months before the meeting and continued without intermission.

3. A larger number of able preachers and evangelists were secured than ever came together in one of our meetings. One of the Pittsburg committee said that in his opinion no finer or abler body of evangelists had ever been brought together for a single enterprise since the days of the apostles.

4. The general plan of campaign was the most comprehensive, and the details the most fully wrought out of any campaign within my knowledge.

5. The results in additions to the churches are the largest within my knowledge in any religious body.

6. The results in the way of addressing great multitudes of people who were previously unfamiliar with our plea: in gaining the attention of the press, which fully set forth the restoration movement in which we are engaged; in having the throngs read our tracts, papers and books; in impressing a great community with the simplicity and strength of our position; in revealing to our brethren at once their weakness and strength in the region; in proving the power of simultaneous, harmonious, united action in evangelism; in discovering unidentified brethren and bringing them into membership in the churches; in making a host of friends both within the denominations and the world; in pointing out where and how we may organize other congregations at various points in the district; in making our presence and power known both to the denominations and the world; in the countless things which edify the saints and make the whole church thank God and take courage, and especially in making our brethren throughout the land undertake simultaneous campaigns for soul winning, and in large districts, as well as towns and cities, move in a body upon the works of Satan, this, our greatest evangelistic campaign, is a model and gladdens our hearts and gives promise of greater things in evangelism.

AN ESTIMATE OF THE REVIVAL

By Wallace Tharp

A calm and competent survey of the seeable and touchable results of the Pittsburg simultaneous revival is surpassingly inspiring.

To attempt to "cast up" these results and to express them in corresponding terms or in art form would be well-nigh impossible.

All the local actuaries of the enterprise are pleased, even delighted; and every one of the visiting evangelists has expressed himself as not only delighted but amazed at the magnitude of the plans and the boldness and confidence of the ones who projected them. The whole enterprise has been preeminently successful, and has marked a new and brighter epoch in the matter of city evangelization.

It has been an articulable exhibit and demonstration of what may be accomplished if men are willing to spend and be spent for the cause of the Master. It has made manifest that the day of attempting small things is forever past; for, even though we contemplated what seemed the very largest things we could have reasonably hoped for, if there is one regret it is that we did not plan even larger than we did. It has further demonstrated that solidarity, oneness and union of plan and movement are absolutely necessary to success.

The richest and fullest note in all this anthem of work has been that not one of those engaged in the forty meetings felt that it was a separate meeting, but that it was only a part of one great, united revival. No rivalry, no odious comparison, no discordant tones; but one continuous and joyous "provoking of one another to good works," and a daily coming together in union mass meetings to report successes and to shake hands and rejoice, and to enter into a season of holy worship together that we might be stronger for the work each day in the separate fields.

It has likewise clearly shown the power of wise and full advertising. To attempt to reach a great city by the magic of oratory, bewitching of song or the power that may lie in the sublime and holy truth of a plea, without keeping that oratory, song and truth constantly before the eye of the city through the daily papers and by diplomatic, exhibit advertising, is doomed to failure. The daily papers of a city can make or break any endeavor. When your city attempts a campaign, and you are morally bound to do it, brother mine of the great city, let your best gifts be laid under tribute in the matter of daily and attractive advertising both in and without the daily papers. You must not fail here.

Our very calm and deliberate judgment is that more has been accomplished in the matter of giving general publicity to the especial movement that we feel is ours than could have been done in twenty years of the usual endeavor. What we stand for has been published in such terms and in such style that peoples who would not have noticed separate and single meetings have stopped and studied the people and plea that could do such things as we have done in the united revival.

It was tremendously fortunate that our campaign was on right at the time of the sittings of the convention in New York on the federation of churches. The city papers made much of that meeting, and the note of union that had been ringing in our song, preaching, praying and printing chimed in so consonantly with the purpose and spirit of that meeting in New York that it got for us an attention and hearing that was even rather out of the ordinary. And we made much of it, too.

We do not feel that the 1,800 additions to the churches during the revival is the measure of results. While this is fair, even great, we are quite sure that other results are even greater.

We feel that we have touched some virgin territory so far as our work is concerned. To those outside of western Pennsylvania it would be hard to represent fully this situation. This is one of the most self-satisfied parts of God's earth. For centuries it has rested under the doctrine that the greater part of it is "God's elect," in the Calvinistic sense, and every phase of Presbyterianism is handsomely entrenched here, and is carrying on its work in the most delightfully self-satisfied way, never dreaming but that Jesus has "paid it all" for them and that they now owe nothing. And they have been fully persuaded of their "election." And, friends, it did look like they were elected, too; for they had glorious church houses, were wealthy and refined and cultured—indeed they had nearly all the points of what really an "elected" people should have. Now it is no small matter to get a hearing among "the elect" except you come with the doctrine of election. But it is a fact that even they have been led to consider the sanity, simplicity and catholicity of the plea we made.

Our own churches have caught glimpses of larger victories and larger things and are inspired to larger hope and larger endeavor. Indeed, the countenance of Christ's bride here is simply radiant, while her whole being is redolent of health and hope.

We esteem the investment of time, money, brain, sacrifice and labor the very best investment we have ever made.

"Go thou and do likewise."

Good News for the Deaf.

Mr. Geo. P. Way, the inventor of the Way Ear Drum, is himself a living witness to the efficacy of his marvelous invention. Mr. Way, who is a local preacher in the M. E. Church, and who formerly had charge of the mammoth electrical plant of the Detroit Y. M. C. A., was deaf for 25 years; in fact, before he perfected his discovery, he was known as the deaf Engineer of Detroit.

Mr. Way's affliction was so distressing that he was practically debarred from enjoying the conversation and society of his friends. To-day with one of his drums in each ear Mr. Way can hear clearly the lowest tones used in ordinary conversation.

Mr. Way's efforts in his own behalf met with such a remarkable success that prominent Detroit business men have given him financial aid to place the Way Ear Drum before the public. Any one suffering from deafness should write personally to Mr. Geo. P. Way, 1217 Majestic Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

He will frankly tell them whether they can be benefited by his ear drums or not.

THE ANNALS OF THE CAMPAIGN By Walter S. Rounds

The campaign opened October 29. Two or three churches began their meetings before this date and several entered later. All together forty-one churches were engaged in the work. A mere statement of this fact is sufficient to show the spirit of unity among the churches.

On the afternoon of this day the first central meeting was held in the Nixon theatre, with John E. Pounds as preacher. This theatre is the finest in Pittsburg and cost the committee one hundred dollars a Sunday. Any fears that some might have had as to the success of the central meetings were dissipated when the theatre, seating twenty-six hundred, was filled and closed ten minutes before three o'clock and the old Third Presbyterian Church, seating fifteen hundred, was comfortably filled by the time set for the opening of the services. Allen Wilson addressed the overflow meeting.

For the four following Sundays two afternoon meetings were held, with great audiences and unabated interest. On November 5 H. L. Willett delivered a masterful address in the theatre and W. T. Brooks addressed the audience in the church. On November 12 Z. T. Sweeney and Geo. B. Ranshaw spoke at the theatre and church respectively, while on November 19 John G. Slayter, of the East End Church, and Chas. Reign Scoville performed the same office.

On November 26, in addition to addresses by J. H. Garrison and A. McLean, a union communion service was held in the theatre and the church. The service was carefully planned and was carried through in an orderly and reverent manner. It was a time of exaltation when every heart was lifted to God in thankful praise for his rich benefits.

Noon services were held daily in the old Third Presbyterian Church on Sixth avenue, from 12:10 to 12:55. These continued every weekday except Saturday for four weeks. For three weeks the sermons were preached by visiting evangelists and it is safe to say that not once was a discordant note sounded. During the last week Dr. John Weidley, of the Lutheran church, Dr. J. T. McCrary, of the United Presbyterian church, Dr. W. H. W. Rees, of the Methodist church, J. H. Garrison and A. McLean made the addresses. The interest in these meetings was sustained remarkably well and their influence was incalculable. The sermons were both devotional and evangelistic. These noon services not only impressed Pittsburg, but furnished the largest opportunity for most delightful fellowship between the evangelists and pastors of the churches.

It may be well here to call attention to one most admirable feature of the campaign. The Netz sisters, of Toledo, a quartet of sweet singers of rare power were engaged for the entire campaign. At every down-town service their voices were heard singing the praises of our Lord, and each day seemed only to increase their effectiveness and power. On November 5, Mrs. Princess Long, of Paris, Ky., arrived, and lent the charm of her voice to the services until November 15, when she was compelled to leave. In addition to the down-town meetings the Netz sisters and Mrs. Long sang at the service of some church every night and Sunday so long as they were here. Their usefulness in the campaign is unquestioned.

The results in the local churches differed widely according to circumstances, as necessarily they must. The "mother" church in Allegheny, where Wallace Tharp is pastor and Charles Reign Scoville was the evangelist, was fortunate in having the largest numerical increase, 246 being the last report, though their meeting is not yet ended.

Shady Avenue, Allegheny—Grant E. Pike pastor and G. W. Thompson evangelist—closed with sixty accessions. The church was greatly strengthened in its work.

At Observatory Hill, where John A. Joyce ministers and Cecil Armstrong was evangelist, there were nineteen additions, which means much to that work.

At Bellevue the people commonly declare that the meeting just closed was the best one the church has ever enjoyed. There were forty-five additions. A. W. Place is minister and E. D. Jones, of Cleveland, was the evangelist.

Braddock—O. H. Philips pastor and G. W. Moore evangelist—closed a good meeting with twelve additions.

Beaver Falls—Z. E. Bates pastor and W. H. Williams evangelist closed its meeting with twenty additions, but the good results are seen in a continuance of additions since the meeting closed.

California closed its meeting with F. A. Bright before the regular campaign opened. There were nine additions. H. L. Atkinson is pastor.

At Charleroi, where H. G. Connelly ministers and Clarence D. Mitchell was the evangelist, there have been ninety additions, with the end not yet.

Carnegie—W. T. Barnes pastor and E. J. Meachem evangelist—reports twenty-five accessions and a splendid meeting.

Crafton was the only church in the district that held its meeting in a hall. There were four additions, and steps have been taken to build immediately. Geo. B. Ranshaw held a splendid meeting. Walter S. Rounds is minister.

Connellsville enjoyed one of the large meetings of the campaign, there being ninety-six confessions, twenty-six by statement and nine by letter, making a total of 131. C. M. Watson is the pastor and W. J. Lockhart was the evangelist, with J. D. Garmong as singer.

Brother Sawtell held his own meeting at Duquesne with the help of C. B. Dabney. Under discouraging circumstances there were fifteen accessions.

At Erie J. H. Hughes is assisting F. A. Bright. Twenty-five additions are reported, with the meeting not yet closed.

F. F. Schultz held his own meeting at Ellwood City, with seven additions. Brother Schultz had a large ingathering here less than a year ago.

Greensburg entered the campaign with the regular minister, Norman W. Philips, doing the preaching. Local conditions have interfered with its success.

The First church, Pittsburg, was unfortunate in the illness and absence of their pastor, H. H. Clark, during the first part of the meeting. But sixty-five additions indicate the splendid results. W. J. Wright was the evangelist and J. E. Sturgis the singer.

E. Lee Perry assisted J. F. Futcher at the Fourth church and there were thirty-eight additions.

At Central, there were ninety additions. C. L. Thurgood was assisted by the Brooks Brothers.

John G. Slayter held his own meeting at the East End Church. There were fifteen additions in this important field in three weeks.

At Knoxville where additions to the church are constant, there was an increase of fifty-five. R. H. Fife assisted F. M. Gordon, the pastor.

E. D. Salkeld, assisted by W. F. Shearer, evangelist, led the Homestead Church on to a great victory. They reported ninety-seven additions.

The Second Church at Johnstown—Herbert Steed pastor—began their meeting last Sunday.

McKees Rocks passed the hundred mark. S. E. Brewster, the faithful pastor, was assisted by J. O. Shelburne. The total number of accessions was 102.

McKeesport has been without a pastor for some time, but nevertheless enjoyed a helpful meeting. H. H. Tilock did the preaching.

Meadville, one of the youngest churches in the state, reports thirty-six additions. H. F. McLane assisted the pastor, W. D. Trumbull.

At the First Church in New Castle Crayton Brooks and De Loss Smith assisted W. L. Fisher and 145 additions are reported at the Central church. W. H. Pinkerton and C. H. Altheide assisted F. M. Biddle. The meeting closed with fifty-one additions.

Belmar opened their meeting in their new church which is not yet completed. Under heavy odds there were eighty additions, which more than doubles the membership of the church. Allen Wilson was the evangelist and W. F. Lintt the singer. E. E. Manley is pastor.

Vernon Stauffer was the evangelist and Miss Ida Mae Hanna the singer at Herron Hills, where J. D. Dabney is pastor. There were seventeen additions.

F. A. Bright held the meeting at Squirrel Hill. There were thirty-four additions. G. W. Watson is pastor.

M. C. Frick reports four additions at Scottdale, where he held his own meeting.

E. B. Barnes assisted G. W. Knapper at Somerset. There were thirty additions, which surpassed the expectations of the most hopeful, and a new building is proposed as a result.

Twenty additions are reported at Turtle Creek. At this point the pastor, G. E. Jones, was assisted by E. P. Wise.

W. H. Patterson held his own meeting at Taylorstown with a few days' help from C. W. Yocum, and reports six additions.

With two meetings going on in Washington the whole town was stirred. At the First Church, where E. A. Cole ministers, O. P. Spiegel led the forces. There have been already 112 additions and the meeting continues. The Second Church, O. W. Riley pastor and G. A. Reynolds evangelist, closed with fourteen additions.

Wilkinsburg enjoyed a splendid meeting, with John E. Pounds as evangelist and W. A. Davis, singer. There were sixty additions. L. N. D. Wells is the pastor of this church.

Point Marion—W. B. Reed, pastor, and Campbell Jobes, evangelist—closed without additions.

It is too early to write a comprehensive history of the campaign, but some of the material results have been indicated in this article. The central committee made all arrangements carefully and their faith and wisdom have been more than justified. The churches entered into the work cheerfully and heartily and their gain is inestimable. The hidden results God knows.

Oils Cure Cancer - Statement of W. H. Gaines, Sec'y. Sullivan County S. S. Association.

Bloomingdale, Tenn., May 9, 1905.
Dr. D. M. Bye Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

Dear Sirs and Brothers.—I recommended Mr. Geo. W. Lindamood to you last fall. He told me he sent for your treatment, and the ugly looking growth on his face was taken away without pain. Before that I sent for treatment for Mr. Ford, and his lip gives him no more trouble. I shall recommend all sufferers with tumors or cancerous sores to send for your treatment. It is by this means I could expect treatment from you if cancer should come to afflict me, as I am poor and have a large young family. With many good wishes, I am, Yours truly,

W. H. H. GAINES.

We cure all forms of cancer and tumor with soothing, balmy Oils. Most cases treated at home. Doctors, lawyers and ministers endorse it. Write for free books on cancer to the Home Office. Address DR. D. M. BYE CO., Drawer 105, Dept. 411, Indianapolis, Ind.

The Campaign in Greater Kansas City By Frank L. Bowen

Most of the churches in Greater Kansas City united in the evangelistic campaign, which has recently closed with good results. While in several ways the general committee guided the work, it was largely managed by each church, as to expenses and methods of procedure. All the meetings were well advertised in the street cars and newspapers, and in addition each church used thousands of cards, circulars and tracts as the meeting continued. It pays to advertise the gospel meetings as well as "Gold Dust Twins" or "Cream of Wheat."

There was a union service every Monday morning from 10 to 12 at the First Church. At this meeting reports were given from each pastor and evangelist, and a devotional hour as well. No blue Mondays after waiting before God in such inspiring service'

Following one of these services the pastors and wives, with the evangelists and singers, and all the resident Kansas City preachers were dined as guests of Brother and Sister Richardson. It was a happy occasion and one not soon to be forgotten.

The following evangelists and pastor-evangelists assisted during the campaign: C. R. Scoville, L. L. Carpenter, A. N. Lindsay, Geo. L. Peters, H. G. Bennett, Hugh McLellan, with L. G. Sprague, Roy O. Youtz and DeLoss Smith as leaders in song.

There were over 700 souls added during the revival, most of whom have already been reported definitely by the several pastors.

The Combs-Scoville-Smith meeting was first in order of time and also in the number added—over 300 with some later by Brother Combs. The interest has never waned. This is a great church from which we all expect great things.

The Richardson-McLellan-Sprague meeting has seldom, if ever, been equaled. This is the mother church, the down-town church, the church that should stand as long as Kansas City stands. There were 71 additions. The children of this church—viz., the many churches throughout the city—should rise up and call her blessed, by endorsing the work so that as the old guard moves out we may carry on the Gospel in the dark and busy part of our city.

Morgan and Lindsay co-operated at South Prospect and 35 were added; the time was too short for a great ingathering.

The meeting at Sheffield, by Arthur Stout, with H. G. Bennett as evangelist, was a splendid success, with 60 added, and this could have been greatly increased, if it could have been continued. It was, however, a signal victory and a great help to the church and community.

H. M. Barnett held his own meeting at Forrest Avenue with 21 accessions. He is a new man here, but we will hear from him.

Geo. L. Peters assisted Frank L. Bowen at the Jackson Avenue Church, with 28 added, when Brother Bowen was called to Illinois and the meeting closed permaturely. Brother Peters is a clean, true man and gave us a Christlike message. We shall reap from his sowing in the weeks before us.

B. L. Wray held his own meeting at Budd Park. There were 31 added, and the work greatly strengthened. He is another new man in a growing part of our city. We expect Wray to do things.

L. P. Kopp, at Ivanhoe Park, did the preaching, with Roy O. Youtz as leader of song. This is the only meeting still going on, in the fifth week; 46 to date. This is another one of our city mission churches.

L. S. Cupp, the third new man in our city, is at Hyde Park. He did the preaching and held a good short meeting with 27 additions. He is getting things in hand and will do effective work.

O. N. Roth was his own evangelist at Argentine on the Kansas side. This is a very hard field and success can not be measured by additions, as we so often do. There were several added.

W. O. Thomas, of the West Side Church, held his own meeting without outside assistance, and, though a short one, about 20 were added.

T. P. Haley, at South Side, began late on account of delay in the new building, and after beginning was compelled to close, not being able to continue.

Brother Scott, colored, closed a short meeting with five added.

L. L. Carpenter is with C. P. Smith at North Side, Kansas City, Kan. I am not able to report. Their meeting began with bright prospects.

We expect greater things this winter in all our fields and larger city mission work.

Next year's campaign must be greater than this one. We must have longer time and harder work, if possible. We are a tower of strength in this city and we should tell mightily for righteousness. We are one for Christ. We are united. We love each other. Christian fellowship prevails and souls are finding Christ in great joy and peace.

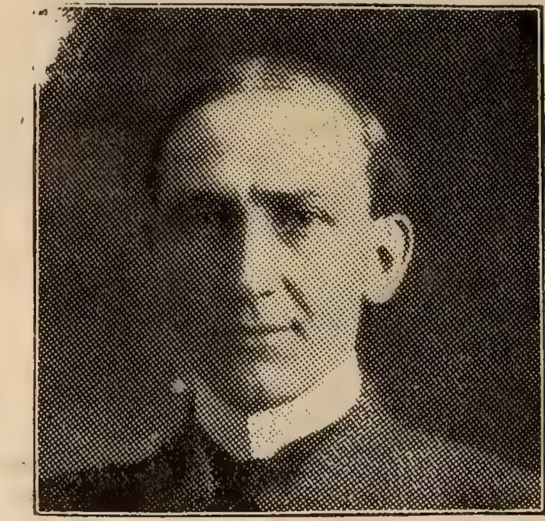
Free Catarrh Cure

No More Bad Breath



C. E. GAUSS,
Discoverer of this Grand Cure.

Catarrh is not only dangerous in this way, but it causes bad breath, ulcerations, death and decay of bones, loss of thinking and reasoning power, kills ambition and energy, often causes loss of appetite, indigestion, dyspepsia, raw throat and reaches to general debility, idiocy and insanity. It needs attention at once. Cure it with Gauss' Catarrh Cure. It is a quick, radical, permanent cure, because it rids the system of the poison germs that cause catarrh.

In order to prove to all who are suffering from this dangerous and loathsome disease that Gauss' Catarrh Cure will actually cure any case of catarrh quickly, no matter how long standing or how bad, I will send a trial package by mail free of all cost. NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

The Alabama Convention.

The twentieth annual convention of the Disciples of Christ in Alabama met at Athens, Nov. 16-19, and was the most interesting and enthusiastic in the history of our state work.

Sister Harrison, of Lexington, Ky., represented and organized a state C. W. B. M. Benj. L. Smith spoke for home and state missions, the pledges amounting to over $2,000 for the coming year, the largest in our history. There were nearly 500 additions to the congregations during the past year through the efforts of our state work. The cause is moving forward rapidly on a substantial basis. The new $20,000 church in Mobile is just completed. A new $20,000 church in Selma will be finished by Feb. 1. A new $7,000 church at Jasper is in course of construction. and at Talladega, West Point, Braggs' Store and one or two other points, the work of building has been so well inaugurated that success is assured.

S. P. Spiegel was re-elected state evangelist, and several local evangelists were supplemented, a large scope of new territory being taken into the work.

There were about one hundred and fifty present. Elegant homes were provided by the brethren at Athens and their neighbors, and we all greatly enjoyed the meeting.

Mobile will be the next place of meeting, and five hundred representative Christians from all parts of the state have been asked for; homes will be provided for all. The executive committee was re-elected, and all things were done decently and in order.

J. W. Henry.

The best convention in the history of the Alabama Christian missionary work has just closed its session in Athens. The program was one that directed the discussion along lines of business, and resulted in a ommittee being appointed to secure funds to establish a Christian college.

The collection taken showed an increase of about twelve per cent over last year's collection, and more than three hundred per cent over what it was five years ago. There never was such a demand for preachers as at present; new fields or places are being opened up in all parts of the state. Birmingham has decided to secure an evangelist for Jefferson county. Write A. R. Moore, Birmingham, for information. A man is wanted in the Jasper field, write L. O. Herrold, Jasper, Ala.; the Hartsell field, write A. A. Oden for information. A number of other places are needing preachers but can only pay, at present, from four to six hundred dollars, and if any preacher wishing to move to Alabama will write me, enclosing stamp for reply, and proper recommendations, I will take pleasure in putting them in correspondence with places needing preaching.

Alabama, from an industrial and agricultural standpoint, is making great strides to the front, and the need is money and men to carry forward the Lord's work. For every $150 placed in the hands of our executive committee, we can easily put a man to work for all his time, the local field furnishing the other needed support. Send all offerings to E. E. Linthicum, treasurer, Birmingham, Ala.

Kansas.

Western Kansas is filling up rapidly with a good class of people. Land is advancing in value every day.——J. H. Stark, of Glenwood, Iowa, broke into our state and held a splendid little meeting at Parker, which resulted in 13 accessions under trying circumstances.——Joseph Lowe held a short meeting at Crestline recently and reorganized the church, putting everything in fine shape for aggressive work. He is now at Tonganoxie, where there are but few members with a church debt. They need help.——H. H. Shick has just closed a good meeting at Sedgwick, where he had three additions, and succeeded in uniting the church and starting it to work. Brother Shick expects to locate at Sedgwick for full time.——C. E. Pomeroy has come back to his old love, Kansas, and located at Arcadia; he will preach there and at Corinth. We welcome Brother Pomeroy and bid him Godspeed. He stands foursquare on state missions.——Plainville has called N. Ferd Engle for a three months' trial. Their new house, rapidly nearing completion, will be one of the best in that section of the state.——Lee H. Barnum has resigned at Caldwell, and will take charge at Great Bend the first of the year. He has done a good work at Caldwell.——We are pained to have to chronicle the death of Sister Cummings, wife of F. M. Cummings, the pastor at Sedan. Our sympathies are with Brother Cummings and his children.——I am to speak the words which will unite in the bonds of wedded bliss Percy R. Atkins and Miss Alma Newell. Brother Atkins is the minister at Reserve, and Sister Newell is the secretary of the State C. E. Union.——John P. Jessie is assisting C. F. Bradford in a meeting at Eureka. Crowded houses and 13 added at the beginning of the second week. Brother Bradford, who is the "biggest" preacher in the state, has made a splendid record at Eureka. He is also president of the fourth district.——C. A. Finch, of this city, has just closed a short meeting (12 sermons) at Wanamaker school house, a few miles west of the city, which resulted in 35 additions, mostly by confession and baptism. This is Brother Finch's missionary meeting. A church house will be built at Wanamaker.——The returns from Kansas day are more encouraging than when I last reported. However, only 65 churches have remitted to date, November 27. We have received word from a number that the offering had been taken and would be sent by the close of this month. Many of the stronger churches have not remitted, waiting to make the apportionment in full, we hope.

Louisiana.

B. B. Sanders recently closed a good meeting at Lake Charles where Roy Linton Porter ministers. There were eight additions in all, three of whom were baptisms; all men.——E. Linwood Crystal, of Baton Rouge, recently started a meeting with home forces, but had to close on account of being taken suddenly ill, after two had been added.——On Nov. 20, Benj. L. Smith, assisted by the local ministry and the writer, ordained to the ministry O. E. Hawkins, of Soniat Avenue Church, New Orleans. Brother Hawkins has been preaching for the Soniat Avenue Church during Brother Ely's summer vacation, and the Soniat Avenue brethren say nothing but nice things about him.——My wife and I are just starting a meeting at Crowley, a city of about 8,000 people, where we have a good house and a few good people; however, the house has been closed all summer. While we are not calculating on having any additions to speak of, at the same time we trust that we shall be able to strengthen the organization, unify the church and get them to call a

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga , Has Hit on a New Idea.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a southern physician, Dr. J. W. Blosser, of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1.00 for a box containing one month's treatment.

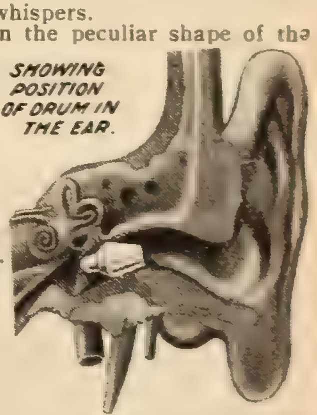
The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package, and an illustrated book.

How the Deaf Are Made to Hear

If you suffer from defective hearing write to George P. Way, of Detroit, who for 25 years was so deaf that he was practically cut off from all social intercourse with his fellow men. After years of experimenting in order to relieve his own case, Mr. Way discovered the principle of THE WAY EAR DRUMS.

Today with a pair of these drums in his ears Mr. Way can hear even low whispers.



SHOWING POSITION OF DRUM IN THE EAR.

Note in the illustration the peculiar shape of the drum. Unless an artificial drum has these exact curves the sound waves are not caught as they should be. Note again how the drum is narrowed down to a small tube just where it strikes the natural ear drum. This intensifies the sound waves, carries these vibrations right to the natural drum and makes hearing possible even for those who have almost entirely lost all sense of sound.

Write a frank statement of how you became deaf, how long your hearing has been defective and how much trouble you have with your ears. Mr. Way, who has been deaf himself, will be equally frank with you and will tell you whether or not the Way Ear Drums will help you. Address your letter personally to GEO. P. WAY, 1217 Majestic Building, Detroit, Mich.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Colorado Springs, Col., Dec. 4—Closed revival at New Castle, Pa., Wednesday night, with 158 additions. Singer, preacher and people deserve great credit. Six added here yesterday.—Crayton S. Brooks.

ALABAMA.

Mobile, Nov. 27.—Since the dedication of our church on Nov. 19, J. L. Haddock has been conducting evangelistic services, assisted by Claude E. Hill, with music under the direction of Talmage Stanley. Accessions, by confession 5, by statement 2. Attendance good; increasing interest manifested with prospects flattering for a further increase in membership.—James H. Robinson.

ARKANSAS.

West Fork, Nov. 22.—We had a good meeting at Greenland, with 16 additions by obedience; also another meeting just closed at Farmington with 8 added—5 by baptism and 3 from the Baptists; one added from the Baptists at Summers.—J. H. Speer.

Hope, Dec. 1.—November's work, including last Lord's day in October, equals 35—confessions 27, one from the Baptists, one reclaimed, six by statement; 26 have been baptized into Christ —Percy G. Cross.

COLORADO.

Denver, Nov. 27.—Six persons were received into the Highlands Christian Church yesterday. Four were received Nov. 19 and 2 on Nov. 12, making 12 for the month—all at regular services.—J. A. Pickett.

Boulder.—Meeting of two and one-half weeks with home forces closed with 50 additions. It was one of the sweetest and best meetings I ever saw. We began it with a week of prayer and study of the Holy Spirit.—S. M. Bernard, minister.

ILLINOIS.

Clinton, Dec. 1.—Closed our meeting here November 29, with 31 additions. H. K. Shields assisted as singing evangelist.—E. A. Gilliland, pastor.

Monmouth, Nov. 27.—Meeting three weeks old, with 50 added—45 by confession. H. A. Davis is the evangelist.—D. E. Hughes.

Herrin, Nov. 27.—We closed the first protracted meeting of our autumn crusade. It was conducted by the pastor, D. A. Hunter, assisted by Evangelists C. A. Hill and wife, of Milton, Ohio. There were added to the church 35—17 by primary obedience and 18 by relation.—F. Applegate.

Thomson, Nov. 27.—We began a meeting here last Friday night with Evangelist A. E. Wrentmore in charge. Large crowds are coming.—Cecil C. Carpenter.

For Income-producing Homes, Best Portion of California, Cash or Easy Payments,
Address Alfred Brunk, Petaluma, California.

Taylorville, Nov. 27.—Two additions yesterday. We are having fine audiences and good interest.—Z. Moore.

Joliet, Nov. 27.—One addition at First Church yesterday.—Ben N. Mitchell.

Pana, Nov. 18.—In J. W. Robbins' Bible Institute there were three accessions to the church.—J. W. Larimore.

Normal, Nov. 27.—John H. Marshall has been with us a week, and meeting is well started, interest growing. Crowded house at each of the three services yesterday. There have been 10 additions. Edward O. Beyer, of Chicago, is leading the singing.—Robert H. Newton.

Sterling, Nov. 27.—Four added by letter. Our C. E. showed up second best at the convention of the Union C. E. of county. The minister here gave two addresses at this convention.—Jas. W. Johnson.

Virden, Nov. 27.—Our meeting in September with "the Kendalls" from Columbus, Ind., resulted in 20 additions—four that were baptized were more than 50 years of age. The Kendalls went from here to Canton, O., where a great meeting has been held. Six confessions since the meeting closed, making a total of 71 since Feb. 1.—H. J. Hostetler, pastor.

INDIANA.

Terre Haute, Nov. 26.—Central Church is having a great revival; 54 additions in two weeks. Brother Sellers is the evangelist.—LeRoy St. John, gospel singer.

Columbus, Nov. 28.—W. H. Book, of the Tabernacle Christian Church, has just closed a very profitable series of meetings. Since Oct. 1, when he accepted the charge here, there have been 60 additions, and church work in general has been very greatly revived. The attendance at Sunday school averages now more than 200. The audiences at the Sunday services are unusually large, taxing the entire capacity of the church, and many people have been turned away for lack of room.—Ira E. Guthrie.

Covington, Nov. 27.—In a meeting at East Liberty 7 were added. I preached at West Liberty 3 nights last week with 9 added—6 confessions and 3 from the Methodists.—P. W. Walthall.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Okmulgee, Dec. 2.—In our meeting at Checotah there were 54 accessions, 2 yet to take membership and 1 to be baptized, 20 by primary obedience, 8 from M. E's, 4 from Baptists and 2 from C. P's, the rest by commendation. This more than trebles the membership at this place. The work is now in fine condition.—Frank L. Van Voorhis.

Sapulpa, Nov. 27.—One added at Broken Arrow since last report. Splendid audience here yesterday, and 2 additions by letter. Our newly organized Christian Endeavor and our Sunday school grow in interest. Sapulpa has been regarded one of the most important but most difficult fields. We are hopeful.—A. M. Harral.

IOWA.

Fairfield, Nov. 27.—We are having a good meeting; 60 additions—50 by confession and 10 by statement. Brother Hamilton is the evangelist. Two lay singers, Harvey and Arthur Hull, of La Harpe, Ill., are leading the song services.—H. C. Littleton, minister.

Vinton, Nov. 26.—Four additions the first day of our meeting here with the pastor, A. B. Elliott. We began with good audiences. Another meeting is in progress. My next engagement is at Petersburg, Ill. Am open for March meeting.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

Woodbine, Nov. 27.—One addition yesterday.—B. Franklin Hall.

Mystic, Nov. 27.—In a meeting with home forces. There were 10 additions—one restored, one from the Baptists, three from the Episcopalians and five from the world. This makes about 100 additions to this church since I took charge last March. I go to Ottumwa to-day to help in a meeting with the South Side Church.—C. E. Chambers.

KANSAS.

Coffeyville, Nov. 30.—In a 2 weeks' meeting conducted by home forces there were 19 added to the church—4 confessions and the others by letter and statement. Sister Bertha Early led the song service.—Ellis Purlee.

Macksville, Dec. 2.—David Lyon is in a fine meeting with F. T. Ray; 60 to date; 32 this week.

McPherson, Nov. 21.—The meeting of three weeks was a great success, though but 12 were added—9 baptized, 2 from the M. E.'s, 1 by relation. J. W. Walter, of Webster City, Ia., did the work of the evangelist. The pastor led the music.—W. A. Morrison, pastor.

Eureka, Nov. 27.—Meeting at this place 12 days old; 30 added; hundreds turned away last night; continue.—Jesse, evangelist; Bradford, pastor; Sherman, singer.

Peabody, Nov. 29.—Two added by letter last Sunday. Will continue the meeting for a few weeks. Brother Berkeley, of Marion, will do the preaching.—G. M. Read.

Carneiro, Nov. 27.—I have just closed a short meeting with 4 additions—3 by letter and 1 by confession.—George M. Reed, evangelist.

Maryville, Nov. 28.—We have been in this city but 19 days but there have been 31 additions—27 by confession and 4 by statement. We had but about 40 people here, so this is an increase of at least 50 per cent. —E. W. Brickert and wife.

KENTUCKY.

Stamping Ground, Nov. 24.—Just closed a short meeting at White Sulphur, seven confessions—one from the Catholics and one from another communion. We meet in a school house. —William C. Crerie.

Augusta, Nov. 27.—Meeting continues with splendid interest. Many turned away last night for want of room. Thirty-one additions to date.—C. H. DeVoe.

Latonia, Nov. 28.—J. Murray Taylor, who recently resigned his work at Washington, D. C., for the evangelistic field, held a most successful meeting at Petersburg, closing Nov. 26 with 35 added—29 baptisms. Brother Taylor is receiving a warm welcome and holding splendid meetings wherever he goes. Petersburg church enjoys the distinction of having at one time its pulpit occupied by Alexander Campbell, Benjamin Franklin, and others of our pioneer preachers. Later, such excellent men as W. S. Keene, Edgar Jones, Elvin Curry, Milo Atkinson, etc., have served as pastors of this church.—P. H. Duncan.

Owensboro, Dec. 1.—Closed a meeting of 15 days with the church at Calhoun last Monday with 34 additions—26 being by confession and baptism. This was the largest ingathering the church has enjoyed. Frank C. Huston led the music. T. D. Moore is the much-esteemed minister. The voting of local option in the town last year made this meeting possible.—R. H. Crossfield.

Clinton, Nov. 28.—Our meeting closed with 22 accessions—three from the Baptists and one from the Methodists. We had good audiences and fine interest. C. E. Moore is pastor, and is loved by all. He was elected mayor of the city during the meeting by almost a unanimous vote. There is a bright future for the Clinton church if Brother Moore remains there. Nearly all the church worked faithfully.—R. O. Rogers Malden, Mo.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Everett, Nov. 26.—During the month of November we have had 3 additions, 4 confessions, and 4 baptisms—A. T. June.

MICHIGAN.

Saginaw, Nov. 25.—Twenty-six added. Will continue two weeks longer. S. M. Martin is the evangelist.—J. S. Raum, pastor.

MISSISSIPPI.

Water Valley, Nov. 27.—Four by letter Nov. 17 and one yesterday. Good rally day exercises.—B. H. Morris.

MISSOURI.

Blackburn, Nov. 25.—Closed a 19 days' meeting with home forces, with 26 added—23 by primary obedience, one old gentleman 72 years of age.—G. E. Shanklin.

Barry, Nov. 25.—Our meetings continued 20 days. There were 25 additions—21 confessions and four otherwise. Robert C. Davis, of Kansas City, has preached for this church about three years.—Simpson Ely.

Salisbury, Nov. 22.—Just closed a good meeting of two weeks' duration at Sturgeon; 35 additions—22 by baptism. J. D. Greer, of Laddonia, did most of the preaching.—W. D. McCulley.

Kirksville, Nov. 27.—Yesterday was a great day; 35 accessions—11 confessions, and the remainder by statement and commendation. We have now passed the 100 mark in additions at regular services since coming here. The church is alive and every department seems to be in earnest.—D. A. Wickizer, pastor.

Lees Summit, Nov. 30.—In a meeting by J. S. Clements, 9 were added; four by baptism and five by commendation. Brother Clements has been called as pastor for full time for the coming year.—Thos. R. Thornton, clerk.

Carrollton, Dec. 1.—In a two weeks' meeting at Linneus, we had 10 additions. Sister Lula Gilliland, of Kansas City, led the song service.—J. J. Limerick.

ElDorado Springs, Nov. 27.—Six additions—four by letter and two by relation.—John Giddens, minister.

Sedalia, Nov. 27.—At Walnut Church I baptized six last Lord's day, the result of a nine days' meeting. This makes eight added to our little band in the last few weeks. W. F. Hamann, of the Second Church, assisted in the meeting.—E. L. Cunningham, minister.

Gallatin, Dec. 1.—Evangelists R. A. Omer, of Camp Point, Ill., and G. A. Butler, of Mound City, closed a 26 days' meeting here with 45 added to the church—25 conversions, four by letter, eight by statement and reclaimed, one from the Methodists, two from the United Presbyterians and five from the Baptists. This makes 113 additions since I came here Aug. 12, 1904, J. T. Craig having held us a meeting with 42 additions about one year ago. Of the 45 there were six heads of families and four others who were either husband or wife. With 250 members we are prepared for a great work. The church is enthused, aroused and greatly strengthened.—C. W. Comstock.

Brunswick, Nov. 28.—In the meeting at Orrick 52 in all were added to the church.—E. G. Merrill, pastor.

Kansas City, Nov. 24.—H. T. Bennett closed a four weeks' meeting with us here, 60 additions. This makes 141 in our 14 months' work here.—Arthur Stout, pastor.

Memphis, Dec. 2.—Just closed a meeting at Azen; 14 added—10 confessions, all men, seven of them heads of families; four sisters came in by letter and statement. Azen is one of the best churches in the county, though the membership is small.—M. J. Nicoson.

Eldon, Nov. 28.—We closed our Etterville meeting under the auspices of the missionary state board last night, with three additions. The meeting continued 17 days with 51 additions, a congregation organized, money raised for a church building and work begun on same. There was no congregation, church building or preacher of any kind in this town when I began this meeting. The people are greatly encouraged with the prospect of having these deficiencies so soon supplied. —S. J. Vance.

Kansas City, Nov. 27.—Two added by statement recently to the Budd Park Church.—B. L. Wray, pastor.

Philadelphia, Nov. 21.—I am in a good meeting: 7 additions.—J. M. Bovee.

NEBRASKA.

Omaha.—Six additions at First Church last Sunday. It is said that the attendance has never been so large and constant.—S. D. Dutcher.

NEW YORK.

Niagara Falls.—D. C. Tremaine, of Williamsville, closed a profitable meeting here on Nov. 26 with 10 additions—8 by baptism and 2 from the Baptists.—J. A. Wharton.

Buffalo, Nov. 29.—Nine have recently been added to this family—all by primary obedience but one. Began my third year with the Jefferson Street Church with many assurances of love and loyal co-operation.—B. S. Ferrall.

NEW MEXICO.

Raton, Nov. 27.—Baptized three on Sunday—2 from the Methodists and 1 from the Presbyterians. Outlook is exceedingly hopeful.—R. A. Staley, minister.

OHIO.

Mansfield, Dec. 2.—The meeting in the little church at Galion continues. I can go out only in the evenings from my work in Mansfield. There have been 34 additions—32 confessions. Next Sunday we expect to launch a building enterprise. Brother Pearce is leader.—Bruce Brown.

Hamilton, Nov. 27.—Wesley Hatcher, pastor, has just closed a meeting continuing over three Sundays with 35 added. I assisted with the music. Brother Hatcher has done a fine work since coming to Hamilton last May. The Bible school has increased from about 100 to over 300, and over 70 have been added to the church. W. H. Hedges is also doing a fine work at Lindenwald, a suburb of Hamilton.—Chas. M. Fillmore. Cincinnati.

OKLAHOMA.

Perry, Dec. 4.—The meeting at Ceres closed with 31 additions—23 by baptism, 4 from the Methodists. George F. Dennis will preach half time.—J. M. Rhoades.

ONTARIO.

Winger, Nov. 27.—We have just closed a good meeting at Winger with home forces: 14 baptisms—all from the Sunday school.—J. D. Stephens.

OREGON.

Lostine, Nov. 23.—We closed a five weeks' meeting at Hood River with a church of 47 members organized. Of this number, 9 were by confession and baptism. Our meeting was held in a tent and was seriously hindered by frequent rains. At Odell, in the heart of the fruit district, the meeting closed Nov. 12. A congregation was organized, with 68 members—30 by confession and baptism. Seventeen came at the closing service—9 to make the good confession. —T. S. Handsaker and wife, living link evangelists.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Ellwood City, Nov. 27.—Our meeting closed with 7 additions—3 by confession and 4 by letter.—Ferd F. Schultz, minister.

Duquesne.—As a part of the simultaneous movement, the meeting at this place closed on Nov. 26, with 15 additions, and much other good accomplished which cannot be measured by numbers. In view of the

THE ROOMINESS OF CHRIST'S HEART. —John 11:5.

The keynote of our lesson is found in the word "love." The way in which John puts his statement is peculiar. "Now, Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus." It is as if he would solve, at the very beginning, all the questions that might arise from the narrative. Why did the sisters send to Jesus the tidings of their brother's sickness? Why did Jesus not hasten at once to Bethany? Why did he break into weeping on the very way to his victory over the grave? The answer to all these is that he loved them. Love is the supreme reason for every strange act of the noblest natures. "God is love" must be accepted by us as the explanation of a thousand mysteries; and he has learned to love who has truly come to know God.

Christ's heart has room for his friends. No more sacred passion finds a place in the human soul than pure friendship, which has been called "the master passion." Jesus had an inner circle of those whose spirits were closely akin to his own. John, the "disciple whom Jesus loved," Peter, the "rock-man," James, the "son of thunder," and this little family in Bethany were among them. How he satisfied their heart-hunger is manifest in the fact that, though they were never able to comprehend him, and he disappointed all their fondest earthly hopes, they still clung to him, even through the gathering shadows of the Passion Week, when the hate of his enemies threatened to involve them in a common ruin with him. Only when the arrest was actually accomplished did they, terrified as much by the gloom of the garden and the strange manner of their Master as by the weapons of the soldiers, all forsake him.

Christ's heart had room for his nation. Hear his plaintive wail over Jerusalem: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen gathers her chickens under her wing, and ye would not!" (Matt. 23:37,38; Luke 19:41-44.) How he sought by parable added to parable to warn Israel of the peril of rejecting him who was coming to them in the name of the Lord! He painted for them a picture of the desolation that should visit their city and nation, if perchance some of them would heed the warning and escape. He devoted all the years of his earthly ministry to labors among the lost sheep of the house of Israel; and when he sent forth his apostles on their first evangelistic tour, he strictly charged them to devote their labors to their own people. After his resurrection, when he commissioned his disciples to carry the gospel into all the world, he bade them "begin at Jerusalem." (Luke 24:46,47; Acts 1:8.)

Christ's heart had room for the whole world. Friendship and patriotism did not exhaust the love of Christ. Rather, they were but hands by which he would lay hold of all humanity. The supreme statement of his purpose in coming into the world is that of the "little gospel," in John 3:16. God's sending his Son is the measure of his love, and Christ's willing coming is the measure of his. "That whosoever will may have life" is the limitless scope of his outreaching affection. He came to call sinners to repentance, and in the very hour when malice wrought its basest deed against him, he prayed for his persecutors. To give one's life for his enemies is the utmost proof and largest measure of love.

PREPARATION FOR THE MESSIAH.— Mal. 3:1-12.

Memory Verses, 8-10.

Golden Text.—I will send my messenger and he shall prepare the way before me. —Mal. 3:1.

The book of Malachi, the last though not the latest book of the Old Testament, is the production of a prophet (probably anonymous) who lived in Jerusalem some time after the rebuilding of the temple and the walls and the establishment of the complete and elaborate temple worship. Nothing is known of the prophet historically and it is not improbable that the name Malachi, meaning "my messenger," was taken from the book.

Our knowledge of the history of the period is too scanty to permit an exact determination of the time in which the book was written. The conditions which it was designed to meet are, however, evident. The exile was so remote that there is no reminiscence of it in the book. The reference to "the governor" indicates a complacent acceptance of the status of a Persian province under a satrap. The temple worship had been restored and the ritual had assumed the place of primacy which it occupied in the later stages of Judaism. But the blessings which had been anticipated, and which the prophets had foretold, as the immediate result of the return from exile and the religious restoration, had apparently not been received. Judah was enjoying no obvious advantage over her pagan neighbors who, like her, had fallen under the Persian yoke. In such a case, the service of Jehovah, involving expensive sacrifices and a punctilious observance of ritual requirements, began to seem burdensome. Is it worth while? they asked. Is the service of Jehovah worth what it costs?

In doubt upon this point, the natural tendency was to make it cost less. Tithes were withheld. Animals were offered for sacrifice which could not be put to any other use. There was a certain adherence to the forms, but both the spirit of worship and even the conscientious performance of the ceremonies was lacking.

The message of the prophet is: First, that there is coming a day of judgment, a time of testing, in which the messenger of Jehovah shall, like a refiner, put to the proof the virtues of all men; second, that to Judah shall be given an opportunity for repentance before that time on terms which the prophet announces (3:7-10) and which shall be further set forth by Elijah who shall come before "the great and terrible day of the Lord" (4:5); third, that in that time of judgment there shall be a rigid separation between the sinners and the righteous, however the two classes may seem to be confused now, and each shall be dealt with according to its deserts (3:18-4:3).

The prophet's answer to the immediate complaint of the people is that Jehovah has withheld the blessings from them because they had failed to comply with the conditions. "Return unto me and I will return unto you, saith Jehovah." Taken in connection with his allusions to tithes and sacrifices it lent itself to the encouragement of that formal and legalistic conception of religion which was the essential defeat of the whole Jewish system but which, in its highest forms made it a useful preparation for the fuller truth of Christianity. It was essentially "justification by works."

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and can not compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin diseases as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

WHAT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH STANDS FOR.—1 Tim. 3:14-16; 1 Peter 2:9.

For the Leader.

The topic for this evening is one which we are always ready to discuss. Or, at least, we should always be ready to discuss it. "Always ready to give a reason for the hope that is in us," is an old and favorite saying with us. Why should it not be thus? We make claims that are worthy the consideration of the most thoughtful, as well as fully appreciated by those of simplest understanding. There is no other body of believers of any considerable size that makes just the plea we make for a separate existence in this day of theological and ecclesiastical mergers. Does every member of our congregation present understand this plea? Does every one feel that he could state this plea to some one who would ask for information on the subject? If not, there is some need for the study of that plea. This meeting, therefore, may have a very satisfactory justification with even those most sensitive to the least mention of denominational holdings. Let us not hesitate to ask questions to bring out any points not clear.

For the Members.

1. During the first ten years of the nineteenth century several great and good men in different churches in America began to tire of the practices of their fellowships. They felt that the emphasis was not upon what the New Testament taught, but upon what the church standards taught. They saw how the Christian people of the land were divided by these human creeds and confessions. Indeed, when efforts were made to unite the members of different churches for communion out in the frontier of Pennsylvania strong objection was raised in the name of the creeds. Of course it could not be made in the name of the Gospel of Christ. Thomas Campbell was the first leader of this effort to unite the people of the several churches. Being attacked for this work, he must defend himself. He said, "to the law and to the testimony," meaning that they would fall back of the creeds and standards to the Word of God.

2. He was soon joined in this study of the Word of God for a basis of Christian procedure by his son, Alexander, who arrived from the old country, having previously decided to be a minister of the Word. They came forth from that study with a well established determination to be governed in all things relating to the church, by the New Testament Scriptures. They were going back to the records of the church, its doctrines, its practices, as it was under the apostles. Thus by returning to the church as divinely led, they would make the churches of today New Testament churches. Anything that was not according to the Scriptures was to be left behind. If it were wrong for them to unite the people of God for the work of his kingdom, it would appear from the Scriptures. If the Scriptures did not forbid, then the creeds and standards had no right to forbid. The result was far more than they thought when they made the decision to return "to the law and to the testimony."

3. Of course they were not welcome any longer in their own church. They afterwards entered another church, thinking they would find fellowship there. In this they were mistaken, for they must soon move out or be brought to trial for heresy. By this time there were several standing out boldly for a return to the primitive order of things. There were also many in the churches who, like Nicodemus, held with the reformers, though they did not at once break with their surroundings. One entire association over in Ohio was deeply tinged with the new view, and, by the year 1830, after whole churches had come into the new movement, the association as a whole became a pleader for the return to the New Testament order. This restoration of the New Testament church had changed their views of baptism, of infant membership in the church, of government, and the whole field of Christian action was changed. They did not rejoice always at the results of this return to the New Testament order, for sometimes meetings closed with people in tears that certain old practices of the church must be given up as having no warrant in the New Testament. But they were brave enough to follow where the Lord led them. We have learned that they stood for a return to the New Testament Scriptures and the church as it is there set forth. They said they would have the local churches of today organized, governed and carried forward in all their practices just as the churches of the times of the apostles. The churches of New Testament times were led by the Holy Spirit—infallibly led. We are the children of these great and good men of the nineteenth century, and what they stood for the Christian Church of today stands for—a return to the primitive order.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Is my life such as makes me worthy to be classed with a people who propose to return from the man-made standards to the pure Word of God?

People's Forum.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

In your editorial of Nov. 16, page 148, on "Praying for the Holy Spirit," you say, "If this man with little faith, could pray for more faith," etc. I infer from that statement that you would teach that it is entirely right and Scriptural to pray for an increase of faith.

If that be true, we must conclude that we should pray for faith and that any and all faith is not the belief of testimony, does not come by hearing, but is the gift of God, for if faith is increased in answer to prayer, then certainly faith in the beginning or faith itself is given in answer to prayer, for the same thing which produces faith at all will increase that faith. What about it? And your position on praying for the Holy Spirit, it seems to me, is not in keeping with the teaching of the Bible. If God has given the obedient believer the Holy Spirit, then why pray for it? That sort of teaching has led our good religious neighbors to pray for the baptism of the Holy Spirit and expect him to give them a great power in some strange way.

A. E. Dubber.

[Replying to the above, we would say that most certainly we believe that the prayer, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief," is entirely proper, and we suppose it is one that every sincere Christian has often made. It does not follow, however, as our brother seems to think, that the Scriptures therefore have nothing to do with faith. "These are they which testify of me," and without the testimony concerning Christ, there could be no faith in him. But faith is much more than the intellectual acceptance of testimony. It is the actual receiving of Christ, not only with the powers of the mind, but with the affections of the soul, and the submission of the will. In these spiritual processes many an earnest soul has had occasion to cry out, "Help thou mine unbelief!"

Our brother's question "If God has given an obedient believer the Holy Spirit, then why pray for it?" was fully answered in the very article to which he refers. Just as the man having a measure of faith, or of patience, or of love, may pray for an increase, so one who has been made a "partaker of the divine nature" to some extent through the Holy Spirit, may desire, and should desire, to increase his likeness with God, which can only come through an increase of the Holy Spirit. Paul prayed that the Ephesians might be "filled with all the fullness of God." Nothing short of that should satisfy the Christian. But the only way to be "filled with all the fullness of God" is to be "filled with the Spirit." That is not the experience of a beginner, but the sublime goal toward which all Christians should aspire.—Editor.]

Some Facts About "Gloria in Excelsis"

THE NEW CHURCH HYMNAL

1. It is a fact that a good book is always criticised. This is true of a Hymnal that at once evidences its real worth, and meets with a great sale—a fact that can be easily proven from the History of Hymnology. "Hymns Ancient and Modern" in England was most severely criticised, and it reached a sale of 35,000,000 in 35 years!

2. It is a fact that nearly all of the 133 members of the General Committee sent in (1) suggestions as to the Order of Arrangement, and (2) lists of hymns. It is thus a Hymnal BY the people FOR the people.

3. It is a fact that the editor-in-chief was assisted by one of the leading Professors of one of our BEST colleges in selecting the Hymns on the Holy Spirit from the lists sent in by the committees. They have been approved by hundreds who have written us commendations of the Hymnal.

4. It is a fact that this high-grade Hymnal contains the best Hymns extant on Christian Union—all taken from denominational writers, none of which have ever appeared in any of our Hymnals. Any one of them would be a credit to any writer among us.

5. It is a fact that the Complete Edition of 624 pages is not as heavy as the new Methodist Hymnal just issued, nor does it have as many pages. This is also true when you compare it with the leading modern Hymnals of America and England. However, some wanted a SMALL Hymnal, and others wanted a LARGE one. To meet these demands two editions were prepared and published simultaneously. The ABRIDGED Edition contains 400 pages, and will be found admirably adapted to the needs of many churches.

6. It is a fact that some Hymnals are not logically arranged comprehensive Hymnals made up of the tried and true Hymns and Tunes, but are mere bundles of trashy Gospel Songs (with an occasional Hymn here and there), many of which soon pass into oblivion where they belong! They are so puerile that they never elicited commendation or criticism, and "have passed peacefully into rest" without having paid the undertaker—the publisher who has not realized enough from their sale to pay for the plates from which they were printed.

7. It is a fact that Gloria in Excelsis is being adopted by our leading churches much more rapidly than we expected—some taking the Abriged Edition, more, however, taking the Complete Edition. We present a partial list of Indiana city churches which have adopted it: Bloomington, Wabash, La Fayette, Frankfort, New Albany, Kokomo, and many others. We have a similar list from other states from New York and Alabama on the East to Washington and California on the West. Many churches are now raising the money with which to purchase this all-round up-to-date Hymnal made up of the best to be found in Ancient and Modern Hymnology. Who will be the next?

8. Gift Edition of the Complete Gloria in Excelsis in FULL Morocco, with name in gold letters, may be had for $2.50, express prepaid.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Christmas the Children's Festival.

Christmas is, of all days in the year, the children's day. As we think of the birthday of our Savior, we love to study the pictures which great artists have made of the holy mother and her Child. It is not the rapt expression of the mother, nor the halo over the Child's head wihch attracts—only the Baby lying so helpless and innocent in its mother's arms, and touching the chord of love in every parent's heart. Since the days when Christ invested childhood with a sacredness and a new dignity it had not known, the world has grown more and more to value these little ones. So great is the interest in child study that the earth seems to have been made for children, and, in our anxiety to do the most and best for them, there is a danger of making their lives too complex and too intense. The charm of the child is his simplicity of character, and in our celebration of our Savior's birthday we shall do well to preserve this simplicity in our children and to return to it ourselves.

A Santa Claus Party.

This very charming and delightful party was given by young grandparents, who had a lovely home with large rooms, and they invited the grown-up folk, too.

The host and hostess were assisted in receiving their guests by Mr. and Mrs. Santa Claus and Miss Santa Claus. After the greetings, they were ushered into a large room, a portion of which had been converted into a typical winter forest, in the corner of which was a lovely Christmas tree all aglow with lights.

Before the gifts were distributed by Mr. and Mrs. Santa Claus, Miss Santa Claus told the old, old story of the Christ-child, emphasizing the fact that Christmas is a time for gifts because Jesus was a gift of love to the world, how he "went about doing good," "pleased not himself"—teaching and living a life of goodness and love. That is why Christmas, his birthday, is the gladdest of birthdays in all the years, she told them.

Miss Santa Claus directed and led all the games, and whenever there came a pause, she told them delightful stories. There were selections from Dickens; and "Uncle Remus," and many other lovely stories.

The entertainment closed with a lovely luncheon, which was served in the large dining room. At the windows were holly wreaths, tied with large bows of red ribbon, while the mantel was banked with green and thickly studded with red candles, different lengths. In the bay window were festoons of running cedar, with a fluffy red bell suspended by a bit of the cedar from the highest point on either side.

The long table had for a centerpiece an oval mirror, surrounded by a miniature forest, which had been converted into a typical winter scene by a glass-blower. Gliding across the frozen pond was a sleigh drawn by four deer, in which Santa Claus was seated, with a pack of toys on his back, and toys all about him. At the farther end of the pond was a tiny house nestling among the evergreen trees. The children were seated at this table with the host and hostess.

There were four round tables at either corner of the long table, at which the older people sat. The centerpiece of each was a round plateau of mistletoe in the middle of which gleamed a flaming star of red. A five-pointed star was cut from cardboard, then tacked to a thin board. The star was outlined with red candles elevated in the very center of the star.—The Pilgrim.

Compensations of a Modest Income.

Our good friend with a million dollars a year can not eat much more or better food, or drink much more or better drinks, than we can. If he does, he will be sorry. He can have more places to live in, and enormously more and handsomer apparatus of living, but he can't live in more than one place at once, and too much apparatus is a bother. He can make himself comfortable, and live healthfully. So can we. He can have all the leisure he wants, can go where he likes and stay as long as he will. He has the better of us there. We have the better of him in having the daily excitement and discipline of making a living. It is a great game—that game of making a living—full of chances and hazards, hopes, surprises, thrills, disappointments, and satisfactions. Our million-a-year friend misses that. We may beat him in discipline, too. We are apt to get more than he does—the salutary discipline of steady work, of self-denial, of effort. That is enormously valuable to soul, body, and mind. He can't buy it. We get it thrown in with our daily bread. We are as likely to marry to our taste and live happily in the domesticated state as he is. We have rather better chances than he of raising our children well. We are as likely as he to have good friends worth having, and to find pleasure in them.—Edward S. Martin, in the December Atlantic.

Missionaries Saved by Soap.

The island of Madagascar, the third largest island in the world, in 1836, was ruled by a native woman who combined the worst vices of barbarism with the externals of semi-civilization. In "Thirty Years in Madagascar" the author tells of a singular incident which prevented the woman from driving all missionaries from the island as she had threatened to do.

The queen had come into possession of some English soap, and thought it desirable to get the white teachers to make soap, and to instruct her noblemen to make it. This is not exactly nobleman's work; but in those days, in that land, every one had to do as the queen commanded, or have their heads cut off.

She called a meeting of the missionaries. She wished to know if there were anything they could still teach her people. The missionaries replied that they had only taught the simplest elements of knowledge, and that there were many things of which the Malagasy were quite ignorant. Then the queen inquired if they could not teach her people how to make soap from materials to be found in the country.

This was an awkward question. Instruction in soap-making had not been part of their college training, but a Mr. Cameron undertook the matter, and at the end of a week he presented the queen with two small bars of fairly good soap made entirely from materials found on the island The queen was so pleased with the soap that, on condition that Mr. Cameron would agree to supply a certain amount, and teach some of the young noblemen how to make it, things were to be allowed to go on, and the missionaries were not to be interfered with in their work.

The Holy Night.

One star burned low within the darkened east,
And from a stable door an answering light
Crept faintly forth, where through full hours of night
A woman watched. The sounds of day had ceased,
And save the gentle tread of restless beast
There dwelt a hush profound. The mother's sight,
So holden by her Babe, took no affright
When shadows of the beams, that caught the least
Of light, seemed shapened to a lengthened cross;
She only saw a crown made by a fleece
Of golden hair. Naught presaged pain or loss—
To her, the pivot of the swinging sphere
Lay sheltered in her arms so warm and near;
A mother's heart proclaimed him "Prince of Peace!"

Droves of Men.

Dr. Parkhurst says that in all questions men go a good deal in droves. A few people act as conscience for the many. Those who settle questions of right and wrong for themselves are very largely in the minority. Yet men will not be judged in droves, but every man must give an account of himself before the bar of God. If we have to stand alone there, it is a good thing to begin to stand alone here.

Bury Theirs.

W. L. Moore, chief of the United States weather bureau, was the subject at a recent dinner of many jokes about the mistakes that the bureau was making just then in its predictions. He took it good-naturedly, giving apt answers to all the chaffing, and scored in particular against a young physician. "Mr. Moore," said the doctor, "I'm glad of one thing—you chaps will at least admit that you make mistakes." "Oh, as to that," responded Moore carelessly, "we must, necessarily. Now, with the medical profession it's quite different. You can bury yours, you know!"

"Better Off Than We 'Spects You Is".

An old negro died at Holly Springs, Miss., recently, and as he belonged to no church or lodge, three or four negroes volunteered to bury him, and they were the only followers in his funeral train. After the coffin had been lowered into the grave all seemed to feel that something ought to be said. They appealed to the oldest man, "Bob" McCraven, who delivered the following: "Friday Vizor, you is gone; but we hopes you is better off than we 'spects you is."

The Giving of the Year.

A certain woman has a big old trunk marked "Christmas," and, as we happen to know, keeps thinking of it all the year round. It's rather a nice way of keeping the Christmas-y feeling alive, don't you think? Somebody has beautifully named Christmas the "giving-time of the year," but it oughtn't to be the only time for giving. We wouldn't give a fig, and a dried fig at that, for anybody who was a miser of love all the year round so as to save it up for Christmas. No, let your "giving-times begin away back in January or February (say about the day after Christmas so as to get a good start) and then let the kindness be sprinkled all through the year, clear up to Christmas again, and through it. That will be like the love of the dear Lord himself, whose birthday fills the whole world with gladness. Every day, rain or shine, something is always coming from him to make us glad, if it isn't anything more than "weather"; always some sweet happening to show that God hasn't forgotten to love us; always some unasked-for and unlooked-for blessing (like the presents people send us for a "surprise") all through the year and every day in the year; and then, to crown all, on this Christmas day, the "Unspeakable Gift." Of all the Bible words for Jesus, this somehow seems most beautiful. Why not take a pattern for our Christmas giving? Something all through the year to those we love —costly as our purse can buy, if we please to have it so—but for Christmas giving, just ourselves!—mainly ourselves, at least. "Love came down at Christmas," and whoever gives without love at Christmas has no part or lot in it.

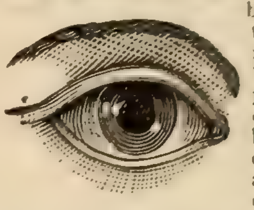
SPECTACLES ABANDONED

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures Afflictions of the Eye Without Cutting or Drugging

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for any form of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous and barbarous methods are eliminated. There is no risk or experimenting, as thousands of people have been cured of blindness, failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when eminent oculists termed the cases incurable. Below we print extracts from testimonials—such as are received by us daily:



Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 73 years old, I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kan., writes: "My honest opinion of Actina is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It cured my eyes, and cured my wife of asthma."

Hundreds of other testimonials can be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial, postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 203B, 929 Walnut St., a valuable book, Prof. Wilson's Treatise on the Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Child's Question.

The shepherds had an angel,
  The wise men had a star,
But what have I, a little child,
  To guide me home from far,
Where glad stars sing together
  And singing angels are?

Christ watches me, his little lamb,
  Cries for me day and night,
That I may be his own in heaven,
  Where angels clad in white
Shall sing their glory, glory,
  For my sake in the height.

A Week with the Woodneys.

THE SIXTH EVENING.

When Worth Acre discreetly left the Woodney family in the old churchyard, he walked slowly homeward. Somehow, his cheerful mood was past, and while he would not suffer himself to be despondent, he made no attempt to ward off a gentle melancholy. "When a fellow is forty years old!" said Worth, half aloud. He added no more. but crossed the street with head bowed. Was it seeing Mr. and Mrs. Woodney with their son and daughter that had reminded him of his age? He glanced at the windows of the Miss Days, but no face was to be seen. He reached Horseshoe House and found the gates of the court standing open. His grandfather was seated under the silver maple, his cane upon his knees. The sight of the aged gentleman, deserted by his wife and children, but increased the pensive thoughtfulness of the blacksmith. He drew a rustic bench near his grandfather, and having selected a twig from among those which lay scattered in the grass, he began to whittle. The house bent around them inclusively, shutting off all view of the outside world, save as the open gates afforded a glimpse of the ice house across the road, adjoining Hoogan's saloon. The sunshine touched the edge of the grassy plot on the east, and shone in the windows of the eastern bend of the horseshoe. It was gaily playing in the upper branches of the silver maple; but where the two men sat, a soft and delicious repose and shade pervaded the air.

"How are you feeling today, grandfather?" inquired Worth; "still hale and hearty and firm?"

"Still firm," answered the old man. "Do you know where my wife and children are? I would like to meet them once more before I am led to execution."

"They are quite safe," said Worth. "You are sure you have everything you need?"

"Oh, yes," said the old man smiling, "I am very well contented."

"Think of that!" exclaimed Worth. "Contented at your time of life. Many a fellow is discontented at twenty, to say nothing of ninety-six. Why, even at forty, a man may fuss around because he hasn't everything he wants!"

"It's everything whether you're firm or not," old Mr. Acre explained. "Nobody sees me tremble, or grow pale, in spite of my situation. But I would like to see my wife and children today. This is a beautiful day, just the kind of day for a man to see his wife and children." The old man looked wistfully at Worth, and clasped his withered hands.

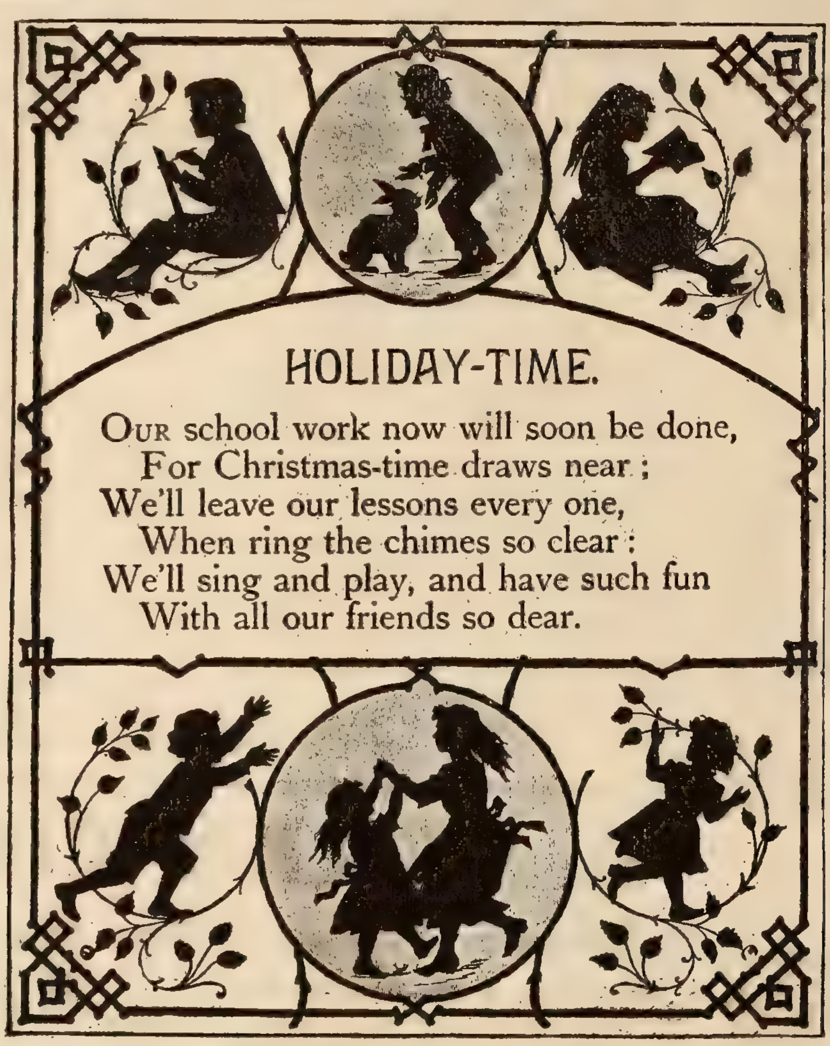
"It is a fine day," said Worth, "and I have been fortunate enough to see Clarabella St. Clair—the beautiful lady who married my friend, the blacksmith. So the day would have been fine enough for me, if there had been no sunshine on the silver maple. Sunshine? Pshaw! What need had I for it? Clarabella smiled at me, grandfather."

"I have never forgiven the princess for marrying a blacksmith," said the old man severely.

"She couldn't help it," said Worth softly. "You see, she loved him."

"But how did you ever get to know a churl in that base calling?" demanded old Mr. Acre, his eyes snapping. "What business had he in his mean condition, to aspire to a lady's hand? Ah, this is the revolution, this is the downfall of nobility! A blacksmith, indeed! He should have sought a wife among the red-cheeked market-women, or sturdy harvesters. It is these blacksmiths and apprentices who have me now a prisoner. But they shall not see me falter. I will be firm to the last."

"To be sure, it is humble of the fellow to be a blacksmith," Worth assented, "but his wife is, nevertheless, the princess Clarabella St. Clair. And as I came from the cathedral today, she walked by my side just as she did twenty years ago, when she and I were sweethearts. It was just the same, except, of course, she can never be mine as I used to dream, because she is already married. She can never be mine, grandfather, never! But I am going to see her tomorrow night, just for old times' sake. And yet, I know she can never be my wife!"



HOLIDAY-TIME.

Our school work now will soon be done,
  For Christmas-time draws near;
We'll leave our lessons every one,
  When ring the chimes so clear:
We'll sing and play, and have such fun
  With all our friends so dear.

"Do you still grieve for her, my boy?" asked the old man, reaching over and laying a thin hand on Worth's great knee.

"Yes, grandfather, just as you do for your wife and children."

"Ah, my poor child," said old Mr. Acre, slipping his hand from the blacksmith's knee to the blacksmith's shoulder. "What a world, my boy! What a world!"

Worth roused himself and spoke more cheerfully. "Later, I spent some time with Clarabella's little daughter—her name is Lizzie." He chuckled. "It's amazing how that child loves me! She's big enough to stop caring—most children come to the age of not caring—did you ever notice?"

"Ah, yes," cried the old man, "yes, yes!"

"But Lizzie thinks I'm everyting—I believe she loves me more than her father. 'Uncle Worth,' she calls me. The child is about fifteen. She overtook me as I was walking in the fields, today. 'Oh, let me go with you!' she cried, as if she were only five years old. She caught my hand, and on we went. It's the funniest thing—when her fingers catch my hand, they can't close around it, of course, and they're so soft—and yet nobody could break away from them. They seem to hold like steel. When Lizzie holds my hand—oh, I don't know!—seems like all the sweetness and purity and promise of childhood is given me in trust. She doesn't know how much she means, and how great she is, and she doesn't know how unworthy I am, either—doesn't dream of it! Her eyes are blue, and they dance and dance. Her face is soft and round and dimpled and—and her hair is this golden fluffy kind, you know—made out of finer stuff than the general run of hair. Grandfather, when she tips back her face to lok up at me, those eyes dancing—and the sunlight falls on it, and the merry lips just a wee bit parted—and the cunningest pearly teeth, shining—and her hand holding mine—well, some of the warmth of her round, little body steals into my heart, and makes me grow young. Grandfather, do you know where the fountain of youth is?"

"No, I don't," said the old gentleman promptly. "If I did, I wouldn't be here."

"I'll tell you where it is," said Worth earnestly, "it's to be found in one's children."

"But they have taken my children away," sighed old Mr. Acre. "My son and daughter would come if they could. They and my wife are taken away."

"I did a very bold thing today," Worth continued. "I was walking with little Lizzie just as I have been saying, and somehow when I looked down into her lovely, happy face, I seemed a thousand years old. Do you ever feel that way, grandfather?"

"No, my boy, I've never felt older than ninety-six, but sometimes I imagine, when you've reached my elevation, the atmosphere stays about the same thinness from then on to any stretch of years."

"I felt a thousand years old," Worth persisted. "And I felt an awful ache in my heart—it was the ache to be young again—to be on a plane with the child by my side, to catch on to her youth, somehow, anyhow, and keep myself from drifting away, drifting away, to the sombre, silent pool of old age. Her face was so bright, her voice was so fresh and girlish, her step was so young! And I love her so! Then I said to her, 'Lizzie, darling'—for you know she looks on me as a father—'Lizzie, darling, will you let an old fellow kiss you just once?' I was watching her very close to see if she would start away, or show unwillingness, but bless your heart, grandfather, her eyes opened wide in surprise, and her little mouth was all wreathed in a smile, and her voice shook out little bars of music. 'Of course you may, dear,' she said, 'and as often as you please!' Then, I bent down—the great rough fellow that I am, and Lizzie rose on the tiny tips of her fairylike shoes, and held up her lips to me, and—and—what's the matter with me?" cried Worth in amazement, for his voice had been broken by a sob. He cleared his voice angrily, and his eyes smarted with tears. "I don't know how that happened," he apologized, rising abruptly.

"Be firm, my boy!" cried old Mr. Acre, getting up by means of his cane. "Be firm—look at me!"

"I will, grandfather!" exclaimed Worth. "I'm ashamed of myself. I know it couldn't ever be."

"The world's full of grief," cried the old man, his eyes sparkling, "but be firm! It's all we can do."

"It's all we can do," Worth agreed, "and I'll take fresh courage from you."

"The enemy's against us," exclaimed old Mr. Acre, waving his cane, "they're singing, 'To arms! to arms!' Our wives and children are denied us. Nothing but a prison for us to guard. In three days the guillotine! But be firm, my boy. Cry hurrah!"

"Hurah!" cried Worth, waving his great arm.

"Mr. Acre! Mr. Acre!" cried Mace's excited voice from the gate, "our horse is in the house. Come quickly!"

"Ha, the mob!" cried old Mr. Acre with great zest as he rushed for the gates. "The barricade!"

"Let me out first," cried Worth, with difficulty passing the old man on his way to the gates. Harc had he gained the sidewalk when th gates closed with a crash, the bolts r ed into place, and Horseshoe Hou was in a state of siege.

Christmas Conundrums and Answers.

Suppose, when you go to bed on Christmas eve, you should find hanging in your room a set of rules like this:

1. Before you have any breakfast tomorrow morning you must tell exactly what Christmas means and how it came to be celebrated on December 25.
2. Before you go into the closed parlor where that tree is glittering you must describe the origin of the Christmas tree.
3. Before you open any of your gifts you must make it clear who St. Nicholas was, and how we came to call him Santa Claus.
4. Before you may enjoy the privileges of the mistletoe you must give a sketch of the customs connected with it.
5. Before you consult an encyclopedia or any book whatever, you must obey these rules!

Do you think you'd get your breakfast—and see your tree—and open your presents—and have your kiss?

It isn't likely that anything as severe as this will happen to you, but if it should, the following items will help you:

HOW CHRISTMAS BEGAN.

There's Christmas, for instance. "Everybody knows what Christmas means!"—but that isn't exactly an answer to the question, after all. When this word was coined "mass" meant "a sacrificial offering," and Christ meant "One anointed" or "set apart" for a special purpose, so that the real significance of the festival was "the offering up of One set apart for a special design."

How is it, remembering this, that we ever celebrate the sacred anniversary unthinkingly or selfishly?

And then the date. Did I hear somebody say that Christ was born on December 25? If you know that for a certainty, then you know more than all the scholars of all the centuries.

According to church history, Christ was baptized on January 6, and, at first, his birthday not being recorded, that was the day celebrated, but some time in the third or fourth century December 25 was chosen instead—to be celebrated, ever after, as Christ's birthday. The chief reason for selecting this date, just at the winter solstice—the time when the year turns its back on the short, dark days of winter and sets its face toward the long bright ones of spring—was, because in those times this was the accepted season for festivals. The Romans already celebrated it as the Saturnalia; the nations of the north called it Yule, and, by a beautiful symbolism, the Christians made their feast a rejoicing that the Sun of Righteousness was rising with cheer and comfort for the world.

THE FIRST "CHRISTMAS TREES."

As for the tree idea, it is older than old. First of all, the pagans used to look upon the sun as a heavenly "light tree." Its rays were the branches, the clouds were its leaves, the lightning its flowers, and the sun, moon and stars its golden fruit. Later, the Scandanavians of the north chose the ash to typify this idea of the "tree of life," while through Germany and central Europe the pine was held sacred. In representing their "world tree" the Scandinavian legends always placed four harts in the branches "to devour the blossoms as the seasons devour the days," and one great stag "to consume the leaves as the year consumes the month." At Yule they decorated small fir trees with animals to carry out this idea and then covered them with candles to signify that the great "light tree" had begun to grow again.

When they were converted, the missionaries usually let them bring their Yule into Christianity, only now they had Christmas trees instead of Yule trees. In England, however, the skin-clad Anglo-Saxons were taught that Yule trees belonged to idolatry and must be cut down and burned at Christmas time, in token that the Holy Child had destroyed heathenism. This was the beginning of the Yule log that blazed on the Christmas hearth for a thousand years, and, in fact, only went out when hearths went out of fashion.

So when you trim your tree this year don't forget that, once upon a time, every object upon the branches had a special meaning. We string popcorn and cranberries today because to the pagans such festoons typified mythological serpents; and later, among the Christians, they stood for the serpent in the Garden of Eden. The gilded nuts and colored globes represent the pagan idea of the fruit of the "light tree," which afterward was made to symbolize the Christian belief that the "heavens declare the glory of God."

THE CHRISTMAS FAIRY.

And now for Saint Nicholas, or St. Niklaas, as the Dutch call him, or Santa Claus, as we have learned to know him.

To begin with, he was a spirit who came to earth on a white steed at Yule, and led away the souls of all who had died during the year. That was a pagan idea, and of course he was not named St. Nicholas yet. Next, they came to believe that he took only the souls of the unbaptized—all children, and in that way the idea of his being the children's friend started to grow. By and by he changed his white steed for reindeer, born of the sun-stag on the "light tree."

True
Economy

The difference in cost between an alum baking powder and the highest-class cream of tartar baking powder would not amount for a family's supply to one dollar a year.

Dr. Price's is the standard cream of tartar baking powder. It makes the food delicious and healthful.

NOTE.—You cannot, if you value good health, afford to use cheap, low-grade, alum baking powders. They are apt to spoil the food; they do endanger the health. All physicians will tell you that alum in food is deleterious.

So the Christmas fairy comes down in story and tradition until, in the fourth century, good old St. Nicholas, archbishop of Myra, made himself so famous for good work that he has been called the patron saint of Christmas ever since.

"UNDER THE MISTLETOE."

The mistletoe legends are many. The Druids reverenced it, partly because, in common with many other primitive peoples, they attached a peculiar significance to the idea of a Trinity, and the mistletoe berries often grow in threes, and partly because the berries ripen at the sacred season. From earliest times the plant played an important part in the December ceremonies, and long after the last Druid was dust it was believed to be good medicine for all ills, physical, mental and sentimental. As for kissing beneath it, it began so far back that no one attempts to trace it, and from present prospects the custom isn't likely to die out. It must have come near dying, however, in the days of the Puritans upon our shores. Christmas was a solemn fast with them, you remember. Mince pie was sinful, and plum pudding even worse.

From their ways to ours seems a far cry indeed, for we have learned to believe today that Christmas is no less sacred because of its gladness and merrymaking. The more cheer we can bring to every heart within our reach, the more truly we shall "keep Christmas."

Two Little Girls' Christmas.

It was Christmas morning. A Christmas tree, still gay with tinsel, colored tapers and garlands, but shorn of its presents, stood in the center of the room. A little girl sat near by with her lips extended in a disagreeable pout. Numerous toys lay on a table, but the girl paid no attention to any of them. Her mother entered.

"Why, Ethel," she exclaimed, "that isn't a nice expression for a little girl to have on Christmas morning, especially a little girl who has received as many presents as you have!"

"But, mamma," Ethel said, crossly, "I don't like my presents one bit. My doll is a brunette, and I wanted a blonde; and I don't like my book, I wanted 'Alice's Adventures in Wonderland.'"

"But you haven't read your book yet, Ethel."

"I know it's horrid anyway, and I wanted——"

Just then the door bell rang, and a newsboy threw in a morning paper. He was about to go away, when the Christmas tree caught his eye.

"Oh!" he exclaimed, clasping his hands together, "how beautiful! I wish Ruth could see that."

"Is Ruth your sister?" Ethel's mother asked kindly.

"Yes'm," the boy answered.

"Well, tell her that we shall be pleased to have her come to see the tree."

"She can't, ma'am. She's an invalid, and has to lie all day in bed; but she's always so patient and good."

"Was she pleased with her Christmas presents?" Mrs. Gray asked, with a glance at Ethel.

"She got only one, but she was so pleased with that. It was an orange, a great big one. I bought it for her, and she says it will make her happy all day."

The disagreeable expression had left Ethel's face. She eagerly whispered something in her mother's ear.

"Yes, dear," her mother replied.

"Where do you live?" Ethel asked addressing the boy.

"In the first house in Brigg street. It isn't a nice place at all. You wouldn't want to go there."

"Anyway, I'm going tonight," Ethel said, with a laugh. "I want to see your sister, and I'm going to play Santa Claus."

That evening a little girl lay on a pallet of straw in the corner of a dreary, bare room. Her mother sat near, a look of interest on her tired, pale face. The newsboy knelt by the bed. The girl's face was aglow with excitement. "Oh, Tom," she exclaimed, "tell me about what the little girl said!"

"She said she was coming to see you, Ruth, and she's going to play Santa Claus. I don't exactly know what she meant by that, but something nice, I'm sure."

A rumble of wheels was heard outside, and a step sounded in the porch. Tom ran to open the door, and Ethel and her mother entered.

Ethel passed over to where Ruth was lying, and, after a few words of greeting, tied the softest of handkerchiefs over her eyes.

"I mustn't take it off," she said, gaily.

Then there were excited whispers, a hurrying back and forth, and shouts of pleasure from Tom.

Soon the handkerchief was removed, and Ruth opened her eyes in fairyland! There stood Ethel's tree, again loaded down with presents. On one of the branches hung the doll that Ethel had despised, but that Ruth thought a marvel of beauty; and under the tree were piled bundles containing warm clothing and groceries.

I haven't time to tell you about the happy evening the little girls spent together, but that night, just before Ruth dropped asleep, she murmured: "This has been the loveliest day I ever had, mamma. I won't care now because I can't run and play like other girls; I have so many, many things to make me happy."

At the same time Ethel, lying in her little white enameled bed, under the daintiest downy coverlets, was saying: "I'll never be so selfish again as I was this morning, and I'm always going to share my presents with some one less favored than I am."

Christmas All the Time.

"It is only for thirty-six hours of the three hundred and sixty-five days that all people remember that they are all brothers and sisters, and those are the hours that we call, therefore, Christmas eve and Christmas day.

"And when they always remember it . . . it will be Christmas all the time."

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Balfour Resigns.

Mr. Balfour has resigned as British Prime Minister, his resignation has been accepted by the king, and Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman has been entrusted with the task of heading a new cabinet. This means a transition from a Conservative to a Liberal government. For the past ten years the Conservative party has been continuously in power. In fact, the Liberals have been in control of the government less than three years in the last twenty; namely, the period from 1892 to 1895, when Mr. Gladstone was Prime Minister for two years, followed by Lord Rosebery for a few months. A that time the Liberal Party went to pieces on the Irish Home Rule question, and from then until now the party has never been able either to command the support of the Irish nationalists, in a sense its natural allies, or successfully to dispense with it. The new Premier appears to believe that he can solve the problem by outlining a program about which all the elements of the party will heartily unite. It will be a great achievement if he can do so, and will prove his possession of a higher degree of statesmanship than he has hitherto been credited with, even by his friends.

The protective tariff plan, advocated by Mr. Chamberlain and countenanced in a measure by Mr. Balfour, has been as embarrassing and divisive to the Conservatives as the Home Rule program was to the Liberals. Mr Balfour's administration, and more particularly his utterances on public questions, have marked him as subtle rather than stalwart. Whether he is temperamentally undecided or only discreetly evasive, he has produced upon a large part of his public the impression of being on both sides of the issues of present importance. In particular, his attitude toward the Chamberlain protective idea, too favorable to suit its opponents (who are numerous even in Conservative ranks) and too uncordial to please its advocates, has heated his enemies, cooled his friends and done its share toward depriving the party of popular support. Recent elections have been going rather constantly in favor of the Liberals. The new cabinet, formed and headed by Campbell-Bannerman, will contain at least two men whose names and works are familiar to all Americans, John Morley and James Bryce, two of the finest examples of the scholar and litterateur in politics. The name of Lord Rosebery is missing from the roll of the new cabinet. This brilliant figure in British politics, having attained the objects of his earthly ambition, seems to rest on his honors.

Mark Twain at Seventy.

Mark Twain's seventieth birthday was celebrated in New York by a dinner party which, as an aggregation of literary notables, has not often been surpassed. Most of the people who write good books were there, besides a number who write only fairly good books and several who only write essays about other people's books. Mark Twain himself made a speech, explaining his philosophy of life and telling "how to get to be seventy and not mind it." It is hard to believe that he is only seventy. Not that he acts old, for of course he is perennially young in spirit; but he is an institution, established, indispensable, inwrought in the fabric of the Republic. He seems like a natural, essential and everlasting part of American civilization—like the constitution, trial by jury and the writ of habeus corpus. And now we find that this institution of merriment and joy is only seventy years old—and of course still younger as an institution. A few times in recent years Mark Twain has been serious, and therefore absurd. His discussion of the missionary question shortly after the Boxer outbreak in China was pathetic in its futility, and his excursions into politics and against Christian Science have not exhibited him at his best. He does not shine in argument. But these indiscretions of age are not to be held against him. The shelf full of immortal humor, wholesome, true and human, that he has given us, and the glowing personality that has gone with it and that still abides with unabated geniality—these are things that we would not willingly do without, and at thought of them we give Mark Twain a grateful greeting as he passes the seventieth year, that "scriptural statute of limitations beyond which the time-worn duty bills are not collectible."

The Treasury Report.

Secretary Shaw's annual report as secretary of the treasury shows a deficit of $23,004,228 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905. This represents the debit balance between receipts of $697,000,000 and expenditures amounting to $720,000,000. The deficit for the preceding year was $41,000,000, and the secretary congratulates himself, therefore, that the deficit shows a decrease. Last year, however, the deficit was excused on the ground that the expenditures included an extraordinary item of $50,000,000 for the Panama canal, which ought not properly to be charged as an item of current expense. But if this plea was valid last year to prove that there was no real deficit in current expenses—and we think it was, in part at least—it must also be borne in mind when we are comparing the relative economy (or extravagance) of the government for the two years. There has been a total deficit of $64,000,000 for the two years. Counting out the canal payment, the deficit would be reduced to $14,000,000 which would be the resultant of a credit balance of $9,000,000 for 1903-4 and a debit balance of $23,000,000 for 1904-5. In other words, disregarding the canal payment, the expenses of government for the past fiscal year are greater by $32,000,000 than for the preceding year. The President is very obviously right when he says, in his message, that there must be either an increase in receipts or a decrease in expenditures. It is almost equally obvious that the latter alternative ought to be chosen and that it will be entirely possible to acomplish it, if the problem is intelligently and honestly approached, without committing any of those false and expensive economies against which we are so frequently warned.

Elastic Currency.

The old but still urgent problem of introducing a large element of elasticity into our monetary system, claims a share of Secretary Shaw's attention in his report. The volume of money needed to transact the country's business is much greater at certain seasons than at others. In the dull summer months, when business is at low ebb, it is difficult to keep all the money busy, even when it is offered at preposterously low rates of interest. In livelier seasons, notably in the fall, there is usually not enough money to supply the wants of those who need it in their business and who have credit or commodities to exchange for it. In consequence, interest rates are subject to wide and demoralizing fluctuations. The secretary gives the limits of this fluctuation during the past year as one per cent and twenty-five per cent. Probably few of us (except those of us who are life insurance presidents and are therefore in a position to return the favor) have borrowed as cheaply as this minimum, and not many of us (except those who patronize the genial firms which advertise to lend money to salaried people without security or publicity, to be repaid by the week) have paid the maximum. To prevent this alternate shortage and surplus of currency, Mr. Shaw suggests that national banks be permitted "to issue a volume of additional government guaranteed currency equal in amount to fifty per cent of the bond-secured currency maintained by them, but subject to a tax of five or six per cent until redeemed by the deposit of a like amount in the treasury." The chief virtue claimed for this new plan is that it will be completely automatic in its operation. It will not pay the banks to issue such additional currency until the current interest rate becomes higher than the rate of taxation which must be paid on the currency. When interest rates, for call money go as high as eight or ten per cent the banks issue the extra currency; the increase in the volume of currency will reduce interest rate to normal, and as soon as the rate falls below five or six per cent the additional currency will be withdrawn because it will no longer be worth what it costs the issuing bank to maintain it. The government would obviously assume a risk in guaranteeing currency which is not secured by bonds, but the secretary claims that the tax would much more than offset this.

The Tax on Works of Art.

There is a strong sentiment in favor of the removal of the duty on works of art which are imported into this country. The argument is, that works of art are educative in their influence and that their importation ought to be encouraged rather than hindered. The question of the protection of American artists from foreign competition does not enter, for the artists are anxious for all the competition they can get, realizing that the general artistic advancement of the country will be assisted by the bringing in of foreign pictures, and that their own business will be helped thereby. The tariff on works of art is purely for revenue. Secretary Shaw favors it. He recently recounted triumphantly how a certain lady paid $194,000 on one consignment of pictures which she brought over. That was a tidy sum for the public treasury, especially when there is a deficit of twenty-three millions for the past year. Doubtless the lady is able to pay it and since she actually did pay it and brought the pictures into the country, the art interests did not suffer by the collection of the duty except as it may deter others from importing pictures. Some of those who favor the removal of the duty talk very bitterly about the injustice of "punishing" people for importing works of art. The phrase is not well chosen. A tax is not a punishment. The state does not wish to punish a man for owning his home, but it taxes him on it. It has no desire to punish a man for possessing a library, but the valuation of a library goes down on the assessor's list. It is absurd to speak of taxation as a punishment; it is only the just distribution of the necessary burden of supporting the government. It is commonly accepted as good policy to exempt from taxation property which is used solely for the public good. So churches and colleges are exempt (though the former perhaps ought not to be, since some of them do not advance the public welfare), and no import duty is charged upon works of art for public galleries or scientific apparatus for institutions. It is scarcely possible to make a rigid distinction between those articles which advance the interests of culture and education and those which serve baser ends, and to say that the former shall be duty free. All beautiful objects of use and ornament, all articles which embody ideas or ideals, have an educational value. Musical instruments and good books and honest furniture and Oriental rugs and a thousand other things are instruments of culture. The difference between these things and pictures as educators is rather of degree than of kind. With really great pictures the degree is vast; with light and frivolous pictures it is inconsiderable; in the case of poorly painted or viciously conceived pictures, the advantage is on the side of furniture and rugs. So the case is not so one-sided as it would seem when our artistic friends declaim against the folly of "punishing" a person for bringing a Titian or a Raphael into this country. But when all the argument is summed up, we think they have a good case and hope they will win it. Let the pictures come in free, even if many other elevating things can not. More rich men are generous about their pictures than about any other item of property. Many of them permit the public to visit their private galleries, and most of the really great pictures sooner or later gravitate to the great public collection, by loan or gift.

The President's Message.

The message of President Roosevelt to the Congress of the United States on its recent assembling is generally regarded as an able state document, fulfilling in an admirable manner the constitutional requirement that the President shall set before Congress the condition of the country and indicate needed legislation. It is a long message, but it is impossible to present in a satisfactory way the various departments of this government and indicate the needed legislation in a very brief message. As was expected, the President gives considerable attention to the revision of Interstate Commerce Regulation. The President's policy concerning railroad rate regulation is to empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the maximum rate for railroad charges and see that no unjust discrimination is practiced, and that the system of rebates be abolished. Of course the courts have the authority to overrule any regulation of this kind, on complaint of the railroads, which is found to be unjust or unconstitutional. It is not improbable that there will be considerable contest on this question of railroad rate regulation, and the alignment for and against the President's plan of regulation is not likely to be on party lines. The message calls attention to the danger of corporate dishonesty and the danger to our social and political institutions through the commercial dominance of unscrupulous and unprincipled men. It exalts economy in public administration, but warns against that "false economy which is in the end the worse extravagance." It urges the protection of the children from the injurious effects of child-labor, and advocates the admission of Arizona and New Mexico as a new state in the Union, and Oklahoma and Indian Territory as another addition to the sisterhood of states. The President sums up his view of the immigration question in the statement, "We can not have too much immigration of the right sort, and should have none whatever of the wrong sort." Urging the importance of loyalty to the principles of our constitutional liberty, the President quotes that famous statement of Burke: "Society cannot exist unless a controlling power upon will and appetite be placed somewhere, and the less of it there be within, the more there must be without. It is ordained in the eternal constitution of things that men of intemperate minds can not be free. Their passions forge their fetters."

The President on Temperance.

The Associated Prohibition Press says of the President's message that the significant fact is that this message gives more space to the liquor question than any other message of any President since the foundation of the Republic.

In two trenchant paragraphs the President sizes up the dangers now threatening the Indian exposed to drink, and advises speedy congressional action in his behalf. In this connection the message speaks as follows:

THE INDIAN'S PERIL.

"During the year just past the phase of the Indian question which has been most sharply brought to public attention is the larger legal significance of the Indian's induction into citizenship. This has made itself manifest not only in a great access of litigation, in which the citizen Indian figures as a party defendant, and in a more widespread disposition to levy local taxation upon his personality, but in a decision of the United States Supreme Court, which struck away the main prop on which has hitherto rested the government's benevolent effort to protect him against the evils of intemperance. The court holds in effect that when an Indian becomes by virtue of an allotment of land to him a citizen of the state in which his land is situated, he passes from under federal control in such matters as this, and the acts of the congress prohibiting the sale or gift to him of intoxicants become substantially inoperative.

"It is gratifying to note that the states and municipalities of the west which have most at stake in the welfare of the Indian are taking up this subject and are trying to supply, in a measure at least, the abdication of its trusteeship forced upon the federal government. Nevertheless, I would urgently press upon the attention of the congress the question whether some amendment of the internal revenue laws might not be of aid in prosecuting those malefactors known in the Indian country as 'bootleggers,' who are engaged at once in defrauding the United States Treasury of taxes and, what is far more important, in debauching the Indian by carrying liquors illicitly into territory still completely under federal jurisdiction."

The Pope has ordered the removal of a tablet which was erected to mark the exact spot in Rome where St. Peter was crucified, and the tablet is not to be replaced "until historical investigation has absolutely proved that the claim is true." The dispatch naively adds: "This will probably take much time." So it will. It is a most reckless and unfeeling requirement for the Pope to make. A general application of the rule would play havoc with the holy places generally.

Senator John H. Mitchell, of Oregon, died last week. He was at the time under conviction, pending appeal, for defrauding the government in a matter involving public lands. The Senate omitted the customary formality of adjourning for a day out of respect to the deceased. When a senator dies, it is customary for a Representative from the same state to announce the fact to the House. This ceremony was also dispensed with, owing to the fact that one of the two Representatives from Oregon is under indictment for a similar crime, while the other has already been convicted.

Ministerial Relief Day.

One of the blessed ministries which has sprung up among us out of the very heart of our Christian love is that of ministering to the needs of our aged and dependent ministers. No class of people make a stronger appeal to our Christian benevolence than these aged veterans of the Cross who have spent the strength and vigor of their manhood in preaching the Gospel, often without earthly reward and to the neglect of their material welfare. Now, in the winter of old age, unable longer to continue their active labors in the ministry, they sit by firesides made cheerful by the loving remembrances of their brethren, or cheerless because of the neglect of their brethren, and dream of the days that are gone, when they were in the thick of the battle in behalf of New Testament Christianity. Whether their humble homes shall be radiant by the tender remembrances of their brethren, or whether their hearts are to be chilled by the thought that they are forgotten, will be determined very largely by the offerings made by our churches on Lord's day, December 17. We are sure we can rely upon the readers of The Christian-Evangelist everywhere to participate at that time in this ministry of love, and thus make their own Christmas happier by the knowledge that they have helped to lighten the burden and gladden the hearts of our aged and dependent ministers and their families.

Planning Large Things.

We have entered upon the last four years of our Centennial campaign. In the four years that have passed, as we have previously indicated, great progress has been made all along the lines of our work. But the San Francisco convention planned for a more aggressive campaign for the remaining four years by authorizing the committee to select a representative man who should devote his entire time to this work. Such a man has been selected and he has accepted the work with the understanding that we are to undertake large things and are to furnish him the necessary funds for a vigorous propaganda.

In addition to this a local committee at Pittsburg was appointed to co-operate with the original Centennial committee, and this local committee has been made an executive committee to have immediate charge of the work.

It was believed by the committee having the matter in charge that the event we are to celebrate is worthy of great achievements and that we ought to plan large things. We are old enough, large enough, rich enough, and, we trust, enterprising enough, to plan largely and to execute vigorously. We have asked all our colleges to set as high a figure as possible for their respective endowments for the year 1909. Our various missionary organizations are also lifting up their banners and writing upon them the objective points which they hope to reach by that time. The evangelistic bureau is planning a vigorous campaign in the way of simultaneous evangelistic movements for the conversion of sinners and the edification of our churches. Church buildings are to be erected, church debts paid, the circulation of our religious papers extended, and the attendance upon our Sunday schools greatly enlarged.

It is a superficial objection to this program to say that it gives too much prominence to the financial side of our Centennial propaganda. What does college endowment mean? It means a better educated ministry and a better educated membership, and that is a spiritual and not a financial result. What does the doubling up of our contributions to home and foreign missions mean, but the putting of more evangelists into the field at home and abroad and the conversion of more sinners? That is a spiritual and not a financial result. What does the increase in our gifts to benevolence mean? It means proper care for the widow and the orphan and of our aged ministers—the fruit of our Christian love and therefore a spiritual and not a financial result. This is the end indeed of every direct object that it is proposed to accomplish by this Centennial movement.

What we were saying, then, is, since this is a good work and is done in memory of a great event, let us do it on a large scale. If we would reap bountifully we must sow bountifully. If we would accomplish large results we must plan large things. This the Centennial Committee is trying to do. It asks the earnest co-operation of all our missionary, benevolent, and educational enterprises, of all our preachers and church officers and of all our business men. We desire to make this Centennial movement as broad as the whole brotherhood, and to enlist and quicken every agency among us and thus make it glorify our divine Lord and promote the unity of his people. We have a right, therefore, we think, to expect the hearty co-operation of all who love our Savior and who appreciate the movement we are making to restore his simple, pure Christianity to the world.

Allies Against Common Foes.

A great change has come over the religious world even within the past quarter of a century. The spirit of pugilism is dying out as between the different religious bodies, and the spirit of brotherhood and of good will is taking its place. The recent Inter-Church Conference in New York City marked the close of what might be called the period of internal strife in this country, among religious people owning a common Lord and worshiping a common Father. The spirit that prevailed in that Conference among the representatives of various religious bodies will largely prevail among the churches everywhere. That is one of the good results that will surely flow from that great gathering.

This does not mean that the period of investigation and of fraternal discussion is passed. It means simply that we shall henceforth treat each other as brethren and seek, in the spirit of real brotherhood, to correct each other's faults and to bring each other nearer to what we each believe to be the Scriptural standard of faith and practice. That is not warfare, and it will henceforth not be carried on in any spirit of strife or personal bitterness. It is too late in the world's history for that. No one who caught the vision in New York City, of unity and brotherly love in Christ Jesus, can ever go back to his field of labor and wage a narrow, sectarian war against a neighboring church. This would be like turning a river up stream. It would be like putting an oak back into an acorn or a chicken into its shell.

Just as in war, when the regular armies have laid down their arms against each other, bushwackers and guerrillas contine the fight on their own responsibility, so now there will no doubt be something of the old style of warfare, here and there, in remote sections away from the railroads, and the path of the home missionary, until they learn that the war is ended as between Christian bodies, and that they should now make common cause against common enemies. Now, this new spirit of brotherhood is going to make it far easier for us to teach each other what each one knows better than another, and it is going to be a period of assimilation to each other and to the common standard of Christianity, even Jesus Christ, the recognized Leader of all. In the atmosphere of mutual love we can sit at each other's feet and each learn of the other those things which we are able to teach each other. Moreover, it is the atmosphere in which we can all come anew to sit at the feet of Christ and learn of him, imbibing his spirit, learning more fully his will and coming into closer touch with him and hence with each other. This is the way, it would seem, that God is going to unite his people.

This new era of peace between those owning allegiance to a common Lord will be marked as a period of new aggressiveness and of more vigorous warfare against the evils which threaten our Christian civilization and hinder the progress of the kingdom of God on earth. The church will now become more militant than ever, only its warfare will now be directed, not against the friends of the Master, but against his enemies, and especially against those gigantic evils which produce so much sorrow and suffering. It will also be marked as a period of greater activity and of more systematic and united effort on the part of Christians to evangelize the world and to fill the whole earth with the knowledge of Jesus Christ.

It will be glorious to be living in an age when the forces of righteousness are united in a life-and-death struggle with the forces of evil, and when Christians, hearing only the voice of Christ, shall keep step to the music of the Cross, as they march forward, a united army, to make the kingdoms of this world the one universal kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

President McGarvey's Criticisms.

Our higher critic, Brother McGarvey, continues his criticisms of the Editor's recent book on "The Holy Spirit." We have not been able to keep up with him on account of the pressure of other matters. It would be a large task to reply to all the flaws in our brother's criticisms. This we shall not attempt. An illustration of his tendency to draw unwarranted inferences is furnished in the following excerpt from one of his recent articles:

> "He speaks of just having read Dr. Richardson's book on the Holy Spirit, in which the Doctor takes substantially the same position with himself in regard to Samaritans (p. 161). I read this book when it was first published and corresponded with its author on the subject, more than forty years ago; and if I am not mistaken, Brother Garrison was then down South fighting the Confederates. I am glad they did not kill him, for then I would have missed the opportunity of teaching him the way of the Lord more perfectly. It would be nearer the truth to say I have not sense enough to understand the subject than to say that I have not very thoroughly studied it, but it will be soon enough for him to say either when we get through with this discussion."

Now, as a matter of fact, Dr. Richardson's work on the Holy Spirit has been in our library for more than a quarter of a century, and was read by us fully that long ago. In the passage to which he refers we spoke of just having observed, since a certain paragraph was written, that Dr. Richardson's position was substantially the same, having, of course, re-examined the work on that particular point.

Brother McGarvey knows his own motive in referring to our having been "down south fighting the Confederates" at the time of the publication of Dr. Richardson's book. We do not judge him. Since President McKinley and President Roosevelt have expressed the general sentiment of the old Union soldiers, in their words of praise and appreciation of the Confederate soldiers because of their heroism and devotion to what they believed to be their duty, is it too much to ask that the grizzled veterans who wore the blue and followed the Stars and Stripes in those dark days of 1861-64, should be forgiven for saving the union? It is comforting, of course, to know that Brother McGarvey is "glad that the Confederates did not kill" the author of the book he is criticising, even though he does not ground his gladness in anything that the author is, or has accomplished, but rather in the opportunity that his living has afforded our critic for his congenial task of criticism! Let no one think that we feel the slightest unkindness toward Brother McGarvey for the remarks above quoted. They do him far greater injustice than they do us.

Another criticism of President McGarvey raises a psychological or metaphysical question which we aimed to avoid entirely in the book which he is criticising. He says:

> "When Bro. G. speaks of receiving the Holy Spirit in such measure as to be distinctly conscious of it, he drops back into the superstitions of a past age. Consciousness testifies to states of mind and feeling, but not to the power producing these. It testifies to the existence of those emotions which Paul calls the fruits of the Spirit, but that they are caused by the Spirit is a matter of faith and not of consciousness. No man is conscious of the Spirit's indwelling. If it were a matter of consciousness, all in whom the Spirit dwells would be conscious of the fact and none would be found to deny it. We do not even know by consciousness that we have a human spirit within.
> "One serious fault with Bro. Garrison, manifested in several parts of his book, is an improper use of the word 'consciousness.' For example on page 93 he says, 'We come into consciousness of the sonship of God,' and twice in the same paragraph he speaks of this as a 'conscious relationship.' This is a matter, not of consciousness, but of faith."

Now, we are well aware of what has been said, pro and con, about what consciousness testifies to in relation to the Holy Spirit. It would be quite possible for Brother McGarvey and ourself to write columns of matter on a question of this kind without giving any light to any one who was seeking to possess the Spirit. We only care to say here that Brother McGarvey's position as to the scope of consciousness is not the only one held by psychologists, nor do we think it is the correct one. When he says, "We do not even know by consciousness that we have a human spirit within," he takes issue with such thinkers as Descartes, who said, "I think; therefore I am." We believe it perfectly proper to say, as we have said in the paragraph Brother McGarvey criticises, that "We come into consciousness of the sonship of God," that is, of our own sonship through the Spirit dwelling in us. Jesus certainly lived in the consciousness of his sonship.

There is a limited meaning to the term consciousnes in which, of course, what Brother McGarvey says concerning its function is true, but it is not always used in this limited sense, and the best metaphysicians are not agreed that it should be so limited. It is in a broader and more popular sense that we have used the word in the few instances referred to, and we purposely sought to avoid raising a metaphysical issue in the book. What we are most concerned about is, that we may possess the Holy Spirit, and that we may know that fact of a surety, by the help which he gives us and by the fruit which he bears in our lives. This being granted we are willing to waive the metaphysical aspects of the question which, while interesting enough from a psychological point of view, are not to be compared in importance with the vital fact of receiving and being guided by the Spirit.

"This [knowledge of our sonship] is a matter," says Brother McGarvey, "not of consciousness, but of faith." But is there not such a thing as Christian consciousness that is born of faith? The power of the mind that takes cognizance of its own states and actions, and which we call consciousness, is bound to cognize the new affections and emotions which the new life imparted by faith introduces into the soul. It is greatly enriched and Christianized by this new life of faith, which it comes to know as the life of God, through the intuitive power of the soul, by which it apprehends the divine. "My sheep hear my voice and follow me." We regard this intuitive power as closely related to faith. Apart from this power to recognize truth, faith itself would be impossible. No amount of external testimony would suffice to establish in us the certain conviction that we are children of God, apart from the soul's capacity for God, and its conscious peace when it receives God.

Notes and Comments.

A "commission on aggressive evangelism," recently appointed by the Methodist church, has just held an important and inspiring session in Brooklyn in connection with the general missionary meeting. It was announced that a lay member of the church had deposited $10,000 in the bank to provide for a distinct and general advance in the work of the commission in arousing the church to soul-saving. This gift is to be followed by other annual gifts, and provision will be made in the donor's will for prosecuting the work after his death. "The Central Christian Advocate" regrets that the "appointment of a field secretary, who is to fly among the churches as the flaming torch of this movement, is not to be made public at this time." Undoubtedly this is a mistake, if the man has been secured and the money is in hand to prosecute the work. But the fact that one individual has been selected to give his entire attention to the work of evangelism shows that other churches than our own are awakening to the importance of specialists.

* * *

British Methodism and the Christian church at large loses a devoted worker in the death of Thomas Champness, who was really one of the great leaders of the Christian forces. Mr. Champness has had a long and useful career, and he may be called a unique character. Beginning his Christian effort as a missionary worker without college training, in one of the hard places of Africa, he buried his wife there and returned to the homeland, broken in health and seemingly doomed to die. But he was not a man who easily gave up. Entering upon the evangelistic field, he developed extraordinary gifts. He was one of the pioneers in producing a religious journalism that would reach the great masses of the people. It was when he was about sixty years of age that he conceived the idea that a paper full of evangelistic fire and put out at the price of one cent per copy would be popular. Starting without any great financial backing, he made a success of "Joyful News," and in connection with it organized a home for evangelistic workers, evolving a far-reaching plan for their employment. Like George Muller, he was a man who believed in direct answer to prayer, and for the work he thus began he received nearly one million dollars, which he used at home and abroad in missionary enterprises. Mr. Champness' independence was also seen in his powerful antagonism to the liquor traffic at a time when a very large number of the members of the Methodist church were not only indulging in the drinking habit, but were financially interested in it. He was a great-hearted man.

Editor's Easy Chair.

It is Byron who sings of how sweet it is to hear "the watch-dog's honest bark" as he bays a "deep-mouthed welcome home." But there is something sweeter far than that to the home-coming weary man at the close of a toilsome day. To hear the patter of little feet rushing through the hall, and the cheery sound of a childish voice crying, "First kiss!" and to feel the pressure of little arms around one's neck—that is a welcome which no "watch-dog's honest bark" can equal. Who can tell how many feet are homeward turned at the close of day, that might otherwise be turned in other directions, but for the welcome of loved ones which they know awaits them on their home-coming? Sweeter spot on earth there is not than a home where love abides and extends its warm welcome and greeting to the return of absent ones. Blessed is the man at whose return home at eventide there is a race for the "first kiss," in which the wee toddler always wins. Whether it be child, grandchild, or other loved one, there is in it a suggestion of what Peter means by the "abundant entrance," which shall be administered to us in the heavenly kingdom. Will there be any one there at the beautiful gate to give us a glad welcome and a "first kiss," when we get home from earth's weary pilgrimage? Heaven would not be heaven to us if there were no one there to be the gladder for our coming. No doubt our warmest welcome to the heavenly home will come from those who have done most to help us on our way thither, and from those whom we, under God, have rescued from the power of sin and pointed the way to the Father's house.

Speaking of the home, we are glad to note the increasing importance which it is coming to have in the thought of the great religious and educational leaders of our time. Perhaps there is no country in the world that has been more greatly blessed by its home life than our own. As compared with many other nations, the United States may be called a nation of homes. And yet there is great reason to fear that there is a decay in the home-life of America. There are influences at work in our civilization which are tending to destroy the sanctity of the home, with its sweet seclusion from the glare of publicity and its altar-fires whereon were once offered the fragrant incense of love and gratitude to Him who is the Father of all the families of the earth. It would be a sad day for the people of this nation, should it ever come, when they can not look back with sweet and tender memories to the purity and sanctity of the old home, and recall its lessons of purity and devotion. The church and the state alike are dependent on the home for their staunchest defenders, and noblest representatives. To throw every possible safe-guard around the home, to rekindle on its altars the fires of family love and of worship and reverence to God, should be the unceasing effort of all who love God and their fellow men It is the noblest school, wherein are taught the noblest lessons, relating to the most vital things, at the most impressionable age, where the teachers and the taught are bound together by the strongest ties. Whoso has access to a child-heart to sow therein the seeds of truth and virtue is at the very source of influences which make for the world's betterment. He is at the fountain whence must flow the life-giving streams for the regeneration of society.

* * *

One of the best ways to make a happy home is to supply it with an abundance of good, pure literature. Among other questions which the Editor is often asked to answer at this season of the year is, What is a good Christmas present to make to a husband or wife or son or daughter or friend? Now, we are not going to be too modest to suggest that, in our judgment, The Christian-Evangelist would be a most appropriate gift to make to any one who is not receiving it. One of the desirable qualities of a Christmas present is that it shall be a perpetual reminder to the recipient of the love and friendship of the donor. Send The Christian-Evangelist for a year to your absent son, or daughter, or relative, or friend, and it will remind them at least fifty-two times in the year of your thoughtful love and generosity. But more than that, it may revolutionize the thought and life of the young man or woman, and make you their eternal benefactor. One of our ablest, most scholarly and useful men told the Editor recently that The Christian-Evangelist, put into his hands as a present for six months, had changed the whole current of his thought and life, and made him, under God, what he is to-day. If we were to call for similar testimony from others we doubt not that hundreds would testify in the same way. Why not, then, make a present like that, that is not a cold dead thing, but a warm, loving, weekly messenger that has in it the seeds of a harvest yet to be—a living and vitalizing force for molding and enriching life? Do you know of an investment that is likely to bring more permanent and gracious results than a dollar and a half invested in The Christian-Evangelist, as a Christmas present to one in whose welfare you are deeply concerned? If our Easy Chair readers did not know us so well we might fear they would attribute this advice to a selfish motive, but we are sure that not many of them will believe for a moment that this is the prompting motive of our suggestion. Show us that you do not so believe by sending in a subscription for The Christian-Evangelist for a year as a Christmas present to one whom you love.

And this leads us to say that among other contemplated improvements for the new year is an enlarged and carefully prepared Family Circle or Home Department. It shall be our aim to make it a treasury of good things for young and old in the home. We should be delighted to have a number of brief, half-column articles reminiscent of the old home and of the influences in it which linger yet as an abiding force in the lives of those who write. Perhaps in no other way could we more successfully stir up an interest in the home-life today than by these blessed memories of the homes of our childhood and of the impressions we received there which we have carried with us down through the years. Many a heart will be stirred, and many an eye will glisten, as recollection takes us back to the old parental roof-tree and to our earliest lessons about God and duty and truth and righteousness, which we received from lips which, it may be, have long since turned to dust, but the memory of whom is green in our hearts. It may be too that these backward glances to the homes whence we came and to the influences which helped to mold our characters, will cause us to make our own homes brighter, purer, and more radiant with Christian love. While we are thus discharging a debt of gratitude, too long unpaid, to the noble and unselfish love of parents and other benefactors, we shall be helping ourselves and others to more worthily discharge our obligations to the oncoming generation. To live forever, not only in heaven, but in the lives of others made stronger and purer by our teaching and example—that is the noblest ambition which any mortal can cherish.

The Easy Chair has just had a very flying trip down into the southwestern part of the state. Leaving the railroad at Aurora we had a carriage ride of fifteen miles across the country on one of the severest days of the winter. Being near Crane, in Stone county, on Lord's day morning we attended church where the Presbyterian minister was to preach at 11 o'clock. On our arrival he insisted on our preaching to the congregation, which we did, discussing the subject of Christian union before an audience made up about equally of Presbyterians, our own members and non-church members. Since the building of the new road from Aurora through Crane to Galena the little town of Crane has taken on new life, and with the building of another road now under way which is to connect it direct with Springfield, it is destined to be a town of considerable importance. It is in the midst of a good fruit-growing region, and the presence of abundance of water and timber ought to make it a good manufacturing town. The Christian church there has a good building, but no regular preaching. The churches at Marionville and Crane could easily co-operate in sustaining a good minister. In the afternoon of Lord's day we drove back to the railroad at Aurora, and preached at night to a large audience Bro. George E. Prewitt is the pastor of this church, having recently entered upon the work there, and we had a very pleasant visit with his family, and renewed acquaintance with many of the members whom we had met on previous visits. Brother Prewitt is a native-born Missourian, who was educated in Lexington, Ky., and has made a good record as a preacher in his native state. The church at Aurora seems to be prospering under his care The mining interest has made this an important town and the church there has an increasing field and a wide door of opportunity. We trust it may rise to its new responsibilities.

Ministerial Support ❦ What God Hath Ordained[*]

By I. J. Spencer

Having been invited to speak on ministerial relief, I found myself with a message on ministerial support instead. I realize, however, that if there be the proper support there shall be small occasion for relief.

I shall be able, I hope, to present ministerial support, not only as a specific requirement of God, but to show also that it is an ordinance illustrated and confirmed by common human experience and harmonious with the very nature of things. My text is a deliverance of the Holy Spirit through the Apostle Paul and recorded by him in the ninth chapter of First Corinthians—"Even so did the Lord ordain that they that preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

An ordinance of God is simply what God has ordained and established, whether operative in nature or in grace. Science and revelation are two corresponding lamps shining upon the same pathway. God is the heart of nature and nature is the material manifestation of his power and Godhead. Many laws observed in the physical world find in the spiritual their highest fulfillment. Not only in the dawn of creation did the morning stars and the sons of God sing together for joy. They have been singing in harmony ever since. Even in Isaiah's sinful day he saw the Lord high and lifted up and his train not only filled the temple, but the angels from their superior vision sang: "The whole earth is full of his glory." The ordinances of God are sacred and sovereign, whether considered in the natural or spiritual realm, and happy are they who observe and obey them. The man who delights in the Word is like a fruitful and beautiful tree. Not so the disobedient, who is like chaff which the wind driveth away. Godliness is profitable in all things because in harmony with the laws of Omnipotence. God did not ordain cosmos in nature and chaos or caprice in grace. Law is everywhere.

The Word of God that endures is far superior to the bread that perishes. If the Word be so much better than bread and the spirit superior to the flesh, shall the minister of the Word be held in less honor than they who furnish bread? Is the butcher, the baker, the farmer, the statesman, entitled by his services to more honor than the preacher of the gospel, the teacher, shepherd and physician of the soul? Happily the Apostle Paul answers the question: "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in word and teaching." By double honor is meant not honor in word only, but in deed as well; not in theory and sentiment merely, but in practice also. It does not mean one honor in the next world and another in this, but a double honor here and now. Double, among the Hebrews, meant ample and abundant. Joseph's double portion to Benjamin meant enough to express Joseph's love and to satisfy Benjamin's appetite. A double portion means enough provision to make one and his family comfortable. It means a home, along with facilities for education, culture and recreation. It means the removal of the raven of anxiety from its perch above the chamber door and its bill from his heart. If the ordinances of God in nature are inexorable and men must needs obey them much more must we know and heed the laws of the spiritual realm, or fall into dire disaster.

I characterize the ninth chapter of First Corinthians as the key to the problem of ministerial support, as the greatest chapter in the Bible and the greatest treatise in the world on the subject. It is ordained that the gospel shall be preached in all nations and to every creature, and that whosoever believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but even the great commission waits upon the support of the Christian ministry, for, says the Holy Spirit: "How shall they preach except they be sent?" If, as one of the missionary secretaries said, "the two wings of the bird are home and foreign missions," then the bird itself is ministerial support that sustains them and without which the wings would neither flap nor fly.

The character of all Christians, the rank and file of all church members, should be redolent and effulgent with the glory of God truly. But, fundamental and under all, the preaching must be right also. It is necessary to preach the truth as well as to practice it.

The pioneer preachers did grandly. They blazed the way. They laid foundations. They set us radiant examples. They preached in dwellings, school houses and forests. They went forth as true knights like Sirs Galahad and Percival to oppose error and sin to recover the Holy Grail of a primitive and perfect gospel.

> "They were men of present valor, stalwart old iconoclasts, > Unconvinced by creeds or bigots that all virtue was the past's."

But they had their limitations in education and in vision. Yet they saw much and did well, and we, entering into their labors, have been able to do more, yet both they and we have failed to appreciate the ordinance of God: "That even so the Lord hath ordained that they who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel." They failed to discover, in the commendable self-abnegation and effacement, that adequate ministerial maintenance is as much an obligatory ordinance as gravitation or crystallization in nature or as Christian baptism and the Lord's supper in the kingdom of God.

Some of the pioneer preachers believed it was their duty not to receive remuneration from churches for services rendered and handed back donations as though to keep them were a sin, an exhibition of the spirit of the mercenary and the hireling. Such ignorance was as disastrous as it was pathetic.

I charge all ministers and their families not to be covetous, but to endure hardness as good soldiers, and even to glory in the Cross. I urge them not to backslide into other associations, but to teach the churches that their Lord is well pleased when they fully sustain his embassadors and keep them from the necessity of entangling themselves in the affairs of secular business. Preachers should avoid speculation in oil and timber, coal, copper or gold mines, cocoanut camps or even in rubber plantations, however elastic their own consciences. Churches should not tempt their faithful ministers to leave the ministry for any of these things.

The Scriptures declare that "they who plow should plow in hope." It is wrong for him who puts his hand to the plow to look back, but is it forbidden that he shall look forward in expectation of receiving his just wages? Is it wrong for the merchant who brings his goods from afar to think of the reasonable profits of his sales? Is it wrong for him who builds the house of another to think with hope of the time when he and his own wife and children shall dwell under their own roof-tree and it can be said truly: "He hath provided for his own household"? Is it wrong for the minister who renders the highest services possible to be ever hopeful, knowing that while he is absorbed in preparing a vision for his people to inspire and instruct them his salary will be paid promptly and in amount sufficient to meet his necessities and preserve his reputation for honor?

God hath ordained that those who seek first the kingdom of God shall have their wants supplied; that they who leave all for his sake shall have a hundred fold here and now and in the world to come life everlasting. But men and covetous churches have perverted the right ways of the Lord. David said he had never seen "the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread." But if David had been the president of a modern board of ministerial relief he could not have borne such testimony.

Other reasons of great practical moment might be urged for observing the holy commandment under consideration. I give only a few:

1. When a minister is ill paid he may be forced into debt and his indebtedness may become a scandal and a stone of stumbling.

2. Young men, bright, godly and wholesome, hesitate to enter the gospel ministry when there is so drear a prospect for ample, cheerful and ungrudging maintenance. If God called them to remain unmarried, to found no homes and to provide for no households the case would be different. But if a minister have a household and provide not for its necessities he is worse than an infidel.

3. Another reason is that old age or feebleness is a burden at best and its weight is augumented when the superannuated, without having had any chance to provide for a rainy day, is laid on the shelf or turned out upon the common without provision for himself and family. Shall the ox be fed only while threshing the wheat and when its work is done be muzzled, denied and left to perish? The Lord has ordained that they that thresh shall thresh in hope and it is the duty of the Church to see to it that every faithful minister shall be sustained, pensioned or provided for in one way or another until the curtain falls on this world and rises on the next.

4. Still another reason is that they who preach the gospel simply, clearly, fully and consistently should be rewarded according to their superior qualifications and services. If any people have a purer message, a diviner plea, a fuller gospel than others, they, above all others, should support the men who preach it.

5. One more reason I name in favor of adequate ministerial support is that ministers' children may not be made to stumble. They are most susceptible to the conduct of the churches. If they feel that the churches are generous, considerate and appreciative of their fathers their faith is strengthened and they grow in faith as roses grow in the sunny southland. They know that God has said that they who provide not for their own are worse than unbelievers and if provision be wanting through carelessness, avarice and selfishness on the part of the churches the ministers' children are made to stumble.

But wherein lies the remedy? After all it rests in the hands of the preachers themselves. They must declare the whole counsel of God. Self must be thrust aside and effaced and God's ordinance must be exalted. Even if the preacher be deemed mercenary, when like Paul he is merciful, he must still declare the whole counsel of God. The enemies of Abraham and Isaac stopped up their wells, but those patriarchs opened them again. God intends that his ministers shall dig wells of liberality in the churches.

The Board of Ministerial Relief has one of the most formidable, scriptural, strategic and primary tasks to perform. It must educate and persuade preachers, especially the young ministers, as well as the congregations, that "they who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel," and that this is true whether they are active or disabled. There should be secured speedily a permanent endowment fund for disabled ministers larger than any ever raised for any purpose among the Disciples of Christ. The aged ministers should be told that they may still eat of the Master's bread.

Only let God's will be done in the premises and his ministers shall always plow in hope. The Lord will provide. Only let the Church act as his faithful steward.

Will $25 a Quarter Suffice?

By A. L. Orcutt

President of the Board of Ministerial Relief

We are a great people; great in numbers, influence, wealth, with great preachers, great colleges and universities. We publish great religious papers, and we make the great plea for the union of all the people of God upon the one foundation laid in Zion; but we are not yet great enough as a people to properly support our aged and helpless ministers, who, in the days of their strength, laid the foundations of this greatness. As to why we have failed at this point it may be said, our people do not understand the divine ordinance for ministerial support; and the people are not at fault, but the preachers, who have not properly instructed them on this subject. When our people are taught that the support of the gospel ministry is as much a divine ordinance as baptism and the Lord's supper, we will have stronger churches, a stronger ministry, longer pastorates, and the support of the "old guard" will be reduced to a matter of distributing the funds. This support of the ministry must be emphasized as divinely ordained and therefore as one of the essential features of the "Restoration Movement." There is as much need today of preaching from 1 Cor. 9:14 as from Acts 2:38 or 20:7, and possibly more, for we are lame on the former as we are not on the latter.

There is just as much reason for the preacher's delicacy on the question of baptism as on the question of money. The one is for the sinner, the other is for the saint. Baptism for the remission of sin and money for the support of the ministry are only different parts of the same divine system. And if, like Paul, we "shun not to declare the whole counsel of God," then the Lord's counsel on this question of ministerial support must not be neglected, "for so the Lord hath ordained that those who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel." What statement in the New Testament is clearer, more definite, or needs more emphasis? Pay the preachers; pay them sufficient to live as other people, which is to pay them according to the will of God, and we will have more preachers and better preachers, and therefore, more and better work. Fifty years ago this teaching would have been regarded unsound, if not sacrilegious; but today the preachers as a body, though they may be too timid to speak out, regard this as fundamental to the Christian ministry. And this is not for the ministry only, but for the people as well. Giving is an essential element in the Christian religion. "It is more blessed to give than to receive," and "the Lord loves the cheerful giver," and nothing more fitly represents the individual than his money; and one puts himself into the Lord's work when he puts his money into it.

Now, what every preacher in the brotherhood should unhesitatingly do, on Lord's day, December 17, is to lay the claims of the old preachers upon the hearts of his people, and ask them for a payment on this debt. Let the preacher ask himself how he thinks the old preacher can live on $25 per quarter. Let him try to realize what this means, and then he can put the question to his people in the right way. At least $25,000 ought to result from the observance of Ministerial Relief day, and more than this will come if the preachers will only give their people opportunity. It is the Lord's will that all the people give to this work. Send to Board of Ministerial Relief, 120 S. Market street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Not of Grace But of Debt

By T. A. Abbott

There is a deplorable tendency upon the part of many to look at this blessed work of Ministerial Relief as a charity, that the money we give is a matter of benevolence. The writer heard an appeal for this cause only last year, in which it was put on this very ground by a minister occupying a pulpit in a church that had been established fifty years. That very congregation was planted by one of the "fathers." It owed its very existence to the self-sacrificing labors of one of God's great men, who wrought largely without compensation and died poor in everything save faith and good works. It is now a prosperous church, it has a splendid building, it pays a good salary, its incidental expense account would have seemed a princely salary to the man who planted the congregation and nurtured it in the years of its feeble, infantile life. He was in the strength of his manhood when that church was organized, he gave the best years of his existence in the doing of such work, it was impossible that he should lay by in store against the day of feebleness and age, yet when the appeal was made for the support of such as he in the days of their need it was put on the ground of charity.

Is it true? Are they pensioners upon our bounty? Are they to be to us as the inmates of the poor house? God forbid! Not of grace, but of debt, not of pitiful charity, but of grateful love. When we remember all that these men meant to our movement, when we call to mind that they left the plow, the shop, the store, the home; literally forsook houses and lands, home and fireside, friends and loved ones, in order that this gracious story so old, yet so wonderfully new in all the new light that had just been thrown upon it, might be told; that this plea, the grandest of all, might be presented, it ought never to occur to us that they are pensioners upon our bounty, but that we are simply paying an honest debt when we make offering for them.

But for them we had been in sectarian chains; but for them the greatness of the plea for a return to primitive Christianity and for the fulfillment of the gracious Master's prayer, had never come to us; but for them the sweet music of this simple Gospel story had never wooed our hearts or charmed our souls. And for this when the day of offering dawns we ought to be happy that we have the privilege of paying a small portion of the debt which is so large that we may never discharge in full the obligation. No, no, brother, it is not of grace, but of debt.

A Preacher's Salary---75 Cents

By E. L. Frazier

The old preachers wrought for us. They laid foundations and we are building thereon. They planted vineyards and we eat the fruit thereof. They builded houses and we live in them. Yes, we live in the good houses they built, while they are almost turned out of doors.

Think you, good preacher, living with a church of from three to eight hundred members, with your large, modern, beautiful church house, and your salary paid you every Monday in a bank check for from twenty-five to fifty dollars, or more, that the great, grand, heroic unselfish men who made this possible for you, received such scant pay for their work that they could live only by the industry and frugality of their wives who stayed at home and hoed the corn and potatoes while their husbands went where there were no churches to pay them and planted the churches that are now giving you a generous support? And remember that these men, now too old or feeble to preach, and their wives, too old and feeble to hoe, are needing the common comforts of life.

Don't begin to say, they ought to have had better business tact and laid up something for a rainy day. I tell you there was nothing to lay up. H. R. Pritchard said he preached a year and received seventy-five cents. You say, then why didn't they do something else? Well, if they had where would you be today, and what would we be as a people? With our almost one and one-half millions of people, and missionaries in many fields, and great churches everywhere, and our great plea shaking the world, we are a great people; but this could not be but for that which has made these men poor in this world's goods in their old age. You will be ashamed to meet them and to look them in the face when you see them in the glory land if you do not help them now.

You have two opportunities to help them: First, a gift from your own good salary; and second, an appeal to your congregation for them. Not a cold, formal, short cut-off, but an appeal warm from the heart, and repeated every Lord's day and in every prayer meeting for a month before the time for the offering. Then, when the time comes, tell them of the five, ten, or twenty-five dollars you are putting in the offering.

There is yet another way; see personally your men and women who are living in palaces and tell them of the huts their fathers in this great restoration movement are living in, and urge them to pay the debt they owe these heroes of the faith.

The Holiest Appeal Before the Brotherhood

By T. J. Legg

Our movement has been before the world for only three-quarters of a century. The first generation of ministers and their colaborers have all passed to their reward. But of the second generation there remain among us some who have given their lives to the establishment of the conditions that we now so much enjoy. At best, and under the more favorable conditions of the present, the ministry is not a financial enterprise. The writer gave the earlier years of his life in secular employment and saved something of a competence for old age. But young men of his age entered the ministry in their youth and have nothing of this world's goods laid by for old age. They have not been improvident nor lacking in business tact. Their salaries were small, and the requirements of the service such that, to maintain the dignity of their calling, they had to leave their small salaries upon the fields among the people they served.

But with the preachers of the second generation there was absolutely no opportunity to save. They gave their strength, their brains, their heart power, their domestic pleasures and comforts; they laid all upon the altar of service. "Taking no thought for the morrow," they wrought wonderfully, winning their thousands to Christ and bequeathing to us our present prosperity in numbers, influence, social standing, and unlimited finance. Their wives, many of whom have become their widows, remained at home and kept lonely vigil at the bedsides of loved ones, all day and all night; oh, what angel pen can record the heroic devotion of these saintly mothers in Israel! Now they are old and in need.

Brethren, if every one who has been won to Christ by the message proclaimed by these saintly servants of the Lord, would give a dollar, or five dollars, to the Ministerial Relief Fund, how delightful would be the closing days of these servants of the Lord! Would every member of every church planted or fostered by the sacrifices of these saintly ones, respond "as God has prospered him," what clouds would be blown away, what shadows cleared, what anxieties dispelled from these servants of the Lord in the evening time of life!

The Board of Ministerial Relief is composed of men with both brains and hearts. It has no superior among our general boards. The report at the San Francisco convention showed that it is the most economically managed. Remember Ministerial Relief day. Save up something now for that day. Don't let it be a happen-so gift. Plan it now, yourself, so the angels in heaven will know you meant to do it.

Link Churches, 30; Link Individuals, 27

By living link we do not mean churches or individuals contributing a specified sum once or twice, but we mean those churches or individuals contributing regularly to this work, in whatever amounts, for a period of five consecutive years. This may not be in harmony with the idea of living link churches or individuals as generally advocated, but it is commendable in that it has the idea of "living" in it, and this is the thing of importance. It is this class of "living" contributors that gives stability.

In all 278 churches, 10 Christian Endeavor Societies, and 242 individuals contrbuted to this work last year. These contributors bore the burden of this work, while more than 10,000 churches with their more than a million members failed their Lord in this ordinance.

There were 117 churches and 101 individuals, new contributors last year. This is a splendid beginning for more than 200 living link contributors four years hence. This is what we would call solid business, and this point ought to be reached by thousands of churches and individuals also.

link contributors of a number of individuals and churches who have already made four annual offerings. Some have three and others two to their credit now. It would seem that no inducement would be necessary to encourage either churches or individuals to such faithfulness save the sweet consciousness of an approved fellow-worker with God and his Christ. Send your offering to the Board of Ministerial Relief,

A contribution this year will make living and your prayers to the Father for the support of this work.

A Momentous Ride.

By Mrs. Rosetta B. Hastings.

> 'Twas a preacher that rode, and he rode for the Lord,
> For a house for each church he was leading the van."

Boggess' ride to the strip was a momentous move for our cause. Our societies, by employing Brother Boggess and other evangelists in Oklahoma, in the very beginning, caught Time by the forelock. Today we have eighteen thousand members in Oklahoma, organized into more than three hundred churches. There is no time when people can be so easily reached by new religious influences as when they have just settled in a new country. In the old churches it is hard to reach men with our plea, because they do not like to break loose from their old associations. But in a new country these ties are already sundered. The people all meet on terms of equality, ready to form new friendships, and eager for religious services of any kind. The primitive gospel preached to them under such circumstances is like seed sown in fallow ground, and springs up to a rich harvest.

Contrast this with Arizona, an older territory than Oklahoma, though its rapid settlement began about the same time. Rich in ore, its mines have drawn an energetic population from the east. Its grazing lands are crowded with sheep and cattle. Its mountain streams are fitted for irrigating the valleys. Wherever this has been done, gardens, orchards and homes, rivaling those of the east, fill the fertile valleys. Yet we have only three churches in this whole territory, although we have hundreds, probably thousands, of scattered members.

One of these days we will bemoan our tardiness in coming in to possess this great commonwealth.

If we realized the wonderful opportunities awaiting us in these new states and territories we would deny ourselves of many a luxury, yea, or many a comfort, and pile the money in the coffers of our home board, until they would have evangelists spreading over the great west like a conquering army.

From a Layman's Standpoint

By Samuel B. Capen

The Hon. Samuel B. Capen, LL.D. (Congregational), president of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Boston, Mass., who spoke on "The Outlook from a Layman's Standpoint," said, among other things.

"The two words which express the principles that rule today in the business world are co-operation and economy. Apply these two thoughts to the work of the church. Our sects and denominations have often been sources of rivalry and competition, and they have left the church as a whole weakened and shorn of its power. We have not presented a united front against a common enemy, but have too often fired into one another's camps. But we are moving away from the extreme individualistic ideas of religion, prevalent fifty years ago, and men are now considered in their relations to others. Co-operation through a closer federation is the need of the hour. And then we must carry the same spirit of economy into our church work that we have now in our businesss, and thereby come into harmony with modern ideas. We can no longer go on saving in the business world and wasting in the church. And there are no other words to characterize many of our church methods in the past than these: shameful waste. In one of our large cities recently a gentleman visited three places open for reading rooms and religious services, and all within a few minutes' walk of one another. There were perhaps twenty people in the first, four or five in the other, and less in the third, and this was said to be the usual condition. Here were the expenses for rent, heat, light and janitor service for three halls, when one would have answered every purpose.

"We have not yet begun to measure the power of the church in destroying positive evil and promoting positive good, if only we can thus get together. We are often discouraged, and unnecessarily so, because we are so far apart. This gathering together of these representatives from all these various denominations under one banner ought to give us, before we separate, new enthusiasm to get closer together in our work for the great triumphs which are not far away.

"The time for action has come. Years ago the English war department was considering a change of uniform. The Duke of Wellington, thinking he would get an opinion of an old soldier, asked: 'If you were to fight the battle of Waterloo over again, what kind of a uniform would you like to wear?' Quick as flash came the reply from the scarred veteran: 'General, if I was going to fight it over again, I should want to go in my shirt sleeves!' When the Church of Christ gets all its various army corps together and metaphorically puts on that garb for service, the Devil's kingdom in America will be doomed."

Christ, the Center

By W. H. P. FAUNCE

The Rev. William H. P. Faunce, D.D., LL.D. (Baptist), president of Brown University, Providence, R. I., who spoke on the theme; "Our faith in Christ; Christ, the Center of Christianity," said in part:

"We have a new hymnology, distinctly different from that of a century ago, whose dominant note is

> "'O, Master, let me walk with Thee,
> In lowly paths of service free.'

"This modern feeling for Christ is a return to the primitive attitude which gave peace and victory to the first apostles of the Lord. It is impossible to exaggerate the depth of devotion which Peter, James and John felt toward their Master. The superb faith of the first disciples was not the result of intellectual analysis, however correct, but the result of a moral and spiritual allegiance to Jesus Christ. Future critical processes may conceivably require us to remove from our New Testament many a text; but they can never remove the pattern which runs throughout, the attitude of measureless devotion to the Lord which created the literature, because it created the life out of which the literature grew.

"This unmeasured personal devotion was the sole bond of unity in the early church. That unity was not racial; it was not that of uniform ecclesiastical order; it was not that of a social class; it was not philosophical. It was the unity which came from the soul-transforming experience of Christ, into which they all had come. Out of that experience came, by necessity, their ethics, their theology and their entire world view. The faith in one Lord was the root, not the fruit, of both the creed and the organization of the Christian Church.

"Here is the perpetual place of Christ in Christianity—at the very center. We profess a relation to the Founder of Christianity which is unique in human history, because his relation to God—however the words may stumble and totter in which we declare it—is unique. We do not preach an emasculated Christianity, a mere devitalized residuum of what is common to all the religions of history. We do not expect to make Christianity credible by stripping it of all that challenges our thinking powers, or by reducing it to platitudinous propositions which no man has ever denied. Christianity at its lowest terms is never at its highest power. Jesus of Nazareth is more to us than a Galilean peasant.

"The great conviction that in Christ the mind of God has entered into the life of man, has been the source of incalculable moral energy. It is not so important to be sure that Christ is like God as it is to be possessed of the immovable conviction that God is like Christ. That God is not a Cesar or a Sennacherib; that he is not like some shape of clay or wood or stone, but is like Jesus. This is the renovating idea which has purified and uplifted the moral world, and is still the supreme conception which goes before us in all our endeavors. In Christ we have the supreme and final revelation of the character which is in God, and may be in man."

Must Have the Kind of Food That Nourishes Brain.

"I am a literary man whose nervous energy is a great part of my stock in trade, and ordinarily I have little patience with breakfast foods and the extravagant claims made of them. But I cannot withhold my acknowledgment of the debt that I owe Grape-Nuts food.

"I discovered long ago that the very bulkiness of the ordinary diet was not calculated to give one a clear head, the power of sustained, accurate thinking. I always felt heavy and sluggish in mind as well as body after eating the ordinary meal, which diverted the blood from the brain to the digestive apparatus.

"I tried foods easy of digestion, but found them usually deficient in nutriment. I experimented with many breakfast foods and they, too, proved unsatisfactory, till I reached Grape-Nuts. And then the problem was solved.

"Grape-Nuts agreed with me perfectly from the beginning, satisfying my hunger and supplying the nutriment that so many other prepared foods lack.

"I had not been using it very long before I found that I was turning out an unusual quantity and quality of work. Continued use has demonstrated to my entire satisfaction that Grape-Nuts food contains all the elements needed by the brain and nervous system of the hard working public writer." As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Congress opened under us with the usual scenes. The same people crowded, many of them, to witness the same dull ceremonies. It is a very formal and mechanical sort of thing, but a never-ending delight to certain old habitues of the capital. The Dome and I have looked down on the sight so many times and seen so many of the actors on the stage come and go that we are not materially stirred by the event. The fellows who imagine themselves in the lime light today, and fancy the world looking on and wondering at their greatness, will soon be where those of thirty years ago have gone and the Dome and I will be serenely studying their successors. They will be forgotten and others will sport in the lime light, and strut their brief passage across the same stage. It is less than thirty years, only twenty-two, since I was connected with the house, and there are only three men of that body in sight today: "Uncle Joe" Cannon, the speaker, J. Warren Keifer, the ex-speaker of the forty-seventh, and Mr. Bingham, of Pennsylvania, now "the Father of the House." When I first looked in upon this scene the civil war had just closed, the great "Review" had not long passed up the Avenue; it was in 1866, and Andrew Johnson, who had just been acquitted by one vote, was President. The days of "Reconstruction" were on. Then in 1875, when Grant was in his second administration, and the war of the giants was still raging in the House and Senate. How many of the public men now in sight could even name the cabinets of Johnson and Grant? Some of the big fellows under the Dome when we had "the rough on the throne," were Thad Stevens, Sumner and Logan, Stanton, Butler and Bingham and Boutwell, and the rest. Hot times those were in the White House and at the Capitol. Then the great soldier brought in his circle, and when I climbed the Dome again, ten years later, Fish and Bristow and Don Cameron and Back Chandler, and Robeson and Jewell and Taft, father of the present Secretary of War, were his associates. "They have gone, they have all passed by," and who names them, who remembers them?

But the Dome and I belong to today, and so do these that come and go like ants on the pavement and in the halls and corridors below. Some of them are old enough, gracious knows. There is Edward Everett Hale, in his sacerdotal robe of black, opening the Senate in original phrases and measured tones. He belongs to another age one would know from the color and cut of his hair. And William A. Clark and Chauncey Depew are sufficiently old to remember the Lord's Prayer and repeat it after him. The younger set do not seem to know it and perhaps take it for an original and even heterodox form just introduced by the venerable Unitarian chaplain. Once a Republican member approached me when in the House, and said: "Mr. Power, they say you are a Democrat." "Why?" I asked. "Because, they say, you don't know the Lord's Prayer." Then he told the story of a Republican M. C. and a Democrat M. C. who were talking on the subject of religion and the latter said: "I'll bet you don't even know the Lord's Prayer." "I will bet you," said the first. "Let us hear you repeat it," said the Democrat member. "Certainly. 'Now I lay me down to sleep,'" began the Republican. "Here," said the Democrat, interrupting, "take your money; I didn't suppose you knew it!"

Many faces are missing this winter. From the upper house George Frisbie Hoar, the man of great brain, and independent thought, and classic speech; O. H. Platt, the rugged angular New England Yankee; and Joseph R. Hawley, the soldier and orator and publicist; Matthew Stanley Quay, the suave, mild mannered, slow moving, but shrewd and even cyclonic man who carried the keystone state in his hip-pocket; George Graham Vest, the cavalier, sans peur, sans reproche, the statesman poet. These have passed. And Francis M. Cockrell is among the missing. And Mitchell* and Burton are detained at home on court business; and several others have doffed the toga. Change as they may, however, these men constitute the most august and influential legislative body on the globe.

The House is the show body. It attracts the stranger. "Uncle Joe" is in himself a whole circus with all the side attractions thrown in. Flowers were tabooed by him this session and the old time set pieces sent in by admiring constituents, and big enough to hide the average representative so that the lime light couldn't reach him, were lacking, but the gowns made up for it. The galleries almost equaled the Horse Show for display of millinery. The set pieces were in the seats in the form of sweethearts and wives. There were eighty-one new members in the House. Williams, the Democratic leader, spoke of them as "the kids." Some of the old boys, dearly loving a joke, put Mr. Wharton, of Chicago, up to asking Williams why he used that epithet. The young man did not realize his peril. "The gentleman from Mississippi used an expression in his remarks concerning the 'kids' in the House. I would like to have him explain the expression of kids to the House," said Mr. Wharton awkwardly. The House applauded. "Mr. Speaker," said Mr. Williams instantly and in strident tones, "with that degree of reverence which the personal appearance of my interrogator excites in my mind, I should say that he is, perhaps, the last person in the House who ought to ask that question." Both sides roared. It is safe to say Mr. Wharton has fastened upon himself for all time the title of "Charlie, the Kid." "Helpless as a bird trying to fly in an asphalt lake," is another phrase of Williams alluding to the effect of the rules of the House if such "manacles" were adopted; and when a Republican ventured to ask in what particular the manacles in operation during the last Congress differed from those inspired by the Democrats when in control, Williams retorted: "There is an old saying of the logicians that the poorest thing that pretends to be an argument, and is not, is an 'et tu quoque.'" So things promise at least to be lively in Uncle Joe's aggregation.

There are interesting figures on the floor of the House. Here is J. Warren Keifer, whose return is like that of Rip Van Winkle. He presided over the forty-seventh. He appears always like Hannibal Hamlin of ancient memory, in an old-fashioned evening dress swallowtail, and looks as if he had stepped down out of an old portrait. When my wife was a little girl she was a "rebel" and lived in Fredericksburg, Va. All her people were of the Simon pure southern sentiment. Keifer was brought wounded to her mother's home and cared for kindly. Her mother ministered to a number of Union officers, always saying the Bible taught her to love her enemies,

THE "COFFEE HEART"

It Is as Dangerous as the Tobacco or Whisky Heart.

"Coffee heart" is common to many coffee users and is liable to send the owner to his or her long home if the drug is persisted in. You can run 30 or 40 yards and find out if your heart is troubled. A lady who was once a victim of the "coffee heart" writes from Oregon:

"I have been a habitual user of coffee all my life and have suffered very much in recent years from ailments which I became satisfied were directly due to the poison in the beverage, such as torpid liver and indigestion, which in turn made my complexion blotchy and muddy.

"Then my heart became affected. It would beat most rapidly just after I drank my coffee, and go below normal as the coffee effect wore off. Sometmes my pulse would go as high as 137 beats to the minute. My family were greatly alarmed at my condition and at last mother persuaded me to begin the use of Postum Food Coffee.

"I gave up the old coffee entirely and absolutely, and made Postum my sole table beverage. This was 6 months ago, and all my ills, the indigestion, inactive liver and rickety heart action, have passed away, and my complexion has become clear and natural. The improvement set in very soon after I made the change, just as soon as the coffee poison had time to work out of my system.

"My husband has also been greatly benefited by the use of Postum, and we find that a simple breakfast with Postum, is as satisfying and more strengthening than the old heavier meal we used to have with the other kind of coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

and she would render the service on condition that they would pass it on to some of the boys in grey when opportunity offered. The little girl of ten years often went with her to the wounded officer's room, and when he became speaker of the House, and I became chaplain, the friendly acquaintance of the war time was renewed. There are just a few of these forty-seventh people left. H. H. Bingham, of the first district of Pennsylvania, entered in the forty-sixth and has served continuously. Uncle Joe Cannon came to the forty-third, but skipped one Congress, the fifty-second. W. P. Hepburn belonged to the forty-seventh, as did R. R. Hitt, J. W. Wadsworth, J. H. Ketcham and J. F. C. Talbot. A few of my Congress are in the Senate. Julius C. Burrows, H. D. Money and J. C. S. Blackburn were under my pastoral care; and a half dozen other members of the Senate survive of the forty-seventh. The rest no longer answer to the roll. They are now evermore with the majority.

Our own folks are represented by some new faces. Champ Clark is still here, and Senator Edward Ward Carmack, of Tennessee; and W. H. Graham, our steadfast helper in every good work from Bethany College to Bethany Beach; and our good Hoosier brother, Edgar Dean Crumpacker, of Valparaiso; and that amiable and courageous Buckeye, Amos Richard Webber, of Elyria, whose mother rightly named him after the prophet, and who cries out against the sins of his people very much as did the herdsman of Tekoah, the "dresser of sycamore fruit," who lived among the lions, against the sins of Israel. He is going to introduce a bill for prohibition in the District of Columbia and then look out for a stir among Uncle Joe's animals. Another member, from the sixteenth district of Missouri, Hon. A. P. Murphy, tells me he is going to make the same move, and he is immensely in earnest about it.

We have some other good Disciples in this fifty-ninth Congress. William C. Houston, of Woodbury, Tenn., successor to J. D. Richardson, is always in his place in the house of God as well as in his seat in the House of Representatives. In his brief biography in the Congressional Directory he says of himself he "is a member of the Christian church and lives on a farm." Mounce Gore Butler, of Gainsboro, Tenn., is also one of us, and Ernest M. Pollard, of Nebraska, is another. I have no doubt I shall find others. We have also a number of brothers-in-law, such as James T. Lloyd and John Welborn, of Missouri, James A. Hughes, of West Virginia, Joseph L. Rhinock, of Kentucky, and E. H. Hinshaw, of Nebraska. We should be glad to learn of any Disciples connected with Congress, or spending the winter in Washington in any capacity, and will look them up if our readers will advise us concerning them. As usual the President's message touches every interest save the cause of temperance. Why is it?

Revival of the Teaching Function

By J. H. Hardin

The above words are quoted from the first chapter of George Whitefield Mead's new book, "Modern Methods in Sunday School Work." The author takes the ground that we are now "in the midst of one of the mightiest religious revivals that has ever grasped the world." Not a revival of hysterical excitement and wild emotional upheaval, but a revival (1) of personal service and (2) of the teaching function of the church.

When we consider the things that are being done and planned it begins to appear that Dr. Mead is right. Certainly there is now being felt, as it has not been before in modern times, a desire to restore the office of teaching to the place in the program of the Christian congregation which it occupied in the beginning. Thoughtful minds and hearts throughout Christendom are pondering and praying over this. The thought and prayer now being devoted to this matter will bring about—indeed are now starting—a revolution.

The feature of Christian effort which is destined to be most affected by this revolution is the Sunday school. Here is an institution unrivaled in the good it has accomplished; with a record for effectiveness that forestalls criticism. And yet there is a widespread, if not universal, feeling that radical changes must be made in its ideals and methods if it is to survive, and hold an important place in Christian effort in the future. This feeling finds expression in the deliberations of religious bodies, in books on the subject, in editorials, in sermons and addresses, and in the conversations among earnest Christian men and women. Thus feeling grows stronger every day. That which a little while ago many thought, but feared to whisper, now begins to be spoken aloud in almost every circle. The best of it is that there is a strong determination to face the facts, and to make whatever readjusment they seem to demand. We begin to see what is needed and how to introduce the needed changes. This is even now being done. Like many other revivals, the Christian world is finding that to get on the right basis it is only necessary to go back to the simple arrangement provided by the divine Founder and Head of the church. He appointed the teaching function. To get this matter right we have only to revive the method of the Master, to restore the function of the teacher in the New Testament church. In a measure, the Sunday school has stood for this function; but so inadequately has it carried on its work that it now awakens to the fact that its hold on the respect of the community is precarious, if not entirely lost; and that it must reshape its program or perish. I hope to point out some of the steps necessary for us to take in order to revive the teaching function.

Literature for the Youth.

By George B. Evans

I believe it was Charles Lamb who said a child should be turned loose in pastures of rich literature to browse at liberty. Such freedom, however, presupposes the presence of a liberal library in the home and a discriminating discretion on the part of the child, or else the lamb turned loose soon becomes "a lost sheep."

What authors, then, best lay the foundation for a child's mastery of good literature? If, as lambkins, our youth need shepherding, what writers can best wield the crook, so that the young can truly say, "These being our shepherds, we shall not want"?

I think the literature committee of the National Congress of Mothers is in a better position than any one else to answer this question intelligently. Its members are men and women of recognized authority on children's literature. Then, too, their list is the result of combined efforts for a number of years past.

This committee recommends the following suggestive poems for children under nine: Browning's "Pied Piper of Hamelin," Southey's "Inch-Cape Rock," Longfellow's "Children's Hour," "Bell of Atri," "Legend Beautiful," most of "Hiawatha," Whittier's "In School Days," Bryant's "Robert of Lincoln," Emerson's "Mountain and Squirrel," and Tennyson's lyrics, "The Day Dream," "The Merman," and "Winter."

To older children, from nine to fourteen, this committee recommends the following short, specific poems: Tennyson's "Revenge," "The Vision of Sir Launfal," "The Charge of the Light Brigade," "The Forsaken Merman," by Matthew Arnold, Gray's "Elegy," Bryant's "Thanatopsis," Browning's "How They Brought the Good News from Ghent to Aix," "Ratisbon," "Dog Tray," "The Ancient Mariner," of Coleridge, Scott's "Lochinvar," Byron's "Sennacherib," "Prisoner of Chillon," and "Blenheim," Shelley's "Ode to a Skylark," Whittier's "Snow-Bound" and "Maud Muller" and "Abou Ben Adhem," by Leigh Hunt.

For those above fourteen there opens up a vast field of rich literature. If a taste for the highest class of poetry has been wisely cultivated, the young high school student will revel in Goethe, Homer, Dante, Milton, Browning, Cowper, Wordsworth, Spencer, Browning, Tennyson, Longfellow, Lowell, Whittier and other crowned heads of poesy.

Let us never forget that the same child that delights in fairy tales will likewise be an apt pupil of myth and fable. Let "Alice in Wonderland," "The Arabian Nights," "Gulliver's Travels," "Hans Andersen's Fairy Tales," and Hawthorne's "Wonder Book," pave the way for the Grecian gods, Zeus, Juno, Apollo, Aphrodite, Perseus and Persephone. Hellenistic mythology will be as great a favorite to the young mind as "Æsop's Fables." Olympus will be as choice a spot soon as the jungle with its jolly jingles.

A child can be an attentive listener to Bible stories for the young; should learn early that the Psalms, the Epistles of St. Paul and the Book of Job are the world's masterpieces of literature.

Remember that the great Goethe has well said we ought to see a good picture, hear some good music and read some good poetry every day. If our youths are thrown into such surroundings their environments will be well-nigh ideal.

Big Run, Pa.

Our Budget.

—Ministerial Relief day next Lord's day.

—It ought to be considered a blessed privilege to minister to the needs of those whose debtors we are.

—We give considerable space this week to this holy cause and bespeak a careful perusal of the articles relating thereto.

—Our assistant editor, following the honk of the wild goose, has fled to Texas, where he will attend the Texas Christian lectureship at Denton and luxuriate a few days in Texas sunshine and Texas hospitality, and incidentally will report the lectureship.

—Two wedding notices have just come to hand as we close up this week's paper which will interest our readers: Bro. Vernon Stauffer, pastor of the church at Angola, Ind., at the Christian church parsonage, on Monday evening, December 25, the bride being Miss Laura Emma Hoffman. The other is Bro. Jasper T. Moses, principal of our mission school at Monterey, Mex., Tuesday evening, December 26, to Miss Katherine Elliott, of Newcastle, Ind. Our hearty congratulations to both these happy couples.

—The new Christian church building at Mexico, Mo., is to be dedicated on next Lord's day, December 17. Brother Rains will preach in the morning. There will be an afternoon communion service, and the dedication address will be delivered in the evening by the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist. A fine program has been arranged and the preaching will be continued for several evenings during the following week by different brethren.

—Bro. T. N. Kincaid, Hot Springs, writes that the espousal of the cause of the new church lot in that city by The Christian-Evangelist has greatly stimulated the members there, and he says they are going to try to raise $1,000 additional, of the money needed, in spite of their former sacrifices and their fire. They are asking help to buy their lot. See statement elsewhere.

—It is generous for a fellow-publisher to give praise to another journal. C. A. Young writes: "Your Holiday Number is fine. The cover is exquisite. Congratulations."

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Knoxville, Tenn, Dec. 7.—We have just unfurled the stars and stripes from the dome of the new School of the Evangelists, and the new bell sounds its notes of joy. Thousands will rejoice with us.

Yours for the great campaign,
Ashley S. Johnson.

It will be remembered that this school building was burned down some months ago during the president's absence. Its speedy resurrection, phenix-like, from its ashes, is one of our modern miracles of enterprise and generosity. Our hearty congratulations are extended to President Johnson and his faculty and students.

—The cut on our first page this week shows the members of the Board of Ministerial Relief. Commencing at the left and reading to the right they are: First row, Samuel Ashby, W. S. Dickinson, A. B. Philputt; second row, I. J. Spencer, A. L. Orcutt, Dr. Jabez Hall; third row, T. B. Laycock, F. E. Udell, Amos Clifford.

—Sister Rachel G. Burns, wife of John Burns, of this city, departed this life December 5, aged 84 years. Funeral services conducted by the pastor of the church, Dr. J. M. Philputt, Saturday, December 9. Fuller report next week. Our sincere sympathy is extended to Brother Burns and the surviving children and grandchildren.

—O. E. Hawkins has just been set apart to the ministry. The service took place at the Soniat Avenue Christian Church, New Orleans, and was conducted by B. L. Smith, of Cincinnati.

—A new church will be dedicated at Waterford, O., December 24. O. L. Cook is the minister.

—V. E. Ridenour will hold a meeting with J. R. Golden at Gibson City, Ill., early in January.

—A new house of worship will be erected at Austin, Tex., before very long, a lot having been purchased.

—W. A. Morrison, of McPherson, Kan., will assist the church at Iuka in a revival during this month.

—R. H. Sawyer has been tendered a farewell reception at Missoula, Mont., he having accepted a call to Carrollton, Mo.

—William Shoesmith has had a cordial reception at Estherville, Ia., where he began his work the first of this month.

—A. W. Gehres will divide his time between Brook and Bethany Chapel, a country church in Benton county, Ind.

—Edward Wright, who has for some time been in the evangelistic field, has settled down to a regular pastorate at Spencer, Iowa.

—Jewell Howard has taken up the work at Amarillo, Tex., having preached his farewell sermon at Plano the last Lord's day in November.

—Herbert Yeuell, who is now in a short meeting there, writes of the successful work that G. F. Assiter is doing at Parkersburg, W. Va.

—"When You Get Married" was the attractive title of a sermon recently preached by R. S. Crossfield.

—Evangelist Herbert Yeuell has been giving his lecture, "Ben Hur and Quo Vadis," with great success. At Petersburg, Va., it netted $237 for the church.

—A. R. Hunt's time is now all taken, preaching to rural congregations adjacent to Savannah, Mo. He begins a meeting at Ravenwood, December 25.

—O. N. Roth has resigned at Argentine, Kan., to accept a call from the Lawrence Avenue Church, of Wichita. He will enter upon his new field January 1.

—Lee H. Barnum had to cancel his acceptance of the call to the church at Great Bend, Kan., because the Caldwell church refused to accept his resignation.

—Philip Evans has been asked to remain another year at Princeton, Ill., but his decision depends on the question of support. The outlook, he reports, is encouraging.

—Thomas J. Thompson will close his pastorate at Slater, Mo., January 1. He will evangelize for a few months or accept a permanent work in a suitable field.

—"The Seven Greatest Evils of Modern Society" is the title of a series of lectures being delivered by J. W. Lowber at the Central Christian Church, Austin, Texas.

—There will be a re-dedication of our church at Ridgetown, Ont., about January 1, some $27,000 having been spent on the building in remodeling and repairing it.

—George B. Evans, of Big Run, Pa., is in demand for addresses at union services. The C. W. B. M. offering at his church was three times as much this year as last.

—Isom Roberts has been on a visit to Wellington, Kan., where he occupied the pulpit; W. W. Robertson and Z. A. Harris supplied for him at Blackwell, O. T., during his absence.

—A most favorable reception was given to the sermon of J. P. Lichtenberger, one of our New York pastors, delivered at the union Thanksgiving services of the Harlem churches in the Church of the Puritans.

—A. L. Ferguson, of La Junta, Col., who was reported in our columns recently as having gone from Macon, Ill., went from Macomb to his present place, beginning the work October 1. He reports seven additions since he began work.

Hood's
Sarsaparilla is unquestionably the greatest blood and liver medicine known. It positively and permanently cures every humor, from Pimples to Scrofula. It is the Best Blood Medicine.

—E. B. Barnes, of Noblesville, Ind., will hold a meeting in February at Big Run, Pa. George B. Evans, the former secretary and treasurer of the West Virginia ministerial association, is the present pastor.

—We regret to learn of the death of Dabney Procter, who was an elder in the church at Moberly, Mo., and a brother of the more widely known Alexander Procter. The funeral services were held last week.

—The Foreign Society has prepared an exercise called "Star of Hope" to be used on Endeavor day, which is the first Lord's day in February. It ought to be very helpful to all the societies. Address F. M. Rains, Box 884, Cincinnati, Ohio.

—A new church has just been organized by L. F. Stephens and wife at Twin Falls, Idaho, with thirty-two members and five more added since. B. F. Clay was to preach the dedicatory sermon. Ours is the first church building erected in this growing town.

—J. C. Mason, in a line, reports: "We will pass the record of last November in our mission offerings." We would not expect anything else of Texas. "The Louisiana Christian" will in future be edited by Brother Procter and published at Lake Charles.

—Prof. C. T. Paul, missionary of the Foreign Society, who has just reached Nankin, China, writing of his impressions of that land, says: "I have found China vastly more degraded and needy, and Christian mission work vastly more flourishing and hopeful, than I had ever dreamed. The half has not been told on either side."

—The dedication of the Christian church at Pontiac, Ill., will take place on Sunday morning, December 17, when J. H. Gilliland, of Bloomington, will preach. William G. McColley, the minister, and the church extend invitations to all friends.

—The twelfth anniversary of the dedication of our tabernacle at Council Bluffs, Ia., was celebrated with the announcement that every dollar of the indebtedness was paid in full. We congratulate W. B. Clemmer not only on this fact, but on the good work that is being done in all departments.

—The sixeenth wedding anniversary of C. E. Taylor and his wife proved a surprise occasion to the inmates of the parsonage at Sebring, O. Our congregation there came down upon the pastor and his wife, not only in large numbers, but carrying a very handsome rocking-chair to leave as a souvenir of the occasion.

—We regret to learn of the death of Mrs. Mabel McMillan, wife of Bro. Alexander McMillan, pastor of our church at Winnipeg. She had been ailing for some three months, and the cause of death was a tumor at the base of the brain. She was a daughter of Alexander Brown, of Fostoria, O., and leaves, besides her husband, two children.

—Our church building at Frankfort, Ind., is to be remodeled. During W. J. Russell's eight months' pastorate 143 new members have been enrolled and it has just been decided to expend between twelve and fifteen thousand dollars in enlarging and putting new furnishings into the church which will make it the most commodious church home in the city

—F. W. Collins is going to add to his library. This is a result of the handsome gift with which the pastor of our church at West Liberty, Ia., was recently surprised as an expression of the appreciation of his congregation. To equip himself better for the ministry by the reading of good books is, in Brother Collins' judgment, the best way to return value to the church.

—A note from H. C. Saum, written at Manilla, reports that himself, wife, Herbert, D. O. Cunningham and wife, and Miss Olive Griffith have had an excellent voyage, and had just been enjoying a pleasant day with the Hannas and the Kershners. He reports the work in the Philippines as very promising, while he calls for reinforcements for Japan, seeing that the opportunities there have been greatly increased.

—The annual report of the City Mission Board of Kansas City, of which Frank L. Bowen is secretary and evangelist, shows that there are six mission points under the direction of the board and that the number of additions during the year was 229, of which 98 were baptisms. A chapel fund has been started, amounting to $3,000 at present, Independence Boulevard Church having given $2,000 to inaugurate it.

—The Year Book is now in the hands of the printer and will be ready for mailing as rapidly as subscriptions are received. We have fixed the price of "The American Home Missionary" at the low rate of 25 cents, which is much less than the cost of publishing. This Year Book includes the list of our ministers. If you desire the Year Book please send in your subscription to Benj. L. Smith, corresponding secretary, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

—Last week the Foreign Society received $1,200 on the annuity plan. The society has received nearly a quarter of a million dollars in this way. It is hoped many other friends will take this step at an early date. And the society was also the recipient of $500 last week from the estate of the late Mrs. O. A. Burgess, of Indianapolis, Ind. Several thousand dollars additional are expected from the same source.

—The people at Duluth, says Baxter Waters, are generous in their giving and are anxious to build a strong, solid church in that growing city, which is a strategic point. "We need encouragement from the outside as we are a long way from the center of the brotherhood," writes Brother Waters. He reports that a new carpet has been put on the church floors and that the Sunday school is arranging for a fine new organ.

—A line from Bro. B. B. Tyler, of Denver, Col., under date of December 5, says: "The mortage was burned on time and according to program." Leters were read from a number of brethren, and Bro. W. B. Craig, the founder of the church, delivered a fine address. Now that the debt is out of the way the church is already asking, "What next?" and is planning for further conquests. Brother Tyler writes that they are having constant additions to the church.

—It is with pleasure we record the fact that another of "The Christian-Evangelist Special" crowd of bachelors has given up the struggle and succumbed to the charms of womanhood. The engagement of C. W. Cauble, pastor of our church at Greencastle, Ind., to Miss Mary, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Hawley, has just been announced. She is one of the best known young women of Huntington and is a conscientious, capable church worker. Brother Cauble is a graduate of Harvard and a man of fine spirit. We did not know what we were doing when we started that "Christian-Evangelist Special."

—Bro. J. W. Ellis and wife, and his son, J. Breckenridge Ellis, the talented conductor of our "Advance Society" and the writer of some of the stories in The Christian-Evangelist, having removed to Bentonville, Ark., it was in order that the church there should give a reception to introduce their new minister and his family. More than two hundred invitations were sent out, and the occasion was a very delightful one, speaking of warm hearts and Christian character. Te audiences, we learn, are large and increasing and the outlook for Brother Ellis in this new field is very encouraging.

—"I feel that I must express to you," writes D. W. Moore, of Springfield, Mo., "my appreciation of the rich things we are having now in The Christian-Evangelist. My heart 'burns within me' as I read your report and suggestions concerning the recent Inter-Church Conference in New York. The Disciples of Christ feel that they have been, in a certain sense, the chosen of God to prepare for such a movement. It is sad to remember, and yet it is well for us to recall, that it was the 'chosen of God' who crucified their Lord and Redeemer, and that it was the nation's suicide. The Lord make us wise in this time of opportunity. 'It is the hour of fate.' "

—The interest which the brethren everywhere are manifesting in the late Interchurch Conference in New York City shows that the spirit of unity is not a spent force in our ranks. Our readers generally are enthusiastic over the outlook. One brother writes: "The last number of The Christian-Evangelist was superb. I was eagerly waiting for your report of the great Interchurch Conference and read it with increasing interest. Surely the Lord is bringing to our very doors opportunities for which we have long been praying and working." These are indeed great days, and we hope to furnish our readers during the coming year much that will both surprise and delight them.

—The anniversary sermon of N. M. Ragland, Fayetteville, Ark. "After Twenty Years," commemorates the completion of a pastorate lasting through a score of years. Referring to his work in that city, he says: "When I recall the joys of this pastorate of twenty beautiful years my heart is stirred at the thought of how near I came to losing it." It is a tender, beautiful sermon and indicates an ideal relationship between minister and people. The increasing number of lengthy pastorates is a most cheering sign of the times. In the sermon Brother Ragland quotes from two or three brethren the benefits which they ascribe to long pastorates, and these we may print at another time. Our congratulations are extended to both pastor and flock on the consummation of twenty years of delightful and fruitful service together.

—G. W. Waters has just moved from Canton, Mo., to Hope, Ark. He is the father of Dean Waters of the Agricultural College, University of Missouri, and of Baxter Waters, the pastor at Duluth, Minn. He has been a leader in the old Olivette and Center church in Ralls county, and was an elder in the Canton church for twelve years. He has also been a member of the board of trustees of Christian University for a number of years. Old Grandfather Waters came to Missouri a century ago, when it was still a territory and he was one of our pioneer preachers. He built up what was known as the Sugar Creek Church, from which have come the Center, Hays Creek, Manning, Ariel and Spalding congregations. Bro. George Waters, as he is familiarly known, will certainly be a great help to the cause in Hope, where he is to make his future home, and in a general way to the cause in the whole state of Arkansas.

—A pastor who has moved from the north down into a more southerly region writes: "You cannot imagine my surprise on coming here from——to find our Baptist brethren here still practicing the old sectarian exclusiveness which I knew when a boy in Kentucky, namely, the rebaptism of baptized believers. They tell me this is the practice of our Baptist brethren all over this part of ——. This was a surprise to me, for the Baptists at —— and —— follow no such practice." Yes, unfortunately, that is a theory that has gotten root among the Baptists in certain parts of the country, but like every other practice founded in prejudice or in a misconception of truth, it is gradually giving way to a better knowledge of the spirit and teaching of Christ. There are "landmarkers" in all religious bodies, who are not tall enough to see over their denominational walls. The remedy is not to antagonize them, but to seek, in the spirit of love and meekness, to teach them the way of the Lord more perfectly.

—Wallace M. Stuckey, who for fifteen years has been in the ministry in the Advent Christian Church, has recently united with one of our churches in Kansas City, Mo. Having been for a number of years pastor of a church in Kansas City, he is acquainted with the brethren there and has only recently taken a step which has been in his mind for some time. In a letter just received from him he expresses his conviction that the points which separate the Advent Christian Church from other Christian Churches which omit the name Advent are not vital and should not be allowed to separate the two bodies. He believes that a large per cent of his former brethren will pursue the same course that he has. He writes: "I am now ready to go out in the name of the Christ wherever the way opens for evangelistic work, either as singer or as evangelist." He refers brethren to Bros. W. O. Thomas, W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, Mo., and to C. P. Smith, of Kansas City, Kan. We hope Brother Stuckey will find a field of labor.

—A correspondent writing from Arkansas says, "I am a very ordinary Christian but Brother McGarvey's doctrine would take all the hope out of me. I was once bound down under the power of rum and I am sure I coud never have gotten out from under the curse of it but for the aid of the Holy Spirit. I can not understand the operation of the Holy Spirit any more than could Nicodemus, but I am positive that he did operate upon me and through his aid I am free. It looks to me that a very ordinary wayfaring man ought not to err in understanding the words of John 3:34: 'For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him.' The conclusion which I would draw from that is that if our blessed Savior was not given the Spirit by measure all other flesh receive it only by measure." That would seem to be a reasonable conclusion for an ordinary wayfaring man, not under the pressure of defending a position which is indefensible.

—Rev. Daniel Hughes, late pastor of the Baptist church in Chester, England, has recently accepted work among the Disciples of Christ and has been called as minister of the Church of Christ in Upper Parliament Street, Liverpool. A Liverpool paper contains an account of a double Thanksgiving meeting held recently in that church, which celebrated the extinction of the debt by the burning of the mortgage publicly and which extended an enthusiastic welcome to Brother Hughes, formerly of Grosvenor Park Baptist Church, Chester, to the pastorate. It seems to have been a very happy occasion, in which several of Brother Hughes' former ministerial brethren extended their greetings and congratulations. In his speech, Brother Hughes said, among other things:

"I consider the movement with which I am now definitely associated a great and good one, its freedom from the trammels of man-made creeds, its emphasis upon obedience to the specific commands of the Lord, and a continued regard of the dictates of the abiding Spirit, its democratic character, for those of soft attire and those wearing garments of coarser make are one here, its insistence that God should be regarded not as a metaphysical expression, but a mighty experience, these and other experiences demand that I should devote my humble life to the propagation of such truths."

Brother Hughes is the author of a book, noticed elsewhere, entitled "The Making of Man," the first edition of which has been already exhausted. He writes the Editor that he is doing what he can by the use of tracts to guide aright the new converts in Wales who are seeking a broader basis of fellowship than is offered them in the existing denominations of that principality. We extend the hand of brotherly greeting across the Atlantic and bid him Godspeed in the work he has undertaken.

The Hot Springs Church Lot.

The rally to raise the balance due on the lot for the centrally located church, is meeting with success. Now let everybody rally all along the line, and let us make short work raising this small amount needed. There are thousands of readers of The Christian-Evangelist who can send us a dollar or two and never miss it, crowning our long and hard fought effort to buy and pay for a central location with means.

ANOTHER INDORSEMENT.

"The importance of building a good house in a desirable locality at Hot Springs can not be overestimated. The following considerations commend themselves to the thoughtful and observant: (1) Their membership are energetic workers, under the leadership of the devoted and untiring T. N. Kincaid; (2) With the present location of the church they can never build up an influential congregation that will largely reach the citizenship and visitors of that most frequented of all health resorts; (3) The cosmopolitan character of the population, and especially of the visitors, makes it desirable to have there property that will favorably represent to the eye of sojourners the great cause of pure Christianity, while it invites attendance and a favorable hearing; (4) For the same reasons already given, the entire brotherhood should be represented in this enterprise. Arkansas should lead out, and others should follow. Every strong church in the United States should help in this enterprise of general interest. I think this is the judgment of every leading Disciple who has visited the locality. The lot they have purchased, on which they have made a number of payments, is a very desirable one. The emergency is upon them. No time is to be lost.

The Pittsburg Campaign Viewed by the Committee

The Century Simultaneous Revival enlisted forty-two churches in western Pennsylvania, including three whose meetings preceded the others and three that came in at the eleventh hour. There have been nearly two thousand additions to these churches. The way has been opened for several new buildings. New life has been infused into congregations that had settled down to a "do nothing" existence. A great city has become aware of the greatest religious force of the twentieth century, and the people who entered into the campaign have come to increased and confirmed faith in the possibilities when willing and united people work with God.

The central committee wishes to record, first of all, the humble and reverent conviction that the success attained in all directions is of God. Many of our original plans he has overruled entirely. The campaign has been conducted in many of its central features subject to change on twenty-four hours' notice. We were walking in untried paths and had dared to seek his ways among the mountain tops and so we looked to him for guidance. It is not necessary to say that he never failed us and we need only record that our docility was due, not to our great faith, but to our great weakness.

When the pandemonium of last Hallowe'en was disturbing all our meetings members of the central committee were reminded of how the previous Hallowe'en was spent in an upper room in the Frick building forming their plans for this evangelistic campaign. Only a fraction of those plans were ever carried out, but the meeting was none the less fruitful. What the committee did was to stir up the churches, to recommend to them the very ablest preachers that could be secured for this work and to organize a central series of meetings that we felt would be commensurate with the task in hand. When the inquiry has been made, "How did you induce this man, or that, to leave his own work?" we have answered, "By making him see that for this period this was his work, and by appealing to his congregation to give the pastor leave of absence to visit 'the Holy Land,' which for one month was to be in western Pennsylvania." We assigned some of the strongest men in the brotherhood to some of our weakest points, and they have thanked us for their crucifixion, seeing at once that they could accomplish more for the kingdom of God in such places than with strong churches. It is impossible to tell of the success or failure of these meetings by the number of additions secured. Among the most important meetings were those of Geo. B. Ranshaw at Crafton, W. J. Wright, at Hazelwood, Vernon Stauffer at Herron Hill, Geo. W. Moore at Braddock, Cecil J. Armstrong at Observatory Hill and Allen Wilson at Belmar.

The same spirit of co-operation in the campaign as a whole made the evangelists to give their best efforts to the down-town meetings. The triumphant success of the five great services in the Nixon theater has been and will be mentioned always as the leading feature of the campaign.

One of the esesntial factors in the campaign was the music. The singing of the Netz sisters quartet, of Toledo, O., in all the central meetings from first to last, and every night in some one of the churches, not only carried the Gospel home to the hearts of those who heard it, but made the meetings famous throughout the district. Here was one distinctive feature, easily grasped, that set these meetings apart from any others that had ever been held in the city. Of the same effect was the singing of Mrs. Princess Long during the ten days that she continued with us. It was not merely the talent and accomplishment of these singers, but the deep devotion that made their service so effective. They were not counted as mere attractions but were put in the same class with the evangelists and we are sure that this classification had the divine approval.

A great modern city is an organism. You can not impress any part of it without impressing the whole. The newspapers are its perceptive faculties. Through them you can speak to the whole city. We had something to say, so we engaged Mr. Edward C. Sykes, a faithful member of one of our churches, and a trusted and a successful reporter of one of the daily papers, to keep the city informed through the seven daily papers as to the progress and events of the revival. His work was one of the necessary means to the end accomplished. Not only were the meetings kept constantly before the reading public of western Pennslyvania, but every Monday a full report of the Sunday sermon in the Nixon theater appeared in the columns of several of the papers.

Of course this campaign was expensive. It is estimated that the total cash outlay reached $15,000, $2,500 of this passing through the treasury of the central committee. It was raised without difficulty, nearly all of it in free-will offerings. Our people had been trained, through a long term of years, to co-operate. Team work has become a habit here. In 1884, fifty years after the establishing of churches in western Pennsylvania, there were but five churches in Allegheny county, with a membership of about 700. Within the next twenty years twenty-one more churches were organized and the membership increased to nearly six thousand. This came to pass because certain men made it their business to see that it did. One of the foremost in inaugurating this extension by multiplication was W. F. Cowden, pastor of the first Allegheny church. The constant leader in all this growth has been Robert S. Latimer, president of the Western Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society. With them was a native of western Pennsylvania, O. H. Philips, whose entire ministerial life has been given to two of our churches, Carnegie and Braddock, and who, without jealousy or envy, is recognized today as the master of our western Pennsylvania ministry. A constant element for over a dozen years has been the burning zeal of an Australian, C. L. Thurgood, whose glowing smile is known clear round the world, but has borne the most of its fruit in Pittsburg. Others have failed of equal usefulness only by removing from the state as soon as well acquainted. During all these years there have been two conventions every year, and little conventions once a month, the weekly meetings of the ministers—at first the four had to be introduced to each other—and the almost continuous publication of a local paper. As carefully and patiently as a football coach labors with his eleven, Brother Latimer has labored with these churches and people that they might come to an exemplification of their plea for Christian union. The fruits of these labors stand forth gloriously. We look for larger things for 1909, and particularly to see other cities that are now better equipped outstrip the achievements of our little district.

W. R. Warren.

FROM AN EVANGELIST'S STANDPOINT

By W. T. Brooks

There are some valuable lessons to be gotten from the Pennsylvania campaign. There is some danger, I think, that other communities may undertake such a work and become disappointed in the results, for it is not every section that could carry on such a revival and indeed it is not needed in every section.

Our people are comparatively weak in Pennsylvania and the denominational churches are very strong. There was great need that our plea should be brought to the attention of the people and that the strength of the church that stands for apostolic Christianity should be impressed upon them. When the central committee began to negotiate for buildings and other accommodations they found that some of the leading people of the city of Pittsburg had never so much as heard of the Church of Christ.

The movement was on such a large scale and received so much attention from the newspapers that few people in the western part of the state who read the papers are not now more or less acquainted with our movement. This was one of the objects to be attained in the revival.

The managers of the campaign were men of wisdom, and men who had a definite purpose in view and cautiously and carefully measured each step in the preparation. Yet these men were aggressive and had a sublime faith. And it took faith. In a great city where we were virtually unknown, to engage one of the largest theaters at $100 a day for five Sundays and then to see that building full every service and enough overflow to fill a great church across the street, was a tribute to the power of the committee in arousing interest in the great work.

Each church had charge of its own revival in local plans, finances, and personal work. The central committee assisted in bringing evangelists and churches together and also assumed the financial responsibility of the general expenses of the campaign, such as advertising, cost of union services, and any expense that was not purely local. The offerings taken at the union services were very generous and must have covered fully the expenditures. Plan for great things and the people will always respond with liberal offerings.

The theater meetings on Sunday afternoons were productive of great good and did more to bring our cause prominently before the city than any other feature of the work.

Each day during the week, save on Saturday, there was a noonday service in the heart of the city lasting fifty minutes. This was designed as a service for business men, but I think in this respect it was something of a disappointment, for it seemed to me that comparatively few of this class were ever in attendance. A sermon by some evangelist or pastor was the main feature of each service. It was an open question whether this noonday meeting accomplished enough good to offset the time lost by the preachers and workers from their local fields. While it was most helpful and enjoyable to all of us, yet it took time and energy that might have counted for more if spent in other channels.

The total number of additions has reached nearly two thousand, and, considering the field, this indicates a wonderful success. Many of the churches were mission points and it was hard work that counted. As an illustration, take Wilson and Lintt at Belmar. These men entered this field without a word of complaint and were the first to hold a service of our people in that section of the city. The first service was held before the heaters were installed or the window lights were in the building. The church had seventy members and they had eighty additions, or, in other words, more than doubled the membership. The church was completed, the societies of the church fully organized, all debts of the meeting paid and our cause made prominent in that section.

Those communities contemplating campaigns of this order would do well to write that prince of organizers, W. R. Warren, of the central committee, and get the details for their plans, for to enter into such a work with incomplete plans or with half-heartedness, will be to invite disaster. I do not believe that such a series of revivals would be the best in every city. I feel sure that, in smaller places, ranging from fifty thousand in population on down, a much better way would be to unite the local churches in one great union revival, using the largest auditorium in the city. With a chorus of several hundred voices and a united effort of all congregations there would be thousands of additions where we now have hundreds.

But my judgment is that the Pittsburg campaign was a success from every view point and may be put down as one of the great events in our history of evangelism. The men who were leading as evangelists will all join me, I am sure, in saying that there was perfect harmony and holy fellowship and that it was a privilege to be counted worthy to stand on the firing line where our battles began nearly a century ago.

SOME REASONS FOR THE SUCCESS

By Edgar D. Jones

I have nothing but praise for the Century Simultaneous Revival and admiration for the management and constituency that made it possible.

I reckon it a rare privilege to have preached in a meeting of a month under such circumstances and amid such an enviornment.

1. In common with other visiting ministers the first thing that impressed me was the spirit of unity and co-operation that characterizes the Disciples of Greater Pittsburg. We had heard of this, but when we saw it and felt it, Queen-of-Sheba-like, we could only say: "Behold, the half was not told us!" It was simply beautiful. With our brethren in Greater Pittsburg, much as they love the churches where they hold membership, the cause in the city as a whole comes first. This unselfishness, this Christlike spirit, I think, accounts very largely for the success of the movement.

2. The preparation for the revival was in every way noteworthy. For more than a year careful and prayful preparation was carried on. Things were done on a big scale. Neither time nor money was spared. When the time came for the opening of the campaign all things were good and ready. A very important factor in the success of the revival was the official organ of the Disciples of western Pennsylvania, "The Worker." Doubtless this paper has contributed largely to the unity and co-operation which is so obvious there.

3. The Pittsburg revival has taught our brotherhood the efficacy of the simultaneous idea and is suggestive of yet larger things. If thirty-three churches can accomplish so much, working thus, what might not be done should all the evangelical churches of a great city undertake such a movement?

Given: First, a spirit of harmony and co-operation between and among the churches; second, tireless and very thorough preparation; third, an official paper, such as "The Worker," to go into the homes of all the members; fourth, a corps of consecrated business men to constitute a central committee; fifth, a W. R. Warren to lead;

And any city can have a great soul-garnering revival such as Pittsburg experienced.

Cleveland, Ohio.

Responsive Reading

By D. R. Dungan

I want to confess that the subject is one Mrs. George Miulen, Miss Sallie Roberts of great interest to me; that I was delighted with what Brother McGarvey had to say on the subject, and also with the sensible suggestions in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of November 16. That there are difficulties in these readings can not be denied; that responsive reading by verse is a failure and largely without intelligence, is certain. There was an effort in the "Gloria in Excelsis" to avoid this, and yet to claim that the effort was a success in all respects would be to claim too much. And yet Brother McGarvey will not be able to say that an advance has not been made. There are bad readers enough in a congregation to render it impossible for any one to know certainly what is said, unless he have a book before him and be reading also. The same thing exactly may be said for congregational singing. Even in choir singing, it is difficult to know what words are being pronounced. Indeed, there are many solo other tongue. This is especially true where the culture takes on the flutter-mill attachment, and reminds us of the ancient cordusingers who might as well vociferate in anroy bridges in Indiana. And yet it does not seem best to condemn song service by the wholesale. It would be well that we should be able to sing with the spirit and with the understanding also, and perhaps this may be done by real devotion and proper culture. At any rate, it will be better to try some reasonable remedy than to dispense with the service.

In behalf of congregational singing it may be said that each person who will participate in the service will have a livelier interest in the worship than those who take no part. That is reasonable. Most thinkers will accept the view. But it should not be overlooked that if all shall be led to participate in the reading it will have the same effect.

It is suggested, too, that Professor McGarvey hyperbolized, to some extent, in his glorification of the Episcopal prayer book. The writer, at least, is unanimous in his opinion that the good professor has not gone through many of those forms, or even endured them. My opinion is worth but little on the hymnal question, but, nevertheless, it will be allowed me to say that, in my opinion, the collection of songs and tunes in "Gloria in Excelsis" is not equaled in any other publication now extant.

What One Church Is Doing

By W. A. Fite

The one church referred to is the East Dallas Christian Church, of Dallas, Texas. As one well acquainted with its history, I wish to set forth briefly some of the things accomplished by this young and vigorous church, with the hope that the work done there may be an inspiration to other churches in the brotherhood.

This church celebrated its second anniversary the last Lord's day in November. It was organized by John A. Stevens, who, at that time, was laboring under the American Christian Missionary Society. The church had no regular pastor until the writer took the pastorate April 1, and continued in the charge until the celebration of the first anniversary, when on account of his wife's failing health, he was compelled to give up the work in search of a better climate, which was the greatest disappointment of his ministry. The history of that first year is briefly told. At the end of the year there was a membership of nearly 200, and the treasurer's report showed that over $7,087 had been raised by the church during the year. The church had become a living link in the Home Society, with John A. Stevens as evangelist, had given $130 to Church Extension, and given very liberally to the other missionary enterprises. The Sunday following the anniversary, $300 were raised for Texas missions, and the church became a living link in the state work.

January 1, 1905, R. H. Ford, who had just taken his Master's degree from Texas Christian University, and of whom President Zollars had said that he had never turned out from any institution with which he had been connected better ministerial timber, took the work, and continues until the present time. In his brief pastorate the work has made great advances. The March offering for Foreign Missions amounted to $175.50. The offering for Home Missions in May amounted to $300, and the living link in that society was continued. The children's day offering in June was $100; and on June 25 they began a meeting with Brethren Scoville and Smith. The cost of this meeting was $1,500 in toto. This has all been paid. Though seriously interfered with by rain, the visible results of the meeting were 133 additions, 91 of whom were by confession and baptism. The church now has a membership of 350, and I would judge that nearly one-half of these have come into the church by primary obedience. At the close of the meeting between $11,000 and $12,000 were raised toward a new building. For, be it remembered, they have been worshiping in a temporary structure, a barn-like tabernacle, with no pretensions to architectural beauty. The pledges toward the new building are to be paid in six, twelve and eighteen months. Three thousand dollars of this amount were pledged by the ladies' aid society. When I learned what this society had done, I thought that they had more faith and determination than any ladies' aid of my knowledge. As a token of the appreciation of the services of Brethren Scoville and Smith, they gave them a present each; the value of both was $215. Soon after the close of the meeting, Bro. A. J. Bush preached for the church and presented the plea of the Juliette Fowler Orphans' Home, and raised $96.

Now, what is the secret of this liberal giving? Perhaps some are saying that it is a rich church, and its wealthy members can afford to give thus largely. If such were the case, I would not be writing this article; for if they were doing proportionately what many other churches are doing which do not have the amount of wealth, they would deserve no commendation. It is not a rich church. There is but one man in the church that can be considered in any sense wealthy. Many of the members do not so much as own the houses in which they live. As a sample of their liberality, I will instance but one person. He lives in a four-room cottage, which he rents at about $20 per month. He has a wife and three children. He has no business of his own, but works on commissions. He told me that he would give to the church this year $300, which would represent a fifth of his income. Many others in that church are giving proportionately as much. You can understand the secret of such large liberality when I tell you that every member of the official board and the pastor of the church and 50 members of the church are tithers; that many have signed the Tenth Legion pledge, and there are doubtless many more who tithe who have not signed the pledge, a great many paying more than the tenth. And the beauty about this liberality is that it is so voluntary, spontaneous, cheerful. They give because they love to give. They find a real joy in it. It is a delightful privilege. We preachers are usually very sanguine with reference to any offering for which we may call, and usually overestimate the amount asked for. This is the only church in my knowledge which has always given more largely than the expectations of those taking the offerings. This generous giving does not impoverish them. They say that they have just as much for themselves after giving liberally to the Lord. "There is that scattereth, and increaseth yet more; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet; but it tendeth only to want. The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty and thy vats shall overflow with new wine."

I have spoken particularly of the generosity of the church, hoping that its example might be emulated by many others; but there are other features that are just as interesting. It is a working church. Every department (and they have the various organizations of a well-equipped church) is busy. It is a beehive with very few drones. The officers of the church are wide-awake, and each one of them studies the interest and welfare of the church, just as does the preacher himself. Since its organization it has been remarkably free from the divisive spirit. I suppose that they are too busy to quarrel.

I write this article unsolicited, and with no purpose whatever of giving notoriety to the church (the church is too modest to seek advertisement), but with the sincere desire of giving encouragement to other churches which struggle with the financial problem, in the hope that a practical illustration of consecrated wealth may not be amiss.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Oregon.

To date 22 churches have sent in their offering for Oregon missions and have received credit, viz :

Athena, $50.50; Monmouth, $39.50; Silverton, $41; Cottage Grove, $38.45; The Dalles, $34.70; Roseburg, $27.50; Ashland, $25.10; McMinnville, $23.05; Hood River, $21.45; Rodney Avenue, Portland, $16.35; Hebron, $16; Perrydale, $15; Forrest Grove, $9; Hillsboro, $8.45; Nashville, $5; Wasco, $4.60; Woodburn, $3.50; Franklin, $3.30; Santa Clara, $2.50; Coquille, $1; Carlton, $6.25; Falls City, $6.

The figures represent all the receipts from these churches from July 10 to the present date. In some cases the figures are final, but in most cases there are pledges, payable between now and June, 1906, which will largely increase the offerings from these churches and for several churches will more than double the amounts reported here. I am glad to say that more than one church will report an average of over 50 cents per member for state work this year. Which will be the banner church? Brother, will it be yours? If it is not, will it be your fault? "Fifteen hundred souls for Christ and all debts paid in full." May the Lord help us to realize the vision.

CLINTON AND OUR NEW HOUSE OF WORSHIP.

Clinton is a beautiful city of 20,000 people located on the Mississippi River, at the crossing of the main line of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. At one time Clinton was a great lumber center and had the distinction of having the largest saw mill in the world. A number of people amassed fortunes in the lumber business, and Clinton now, most likely, numbers more millionaires among its citizens than any other city of its size in the middle west. The glory of the lumber business has departed, but it yet remains a great railroad center and boasts of one of the largest round houses in the world, its capacity being 100 locomotives. The pay roll of the company is over $65,000 per month.

About four and one-half years ago our mission board sent evangelists to Clinton in an effort to establish a church. The meeting resulted in a number of people becoming obedient to the Gospel and we were in a fair way to success, but the members became stranded on the lot question, and but for the heroic efforts of a few, all would have been lost. The entering wedge to success was the appointment of a committee with full power to select a lot, and purchase or build a house of worship. The committee began six months ago with nothing. A lot well located, on which was a fair dwelling, was bargained for at $3,000. The dwelling was sold and a church building bought and moved on to the lot in its stead. A twenty foot addition was built, together with a basement under the entire structure, furnace heat, electric light, carpet on the floor, paper, paint, baptistry and all things needed for a well equipped house added.

Nov. 26 was selected for the opening. The morning sermon and all appeals for money were made by the writer. O. W. Lawrence, of Rock Island, Ill., was present at the afternoon and evening service and preached. About $1,000 was raised during the day, cleaning up all indebtedness except $1,500 against the lot. Victor F. Johnson, the pastor, has been the leader in this work and has shown great patience and tact in carrying the enterprise through. Six months ago we had no property in the city; now we have a house and lot worth $6,000, and all but $1,500 paid for. It is a wonderful triumph of faith and we feel that our brethren are now in position to accomplish a great work for our God. I remained and preached Monday and Tuesday nights. I stopped one night with Dr. Johnson and wife, good people that I have learned to know and love for their work's sake. Two nights were spent in the delightful home of Brother and Sister T. C. Peaco. Brother Peaco is one of the most reliable men in the railway machine shops, is a deacon and a faithful Disciple of the Lord. This puts another one of our mission churches under roof.

Springfield Letter.

I am just home from a seventeen days, meeting with W. F. Turner at the First Church, Joplin, Mo. Brother Turner began the meeting on Sunday with eleven additions. We arrived on Monday and continued sixteen days and closed with fifty-two altogether. The meeting should have gone on for a week or two longer, but duties at home urged us to return earlier.

Brother Turner came and assisted us in our meeting just before this. We have gone back to the good old log-rolling days of our fathers, when the people "swapped" work and enjoyed each other more.

The meeting at Joplin was a real feast to the writer. The First Church and its consecrated pastor have been much in the eyes of the brotherhood for the last two years. The great Harlow-Ridenour meeting quickened the evangelistic pulse of the entire country.

The pastor and his workers—with a wise consecrated board—have husbanded the forces in a remarkable way. This congregation is more like a lovely family than any other with which we have labored. The pastor is wise, patient, thoughtful, industrious and consecrated. Definite intention characterizes all he does, both as student and pastor. The people of his flock love him and trust him. All the people of Joplin believe in his integrity of character and respect and honor him. He is a factor to be reckoned with in the city's fight for municipal righteousness. The spirit of progress in this people promises much for the future. They have not been content to hold a great meeting or two, but continued to enlarge the work. During the last year they have put a missionary on the foreign and one on the home field.

At this time they are seriously considering an evangelist for Joplin, and a gallery and a pipe organ for their own house.

Our own two weeks' meeting in the South Street Church did us much good. Brother Turner was with us ten days. This meeting followed a three weeks' union meeting under Evangelist William Edward Beiderwolf. This meeting was held in a large tent, eleven of the churches of the city joining together. About one thousand cards were signed expressing a purpose to live the Christian life. Of these some one hundred and fifty have gone into the churches. The fault was not in the preaching so much, I think, as in the fact that they were not definitely and finally committed to anything. "The interrogation of a good conscience" was not answered, was not satisfied. Since the meeting closed forty-four have been added, thus far, at South Street. The outlook is for others soon. We are planning for the winter work now.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Flora, Nov. 27.—Closed a six weeks' meeting with 31 additions—5 Baptists, 1 Conservative Dunkard, 1 Progressive Dunkard, 1 M. E.. 2 Presbyterians, 7 by letter and statement, 13 by confession. Also baptized a sweet spirited lady 79 years old, a member of the M. E. church. For many years she had been dissatisfied with her baptism, and when immersed said, "I am glad I have obeyed my Savior." She will not change her church membership. The first week of the meeting was preparatory to the coming of State Evangelist T. J. Legg. This is our second meeting for the year, making a total of 50 added to the church. The church was never so prosperous.—A. B. HOUZE, minister.

Indianapolis, Dec. 4.—One confession yesterday at Whitewater, making 34 added there; 68 added to the churches that I have been serving this year. Organized two Christian Endeavor Societies which are growing numerically and spiritually. The Sunday schools are in a splendid condition. One church debt has been paid. The missionary collections taken amounted to more than $100.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

We are almost free from debt, and with the addition of many strong helpers, we are planning for a new house and greater things.—H. C. Runyan.

Vanceburg, Dec. 8.—Five added recently—three by confession and two by letter. December 10, I will begin a meeting for Brother Thomason, Portsmouth, which will be my third meeting in the interest of the four years' crusade.—S. S. McGill.

Latonia, Dec. 8.—Two additions at reception given this week to Brother Riley, making 49 in all The church is happy and is planning for greater things.—H. C. Runyan.

MISSISSIPPI.

McComb City, Dec 4.—Two added last night—one confession and one from Baptists. Five added since last report, and five in a meeting at Jackson.—W. W. Phares.

MISSOURI.

Joplin, Dec. 4.—D. W. Moore, pastor of the South Street Church, Springfield, helped us in a short meeting which resulted in 52 additions, 30 of them a net gain to our people Our chief purpose was the spiritual culture of the church.—W. F. Turner.

La Grange Dec. 1.—One addition at Emerson; 3 additions at Newark since last report. T. A. Hedges.

Shelbyville, Dec. 4. Six additions by letter at regular services; we will have our meeting in February, with Lawrence Wright at the helm.—C. E. Wagner, pastor.

Richards, Dec. 4—Four additions at Brother Sterling's regular appointment.—O. L. Fouts.

Buffalo Dec. 5—Our work is very encouraging. We had 4 additions Dec. 3.—J. Q. Biggs.

Ridgeley, Dec. 7.—Two baptized here. House repaired. Church encouraged. Unanimous call to us to serve them another year.—H. E. Ballou.

Kirksville Dec. 6.—Five additions since last report; 4 baptisms. The county sheriff and wife were of the number.—D. A. Wickizer, pastor.

Carrolton, Dec. 5.—We immersed 5 young ladies at Milan Dec. 4.—J. J. Limerick.

Bethany, Dec. 5.—I am in a good meeting here. Thirty additions the first week.—R. H. Fife.

Columbia, Dec. 4.—We have just closed our year's work with two Howard county churches, New Hope and Mount Pleasant, with 34 additions. We will continue for 1906.—B. F. Goslin.

Clinton, Dec. 4.—I have just closed a meeting at New Hampton with 46 additions. J. T A'sup is the efficient pastor.—G. W. Terrell.

Dearborn, Dec. 5.—W. A. Oldham, of Nortonville, Kansas, closed a 10 days' meeting at Bethel, Mo., resulting in 8 baptisms.—R. E. Callithan.

Neosho, Dec. 6.—We have had 4 additions since taking this work 3 weeks ago. Crowded house at every service.—F. F. Walters.

Laddonia, Dec. 11.—Simpson Ely, of Joplin, is assisting us in a meeting: good interest and 3 added to date.—J. D Greer.

Seymour, Dec. 8.—E. W. Yocum, of Mountain Grove, has just closed a two weeks' meeting resulting in 8 confessions.—W. S. Gentry.

NEBRASKA.

Lexington, Dec. 5.—Our meeting with Joel Brown, evangelist, and Mrs. Hormel as singer, closed Nov. 29 with 35 added.—D. B. Titus.

Beaver City, Nov. 30.—Our meeting closed with 26 added by baptism 17, by letter and statement, 9. The church now has a membership of over 200, this being the second meeting held this year. While S. V. Williams and wife, of La Porte, Ind, were with us, they held a splendid meeting. Somewhat of a drawback, however, was that the members were very busy at this time of the year, and the minister confined to his bed during almost the entire meeting, with inflammatory rheumatism, thus being unable to attend to the duties developing upon him. Yet the people were edified, the church greatly enthused, and souls converted to Christ.—D. S. Domer minister.

NEW MEXICO.

Artesia, Dec. 4.—Our new pastor, E. H. Holmes, has begun his work; two additions by letter yesterday.—D. W. Robertson, clerk.

NEW YORK.

Buffalo, Dec 11.—At a large union Thanksgiving service held in our house of worship yesterday at my suggestion, the gospel invitation was extended, to which 2 responded—both to unite with the Jefferson Street Church. Such a thing has never been done in the city, I am told. The sermon was preached by Brother Loyd, of the Northampton Street M. E. Church.—B. S. Ferrall

Buffalo, Dec. 8—I exchanged pulpits with Bro. W. C. Bower, of Tonawanda, last Sunday evening greatly to my delight. There were 2 confessions at Jefferson Street last Lord's day.—B. S. Ferrall.

OHIO.

Tiffin, Dec. 7—One added at our regular service, Dec. 3, by letter. Adam K. Adcock.

New Philadelphia, Dec. 4.—We have just closed a three weeks' meeting, with 16 additions. The church is very much strengthened. Grant W. Speer was the evangelist.—C. B. Reynolds, minister.

Hamilton, Dec. 4. Two confessions and 1 addition by statement yesterday at the Lindenwald church; 12 since last report—6 by confession, 6 by statement or letter.—W. H. Hedges.

Athens, Dec. 4—We closed our meeting with 20 added, mostly baptisms.—T. L. Lowe.

Ravenna, Dec. 4.—Six additions by letter since last report. I assisted J. S. Ross in a short meeting at Braceville recently. Of the 12 confessions 9 were young men.—M. E. Chatley, pastor.

Galion, Dec. 4.—Meeting closed yesterday with 32 confessions and 2 by letter. Bruce Brown, of Mansfield, was the preacher. Besides spending two days a week doing pastoral work in Mansfield he preached to his own congregation on Sunday morning. The results were splendid in view of this. A floating indebtedness of $350 was provided for. We are now planning to build next summer.—Chas A. Pearce.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Connellsville, Nov. 29—Closed with 131 additions and the new converts contributing, in pledges, about $800 towards the coming year's expenses. It is a growing missionary church led by an earnest and capable man, Chas. M. Watson. Bro. J. P. Garmong was with me as singer. The leading feature of the meeting was our large men's services on Sunday afternoons and the number of business and professional men who united with the church. I spend a few weeks before Christmas in my sister's home at Caney, Kansas, and shall assist the church there in a short meeting. During January we co-operate with the church at Council Bluffs, Ia., and in February will follow the dedication of the new church at Streator, Ill., with a meeting. Have an open date for March, 1906.—Wm. J. Lockhart, evangelist, permanent address Des Moines, Iowa

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR CHRIST.—Matt. 2:1-12.

Led by the wonderful star, the magi from the east came to Bethlehem where the new-born King of the Jews was, and paid to him their tribute of gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. Little knew they of the marvelous secret wrapped up in that infant life, or how that, through centuries yet unborn, increasing myraids of the sons of men, of every clime and tongue, would bring their offerings to lay at his feet. Still less did they suspect that his name should become the supreme one of all time, and the one through whose magic power salvation should become possible to a sinful and dying race. What inspiration may we gather from their offerings, to bring to Christ, at this Christmas season, our own gifts of adoration and love? Let us see.

1. We should bring the gold of our possessions. For it all belongs to him, and we are but stewards of his wealth. He it is who gives us the power of getting wealth. In asking for our means, he is but asking for his own. (Psa. 24:1; 50:10-12; 1 Cor. 10:25, 26.) If the disciples of Christ would on this one Christmas but recognize fully their obligation to the Lord in the use of their wealth, the gifts they would bring would prove ample to establish a thousand churches that are now feeble, build a thousand houses of worship for homeless congregations, double the number of our missionaries in the home and foreign fields, give to every worthy college an adequate endowment, largely increase the resources of our benevolences, and make it possible for every aged and dependant minister of the Gospel to enjoy the comforts of life for the remnant of his days on earth. To withhold our money is to dishonor the Savior, and he is being thus dishonored by thousands of our brethren and sisters who call themselves Christians.

2. We should bring the frankincense of our love. This fragrant gum, whose sweet odor arose before the altar as a symbol of the pure devotion of the worshiper, suggests the deep affection which will manifest itself at this Christmas season for the Christ-Child. In ten thousand churches will the children gather and sing their Chrismas carols, and recite their little stories of the Babe of Bethlehem. Choirs and congregations will mingle their voices in anthem and chant and psalm. From the pulpits will sound out again the beautiful story of the Shepherds, and the Wise Men, and the humble stable of the Inn, and the tender babe upon his mother's bosom. Eyes will grow moist and hearts warm with forgotten sentiments of kindness and affection. The love of God will be revived within us, and we will feel that every man is a brother, and every child our own sweet lamb. Let it be a time for the cultivation of love among all the children of men. Jesus Christ will count this as the best way of expressing our love for him. (Matt. 25:34-40; 1 John 3:14-18).

3. We should bring the myrrh of suffering. The bitter myrrh was used of old for embalming the bodies of the dead, and it has ever been associated in the minds of men with suffering and sorrow. And the world is full of such experiences. Every life has its bitter cup to drink. Even the Master shrank from this cup in the dark garden. Yet he gained the victory, because he brought his spirit into such close harmony with the Father as to say, "Not my will, but thine, be done." So let us bring all our griefs and burdens unto the Lord, who will count them as gifts, because he delights to comfort and strengthen the weak. Like the mother welcoming to her bosom the hurt and weeping child, does the Lord invite his troubled children to himself, the eternal refuge. (Psa. 46:1; Matt. 11: 28, 29; 1 Peter 5:7.) Thus will our Christmas season be filled with the peace and joy of the Christ, and other lives will catch their holy reflection, and be richer forever after.

THE CHARACTER OF THE MESSIAH.—Isa. 9:2-7.

[Christmas Lesson.]

Memory Verses, 6, 7.

Golden Text.—Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins.—Matt. 1:21.

The Messianic idea runs like a golden thread through the Old Testament. The religious interest of the Hebrews centered rather in the vindication and glorification of Israel, as a holy people, than in the reward of individuals who lived in accordance with the will of God. Wherever we find this thought of the ultimate triumph of the people of God, there we have, in germ at least, the Messianic idea. The hope of the prophets, in the days when Israel's political power was waning, often took the form of a glorious kingdom to be re-established in Zion, whose beauty and grandeur should be the admiration of the whole earth.

Not always was there a distinct reference to the king who should establish this kingdom, and it should be borne in mind that many passages are essentially Messianic although the author had evidently no clear idea of a personal Messiah. In certain well known passages in Isaiah, however, the personal side of it is brought into lively prominence.

It is further to be remembered that the prophets spoke to their own time, not to the distant future. They had a message of courage in times when the souls of men were tried by the thought that the nation—Jehovah's chosen nation, as they firmly believed it to be—was about to go down in utter failure and defeat before the pagan powers of the east. It meant not only defeat for the nation but disgrace for Jehovah. The prophets, after declaring that Jehovah would not hesitate to punish his people for their sins and that these foreign enemies were to be used by him for that very purpose, gave assurance also that the nation's destiny would yet be fulfilled and its glory restored. It was the promise of a present and visible deliverance. The prophets doubtless expected a literal restoration and glorification of the kingdom which never actually came to pass. Many of the Messianic prophecies are colored and controlled by this expectation. The spiritual content of their predictions was fulfilled in Christ, but the details cannot be interpreted as predictions concerning the personal and historical Jesus.

The kings of Damascus and Samaria had united in revolt against the king of Assyria, to whom they both owed allegiance, as the king of Judah also did. The two revolting kings threatened Judah because she would not join in the revolt. Judah appealed to Assyria for help, against Isaiah's advice. It was a time of double peril. The alliance with Assyria was even more dangerous than the enmity of the two northern kingdoms. There seemed to be no way by which Judah could escape the dilemma. Isaiah was disgusted with the weak king Ahaz who had made the matter worse by calling upon Assyria. The low estate of the nation suggested the reassuring promise of a more glorious kingdom which was shortly to come. The miserable inefficiency of Ahaz suggested an emphasis upon the character of the coming king who should rule over the restored kingdom. The expectation of such a king was already current. Isaiah gave it more definite form and applied it to the particular emergency then confronting the nation. And in doing so he uttered words whose deeper meaning went far beyond his own understanding.

Mention this paper.

Do the four titles ascribed to the Messianic king (9:6) define his nature as divine? The question has been much discussed. Neither opinion is a mark of either ignorance or irreverence. Schultz, one of the most distinguished German writers on the theology of the Old Testament, says that "the names as a whole correspond to the predicate theos (God)" and that the promised deliverer "is nothing less than God, in the metaphysical sense of the word." George Adam Smith says that the work of a wise and divinely guided earthly king was all that Isaiah predicted. In any case, it should be borne in mind that the phrase "the mighty God" in the original employs a word which literally means "mighty one," and is not elsewhere applied exclusively to God; that the work of this king as described by the king is a work which a wise and spiritually-minded human king could perform; and that it would be not a little incongruous with Hebrew thought to ascribe deity to a king who was to come to accomplish a work of political deliverance.

The work and character of Jesus were in a very true sense a fulfilment of these predictions of divine help for the people who seek God. The promise of such a Messiah as Jesus actually was, would have been small comfort to Isaiah's contemporaries. But whether he meant it or not, his words are strong enough to bear the meaning which subsequent history has put upon them. And if we read them not as detailed predictions or mechanical proof-texts of the divinity of Jesus, we may well hear in them a clear fore-echo of the Christmas message.

"The more spiritual our notions are of the saving work of Jesus," says G. A. Smith, "the less inclined shall we be to claim the prophecies of Isaiah in proof of his deity . . . Just because we know the proofs of the divinity of Jesus to be so spiritual, do we feel the uselessness of looking for them to prophecies that manifestly describe purely earthly and civil functions."

THE BROTHERHOOD OF MAN.—1 John 2:7-11; 3:12-15.

(A Christmas Missionary Meeting.)

For the Leader.

What day in all our year is more closely associated with the thought of peace and good will between all men than Christmas? This is the anniversary of the night when the angels sang that sweet song of peace on earth and good will to men to the shepherds on the hills of Judea. Upon what fact is this doctrine of the peace that Jesus has brought to us based? Upon the fact that we are all brethren. Does any one draw back from the consequences of this position? It need not be a thing to dread. It is not to be taken in a social way where local conditions would be violated to a degree that harm and ill will instead of good and good will would follow. The brotherhood of man is an underlying principle that enables every one to look upon his fellows in the light of the golden rule: Doing unto men what we would have them do to us. We are to study this topic tonight. What a beautiful subject for our Endeavorers at the Christmastide!

For the Members.

1. It is the doctrine of Christ that his followers love all men. This is called a "new commandment." The world had not hitherto lived by this rule. Friends were to love one another. They were to be true. Persons of a common cause might love one another. Nations bound together by treaty might love one another. That is, the nearest thing in the pre-Christian times to what Christians call love. It was not anything like the love of Christ. But for a man to love all men; for one to love his enemies; for one to do good to those who did him harm; for one to reverse all precedent—this was the unusual, the new, teaching of Jesus.

2. Was this position of Jesus an accident? Did it flash upon him like an idea upon an inventor? Not at all. Jesus held this position because he knew the whole of nature. He knew the foundations of all knowledge. He could unfold the relations of men to one another and the world in which they lived. He knew that what men thought of how one should treat one who injured him was erroneous. The feeling of returning evil for evil he knew to fail in the thing it was expected to accomplish. It would seem that his reasoning would be stated about as follows: There is one God. He created all things. He is Lord of all. This order in which we live is from him. It is for a purpose. Everything proceeding from him, everything is related. Instead of antagonism, there is kinship everywhere. God, then, is Father of all. We are not only his children, but we are all brethren. To harm one another is to harm the whole order, and to do great injury to oneself as well as the one against whom we proceed.

3. This teaching of Jesus enabled the world to see the proper relationship between men. Because he made manifest things, enabled us to see them, he is called the Light. And when John says, "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light," he has this in mind. Jesus is, then, the great light. He is also called the true light. He enables us to see how we are related to all the people in the world. He tells us how to live to help them. He tells us how to so live that we will do ourselves the greatest good: to love all men; to do good unto all: to pray for our enemies: to do unto all men the things that we would have them do unto us. May God help us to receive this message. For it is the very thing that the world practically disbelieves today. But it is the best way to live. It is the only way to live in harmony with the order of which we are a part. When we live otherwise we are injuring ourselves. Why can we not receive this doctrine from our Lord and be happy? Why can we not walk in the light and see our way?

4. Darkness is the way of all who do evil for evil. It is the way of the commercial world today. Does anyone take issue with this? Well, then, let him show an instance of a firm that was injured by some other firm that did not retaliate. Let him show that it is the rule to meet the injuries received in the spirit of the Master. Even nations live together in armed peace. One discrimination brings another. When one individual says, "Just wait; I'll get even with him, if it takes me a lifetime," in what way is he walking? In the way of darkness. He is walking in the way of death; death to himself, and death to his fellow. The soul is blighted when it is ever kept on a war footing by such a feeling. There is too much of this darkness in our churches. It is destroying the sweetness of the fellowship and defeating the ends of Christ in us. It is even in some Endeavor Societies. Here it works its death to friendships; to the growth of the society; to the good work of the young people; to the growth of all in the spirit and knowledge of the Christ. Let us dispel this midnight from our souls. Let us love one another as we should for the sake of him who died for us.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Am I willing to get down upon my knees and earnestly ask the Lord to help me to live by the golden rule which only our Savior gave to men?

A LOVELY COMPLEXION

New York Lady Proves That Every Woman May Have it by Using Cuticura Soap.

Mrs. R. Reichenberg, wife of the well-known jeweler of 146 Fulton St., New York, says: "I had a friend who was justly proud of her complexion. When asked what gave her such a brilliant and lovely complexion, she replied, 'A healthy woman can be sure of a fine skin if she will do as I do, use plenty of Cuticura Soap and water.' She insisted that I follow her example, which I did with speedy conviction. I find that Cuticura Soap keeps the skin soft, white and clear, and prevents redness and roughness."

The Holy Spirit.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

John says: "Try the spirits, for many false spirits have gone out into the world." If they are to be "tried" there must be some standard by which to try them. That standard must be the Word of God come in the flesh as "the light of the world." Not a light but the light. If the light, there is not another. The confession that Jesus is the Son of God is the acceptance of him as the all and in all—prophet, priest and king. If our king, he controls by enacting laws, setting up a government and appointing his officers, his exchequer, etc, As priest, he makes atonement for man and brings in reconciliation with God. As prophet, he becomes our teacher—our Master, and directs us in all our ways. If he is our only king, and our only priest, he is our only teacher also.

If the Holy Spirit comes as a pedagogue he leads by, or through, Christ. There is reason in the saying of Jesus, "He shall testify of me." It is the only philosophy of spiritual influence. We speak when we testify. The Spirit speaks the truth. Truth is something spoken—declared. God is true, but not truth. What a true being speaks is truth. The word of a true God is truth. Jesus says, "I am the truth," and John says he is the word, and Jesus says the word is truth. The spirit of truth is the spirit of the word. None can get the spirit of the truth without the word. The spirit of truth is the Holy Spirit, and therefore the Holy Spirit must come and operate by the word.

Men are sanctified by the word; therefore, men can not be sanctified without the word. If the Spirit sanctifies it must do it by the word—by expression and not impression. "What he has heard that shall he speak." What he had heard was the word of God, therefore what he speaks is the word of God. His testimony is the things he says. He speaks through men to man. "Holy men spake as moved by the Holy Spirit." "The spirit of Christ," which was in the prophets, spoke the same things which it spoke by the evangels of the New Testament, and the prophets had to search through what was spoken to understand its teaching, and failing, they concluded its ministry was not for themselves, but for those of a coming dispensation. when the revelations of the Spirit would be more full. (1 Pet. 1:9-12.) The testimony of the Spirit in the prophets was given in words which the people must hear—to which they must give ear. Neh. 9:29,30.) As he testifies to men of his guilt so must he bear witness of his hopes by promises. No man knows the things of God save the Spirit of God, and the apostles spoke these things by the Spirit which was in them in the words of the Spirit. (1 Cor. 2:13.) These words were full of promises for the obedient and threatenings for the disobedient. From the influence of these promises man purges himself from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, and through fear from the threatenings by the same spirit perfects holiness. (2 Cor. 7:14.) Inspiration of the Spirit caused the prophets and apostles to speak not to feel, and through the promises and threatenings spoken by them we, who receive, by faith in the word spoken, the knowledge of the truth, receive the spirit of truth; but if we receive a misunderstanding we receive the spirit of error and the man who is led by the truth the Spirit has spoken is led by the Spirit. But if he fails to understand it, and is led by that misunderstanding, he is led by a false spirit.

1 John 4:1 says, "Believe not every spirit; but try the spirits whether they be of God, for many false prophets are gone out into the world." A false spirit makes a false prophet—teacher. If we must try them it must be by some standard. That standard is not our feelings, desires Christ as embodied in the word born or emotions, but our faith in Jesus of his lips, made flesh, who once dwelt among us; but to whom is now given all power and authority, and because of his promises which come through his divine power we put on his divine nature. The divine power was the power of the Holy Spirit in the prophets and the apostles by which the promises came to the lost, and having this hope, founded upon our faith (not our impressions), we purify ourselves even as he is pure, (1 John 3:1-3.) Thus we receive the Spirit by faith in the word. The written word was to make their comfort full. (1 John 1:4.)

Our knowledge that we have eternal life comes not by the spiritual impressions, but by the written word (1 John 5-13). Whoever is led by the word written by the Spirit is led by the Spirit. The fruit of that Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, etc., but love, joy, peace, etc., are not the Spirit. These graces are cultivated by the men on account of the promises. (2 Pet. 1:1.) Before the Spirit came Jesus said the Father would send him to those who prayed for it, but when that Spirit had once come he would remain—"remain always"—remain in the temple and go to the world from the temple in the word—the truth preached since God saves the world by preaching, and not by divine prerogatives. Any conception of any impressiveness of the Spirit since prophecies ceased makes Mormonism not only possible, but very probable. What right have I to say that God leads me by the impacts of his spirit and deny the same experience in the Mormon, Mohammedan or any others? The Spirit leads no one but by speech, and that speech is the word of God, and the man who hears and obeys is led by faith.

On this subject we have had much trouble in days agone. Brother Russell, of Jacksonville, a man of sweet spirit and fruitful imagination, with a few associates, went off and founded a faction in the church, but were met by men of less learning from the schools, but a far better understanding of revelation, and they lost their following and were driven to the Baptists, where they really belonged. Could we understand that the promise of the Spirit in answer to prayer was not made after he had come to testify to the truth, or of the truth, we would be on the way to a better undersanding of this subject. I would like to write more fully, were it not that space for the discussion of these themes is wanting in our newspapers. Having treated the subject at some length in a book I have published, I refer the reader to that.

Hamilton, Ill. J. Carroll Stark.

[We call the attention of the "Biblical Criticism Department" of the "Christian Standard," under charge of Professor McGarvey, to the foregoing article, as furnishing all the evidence needed, perhaps, of our claim that there are still those among us who teach that the operation of the Holy Spirit today is confined to the word. It is the remnant of an outgrown philosophy which taught that no idea or impression could get into the mind of a man except through words.

Brother Stark calls attention to the fact that "we have had much trouble in days agone" on the subject of the Holy Spirit, and mentions one instance. He might have mentioned the fact that we have hundreds of churches perishing, or living a miserable, impoverished life, because of the false, legalistic teaching which practically cuts off direct communication between the soul and God and imprisons it within the narrow walls of legalism. That is the chief trouble we have had. Just as fast as our churches are discarding this dead formalism and are entering into the life of the Spirit they are coming into power and fruitfulness in the Christian life. We undertake no reply to Brother Stark's article. The truth there is in it speaks for itself; while the error it contains also replies to itself for our readers. We will only say this: The trying of the spirits and views of the Spirit by the standard of the word of God, and especially by the Word that became flesh and dwelt among us, is precisely what we are advocating. Back to Christ's teaching on the Holy Spirit iis our plea.—Editor.

"The Gospel Wagon."

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Bro. J. W. Harrison, of the "Gospel Wagon," has done a good work for the cause of Christ and humanity in his unique journey from New York to Atlanta, Ga., and back, and now on his way to San Francisco. He informs me that it is his purpose (D. V.) to spend the winter somewhere in the neighborhood of Centralia, Mo., and proceed on his journey in the spring. I have known Brother and Sister Harrison for more than forty years. I baptized both of them in the city of Melbourne, Australia, in 1864, and both became active members of the church at once, as indicated in The Christian-Evangelist. When I commenced my work for Christ in England, in 1875, they resided in Liverpool, and had lost none of their "first love" and zeal, but were still the same earnest, active Christians as in bygone days.

Brother Harrison is sound in "the faith," and is an earnest, active, godly man of good speaking ability (having had considerable experience in Australia, England and this country) and is of unblemished character. His soul is fired with the love of Christ and the earnest desire to do all he can to advance the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom and to save his fellow man. He is also a lifelong abstainer, and a devoted advocate of temperance, purity and righteousness. Any country church or churches in need of a preacher, would do well to secure his services, for they would be blessed by his ministry. Sister Harrison, who journeys with him, is his true and faithful helper in his "work of faith and labor of love."

A PREACHER'S DISCOVERY.

Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., Atlanta, Ga., is the discoverer of a successful remedy for the cure of Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness, Bronchitis and Asthma. It consists of a combination of medicinal herbs, roots and leaves, which are burned on a plate, smoked in a common clay pipe or in a medical cigarette—the fumes being inhaled into the throat and lungs and exhaled through the nose. It contains no tobacco. The manner of its use is simple, and no other means can so easily reach and cure the disease in all its forms. Dr. Blosser offers to mail free a liberal sample to any sufferer who will write to him for it. If your case is a stubborn one and you desire special advice, he makes no extra charge. This remedy has met with wonderful success, curing cases of even 25 years' standing.

If you wish a box containing a month's treatment, send $1.00, and it will be sent, postage paid. Address, Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

HOWE.

With the death of Daniel R. Howe, at Eureka, Ill., Nov. 18, 1905, "a prince and a great man in Israel" has fallen. He was born in Wilmington, Ohio, July 24, 1819, and of his more than 86 years, 51 were given to the active ministry of the Gospel. In 1835 he came with his parents to Bureau county, Ill., and three years later went to Green county, Wisconsin, where he taught the first public school in that county. His first regular pastorate was in Princeton, Ill., from 1849 to 1859. In 1860 he was elected to the State Legislature, and was one of the staunch and loyal supporters of the great War-Governor Yates. But D. R. Howe was too zealous a citizen of Christ's kingdom to be drawn into a devotion to Cæsar's service, however tempting the rewards, and at the end of his legislative term he took charge of the Christian church in Springfield. From that time forth he preached the Word, in season and out of season, in labors, trials and fruits abundant. He was always on the firing line—one of the pioneers who led the way of civilization in the fertile wilderness of Illinois; one of the pioneers who followed Lincoln in the crusade for the abolition of slavery; one of the pioneers who followed Alexander Campbell in the crusade against sectarian bigotry and formalism. He "took no leaf from our American gospel of compromise," as Wendell Phillips would say. No man need misunderstand his message or his purpose. With him Christ was the end of the law for righteousness—social, economic and civic righteousness. He had the zeal for right and the hatred of wrong which characterized the old prophets of Israel. His home had been for some ten years in Eureka, where he was held in reverence by all the people, and a great concourse assembled to participate in the last solemn rites, conducted by Pastor A. W. Taylor and the writer. We laid him to rest in the cemetery in Washington, Ill., beside his first wife, who died in 1866.

B. J. Radford.

KEITH.

Prof. J. C Keith, late professor of the Bible department of Bethany College, died at his home in Bethany, W. Va., Nov. 28. He had been ill for nearly a year, having been stricken with paralysis last January. His body was laid to rest in the Campbell cemetery on the afternoon of Thanksgiving day.

SHEPPARD.

Died at Kenoma, Mo., Sister Sarah Sheppard, the beloved wife of Bro. R. T. Sheppard, aged 40 years, 3 months and 9 days. Sister Sheppard was a devoted Christian, a loving mother and a faithful wife. Funeral services at the Christian church were conducted by R. B Havener, after which her remains were laid to rest in the Oakton cemetery.

WEBB.

Edith Filds was born in Orange Co., Ind., May 15, 1820, and died at Santa Monica, Cal., Oct. 22, 1904. She was married to Geo. W. Webb in 1837, to which union eleven children were born, eight of them surviving her. G. W. Webb, her husband, died in 1881. Her early life was spent in Orange county, Ind. After her husband's death she moved to Nebraska, later to Medford, Oregon, where she and her children did much toward establishing the Christian church. The last few years of her life were spent in southern California. Her Savior alone can comprehend the influence of such a wonderful life lived for him.

Where the Old Home Used to Be.

Naught can make the worn heart warmer
Than the visions of the charmer
In thy castle, Memory.
Ah, the pictures glowing, glowing,
And the snowing, snowing, snowing
All about the Christmas-tree
Where the old home used to be!

There are smile, and song and laughter,
From the ceiling to the rafter,
In thy castle Memory;
There are loved ones in their places,
There are fond and lovely faces
Where the old home used to be,
And the glorious Christmas-tree!

All the swift descending glory
Of home's stainless dream and story
Crowns thy castle, Memory!
And is wrought from out thy bosom,
Wondrous fruit and wondrous blossom,
Song of sky and song of sea,
Where the old home used to be!

There is romping in the meadows
Where the daisies left their shadows
Sunn'd and 'broidered of thee;
There's the June of joy and gladness,
There's the sorrow and the sadness,
For some forms we could not see
Where the old home used to be!

There's the beauty of dominion,
Of faith dropt from angel pinion,
In thy castle, Memory;
There's the gold of hearts we treasure
With delight's unstinted measure,
The immortal dowery
Of the home that used to be!

Lies the village church in splendor
Of the sunset warm and tender,
Rainbow'd in the memory.
Ah, the yesternight, when mother
Led me there as leads no other
Where the old home used to be,
And the glorious Christmas-tree!

The Spending of Money

By Walter Williams.

Money is made to be spent. There is no other purpose in its acquirement. Money is a means, not an end. Only the miser hoards dollars, and is despicable thereby. Fertilizing material accumulated in a heap breeds noisome pestilence; spread abroad over the land it makes rose gardens of the desert. Money is fertilizing material, a commercial fertilizer. Money is the lifeblood of commerce. It is only as blood circulates through veins and arteries that it fulfiills its mission. Congestion follows over-supply in any one spot. The circulation of blood in man is parallel in purpose to the spending of money in the body politic. The bank account is the base of supplies, a kind of ammunition wagon in the battle of life. But money, whether gold or silver or wampum, is merely cartridge, shell or powder, never victory. To think otherwise is to set up a golden calf as god and to make idols of bank balances. Money is valuable only when it is spent. In itself it is a thing to be despised. It can not be eaten or drunk, nor will it clothe the naked. Money neither loves nor hates. It affords none of the sweet influences of friendship nor the comforts of home. But spent, it does provide food and clothing and drink, a rooftree and a book, a bed and a picture. Toil is transmuted into money. There is pleasure in the toil itself and profit aside from its commercial value. There is joy in labor. But there is not profit in the money except for what it may bring.

A certain Jew, whose proverbs have always been held in high esteem, said 3,000 years ago: "A fool and his money are soon parted." The proverb has been quoted for thirty centuries as an injunction against spending money. Now, provtion against ever half truths. If the Jew meant the sage sentence as a warning against extravagance, well and good. If he intended it as a precept in defense of miserliness, it is out of place in any essay upon ethics. Judicious extravagance is a virtue, not a vice. A certain backwoodsman asked in a book store for a copy of the new novel, "To Git and to Keep," meaning, of course, Mary Johnston's story of love and longing, "To Have and to Hold." It is not backwoodsmen, but rather dwellers in the city, who make "To Git and to Keep" a life motto. They thus miss life's meaning further than the unread fellow missed the title of the volume he desired. In fleeing the Scylla of spendthrift, they are wrecked upon the rock of Charybdis, which is miserliness. The world has ever preferred the man who parted with his money to him who clung greedily to every coin. In the Great Teacher's parable, the prodigal who had spent all his inheritance got a big dinner, a gold ring and a new suit of clothes. The elder brother, who had never spent a cent, did not even sit down to the feast, growled about the spending of the money and remained outside the kingdom.

The accent in education has been too long placed upon making money. The phrase which the thriftless William Shakspeare placed in the mouth of "Polonius" is the keynote to civilization of the commercial kind: "Put money in thy purse." Get money—honestly, if you can, but—get money. The result is, getting takes the place of giving. The economy of the highest living is replaced by the lowest form of selfishness. Competition succeeds co-operation. There is wrong here. "The devil take the hindmost" is ever the devil's motto. "I take the hindmost" is in accord with the noblest life. Education needs a reversal. The science of distribution ought to be emphasized as well as the age of acquisition. Indeed, the art is learned without teaching. The primary form of life is the jellyfish, continually absorbing. The highest of human existence is a Christ, giving away even his life. Evolution goes from jellyfish to gentleman.

A fool may make money. Only a wise man can spend it aright. The ignoramus looks upon dollars as little gold or silver gods, to be worshiped for their own sake. The sage sees through them what they can procure for his own or his neighbor's health of body, mind and soul. In the curriculum of every college should be a professorship of spending money, a course in liberality. No discouragement of the acquisitive habit should be permitted. Money-making is precedent in point of time to money-spending. Only the idiot spends his money before he has it, and only the idiot undervalues money. Money is power, leisure, opportunity, only as it is spent. The man who had sixpence, declared glum old Thomas Carlyle, was lord of all the earth to the extent of that sixpence. True, but not while he kept the sixpence in his pockets, only as he spent it.

The spending of money requires discrimination. Discrimination is the secret of happiness and usefulness in all life. Selection is the keynote to success. It is there that a great heart and a wise head give manifestation of existence. A man's character can not be determined by the amount of money he makes, but by the use to which he applies it. It is not the number and amount of the bank deposit certificates which decide as to a man's wisdom and real wealth, but the number and amount and purpose of the checks he issues. Liberally requires discrimination or it degenerates into reckless extravagance. It is not improvidence that needs emphasis for avoidance, but rather indiscrimination in expenditure. As any one can make money to a greater or less extent, so anybody can throw it away. Careful study and some practice are required to learn how to throw dollars in order to hit the right mark.

The successful business man has found the value of spending money long before he became successful. Indeed, success in business is founded upon liberality. In advertising, in salaries in store rent, in all the disbursements which bring rich returns, he has been liberal, sometimes apparently to the verge of reckless extravagance. The result is shown, however, in increased business, in larger sales, in additional prosperity. He simply decided not that he must spend money, but that he must spend it wisely. The difference between the merchant prince and the mercantile failure lies along here. The same principle holds good in all branches of life. The price must be paid.

Women are more economical than men. The extravagance of the eternal feminine has always been a favorite jest of the paragraphists from Joe Miller to the last resurrectionist of jokes. It is really, however, all a jest. Man, who commonly makes the money for the household, generally spends it more profusely than woman, and much less wisely. The economist of the average home is the wife and mother. She makes a dollar go farther than a man does. She has to do it. The bargain counter appeals to her not altogether because of the shopping habit, but because of the financial necessity. The average man would have more money at the end of the year if he placed his whole earnings in his wife's hands instead of a pittance for household purposes. The man practices economy in large things, the woman in small ones. As there are more small things than large ones met with in the coures of a year's expenditures, so the man has fewer opportunities than the woman to practice economy of his special kind. The man goes into a store and buys the first article which he comes to, or certainly the second or third. He seldom leaves the store without purchasing something and usually with little regard to the price. The woman regards herself derelict in duty if she buys in the first store she visits. The salesman would prefer one man as a customer to a dozen women. Indeed, it may be said that there is more profit in one man who buys thus readily than in ninety and nine women who wander around bargain counters and remnant sales. A woman finds her chief enjoyment in saving money for months and then spending it in a single lump. It is the reaction of extravagance from economy. The man, on the contrary, after foolish small expenditures of money, denies him something of real, large and permanent value—and sets himself down in his own opinion as practicing economy.

The spending of money requires more care in small things than in large ones. The little foxes spoil the vines, the little leaks sink the ship. The man with an income of $500 a year has more reason for discrimination than the forunate possesor of $5,000. Human nature usually acts differently. The nickels are expended with much less care and thought than the dollars. There is a superstitious objection to "breaking a bill," because small change slips through the pocket so easily. Not only is the reverse of this behavior wise for prudential and provident reasons, but for other causes. "Take care of the pennies and the pounds will take care of themselves" is a trite proverb. The man who discriminates wisely in little things will have no difficulty in spending aright large amounts.

There are certain rich folks and those less wealthy who wait until they are dead to spend their money and then some one else spends it for them. In this behavior there is a certain hoggishness. Among animals all except the hog possess some value while alive. The hog must be killed to be any account. So with hoarders and holders of wealth. Such people, because of their inordinate selfishness, usually drift away from the place in the other world where gold is only used for cobblestones and diamonds for hinges on the gates. Andrew Carnegie has said that a millionaire who dies a millionaire dies disgraced, and Mr. Carnegie is endeavoring to avoid disgrace by making constant gifts to various worthy objects. There is belief that wealth is never owned, but merely held in trust. This belief causes the highest manifestation of the art of money-spending. For he who holds his money merely in trust as steward will spend it that his stewardship may not be of wise accounting. It is not so much what a man gives away that determines his liberality, but what he keeps. The stewardship theory would place all at the disposal of those who need. There is no surer test of a gentleman than the way he spends his money. If he owes a debt he pays it gladly, never grudgingly. If he gives presents he makes the recipient feel he confers a favor by its acceptance. If he has only a dollar to spend he spends it as though he had a million. He owns his money and is never owned by it. The gentleman has money in trust and never his trust in money.

Money is the least valuable of man's possessions, however he count it chief. Paid out it may purchase happiness for others, temporal good and joy. With it can be bought clothing for the naked, food for the hungry, shelter for the homeless. It may build hospitals and asylums, schools and churches, roads and harbors, and all that makes the highway of life smoother and man's home more comfortable. But no money can purchase love though millions are expended. And love is the greatest thing in the world. Money may build mansions, but it can not fill them with laughter and glad song. Money may construct bridges, but it can not cause swift feet to run across them, leaving sorrow behind. Money may set a golden spire as giant finger beckoning to a higher life, but the heart of man in which he dwells always is unreached by the beckonings.

Man is a steed for service to all who need to be carried upward. He may justly expend upon himself only such sum as shall keep him well groomed for the long and arduous race. If tinsel trapping is added thereunto these are but impediments in the race. Money hoarded or selfishly expended is weight, money spent is wings. It answers the purpose of the hostler to put the animal man in best condition or it hamstrings him on the highway. The misspent coin rusts itself and tarnishes all it touches. Covetousness, meanest of all sins save ingratitude, grows by money holding.

The character of civilization is determined by its use of money. Cicero lamented that the Eternal City paid out its coins for luxury and licentiousness. In Tasso's time the great artist who painted the Sistine Chapel was carried to his lodging place on the shoulders of the citizens who bought the hairs of his brush at fabulous prices for mementos. In the days of Isabella only she was found to pawn jewels for a new world's discovery. Here and there all through the civilization of the present day have risen men like Lord Shaftesbury, who have used vast wealth for help of those most poor. These men and their deeds are the oases in the desert of commercialism, the wells of living water which satisfy the deep thirst of humanity for something more refreshing than the golden sands. The man who lets a dollar stand between him and a new and helpful past, between him and the drying of an orphan's tears. between him and a noble deed of love and mercy, is a miser to the extent of that dollar. But he who spends a penny to relieve distress, to afford joy, to make a child happy, though but for a moment, is to that extent a philanthropist. Poverty is always a letter of introduction to his friendship, a letter of credit which he honors as long as his bank balance is unspent.

"Money talks" is a favorite phrase of the streets. Did the coin which idly rests in the safe deposit vault have ready speech it would preach a sermon. It would tell of its coming fresh and shining from the mint, of its going over the counter to its first owner, of its slipping into a dark pocket, of its coming out into the sunshine to gladden a child, to relieve a widow's distress. It would speak of its employment in lifting debt, in providing food, in making a great enterprise possible. While it moved around its coming always did good. Who is now helped by it in hiding? It turned the wheels of commerce, unlocked the debtor's prison house, unbarred the windows and let in the sunshine of prosperity. All this when the coin was expended.

The people of ancient faith brought a certain proportion of their wealth to the priest who placed it in the temple as altar gold. The world may learn this lesson of the use and obligation of money. It is all altar gold, to be held in stewardship for the demands which church and school and state and humanity's life make upon it. Only in this way is money of its largest value. The man who has a penny owes an obligation to every other man in the world to the extent of that penny. He who has a million dollars has no different obligation, but only a larger one.

Nobody needs advice on money-getting. The constant clamor of business is lesson perpetual upon this subject. Nobody needs advice to spend money selfishly or reck-habit is strong in humanity. Nobody needs adiv to spend money selfishly or recklessly or with undue extravagance. Human nature teaches this lesson every waking hour. But there is need of frequent exhortation to spend money wisely and with liberal hand. Every woman is a miser at heart and man is the son of his mother. Spending money is not human nature, but divine. God is the great spendthrift. He is liberal with air and sunshine, with wind and dew. He fills the earth with soil and precious stones. He stores the sky with sun and stars. He gives life to all his children, not a starved and pinched and famished existence, but life more abundantly.

To accumulate wealth is a virtue. The gospel of thrift is a genuine gospel. To be owned by the accumulated wealth, small though it be, or great, is a vice. Only he who spends really has what he spends.—Columbia Herald.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week with the Woodneys.

SIXTH EVENING.

In the meantime, Luther Woodney and his mother had entered the kitchen. Bonaparte stood at the pump, knocking his nose against the handle. "You'd better not come in here, Benjamin," his wife called excitedly. Old Mrs. Woodney, with little steps, crept through the inner door, always looking behind her to make sure she could escape in case the horse threatened a quick retreat. "Now, who would have thought," Luther exclaimed, in great admiration, "that that horse could amble over the front porch with the floor half out! Father, this beast will prove a treasure yet!" The horse, apparently insensible of his surroundings, continued to fondle the pump-handle. As he stood at some distance, he was obliged to stretch out his long, thin neck to its utmost, and in this attitude, gaunt, forlorn, and sore, he extended half the width of the room.

"He must be gotten out immediately," exclaimed Mrs. Geraldine, "and at any cost! I wish Mr. Worth Acre would hurry and come."

"I don't need him or anybody else," said Luther confidently. "I'll simply lead him out. Come on Bonaparte, the house is no place for you, my boy!"

Some of the ropes which had kept Bonaparte in his bed, still hung from his limbs and body. Luther fastened one about the bony neck, and pulled hard. Just then the front door was darkened by a cloud of witnesses. They were Mr. and Mrs. Wren and their six children, and old Mrs. Wren.

"We saw Mace running—" began fat little Mrs. Wren, who was greatly out of breath.

"I said, 'something is wrong—'" interrupted Mrs. Wren.

"A horse in the house!" cried old Mrs. Wren. "Now what is that for? Hadn't you better get him out, just as quick as you can?"

"I will lead him right out," said Luther, pulling on the halter. Bonaparte, with nose pressed stubbornly against the pump, began to describe a circle.

Old Mrs. Wren continued: "Mrs. Woodney, we had the funniest experience a little while ago! A tramp—"

Puss Wren interposed with, "You ought to see him! He scary, he's so ragged and dirty. He came to our house—"

"Look out there!" shouted Maria Tucker and her sister Helen in a breath. In describing his circle Bonaparte had sidled up to the dining table. He now crowded his poor rib-marked side against it. The table turned over, and the dishes scattered over the floor, rolling and crashing. Luther dropped the rope, and the horse in mild astonishment turned his head to look at the wreck he had wrought. By one of those strange chances which at times seem to prove that the law of gravitation is not exactly what people suppose, the molasses-stand had fallen apparently without injury, top up; not a drop was spilled. Bonaparte seeing it stand in the midst of desolation, seemed to regard his work as imperfect, for he feebly lifted up his well hind leg and kicked at the stand.

"He is vicious!" exclaimed Mrs. Geraldine, rescuing the molasses-stand.

"No," said Luther, "I think he doesn't understand. Whoa, Bone! Get out of the way, everybody, he's going to knock over the gasoline stove!"

"No, sir!" cried Reginald, grabbing the horse's tail. "You hold to his head, and we'll keep him stationary."

"But we want him out of here immediately!" exclaimed old Mrs. Woodney, raking the dishes from under the horse's feet by means of a broom. "That butterfly cup that Geraldine went to housekeeping with is broken."

"Is it, indeed!" exclaimed Mr. Woodney, who had been patiently waiting in the next room. "Geraldine and I used to say it couldn't be broken!"

"But this isn't the ugly butterfly cup," his wife returned, "this broken cup is the one that had only one little baby butterfly on it."

"He's moving on the gasoline stove!" cried Reginald. "Pa, throw all your weight against his side."

Mr. Wren spread his palms upon the animal's ribs, and threw his weight against them. "Git over!" he cried.

"Papa," said Annie, "you mustn't say 'git,' don't you remember—"

"Sure enough, Annie. Yes, thank you, my dear. Here he comes, Reginald! Git over, there!"

"He will go on and make his circle!" shouted Luther. "He's as strong as an ox! The gasoline stove will have to go!"

"We'll save it!" shouted the Wrens, rushing upon the stove, and beginning to drag it away.

Old Mrs. Wren continued, "And that tramp begged for old clothes or victuals, or anything, and he said—"

"It's the first tramp has been in the village since I don't know when," declared Maria Tucker The horse struck his hoof against a piece of chinaware, and the article was sent bounding over the floor.

"What was that?" exclaimed Mr. Woodney, in distress.

"That," said his wife, "was the butterfly cup; the one with four big fat butterflies crawling up the sides. But it's only nicked."

"Somebody is coming!" exclaimed Helen Wren.

"It's that very tramp!" said Puss, in a hoarse whisper. Peter reinforced his father, as Bonaparte was clearly gaining on them. The stove was heavy, and as the children were pulling at it from different directions, it made little progress.

"He has gone around to our parlor door!" said old Mrs. Woodney, catching a glimpse of the tramp as he passed the window. "What a horrid looking creature! To think of human beings falling so low!"

"He thinks our kitchen door is at the back of the house, no doubt," Mr. Woodney explained.

"Here we are!" cried Mace, as she and Worth Acre ran up to the door. At sight of the blacksmith Bonaparte lay down as if trained to the act.

"Sit on his neck, Mr. Acre!" exclaimed Mrs. Geraldine; "see, he's looking at you to do it!"

A council of war was held, but no decision was reached before the tramp was seen slowly repassing the window. He stopped in the front yard, and looked at the front door. "He is trying to decide," remarked Mace, "which is the back door. Just let him alone; maybe he will go away." The tramp regarded the crocks with an uncertain eye. Presently he once more went back to the parlor-porch in the rear.

"He doesn't know what to think," commented old Mrs. Woodney.

"Everybody lift!" cried Worth Acre, "and we'll have Bonaparte out of here in a jiffy. I wonder if he is thirsty?"

"No," said Luther, "I watered him after dinner. He's just spunky, that's how I regard it. I tell you, the old boy has lots of nerve, yet! Mace, hurry and find out what time it is. I must know to the minute, because Mr. Mancey will be sure to want to know exactly when I left home." As the clock was in a niche of the kitchen-wall, and as Luther had his back to it, in straining at his venerable friend, Mace realized the importance of her task. She examined the clock, then went into the next room. When she returned, Bonaparte was up. "Well?" said Luther, turning to her.

"Have you a pencil?" Mace asked. Her brother betrayed no surprise, but handed her a pencil. "And paper?" persisted Mace. Luther shook his head, but Arthur Lowell, who had been keeping Mr. Woodney company, furnished a scrap of blank paper.

"But what time is it?" demanded Luther, perplexed by these preparations.

"That is what I mean to find out," returned Mace. "The clock in here is too fast, and the one in father's room is too slow, but if you add them up and find the mean time, it is always just five minutes late."

Old Mrs. Woodney said, "Look! There's that tramp back in the front yard again, hovering like a hawk!"

"Let him alone," counseled Mrs. Geraldine. "At any cost, let us get the horse out of the house!"

"A buggy has stopped at the front gate,"

A Great Physiologist

Once Said That the Way to Keep the Stomach Healthy is to Exercise It.

But He Did Not Tell How to Make It Healthy.

The muscles of the body can be developed by exercise until their strength has increased manifold, and a proper amount of training each day will accomplish this result, but it is somewhat doubtful whether you can increase the digestive powers of the stomach by eating indigestible food in order to force it to work.

Nature has furnished us all with a perfect set of organs, and if they are not abused they will attend to the business required of them. They need no abnormal strength.

There is a limit to the weight a man can lift, and there is also a limit to what the stomach can do.

The cause of dyspepsia, indigestion and many similar diseases is that the stomach has been exercised too much and it is tired or worn out. Not exercise but rest is what it needs.

To take something into the stomach that will relieve it from its work for a short time—something to digest the food—will give it a rest and allow it time to regain its strength.

The proper aid to the digestive organs is Stewart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which cure dyspepsia, indigestion, gas on the stomach and bowels, heartburn, palpitation of the heart, and all stomach diseases.

Rest and invigoration is what the stomach gets when you use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, for one grain of the active principle in them is sufficient to digest 3,000 grains of food.

The Tablets increase the flow of gastric juice, and prevent fermentation, acidity and sour eructions.

Do not attempt to starve out dyspepsia. You need all your strength.

The common sense method is to digest the food for the stomach and give it a rest.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do not make the cure, but enable the organs to throw off unhealthy conditions.

Perfect digestion means perfect health, for under these conditions only do the different organs of the body work right and receive the building-up material found in pure blood.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are a natural remedy and are a specific for stomach troubles. The ablest physicians prescribe them.

The Tablets are pleasant to the taste, and are composed of fruit and vegetable extracts, golden seal and pepsin.

At all drug stores—50 cents per package.

said Reginald Wren, as he tugged at the rope about Bonaparte's middle.

"Why, so it has," commented his mother; "Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, and Mr. G. C. D. Woodney. Mr. G. C. D. Woodney is getting out. He is coming in."

"But we can't have company now!" cried Mrs. Geraldine desperately. "Get out of my kitchen, you old dumb beast!"

"My dear!" said her husband gently. There was a knock at the parlor door. "The tramp has lit," said Luther. "Whom can we detail to wait on him, while a detachment meets cousin G. C. D. Woodney?"

"I'll make short work with that tramp," exclaimed old Mrs. Woodney, considerably exasperated by the course of events. "It is a splendid time for my nephew to come, with a horse in the kitchen, a tramp at the parlor door, and a strange trunk on the porch that may blow up at any moment." With unusually vigorous strides, the old lady marched to the rear door and confronted the disreputable tramp. "Now" she flashed. "What do you mean? This is our front door."

"That's what I calculated," said the man, rubbing a grimy hand over a short, red, bristly beard. "I was looking for it. You don't know me, do you?"

"Know you!" cried the old lady. "What do you mean sir? Why do you come to our front door?"

"I reckon I do look different from what I was when you saw me last, cousin Macie," said the man, "but I'm the same I was then, only unfortunate. How is cousin Benjamin and cousin Geraldine? How is little Mace? Where's Luther?"

"Who are you?" gasped old Mrs. Woodney, grasping the doorpost for support.

"Why! I'm Dave Jim Woodney from Carrollton, Kentucky. Don't you remember me? It was pa that wrote the Early History of Kentucky. Don't you remember Humboldt Woodney? He was my pa," said the tramp good-naturedly.

"You are Dave Jim!" gasped old Mrs. Woodney, sinking down upon the doorstep and staring as upon a ghost. "But why are you in this disgraceful guise? Have I lived to see a son of Humboldt Woodney going from house to house as a common beggar!"

"Now, cousin Macie, don't be hard on a poor wretch," said Dave Jim Woodney, still rubbing his stubby red beard with the back of his soiled hand.

"Benjamin," called the old lady, faintly, "come here!"

"He has went out to speak to Mr. G. C. D. Woodney," called Mr. Wren.

"Papa," corrected Annie, "he has gone out."

"Anyway," returned Mr. Wren, twisting Bonaparte's tail, "he ain't here, Annie."

"Does cousin G. C. D. Woodney live in this place?" cried the tramp. "I'll just go around and speak to him."

"You'll not!" cried the old lady, jumping up and grasping him by the arm. "You'll come with me this second to the barn, where you can be hid. I'll not have Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney looking at you. She thinks now that the Dobneys are better than our family!"

"Oh, she does!" cried Dave Jim. "Well, I'll have her know I consider myself as good as anybody walking the earth, and you can tell her so, for me."

"You come to the barn!" interposed the other.

"I'm not going to any barn, cousin Macie, excuse me for speaking plain. I came to the front door and I'll leave by the front door. I've been unfortunate, but I'm a Woodney, and I know what's due the Woodneys. My house burned down, and there was no insurance. I lost heart, cousin Macie—everything went—all my books and pictures, my piano, my keepsakes—everything—even the barn and the horses—all burnt up. Nothing was left. I lost heart. I just pulled out, and I'm drifting. I made one fortune and the fire wiped it out. I feel I've done my part."

"What about Cousin Mary and your children?" demanded the old lady, severely.

Dave Jim shook his head. "I hadn't the heart to stay and see them suffer. I reckon the Lord will take care of 'em. I just pulled out. Looks like I've got no heart for work of any kind. There are some misfortunes that a man naturally sinks under, because a man is only human, cousin Macie; he isn't anything but human. The children are all big enough now to hustle for themselves, and Mary is strong and able, and I'd only be in the way at home. So I pulled out."

"And you are only in the way here," snapped old Mrs. Woodney, "so you can pull out again!"

"Very well," said Dave Jim, "and to cousin G. C. D. Woodney I go!"

In the meantime, G. C. D. Woodney had drawn Benjamin Woodney to one side, where the confusion of tongues furnished by the Wrens, and the excitement over Bonaparte, and the suspense regarding the tramp, could not completely confound the intellect.

"Benjamin," said G. C. D. Woodney, "I've come to give you a tip."

"A tip?" repeated Mr. Woodney. "I think somebody said your wife is in the buggy. Cousin Lucy, won't you get out and visit us?"

"Thank you," returned Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, from her buggy, as at that momeant the unwilling head of Bonaparte appeared at the front door; "not today."

"Push!" came the men's voices from within. "Push! All together! Now!

"Benjamin," said his wealthy cousin, "step a little more to this side. Now, I'm a very busy man and have but a moment. The tip is this; a railroad is going to be built through Sullivan, a town about twenty miles from here, but only those on the inside know it. People think the road will run straight to St. Joe, but it will curve to the east and pass right through Sullivan. I'll tell you what to do; buy up as many town lots as you can and hold them. You'll only have to pay a little down, and I'll lend you the money tomorrow."

"But why not take advantage of this opportunity yourself?" inquired Mr. Woodney.

"Town lots are not in my way. I'm a farmer and have all I can do in attending to my cattle. But you can move to Sullivan, or even stay here and watch your interests over there. It will make you a pile of money, Benjamin, and I want to help you."

"Do you think it right to take advantage of the people's ignorance?" asked his cousin.

"You will pay the people what they ask, and be sure they ask all they think they can get," said Mr. G. C. D. Woodney, "and that's all the land's worth now. This knowledge you have of the railroad's coming there, is simply your capital, which you are investing."

"Cousin George," said Benjamin, excitedly, "suppose I decide not to take advantage of your information, may I communicate it to others?"

"Certainly," said the other, surprised. "I give it to you, absolutely. If you'd rather Luther would invest, all right. Now mind, I have this from the president of the company, and it must be acted upon immediately."

Bonaparte now staggered out of the kitchen door, followed by a triumphant and perspiring bodyguard. Mr. and Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney drove away. "What did he want, Benjamin?" asked Mrs. Geraldine, suddenly struck by the brightness of his face.

"Geraldine," said Mr. Woodney, "I'm the happiest man alive! It seems that when misfortunes are thickest, blessings are pushing their way to the front. Geraldine, the saloon is doomed; I have found an opening for Mr. Hoogan!"

Children's Fetes and Fairs.

By Annette Halliday Antona.

One of the prettiest entertainments for little ones is the Fete of Flowers, an old idea from the days of Queen Elizabeth, but one ever susceptible of new treatment.

Costumes for this are the daintiest, and the least expensive, made of tissue or crepe paper, the dresses admitting of great individuality, and the bright colors of the paper forming a gay kaleidoscope of hues, with ribbons and artificial blooms helping out the general effect.

The campanulate flowers usually succeed better than th ros family in representations, and some of the native wild flowers can be delightfully imitated, such as the blue marsh clematis, the pink swamp mallow, the pale yellow alder's tongue, the Carolina lily in its gorgeous tints of orange-red, crimson and brown, and hosts of other wild flowers which a careful survey of a botany with colored plates will reveal.

Little girls should wear flower bonnets and little boys flower caps, each carefully arranged upon muslin bands and securely attached to the head by elastic or otherwise. Processions of the living blossoms, dances and flower-drills make a pleasant variety, and the little ones should carry baskets ornameted with the flower they represent, and filled with suitable articles for sale, if the entertainment is to be remunerative.

Such articles might be pincushions, emeries, penwipers, blotters, handkerchief cases, veil and glove holders, appropiate sachets, dainty flower-bound booklets, calendars, toys, laundry markers, scissors guards—the list might be multiplied without limit. Each child should be taught the name of the flower it represents, but in case the name should be forgotten, it is well to have it plainly written or painted in some conspicuous place upon the little basket carried.

One of the most beautiful of these flower festivals was held in a bleak New England town, in which the school room was a perfect imitation of a world of ice and snow, skillfully reproduced by a plentiful use of silver powder upon cotton batting and fleecy scarfs. The lights were so well tempered that the grotto in which supper was served seemed a cave of cold blue and pale green ice reflections, the continuous tinkle of silver sliegh bells made the illusion complete, and one turned with a half shiver toward the decorations of red berries and greens which the winter woods had lent, and toward the gay blossoms—blue-bells, morning-glories, nasturtiums, asters, daisies chrysanthemums—who wandered proudly here and there with their wares, and little realized the strong contrast, so ably presented, of the seasons.

Equally attractive, but for older children, is the Dickens Bazar in the Mother Goose Market. In the former, the booths should be presided over by the world-famous child-characters which the pen of the English wizard drew for our lifelong pleasure, and as far as practicable should protray the surroundings which the books have given us.

For instance, Paul and Florence Dombey could have a booth fitted up as Captain Cuttle's shop, where shells, seaweed collections, curios, toy ships anything in the line of natural history souvenirs from old ocean, are sold. A beautiful doll booth might be in charge of Jenny, the Doll Dressmaker; and Little Em'ly, in a stall made of an old boat, could serve chowder, oysters, lobster and other sea-food.

Poor Jo, the Marchioness, Smith, Little Nell, Pip, Estella, Oliver Twist, David Copperfield, Tiny Tim—these are a few from which to choose. Lovers of the great novelist will need no aid in selection.

A large room, decorated with cartoons, and gay pictures from the immortal Mother Goose, should be filled with small tables, each of which is in charge of a child representing some character from the nursery rhymes.

Stray personages from the Tales may stroll about the room and will excite much merriment. It is well that these individuals should be children from twelve to fifteen years of age, and foremost of them, of course, is Dame Goose herself, with half-short blue skirt and white apron, long red cape-cloak and high-peaked black cap with red band, a white chemisette, and green-flowered bodice and panniers. She must wear spectacles, carry a tall cane, and have a frill of muslin or lace falling around her face inside of the cap. Her stockings may be purple, with green slippers and huge buckles, and if possible, let her draw behind her a mammoth white goose on wheels.

A boy, cleverly masked as a cat, with tail, whiskers and pointed ears, and arrayed in a dress-suit, will create untold fun by promenading about with a fiddle and bow, which he pretends to play from time to time in imitation of "Hey, diddle, diddle."

The barber who questions every one whether or not they have a pig to shave, the little old woman with her petticoats cut round about, the Three Scornful Brethren out of Spain, the witch on the broomstick, are all good characters, and the impersonation by two young people of the milkmaid and her questioner, is most laughable.

Another mirth-provoking couple, if the part is skillfully carried out, is the pair who met "one misty, moisty morning when cloudy was the weather." The boy who personates the old man should of course be clothed in leather, while any Dame Trot costume will do for the girl. Let them walk through the room arm in-arm, stopping now and then to enact a little cake-walk, with "compliments and grins" for the benefit of bystanders.

A king in royal robes should take tickets or admission fees, like the "king in his counting-house counting out his money," and near by Mistress Mary might sell flowering plants, cut-flowers and boutonnieres from her garden. At the Baby Bunting table everything for infants' wear is appropriate. Crosspatch will sell tea and coffee at her booth, which should be so arranged that one must draw the latch to enter for a social cup, and "Polly who puts the kettle on" may be her partner. One unique feature at a fair of this kind was an imitation well, from which a little boy ladled up Angora kittens for customers, while over the well hung a "Ding, Dong, Bell."

"Goosey, goosey gander" sold pretty bedroom trifles in sterling silver and worsted and glass, fit for "my lady's chamber."

Hot Cross Buns at one a-penny, two a-penny, embraced all lines of baked goods, fresh, crisp and tempting, and not far away Jack and Jill furnished lemonade from their historic pail.

At Bo-Peep's table all kinds of woolen articles may be displayed; Taffy the Welshman, sells sandwiches of every description, and the Queen of Hearts will probably assist him, as she has homemade tarts to dispose of, while for tiny customers nothing will give more delight than Jacky Horner's Christmas pie of bran, from which, for a penny, each may be allowed to pull a plum, in the shape of some cheap toy. The fish-pond over which Simple Simon presides, is also entertaining for the little ones. Ideas become indefinitely elastic with a little thought.

A very beautiful entertainment to be given by little girls from ten to fourteen years of age, is an evening of cradle-songs, the blond children being given the German Scotch, Swedish, Russian and English parts, and the brunettes the Italian, Mexican, French, and Spanish.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Vol. XLII. December 21, 1905 No. 51

The Centennial

W. R. Warren, Secretary.

September 8, 1809, Thomas Campbell and a few friends published at Washington, Pa., "A Declaration and Address." Its propositions were so simple, its spirit so humble and devout, its logic so irresistible and its ageement with God's word so obvious that they expected the religious world immediately to cease from strife and unite under the Divine Leader to devote all their energies to doing his will and publishing his word. To their astonishment, not only did the churches refuse to hear the call to liberty and union, they even denied fellowship to every one who supported such propositions! Thus cast out, after two years of persecution they organized a church after the New Testament model. That feeble congregation has multiplied to eleven thousand and the little handful upon the mountain top to a host of a million and a quarter—still pleading for Christian union, standing fast in Christian liberty and devoted to evangelization.

Only the divine blessing can explain this marvelous growth. For the census figures show only a part of the increase. Those who are in substantial agreement with Mr. Campbell can be found in every communion, as he proposed to remain among the Presbyterians and was not allowed. Other unnumbered thousands can be counted as adherents of the churches of Christ, though not rising to the high demands made for membership. A hundred years ago only one in one hundred would hear with even patience such words as those of Thomas Campbell; today half of the average intelligent audience is impatient of anything that is contrary to those words. All this progress we recognize as of God. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name, give glory!" He has led us in ways we did not choose and did not expect to travel. He has turned disappointments into victories, and magnified success out of failure. He has ministered perennial youth, virility and freshness, where other movements have grown stale and fossilized after their first generation. The processes of history have seemed to be stayed and even reversed, that we might go on from success to more glorious success. This is not because we are favorites of heaven, any more than it is due to our superior intellectual and moral endowments. In the fulness of time God's hour struck for healing the divisions of his people and he appointed a servant to speak to the people that they unite. It is left to us to complete what a seer began and what two generations of mighty men carried forward most gloriously. If their astonishment was equal to that of Moses when the message was not received universally and joyously, their toils and trials were also equal to his all the way they came.

Now we discern the heights of the promised land. If Thomas Campbell was only a hundred years ahead of his times, the world is ready for Christian union today. It is only necessary that the way of its accomplishment be made sufficiently clear, and that the voice that declares it be lifted high enough above the remaining discordant notes of sectarianism. And most especially is it necessary that we shall not allow ourselves or the awakening hosts to be satisfied with some specious substitute for actual, complete, vital, organic union. Tolerance may be worse than persecution, if it mean lack of earnestness. Comradeship would be worse than war, if it meant the decay of honesty. "Let love be without hypocrisy." It was not mere agreeableness but actual oneness for which the Saviour prayed and—died. It was not only fellowship but absolute unity for which he arose. And as he and the Father are one, so shall we be in them. Nothing else, however good, answers the prayer.

Not only is it fitting that we who plead for union in Christ should redouble our efforts in the closing years of our first century, because the goal seems so nearly in sight, but to crown the century with such achievements, sacrifices, zeal and devotion as shall give the only worthy expression to our thanks to Almighty God. That every church establish another church, that every minister lead another into the ranks of constant service, that every Disciple win one more to sit at the feet of Jesus—and that all of these redouble the earnestness of their public and private worship, strengthen the integrity of their characters and study to be kind unto all—surely we can no better show our gratitude to the Author of all good! And surely a great cycle of a hundred years may not be rounded out with smaller thanksgiving! "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit."

As means to these all-desirable ends it is proposed that every minister among us be constantly employed, that the ranks of the minstry be continually recruited, that the fullest possible training be given to these young men and to our children. "When our sons shall be as plants grown up in their youth, and our daughters as corner stones hewn after the fashion of a palace." Bible schools must be brought to surpass in their efficiency the best public schools, and the word honored in the latter and in the home. All resources must be husbanded and utilized. Once every year, and by concerted arrangement on the same Lord's day, every preacher in the brotherhood should lay before his hearers the duty and blessing of giving systematically of the means in their hands. On another day the possibilities of serving God in the bestowal of a lifetime's acquisitions should be clearly outlined—that every one may bequeath at least a child's part of his estate to the Lord. What a privilege to adopt as one's own child him who became a child for our sakes! Let the people know the opportunities for giving as well as the obligations, and they will gladly provide the money for freeing the churches of their burdens of debt, for erecting new houses, for meeting in the apostolic way the necessities of all and particularly the privations of the Lord's own, for preaching, teaching and healing in the dark lands, for making glorious this same plea for union in Christ and liberty in the Gospel in every part of our own land and especially for claiming every great city as a center of influence and for sending the printed word by the million to reinforce the spoken in the populous sections and to go before it into the waste places.

If with one tithe of the faithfulness that should characterize our efforts we give ourselves to these and kindred ministries for the next four years, the year of grace 1909 will find fifty thousand earnest souls assembled from all America and from the ends of the earth to proclaim with one voice which all the world must hear and respect: One Body, One Spirit, One Hope, One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism, One God. Those who shall not have considered will then hear, those who shall not have believed until then will obey, those who shall not have hoped will then leap for joy, aye, and those who shall have blasphemed until then will turn and reverence the Son!

As an agency for encouraging, co-ordinating, exchanging, stimulating, suggesting, publishing, disseminating, rallying, the Centennial Bureau has been established in Pittsburg, Pennsylvnia, within an hour's ride of where the Declaration and Address was issued and within two hours of where Alexander Campbell lived and wrought. Here the Centennial celebration will culminate in the greatest religious convention ever held. Make free use of this bureau. Report here every triumph of the Gospel that it may be sent out to all the papers for the encouragement of all the saints. "Preach the word; be urgent in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all longsuffering and teaching." "The Lord is at hand!" "Worthy is the Lamb that hath been slain to receive the power, and riches, and wisdom, and might, and honor, and glory, and blessing!"

Garfield on the Beef Trust.

Commissioner Garfield has submitted his annual report on corporations. It will be remembered that Mr. Garfield was subjected to a great deal of criticism in a former report which he made concerning the Beef Trust. The following extract from his report will be taken as explanatory of some things omitted from that report. Referring to the Beef Trust cases, the report says:

"The digest of all antitrust legislation has been completed, and is now practically ready for publication. The published portion of this report deals chiefly with the question of prices and the margin of profit in the packing business. In the course of this investigation, the bureau had also obtained much information bearing upon the question of combination as between the large packing companies. At the time of the publication of the report, the department of justice had under advisement proceedings against certain packing companies and their officers for violation of the federal antitrust law. It was obvious, therefore, that the publication of the information possessed by the bureau on the subject was inexpedient at that time, and accordingly, by the direction of the President, all the information possessed by the bureau on the subject of such combination was withheld from publication."

Concerning Insurance.

In dealing with the subject of tnsurance Commissioner Garfield seems to be somewhat wary and expresses his view of the situation in the following paragraph:

"The fact that state supervision has failed to prevent great abuses in the management of some companies does not of itself justify federal action. It must be shown, first, that insurance is subject to federal regulation under the commerce clause of the constitution; second, that federal supervision would be of such a character as to correct existing abuses and prevent future ones, and, third, that such supervision would result, not only in greater security to policy holders, but would relieve them, through their companies, of the great and unnecessary expense of duplicated inspections and investigations by different states.

"Seemingly the most effective way to settle the question is for Congress to so legislate upon the subject as to afford an opportunity to present to the Supreme Court the question whether insurance as now conducted is interstate commerce, and hence subject to federal regulation."

A Strenuous Congress.

Washington correspondents will need draw but little on their imaginations to interest the public in congressional proceedings this winter. There need be no "discoveries" of plots and counterplots or predictions of dramatic situations. Plain statements of legislation attempted, blocked, or enacted will make the daily paper seem to come at weekly intervals. It is evidently the President's intention to greatly increase the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission over matters of railway rates, rebates, and "spheres of influence"; and also to enable the commission to prevent the pernicious practice of railways pleading "lack of cars" as an excuse for not hauling products from mines and quarries in which the railway companies have no financial interest while there are cars in abundance for other localities in which they are part owners. The President will find the representatives of "the system" harder to subdue in congressional committee rooms than is the bronco on his native heath, but he has the best wishes of the millions in his attempt. Tariff standpatters would have little difficulty in keeping down this Banquo's ghost were not the Republican majority so overwhelmingly large as to embolden some of the western members to voice the real sentiments of their constituents without danger of party defeat. The white-winged birds of tariff oratory are sure to be let fly. If "Uncle Joe" can haul them in before public sentiment is so thoroughly aroused as to overcome the "sacred schedules" he will have given his admirers the highest proof of his adroitness. Nor will the Panama Canal enterprise go unassailed. Cape Horn, whose furies it is in part designed to overcome, is calm in comparison with that session in which an attempt will be made to so expedite the work that any now living may hope to sail through it from sea to sea. Here again the interoceanic railway barons demand noninterference with their private snap. The question of admitting Oklahoma and Sequoia, Arizona and New Mexico will also make picturesque many a session. Whether it is patriotic to admit more Democratic congressmen and senators into the halls of national legislation is the only issue concerning the investiture of the first two with statehood. The public is willing to await patient investigation concerning the advisability of receiving the last two Mexican provinces into the Union. Both Houses have eloquent chaplains. We hope their prayers for the wisdom and honor of the members will avail much and that during these strenuous days much will be achieved for the real glory of America and the welfare of the world.

Affairs in Russia.

Matters in Russia seem to be moving from bad to worse. It appears that the Czar has at last decided to resort to strong repressive measures to put down the strike. An imperial ukase was issued on December 17, empowering all governors-general and municipal authorities, in the event of railway, postal and telegraph communications being interfered with, to proclaim a modified martial law. This probably means the beginning of the end. Count Witte, the Premier, in a recent interview, is reported as saying that with the beginning of the use of force to restore order, his resignation would be forthcoming, as that is not his forte. The Workmen's Council and League of Leagues has issued a declaration of a general strike to begin immediately and, according to the imperial ukase referred to above, all governors-general, governors and prefects throughout the empire will be clothed with dictatorial power and may declare a state of siege. The Moscow mutineers have issued a manifesto which declares that "all of Russia has risen against the government which has involved the country in a useless war and brought it to the verge of ruin. We are soldiers, and are firmly determined to break down the tyranny of our commanders and to compel reform in the army. Now is the time for us soldiers to awake. Comrades, we summon you to dismiss your officers and to assume command until your grievances are redressed! 'All for one and one for all!' Hurrah for a free people! Hurrah for the army!" The demands of the soldiers include amnesty for all participants in the mutiny; freedom of soldiers' meetings; abolition of the death penalty; reduction of service to two years; abolition of military courts; exemption of reservists and their families from payment of taxes; increased pay, and the return of the army from Manchuria.

Lower Tariff for the Philippines.

According to a special dispatch from Washington, a great deal of pressure is being brought to bear against carrying out the President's recommendation for reduction of the tariff rates between the United States and the Philippines. This dispatch says that "members of the ways and means committee of the House have been so strongly importuned to prevent this tinkering with the schedules that they have now decided to grant lengthy hearings to those interests which are strongly opposed to the passage of the measure." It is noteworthy that those whose personal interests are opposed to tariff reduction always refer to any modification of tariff rates as 'tinkering" with the tariff. One might be led to suppose from such remarks that the present schedules were inspired! It is understood that the sugar and tobacco growers of the country are strongly opposed to any reduction of the tariff with the Philippines. Then it is reported that Porto Rico and Hawaii are opposed to such reduction on the ground that they, having accepted the absolute sovereignty of the United States, are entitled to better treatment than that accorded to the Philippines. The Treaty of Paris, by which the war with Spain was settled, provided that we should maintain the same relations of trade and commerce with Spain that we maintain with the Philippines for a period of ten years after the signing of the treaty—that is, until 1909 It is believed, however, that this objection, which the opponents of the measure are urging, can be met by placing the special concession to the Philippines on the ground of reciprocity. It is evident, however, that the President's recommendation is to meet with considerable opposition, but it will probably prevail in the end.

Hearst's Defeat.

The New York Court of Appeals has decided adversely to Mr. Hearst in his application for the opening of the ballot-boxes and a complete re-count. It was held that, under the present New York election law, the court has no authority by mandamus to order the re-examination of the ballots. This virtually leaves the whole matter in the hands of the election commissioners with no provision for detecting or rectifying a fraudulent or erroneous count, however ample may be the ground for suspicion. This may be a correct interpretation of the New York law, but if so it is a very defective law.

Christmas Chimes.

We are nearing Christendom's birthday. We can almost hear the tones of the church-bells ringing in all the steeples. Something in the very atmosphere, in the faces of the people, and in all the current literature, tells of its near approach. Christmas! The very name sets all the joy-bells of the heart ringing! It exerts a magic power over the mind and heart. It sends memory back, swift-footed, across the shining years to the halcyon days of our childhood. It summons before us forms and faces which have long since passed from mortal view, and revives recollections that we fancied were erased from memory's tablet.

No one is old at Christmas time. The heart grows young under the spirit of its blessed influence. Frowns give place to smiles, despair to hope, pessimism to optimism, hatred to charity, and niggardliness to generosity, under the transforming influence of the Christmas time. Surely the day that wields so potent an influence over the world, whose mystic key unlocks the hardest heart, whose genial warmth quickens into life latent and unobserved germs of goodness, that chases shadows from the hearth-stones of the poor and smooths the wrinkles from the face of care, that causes the rose of Hope to bloom in the valley of Despondency, should challenge our attention and awaken our gratitude.

The explanation is simple. Christ's birth opened the fountain of hope and of joy in the desert of Sin and Despair. It was the Infinite stooping down to the finite. It was the Almighty and the All-Compassionate reaching down his hand to the weak and sinful. It was God entering into union with humanity. It was love stooping down to lift up the lowly and the lost. It was God coming to man, in order that man might come to God. It was the heavenly Father sending his only begotten Son into the world, to bring his erring children home. It was the good Shepherd coming to search for the lost sheep. It was the arrival of heaven's missionary on the earth.

Such is the meaning of Christmas. Ring out, all ye bells of Christendom! Sing, once again, ye herald angels, that sang of old over Bethlehem's plains! Sing, all ye sons of men whose hearts have felt the kindling touch of His love who became incarnate for our sakes! Let heaven and earth be vocal with His praise who, on that Christmas night in the long ago, came into a world, dark with sin and heavy with despair, to illuminate it with His truth, regenerate it with His love, and fill it with the light of hope and the glory of His presence!

Union in the Family of Immersionists.

"The Watchman" (Baptist) of Boston, Mass., has an interesting editorial on Baptist union in which the editor points out that the differences which caused the separation between the different members of this family "have largely disappeared or have come to be regarded as so unimportant that they are no longer regarded as sufficient to justify the continuance of denominational divisions." After stating that the original ground of separation between the Free Baptists and the Baptists was the controversy between the Arminians and the Calvinists, and that this was no longer a question of fellowship in either body, the editor says:

"The chief points which caused the separation between the Disciples of Christ and the Baptists were four: That the former celebrated the Lord's supper every week, and held the New Testament only to be of authority in framing the constitution of the Christian churches, and denied the influence of the Holy Spirit previous to baptism, and placed less emphasis on ordination than the Baptists. The mere enumeration of the points is sufficient to show that these differences have also largely disappeared. The two bodies have been approximating each to the position of the other. There are some Baptist churches which observe the Lord's supper every week without at all imperiling their standing in the denomination. There are Baptist ministers like O. P. Gifford and the late Charles H. Spurgeon who never received the laying on of hands; yet their position in the Baptist denomination has never been disputed; and we suppose that there is not a Baptist anywhere who now would not only admit but claim that the New Testament rather than the Old is the authority to be followed in framing a Christian church. On the other hand we have assurances from intelligent and prominent members of the Disciples that few, especially of the younger ministers and members, would be found who would deny that the Holy Spirit influences the hearts of the unconverted, leading them to submission to Jesus and to belief in the word of God. There might be some difference in the choice of words and phrases, but after such inquiries as we have been able to make of those who are entitled to speak for the Disciples, it appears to be true that the most important differences between the denominations have disappeared, and no insuperable obstacles exist in the way of union.

"It is to be noted that both in the case of the Free Baptists and the Disciples the disappearance of differences has been quite as much due to modifications in the attitude of the Baptists as of the other bodies. Baptists have abandoned their insistence on Calvinism as an essential to good standing in the denomination; and they have also ceased to insist on the Old Testament as of equal authority with the New Testament in formulating the constitution of the Christian churches. They also concede absolute liberty to each local church to observe the Lord's supper weekly or less often as may be preferred, and while they still insist on an examination and a setting apart by prayer as essential to the full privileges of the ministry, they do not insist on the laying on of hands.

"We repeat that in all those features of belief and practice which are essential to unity and co-operation and fellowship in one denomination, the Baptists and Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ are agreed."

There are some other points of difference not mentioned by the editor of "The Watchman" which have had something to do in keeping the two bodies apart, but they have probably grown out of one of the points mentioned, namely, the emphasis laid upon the New Testament as the only authority in Christianity, and the effort to be true to its method of conversion. On one of the points mentioned above the position of the Disciples of Christ is not correctly stated, though of course this is wholly unintentional on the part of our contemporary. No representative man among us has ever "denied the influence of the Holy Spirit previous to baptism." Alexander Campbell said, "In converting men the Spirit, the Holy Advocate, was to speak of Jesus. Hence speaking of Jesus by the Spirit is all that was necessary to the conversion of men." He also said, in his debate with Mr. Rice: "I would not, sir, value at the price of a single mill the religion of any man, as respects the grand affair of eternal life, whose religion is not begun, carried on, and completed by the personal agency of the Holy Spirit. Nay, sir, I esteem it the peculiar excellence and glory of our religion that it is spiritual; that the soul of man is quickened, enlightened, sanctified and consoled by the indwelling presence of the Spirit of the eternal God."

What Mr. Campbell and the Disciples of Christ generally have opposed, was the theory once so prevalent that the Holy Spirit operated without means, in some sort of abstract manner, in the conversion of men, which largely dispensed with the Gospel as "the power of God unto salvation." In emphasizing this view it is possible that Mr. Campbell, but more especially others since Mr. Campbell's day, have been too much inclined to limit the operation of the Holy Spirit to the inspired word. On this point we are sure there has been a modification in the direction of a wider and truer view of the modes of the Spirit's activity.

We are sure, however, that "The Watchman" is right in believing that the time is here when these former differences have been so far outgrown and remanded to a subordinate place as to constitute no insuperable obstacle to a full recognition of the Christian character and standing of each other, and a closer union between them in standing for the things which they, in common, emphasize.

Dr. Tupper on The Name Christians Should Bear.

A friend has sent us a printed sermon by Dr. Kerr Boyce Tupper, pastor of the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, New York, on "The Name Every Christian Should Bear." The contention of the sermon is that the proper name for the church is "The Church of God." In proof of this Dr. Tupper cites a number of passages in which the Church of God is mentioned. We do not exactly see, however, how this is "the name every Christian should bear," since it is the name, not of an individual member, but of the body of Christ as a whole, or of a local congregation.

No one will call in question the propriety of designating the Church as the "Church of God." Dr. Tupper goes too far, however, in saying that this is "the one and only New Testament name for the Christian Church." To the above statement he adds:

"Our good friends, the Disciples, whose devotion and fidelity to the word of God uncovered by human ritual and untainted by human tradition we must all admire and praise, approach nearer than the rest of us the Biblical name, and yet, as our morning study will reveal, their designation, 'The Christian Church,' or 'The Church of Christ,' is not once found in the Gospels, in Acts, or in the Epistles."

Is not that stumbling at the mere letter? Jesus said of Peter's confession, "On this rock I will build my church." Is not "my church" equivalent to Christ's Church, or the Church of Christ? Again, Christ is called the "head of the church which is his body." In the Roman letter, in his salutations to the church, Paul says, "All the churches of Christ salute you." We would call Dr. Tupper's attention to the fact that this is the sense in which we use the term "churches of Christ" as applying to local congregations. The "Church of Christ" without local application includes all Christians, or what we sometimes call the Church universal.

Other passages might be cited, but the above suffice to show that Dr. Tupper has gone beyond the record in affirming that "the Church of God" is the only Scriptural designation for the Church. It would be a mistake for any religious body to adopt any one of these names as its one and specific designation; and those who have been pleading for Scriptural names have steadfastly refused to adopt any one of these to the exclusion of the others.

It is a strange remark of Dr. Tupper in the sermon above mentioned that "Though religion has to do with the relation of man to God in worship and duty, somehow Christ has come almost to engross the place of God." That is exactly what Christ came into the world for. He stands for God to our humanity. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." "He that honoreth the Son honoreth the Father." The suggestion of Dr. Tupper to throw denominational names in parentheses and make them subordinate, each local church bearing its Scriptural title, is a very admirable one, just as long as these denominational names are necessary for purposes of distinction. A perfect union would probably render them unnecessary for such purpose.

Referring to what Dr. Tupper calls "organic union" we notice the same confusion of thought which prevails so largely in the religious world about what is meant by Christian union. He says:

> "It was the advocacy of this conception of a united Church that rendered Pere Hyacinthe's visit to America some years ago a dismal failure. Men differ too widely in endowment, education, environment, providential calling to permit this theory to work. The universal law of God in nature is the primary law of God in grace—diversity in unity, variety in harmony. The stars differ one from another in color, size, distance from the sun, but because they have fellowship with a central sun, they have fellowship with each other."

Surely Dr. Tupper ought to be able to distinguish between the kind of union which Pere Hyacinthe advocated, and the kind of unity which prevailed in the church of the first century. That union was broad enough to include men widely different in "endowment, education, and environment, providential calling," etc. That is the kind of unity that is practicable now, and the only kind that is practicable.

To use the happy illustration of Dr. Tupper: "The stars differ from one another in color, size, distance from the sun, but because they have fellowship with a central sun, they have fellowship with each other." That is exactly the idea: Christ is the central sun, and each local church or other religious organization, though differing in size and other characteristics, if governed by this central sun, under the law of divine attraction, will be in fellowship with every other church so attracted and governed. This is the unity that is both desirable and practicable, and it is the union that is coming in spite of men's opinions and preferences to the contrary. Any denominationalism that is inconsistent with this unity, must get out of the way. Anything in the line of separate organization that does not interfere with this idea of unity may continue if found necessary or useful.

Notes and Comments.

The Houston, "Texas Chronicle," discussing the subject of the recent Inter-Church Conference in New York City, says:

> "The good of such a meeting as that of the Church Federation will not be its results and effects on those who participate in it as believers so much as upon those who are outside the pale of all churches, and many of whom are deterred from uniting with any church by reason of the differences and schisms which divide believers into so many bands.
> "If the church has done so much for the world, rent and divided as it has been, and is yet, what it will accomplish when denominational lines are broken down and a united church moves forward upon its divine mission, is beyond the power of seer or prophet to foretell."

The religious world has probably never realized to what extent good people have been kept out of the church and prevented from making an open confession of Christ because of a divided church. Abraham Lincoln is reported to have said once that if he could find a church as broad and unsectarian as the Bible, he would join it. No doubt thousands of others have felt the same way. The time is near at hand, we believe, when this obstacle in the way of faith and duty will be removed.

In an article in the "New Church Messenger" on the recent Inter-Church Conference, the editor says:

> "The New Church was not represented at this Conference, and yet she alone not only believes in the divinity of the Lord, but that He is Deity—that He is not one of three Divine Persons, but that He is the 'Father' as to His Essential Divine, the 'Son' as to His Divine Humanity, and from Him proceeds the Holy Spirit."

Our contemporary enters into a little philosophy here, that is no essential part of faith, but there is no reason why the New Church, so far as we know, should not work with the Inter-Church Conference, if it accepts the Deity of Christ and believes in the program of unity to which the conference looks. The "New Church Messenger" should understand that none of us believes that our divine Lord is "one of three Divine Persons," in the modern use of the word persons. There is but one God, and he has revealed himself in Jesus Christ, and whosoever "hath seen the Son hath seen the Father." Jesus said, "I will send the Paraclete—the Advocate—unto you." Whoso receives the Paraclete, that is, the Holy Spirit, receives the Father and the Son.

The report which we give elsewhere of the joint meeting of the committees on union between Free Baptists and Disciples will be of interest to our readers. We have already noted the fact of the agreement of the Baptist and Free Baptist Committees on a basis of union which in all probability will be endorsed by their respective bodies. This makes the union between these two bodies and the Disciples of Christ more feasible and more desirable: More feasible because the same spirit of unity that can remove obstacles out of the way between Baptists and Free Baptists will help to remove them out of the way between these two bodies and ourselves; more desirable because it effects a larger union and brings a larger number of churches holding to the one Lord, one faith, and one baptism into harmonious co-operation. We hail with joy these indications of a growing spirit of unity among the followers of Christ.

Our Cincinnati contemporary, "The Christian Standard," in an editorial on "The Church Federation Conference," puts itself squarely on record against our co-operation with that movement toward a closer unification of the Christian bodies of America. It urges two objections to this movement for federation which are mutually destructive. One is that there is not a thing new about it; it is simply proposing to do what we have all been doing all the while. The other is that this federation recognizes the legitimacy of denominationalism; therefore we can have nothing to do with it! Now, we can not allow our neighbor, although it is an expert rider, to ride both these wild horses headed as they are in opposite directions. It must cleave to the one and reject the other, or, better still, discard them both. Neither of them is safe for a religious editor to ride and neither is a winner. We shall give further attention in our next issue to "The Standard's" position; meanwhile, we ask our readers who may happen also to be readers of "The Christian Standard" to compare the two editorials appearing the same week in "The Christian Standard" and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, entitled, respectively, "The Church Federation Conference" and "Allies Against Common Foes." These two articles point in opposite directions and indicate two widely different methods of procedure. The time has come for a clear understanding of the issues involved, and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is determined that its readers shall understand that the success of our movement or its degeneration into a narrow sect is involved in the issue therein joined.

Editor's Easy Chair.

"There's a song in the air,
There's a star in the sky,
There's a mother's deep prayer,
There's a baby's low cry."

That "song in the air" which echoed over the Judean hills in the long ago has been the inspiration of earth's sweetest and noblest music. It was but the prelude to the mighty chorus of praise that is echoing around the world. That song, with its note of "Peace on earth and good will among men," has organized all the peace societies of the world, and inspired every effort that has been made for the alleviation of human suffering and the amelioration of the condition of men. It is yet to make wars to cease unto the end of the earth, to break the bow and cut the spear asunder, and to burn the war chariots in fire. It is yet to convert swords into plow-shares, and spears into pruning hooks, until nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. Let the sweet refrain of that angelic hymn, "Gloria in Excelsis," be caught up and repeated until the discords of earth shall be swallowed up in the heavenly melody.

* * *

That "star in the sky" has guided the world's progress! Its light, shining in the dark night of sin, has pointed the way to forgiveness and peace. It has been the beacon light of history, leading the world on to a better civilization. Shine on, O star of Bethlehem, till thy growing light shall dim the splendors of all the suns that blaze in the depths of immensity! Shine on, until all the dark places of the earth shall be illumed, and until ignorance and superstition shall flee away! Shine on, thou star of Hope, till sin and sorrow shall be no more, and till the earth shall be filled with righteousness and truth, from pole to pole, and from the rising to the setting of the sun!

* * *

"A mother's deep prayer"! Ah, who knows what omnipotence there was in the petitions that went up from that pure mother-heart? In the presence of adoring shepherds and wondering magi, she could but lift her soul to God for the care of that holy treasure which had been committed to her. Is there anything sweeter and holier on this earth than a mother's love? Is there any prayer more potent than that which comes from a mother's heart for the welfare of her child? We write histories of the great men of the world and of their great deeds. But could we know it, behind each great character whose deeds have filled the world with his fame, there was a mother's love, a mother's prayer, and a mother's guiding hand. How often have her prayers stretched across the waste of years and arrested a prodigal son, wandering in a far country, and turned his wayward steps homeward! Let us thank God, this Christmas time, for our mothers, whose prayers have compassed us about like a fortress amid all the temptations and trials of life, and who, here or yonder, beckon us upward to purer and nobler living.

* * *

That "baby's low cry" was a part of the minstrelsy of heaven. It was the signal that God, manifest in the flesh, had come into human life by the door of suffering, and was bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. Often had the wail of childhood reached the ear of God—aye, and the heart of God, too—before that first Christmas night. But now it is the Holy Child whose cry startles the midnight air and mingles with the great minor-keyed anthem of the race. God's way of entering into union with humanity was through the humble beginnings of childhood, with all its weaknesses and limitations. The Son of the Highest, he becomes the son of the lowliest, that he might thus enter into fullest sympathy with all classes and conditions of our common humanity. From these lowly conditions that Child, cradled in a manger, has risen to the highest place of power in the universe, wielding a sceptre of universal dominion. From weeping infancy to noblest youth, to divinest manhood, to supreme Lordship—what a career and what a personality!

* * *

How long it has taken the church—that part of humanity which is supposed to be most under the spell of Christ's life and teaching—to catch the meaning of his incarnation! He was the Father's magnet let down into the broken and scattered fragments of a divided humanity to draw them into union with himself and with each other. He came to show us the Father, and to bring us all back into the filial relation of sonship to him, and into the fraternal relation of brotherhood to each other. Nineteen centuries have passed since his advent, and still we have a divided church! "How long, oh, Lord, how long?" How long will men exalt their opinions, their personal ambitions, their prejudices, above the will of our divine Lord who prayed that his disciples might be one? Among other lessons which we learn from Christmas, ought we not to learn the lesson of unity, through brotherly love? Beloved, if God so loved us as to send his Son into the world as a bond of union and fellowship, ought we not so to love one another as to be one in him?

* * *

Even when people talk much about unity there is often the absence of the very spirit of unity. We allow ourselves to be deceived by the wiles of the devil. It is not by selfish and sectarian ambitions; it is not by zeal for party shibboleths and the traditions of the fathers; it is not by magnifying some differences and underestimating others, that union is to be promoted; but in love, in lowliness and meekness of spirit, in the exaltation of Christ, and of his desire for the oneness of his followers, above our individual opinions and prejudices, that we are to have a united church. May the Holy Spirit, who is the spirit of unity, of love, and of fraternity, lead us out of our carnality, wherein are divisions and strifes, into the life and liberty of the Spirit, wherein there is peace and unity! "The man who is tall enough to see the needs of those in foreign lands," said one of the speakers in the Inter-Church Conference, "is tall enough to see over denominational walls." And no man, we will add, who can not see over denominational walls, and recognize the Christian worth and work of those outside his own fold, can do anything for the cause of Christian union.

* * *

Speaking of union, Dr. Josiah Strong said that there were three tests of fellowship, making three circles: First, those who believe as we do, using belief in its popular sense as including our denominational agreements. That, of course, is a limited sphere. Second, there is a larger circle based on a common feeling. More people can love alike than can think alike. A choir in a Jewish synagogue recently sang, "Love divine, all love excelling." Another circle of fellowship is formed by a common purpose and action. This, he thought, was a larger circle and a truer test. "Whosoever doeth the will of my Father, the same is my brother and my sister." Will, he said, is fundamental to character. "No man needs a broader basis of fellowship than that, and I dare not make a narrower one." But many are unprepared for union on the basis of faith in and personal allegiance to Jesus Christ. "When saloons and brothels flourish because Christians will not unite," said Dr. Strong, "it is treason to the kingdom of God." Is that language too strong? If not, there is great need for a searching examination of our hearts to see whether or not we are guilty of treason to our King. To have no conscience about unity, and a very sensitive conscience about our shibboleths, is the unfailing mark of a sectarian, no matter what name he wears or what creed he professes.

And so let us go with the wondering shepherds to Bethlehem and see what has come to pass. What did come to pass? Better than the shepherds could know do we now know that a King was born that night in Bethlehem's stable. From that manger-cradle has flowed a purifying and life-giving stream which has changed the current of human history, sweetened and ennobled human life in all its relations, given the world new moral and spiritual ideals, dignified human nature, exalted human rights, and set in operation forces which are working for the education and regeneration of the race. At the birthplace of such a King we may well linger to offer our incense of devotion and our costliest gifts of love and service; linger to catch his Spirit, to be inspired by his ideals, that we may take up our life-tasks more bravely, and perform them more faithfully because done in his name and in his Spirit.

"Gloria in Excelsis" is a great hymnal. It is difficult to think of any improvement that could be made on it. Its 800 hymns, songs, and chants include everything that should be gathered together as the cream of the world's hymnology. Its Responsive Readings, Orders of Service, Invocations, etc., seem to meet every reasonable want in the church's worship. Its mechanical make-up is substantial and beautiful. Such a noble book is something to be proud of and grateful for and deserves repeated and generous commendation.

One of the things that was vigorously applauded in the Inter-Church Conference in New York was a reference to the new Methodist hymnal which is being used by the Methodist Church North and South and is supposed to be one instrument to reunite those bodies. It is the fruit of six years' labor on the part of a joint commission. The new volume is remarkable from a literary point of view and also marks an epoch in the history of the Methodist brotherhood in the United States, bringing these brethren, separated by sectional differences, into closer relations. The former hymnal contained 1,100 hymns, this has 717 and 39 other pieces. Charles Wesley has 134 hymns, Watts 53, and other authors have a place, among them Kipling, Richard Watson Gilder and Washington Gladden. The new hymnal is expected to do much to unify the brethren.

There is no question of the great value of hymns in promoting every interest of the kingdom. Such a volume as Hackleman's "Gloria in Excelsis" marks an epoch in our Church history. It is worthy to stand among the worthiest. Every phase of Christian experience and of church work and worship is richly provided for and classified in such perfect order that one can readily make his selections. The preacher should know his hymnal as he knows his Bible, and such arrangement is invaluable. Some departments receive special attention in this collection which in other books in use among us are lacking, as, for example, the hymns that set forth the work of the Holy Spirit, for children's services and miscellaneous meetings. It is a rich selection of the very choicest productions of the hymn writers, including some of the best of our modern Gospel Songs. Old favorites and familiar tunes are here, and enough of the newer and up-to-date pieces to satisfy all tastes. The editor has done his work well and deserves the thanks of the brotherhood for the great benefit he has unquestionably rendered our service of song. The Abridged Edition of this hymnal, with 503 hymns, has its fine features and deserves high praise.

"The Disciples of Christ," by Errett Gates, one of the Baker and Taylor series, under the general title, "The Story of the Churches," I have read with much interest. This series is intended to furnish a uniform set of church histories, brief yet complete, and designed to instruct the average church member in the origin, development, and history of the various denominations. This volume answers well its purpose. Mr. Gates has done his work very satisfactorily in so condensed a form. It is interesting. It is evidently written in the historical spirit. It aims to be every way just and fair. It gives as full a treatment of the great matters that come before the writer as is possible in the space allotted. It presents the story of the movement and its various phases and experiences with such clearness and faithfulness as the ordinary reader can readily grasp. Fuller discussion of many of the subjects reviewed may be desirable, but what the author gives us will quicken the taste for wider information and lead to fuller investigation of one of the most fascinating lines of study.

Such chapter headings as The Campbells, Religious Conditions in Scotland and Ireland, The Christian Association of Washington, Stone and the Springfield Presbytery, The Union with the Baptists, Alexander Campbell as a Baptist, The Reformers among the Baptists, Separation from the Baptists, Union of the Reformers as Disciples of Christ, Early Growth and Organization, Rise of Internal Controversy, Missionary Organization, Evangelism, Journalism, Education and Church Growth, and Recent Tendencies and Problems, will indicate the general arrangement of the volume. Such a history is needed. With the Centennial in 1909 close upon us there will be an increasing demand for some satisfactory statement of the history and religious position of a people occupying so prominent a place in our national life. Mr. Gates offers this as his contribution. It is a neat, handy, pleasing volume which well merits a careful reading and a general circulation, and for which the author has my personal thanks.

What an amazingly industrious, versatile and productive writer is Amos R. Wells of the "Christian Endeavor World"! When I read his "Helps for the Tempted" I thought surely ne plus ultra, but here he is with his latest and best, "That They All May Be One." It is a great little book on Christian union which, in these wholesome days of inter-church conferences and the like, is specially timely. Evidently the Disciples have no monopoly of the plea for union among the people of God. Mr. Wells writes out of a full heart and with a vigorous pen. And it is real union, visible union, organic union, practical and complete union, he urges. Hear him: "Why should we long for this organic union with one another and with Christ? Why should we plan for it, and admit no plans contrary to it? Why should we work toward it slowly, though surely, with the patient enthusiasm that never consents to defeat?

"Because it would be the climax of our splendid church history, the consummation of our Christian evolution. Because it would place the ability of each at the disposal of all and the power of all at the disposal of each. Because it would combine the utmost flexibility with the utmost strength, absolute freedom with perfect stability. Because it would inspire every Christian with the momentum of the Church universal and overbear all evil with an infinite phalanx of good. Because it would be the maximum of utilization with the minimum of machinery, the most results with the least waste. Because it would transform religious drudgery to religious zest, and the aching strain of a dwarf into the easy swing of a giant. Because it would put the church of Christ in harmony with the organic union of nature and the organic union of the Triune God. Because —and we return to our initial thought—because it is the will of Christ who desires all good for his churches and nothing but good for them—it is his loving will that they all may be one."

Mr. Wells writes, as he always does, in the most irenic spirit and with pith and point and brilliancy. One can not drop the dainty volume until he is through the last of its twenty chapters. It is a useful discussion of a vital theme. It is a sin for any man who tastes a good book to keep it to himself: he should pass the knowledge of it on to his neighbor. I sometimes recommend such treasures from the pulpit. Why not? It is a pleasure to introduce good people and why not good books?

Here is a volume entitled, "A Journey to Nature," by J. P. Mowbray, which is a needful volume to many in this day of rush and overwork. A Wall street man is advised by his doctor to go to the country. The narrative of how he became acquainted with Nature for the first time and of the delicate romance that creeps into this primitive life, is told with such freshness and charm as to make the volume unique in contemporary literature. To pass suddenly out of the very tempest and agony of life into the dead calm of another existence, to stop all the rioting faculties at full speed and go quietly away to vegetating dreams, was this man's experience. He exiled himself to forget himself, and he found something of infinite value which he had never before known. One can not conceive a more wonderful change than from such a hurly-burly as Wall street to leafy woods and singing birds and whispering streams and deep blue sky and clustering stars—to all the mysteries and glories of Nature. Nature itself is an open book. On every leaf, "Creator, God," is written. The victim of Americanitis becomes acquainted for the first time with its great libraries and laboratories and revels in a new and untried world. And the story is told in a delightful way. Tired folks will find it a most restful volume.

A book of great value, to preachers especially, will be "The Inter-Church Conference on Federation of 1905." These papers and addresses, published in one volume, should be circulated far and wide. They will help to acquaint Christian workers with a notable movement in the churches—a movement which will continue to

Now that the South Broadway Church is free from the debt under which it has struggled since 1892 it is probable that the congregation will become a living-link church in the foreign mission field.

A gymnasium for our boys and young men is being prepared in the basement of the church this week. They have been going down town for their physical exercise and culture, where the moral atmosphere is not absolutely pure. This gymnasium will help them in the very best moral atmosphere and afford them the desired exercise and physical training. A competent teacher and director will be employed.

"The Post," a yellow journal of the worst type, printed in Denver, some days ago had an alleged "interview" with Mrs. W. B. Craig, wife of W. Bayard Craig, pastor of the Central Christian Church, in which this good man and his noble wife are represented as having gone over to Christian Science. Dr. Craig was represented as going about among his people as a "healer." The Wednesday evening meeting in the Central Christian Church was represented as a "testimony" meeting after the fashion of the Christian Science midweek service.

I had a conversation with Brother Craig last evening, Monday, December 11, in which he repudiates the alleged "interview," in toto, as also does Mrs. Craig. Brother Craig has given some attention to Christian Science. As a result he says: "Mrs. Eddy is fundamentally in error in her philosophy and the Christian Science Church is narrow and sectarian." This is what W. Bayard Craig thinks of the Christian Science Church and of the so-called philosophy of Mary Baker Glover Patterson Simmons Eddy!

To those who know Brother Craig it will be understood that when he says Mrs. Eddy's church is "narrow" and "sectarian" he is saying against it the strongest things of which he is capable. If there are two things that William Bayard Craig dislikes above any other two things they are "narrowness" and "sectarianism."

Is there no possible protection against the almost habitual mendacity of certain daily papers? In at least one state in our republic there is a law that compels newspaper publishers to keep within the limits of common decency and truthfulness. I refer, of course, to the state of Texas. Why should not the other states of the American union have laws similar to those of the Lone Star state?

A great meeting was held last evening in the Central Christian Church. The Rev. Dr. R. F. Coyle, ex-moderator of the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church in Denver, gave an account of the Church Federation Conference held in New York last month. The principal pastors of the city came together, with selected men from their respective congregations, to hear Dr. Coyle's report of this great conference—assembled to the number of almost two hundred. It was a splendid company of men. The ladies of the Central Christian Church served a dinner such as they only can serve and in a style that left nothing to be desired. The Rev. J. H. Houghton, D. D., president of the Denver Ministerial Alliance, Episcopalian, rector of St. Mark's Church, presided. Dr. Coyle's report was a fine resume of the proceedings of the conference of which we had been informed by the press, but it was more interesting to listen to the recital of the story by an exceptionally good talker who was an active member of the conference. Bishop Warren, of the Methodist Church, who has preached the Gospel in thirty-four languages, in going around the world two or three times, gave an account of what he had seen of federation among believers in Christ in pagan lands.

The Disciples were much in evidence in this meeting. The genial pastor of the Central Church was host. On such an occasion Brother Craig is at his best. Assisted by such women as he has in his church, the entertainment was simply perfect. At the roll call, in the early part of the meeting, thirty persons reported as being simply "Christians." The Presbyterian Church followed with twenty-seven members present. A. E. Pierce, an elder in the South Broadway Christian Church, and chairman of its official board, brought the house down when he said: "I was born an Episcopalian; I am now a Christian." Dr. Houghton could not keep from reminding the company that the house of bishops, in 1886, submitted a basis of union, and were therefore pioneers in the now great movement in the direction of a united Protestant Christendom. This gave one of the brethren an opportunity to speak of the Evangelical Alliance, which he seemed to think was organized in 1873 instead of 1846. The sixth meeting of the alliance was held in New York in 1873. This brought a representative of the Young Men's Christian Association to his feet, who reminded the company that this great union movement began with the organization of the first Young Men's Christian Association fifty years ago. But this occurred sixty-one years ago—or in 1844. Of course a Disciple, or Christian, could not remain silent under such repeated provocation! A "Christian," therefore, arose and said that the real beginning of this practical union was the publication in 1809 of a document containing a declaration and an address in which was submitted a basis on which believers could co-operate in the evangelization of the world—the very basis on which this federation of churches proposes to build, namely, the Lordship of the Christ! The spirit of the meeting from first to last was faultless. A resolution was passed instructing the chairman to appoint a committee to formulate a plan of federation for the churches of Denver.

move, just as "the current reformation" will continue to be current. We must keep up with the procession. We must, if possible, claim a place on the band-wagon. We must have a hand in this Protestant readjustment. Instead of warring for place and recognition as sects, to the great waste and sacrifice of power and service possible to a united Church, the world's need must drive Christians to their knees and to a closer union in Christ. A Golden Wedding.

MR. PETER COURTNEY.

MRS. PETER COURTNEY.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Courtney, who have just celebrated their golden wedding, amid the felicitations of many friends, are staunch members of the Christian church. They reside at Sedalia, Mo., and were married in Pettis county, fifty years ago, by the late Elder De Jarnett. We rejoice to know that they are in the best of health and that their nine children and the grandchildren were present at the celebration.

Things That Are Moving England

By William Durban

PRELUDE.

Deeply interesting to our English churches of Christ at this juncture are the changes taking place in our pastorates. Some of these are only in course of arrangement, but it is hoped that the issue will, at least in a large measure, compensate for the severe loss occasioned by the removal to America of those preachers whom I have mentioned in more than one of my recent communications. The gaps made are difficult satisfactorily to fill, but careful efforts on the part of our board are likely to be rewarded by the arrival in the vacant spheres of suitable men. In one case a remarkable incident has taken place. Everything possible was tried to induce Brother and Sister Ben Mitchell to remain with the church at Liverpool, but after faithful and arduous service for some years they decided to proceed towards the setting sun. The successor to Brother Mitchell is already in this important sphere. Liverpool is as interesting and important a location as any in our English work. The new minister is Daniel Hughes, a very notable man from the Baptists. One singular fact, which is naturally of special interest personally to me, is that Brother Hughes was my successor in the Baptist church at Chester, founded by myself when I was appointed to go to that beautiful place by the late C. H. Spurgeon in order to plant a new mission. The attempt was wonderfully blessed. Is it not a curious fact that the founder of that Baptist church, now a most flourishing community, and also his successor, should now be serving in the ranks of the Disciples of Christ? Daniel Hughes has only just commenced his new work, but I understand that crowded congregations are at once gathering to listen to his brilliant preaching, as was the case all the time in Chester. He is a native of Wales and is gifted with the fire of Celtic eloquence. Naturally, great things are expected from him.

A VOICE FROM DARKEST CONGO LAND.

I have been spending two of the most memorable and pathetic evenings of my life—one with Rev. John Harris, the other with Mrs. John Harris, a missionary couple from the Congo. I shall never forget the facts related to me by both husband and wife. England is being greatly agitated by the accounts which are being sent over by various missionaries of the dreadful crimes perpetrated by the officials of the Congo Free State and the black soldiers under their command in the rubber districts. As the American churches of Christ have now a new mission on the Congo, this matter is of deep interest to Americans as well as Britons. The chief rubber districts are a thousand miles up the Congo, towards the very heart of Darkest Africa. It has during the last few years been constantly alleged that infernal atrocities were being committed on the natives who failed to bring in supplies of rubber enough to satisfy the officers of the various companies. Some of these companies have grown enormously wealthy, but at a dreadful cost. The poor negroes are forced to go into the forests where the rubber vines grow and to work rubber till their baskets are full. In many localities the commodity has become scarce, through the extravagant drain on the plants and the failure to work them on the proper principles of scientific economy. Thus the villagers are compelled to march many miles into the recesses of the woods, taking three or four days for the journey before they reach the vines. Then they are several days occupied with the task of gathering, having no proper shelter, and being exposed to peril from wild beasts, snakes, and terrific storms. Then begins the weary homeward march. Likewise these unfortunate people are expected to pay heavy food taxes. They are bound to bring to the white men any supplies that may be demanded. A Belgian officer and his retinue may be tired of feeding upon yams, plantains, bananas, manioc, and cassava, and therefore they order a chief and his people within a few hours to bring them fish, chickens, and antelope meat, without any payment whatever.

THE CATEGORY OF CRIME.

I will here recite very briefly just a few of the atrocities chronicled by Mr. and Mrs. Harris. Many of the incidents came directly under their own notice, and they are now in England holding meetings and stirring public opinion. The excitement would be very great, were it not for the distraction of the public mind caused by the black news coming in hourly from Russia. A dignified chief was accused of shortage of rubber collected by his people. He was seized by the black sentries, under the orders of an official, tied by the neck like a slave to other prisoners, and compelled to sweep the roads. He was sick at the time and died soon after his release. If men do not collect sufficient rubber their wives are sometimes set to clean the roads, even in the heat of the day, often carrying their babes on their backs. Men, women and children are flung indiscriminately into filthy prisons. Often when the men are away in the forests their wives are stolen from them by the sentries, and others of the women are detained by the officials as hostages in order to force the supply of rubber. Hideous and unprintable deeds are committed. Mr. and Mrs. Harris have given me some of the photographs taken by the lady. These dreadful illustrations would decorate an infernal chamber of horrors. I will mention one sample out of many. Some of the black sentries employed are cannibals. A number of these, armed with rifles, raided a village. A little girl named Boali was captured with her mother. The father fled and hid among the trees, He actually saw the child killed, cut up, and eaten by these demons in the service of the Congo Free State. Watching his opportunity he snatched a little hand and foot, brought them to the front door of the mission station, laid them down on a tree trunk, and sat watching them in despair. I have this terrible photograph, taken by Mrs. Harris on the spot, before me now. Shocking mutilations of men, women and children have been constantly committed by these fiends. I forbear to tell more.

KING LEOPOLD'S COMMISSION.

The King of the Belgians has for a long period been mocking European public opinion. Though the atrocities have been proved over and over, the officials have taken vengeance on natives who have given evidence. It has been repeatedly proved that natives supplying missionaries with food have been malignantly punished. But some months ago King Leopold appointed a Special Commission to travel up the Congo and to collect evidence at various points. These delegates came in due course to Baringa, twelve hundred miles up the river. Mrs. Harris was the only white woman in Africa to give evidence, and her photographs fully established the appalling testimonies of herself and her husband. An elaborate report has just been published by the orders of King Leopold, giving the record of the commission. But the public have wondered why this document was so slow in appearing. The commissioners are constrained to admit the truth of the foul accusations leveled against the black soldiers but they make every attempt to whitewash the white officials, though it is too well known that many of these have been guilty of ordering unspeakable outrages. All humanitarians in Europe are now asking what King Leopold is going to do. The English press of all sections is bitterly declaiming against his callous policy. The Congo Free State is independent of the Belgian government, but the King of the Belgians is the head of it, and his orders must be implicitly obeyed. The important factor, however, in the situation is this: that he does not hold that position by right of conquest or annexation, but by the united arrangement of the great powers. At any moment this international agreement can be entirely reversed, and I note that very many of the most influential organs are vehemently calling upon the powers to take up the case and to do their duty. But, unfortunately, the world is just now full of dire commotion. The hearts of statesmen seem to be failing them, and apparently there is but little of the courage and wisdom manifested which the age crucially needs. The political conscience needs quickening in every nation, and only when the countless churches are alive to their responsibility to humanity at large will the necessary pressure be applied to the rulers who are so sadly failing to administer righteous judgment.

[This matter of the abuses in the Congo Free State came up for thorough discussion in the Committee on Resolutions at the recent Inter-Church Conference. There were on that committee men who had made a thorough investigation of all the facts bearing on this case in so far as they have come to light, and the Conference embodied its sentiments in a ringing resolution against such abuses, calling upon the United States government to use its influence in the correction of such abuses.—Editor.]

Some Practical Results of the Inter-Church Conference on Federation

The Address by F. D. Power

As God is God there is no such thing in all the universe as an unanswered prayer. Christ's prayer for the unity of his people was answered; is being answered; will be fully answered. We descend from our Hermon, where the "Sons of Thunder" and the "Men of Rock" have had their vision with the Master, to serve in the valley. We have been on the mountain top during these days. What are some results of this holy convocation?

1. We will pray for union. The spirit of unity is the spirit of prayer. We must depend more upon God and less upon our own plans, discussions and overtures. Heaven has a part here; nearness to God must promote the nearness of Christians to each other, and unless God's people are willing to bring themselves into humble submission to his will no effort at closer union can be successful. Nothing is more practical than prayer. "If two of you shall agree on earth"—agree in heart, mind, will, desire, faith—"as touching anything, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." What power there would be in the religion of Jesus Christ if the multitude of them that believed should all agree touching their common needs and send their petition up before the throne as one man! If the supplication of all the family of those that love God and his Son, blended in one voice for the Father's ear, should roll up to the gates of heaven, would not the gates fly wide, and the angels rejoice, and the cities of hell shake to their foundation with the shock? Would not heaven drop down from above, and the skies pour down righteousness, and the earth open and bring forth salvation, and righteousness spring up from sea to sea? Would there be any longer strife and division, the body of Christ bleeding because of the warring of its members, and the sweet sounds of the ringing, thrilling Gospel of Christ be muffled and hindered by the noise of conflict among God's people? Let the whole Church come with deep, tender yearning, solemn petition, to the Throne of Mercy, as Christ in the upper chamber in Jerusalem, and the dawn of the perfect day will soon gladden the eastern skies. The Master taught us to pray for union. Let us pray.

2. We will recognize our Lord's disciples, wherever they are, as brethren. "I pray not for these alone, but for all them that believe on me through their word, that they may all be one." This prayer reaches out to all peoples, all lands, all ages. "Other sheep have I that are not of this fold," said Jesus. "I am of the Church of all saints, and all saints are of my Church," says the true Christian. All spirit of narrowness, of bigotry, of intolerance, of exclusiveness, is opposed to the spirit of unity. No process of compulsion can ever bring unity. No plan of Christian union can ever succeed that does not respect every man's liberty in Christ Jesus. No religious body can ever effect it by lifting up its standard and crying, "We are the people!" No spirit can ever commend itself as the spirit of unity that is not as broadly catholic as the spirit of the Master on his knees, serving as the High Priest of all the human race. No progress can ever be made towards the bringing together of God's people unless we are willing to magnify our points of agreement and minimize our points of difference, recognize our brother's work and co-operate with him as far as we are able, and feel that Christian unity may be promoted, and in a large measure realized in a united Christian service.

3. We will be willing to sacrifice for the cause of unity. Jesus is on the way to Gethsemane. The shadow of the cross is upon him. Self is upon the altar. He is about to give his life for his brethren. Such must be the spirit of unity. Do we find that party names and creedal statements hinder the coming of a united Christendom? Does the exaltation of the commandments of men in place of the commandments of Christ occasion strife? Do human contentions and quibbles over mint, anise and cummin fetter and cripple the mighty giant which has the conversion of the world on its hands? The spirit of unity demands the putting away or the subordination of these things. The spirit of unity is the spirit of concession, the spirit of self-denial, the spirit that says: "I will eat no meat while the world stands if it make my brother to offend." "I would not surrender my denominational name for the world. No, not for the world, but for Christ's sake I will gladly surrender it." The spirit of Jesus in his intercessory prayer must be the spirit of the church, and he alone be Sovereign.

4. We shall, above all else, be inspired by such conferences as this to love our brethren. The spirit of sectarianism is the spirit of hatred; the spirit of unity is the spirit of love. Who can ever sound the depths of the heart of Jesus as he pleads, "I pray not for these alone, but for all that believe on me through their word"? How can we ever be worthy of the exalted condition he asks for us, "As thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they may be one in us," unless thoroughly dominated by this principle? Forbearing one another in love and endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace, all barriers must be removed as if straws. The thirteenth of First Corinthians must go with the seventeenth of John in accomplishing the unity of Christendom. The fruits of the spirit of Christ in us are "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith," and when these are exhibited in the lives of Christian men and women everywhere the unity of the Church will be mightily hastened. We shall not have restored Christianity according to the apostles until faith, hope and love are exalted to their true positions. "There is a more excellent way."

Such has not been the spirit of the past. "Show me the peaceful reign of the Messiah," said a Jewish rabbi, "and I will be a Christian, and not before." "Do you want schools on your reservation?" was asked of Chief Joseph, of the Nez Perces tribe of Indians. "No," was the red man's emphatic answer. "No; the schools will bring us churches." "Don't you want churches?" "No, no; they will teach us to quarrel about God, as Protestants and Catholics do. We fight each other, but we don't want to fight about God."

The world in its disunity was Babel; men were strangers, barbarians, aliens, Scythians—anything but brethren. Christ came teaching a new dispensation. Love was the new law, and men began to realize that they were one family. They had all things in common. They were no more strangers and aliens, but fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God, children of one Father, citizens of one republic, brethren. So the work went forward until pagan temples crumbled, idols fell upon their faces, philosophers were convicted of their folly, the Roman eagle was hurled from the throne of the Cesars, the standard of the cross was borne before the standards of all nations. Today the same results may be reached in less than three centuries with the same concentrated effort. Are we not seeking the same end—the repairing of the evils wrought by sin, and the joy of a meeting before the throne?

Two Scotchmen, a burgher and an antiburgher, lived in the same house, but at opposite ends. It was the bargain that each should keep his side of the house well thatched. When the dispute between their respective kirks grew hot the two neighbors ceased to speak to each other. But one day it happened they were both on the roof at the same time, each repairing the slope on his own side, and when they had worked up to the top they were face to face. They could not flee, so at last Andrew took off his cap, and, scratching his head, exclaimed: "Johnny, you and me, I think, hae been very foolish to dispute as we hae done concerning Christ's will about our kirks, until we hae clean forgot his will aboot ourselves. Whatever's wrang it's perfectly certain it can never be right to be unneighborly, uncivil, unkind, in fac' to hate one anither. Na, na, that's the devil's wark and na God's. Noo, it strikes me, that maybe it's wi' the kirk as wi' this house—ye're warking on ane side and me on t'ither, but if we only do our wark weel we will meet at the tap at last. Gie us yer han', auld neighbor."

My brethren, Demos is waking. He looks upon much of this state of things as belonging to the paganism of the priesthood. The people are tired of our differences; let their leaders confess and forsake their sins, and the great multitude of Christendom will join hands. 'Educate the masters, is a helpful word. Are we ever tempted to forget that we are Christians? Let us return to the spirit of Christ. Do we ask the kingdoms of this world to dissolve their armaments, to decree that there shall be no more war? Let us see that in the kingdom of the Prince of Peace the drumbeat of civil conflict is hushed. Do we speculate about a universal language and so predict the unity and co-operation of the human race? Let us who have our speech ordained of heaven all speak the same thing and preserve the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Do we desire for our King that he may have the heathen for his inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession, and that the kingdoms of this world shall become his kingdom? Let us pray with him that all his people may be one, that the world may believe. As the President of the United States, by touching a button, set the great machinery of the World's Fair in motion with one united purpose, started the play of fountains, unfurled thousands of flags and banners in an instant, quickened all the stupendous forces of nature, harnessed there to do man's will and go forward in unity and harmony, so may the spirit of the Son of God quicken and move his people to their common service and their common victory.

Our Budget.

—A Merry, Merry Christmas to all our readers!

—Send your gifts by return mail—in the form of renewals!

—By the way, that is what our subscribers are doing, and new readers are joining our ranks by scores and hundreds.

—The Christian-Evangelist for 1906 will be indispensable to any one among us who wishes to know what are the latest and best things saying and doing among ourselves and our religious neighbors.

—We call attention to the Centennial statement elsewhere of our secretary, Bro. W. R. Warren. He is lifting up a standard. Let all the churches and preachers fall into line for a great forward movement.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Decatur, Ill., Dec. 17.—Meeting two weeks old; forty-seven additions at the Christian Temple. We continue.—Thompson and Kendall.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Colorado Springs, Col., Dec. 17.—Seven added today; eleven last Sunday; recent reports show that this church leads Colorado in C. W. B. M. work.—Crayton S. Brooks.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Wheeling, W. Va., Dec. 18.—Clarence Mitchell is with us in our revival among the students of State Normal; greatest meeting in years; forty confessions to date.—J. W. Underwood, minister.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Bethany, Mo., Dec. 18.—Three weeks, eleven added; greatest meeting ever held here; continuing.—Orahood, pastor; Fife, evangelist.

—The new building at Lyons, Kan., where Geo. L. Lyon ministers, is now under cover. It will seat 1,000 people.

—The present address of C. A. Hill and wife is not Milton, Ohio, as announced last week, inadvertently, but Piqua, Ohio.

—Evangelist John W. Marshall is reported in a meeting at Normal, Ill., R. H. Newton, minister, that is full of interest and promise.

—The church at Gallatin Mo., will be without a pastor after January 1, 1906. Brethren desiring a call may write W. C. Gillihan, Gallatin, Mo.

—Charles M. Fillmore, in the midst of his seventh year at Carthage, Ohio, has been voted an increase of salary and asked to continue indefinitely as minister.

—We regret to learn that J. M. Blalock is critically ill with pneumonia at his home in Marshall, Mo. Let us pray that his life may be spared for the cause he loves.

—Educational day among the Disciples of Christ is January 21, 1906. Every church among us should plan to give the day thoroughly to this fundamental interest.

—J. W. Walters, Webster City, Ia., can put churches in correspondence with an excellent young minister and his wife, both college graduates, who desire to change their field of work January 1.

—J. Will Walters is just closing a meeting at Harlan, Ia., with T. C. McIntire, the pastor, and is to hold another at Bagby, Iowa, with F. W. Mutchler, pastor, December 20.

—The brethren at Fontana, Kan., heartily commend M. F. Ross, of Erie, Kan., who has been holding a meeting for them. They believe he ought to engage more fully in evangelistic work.

—Our colleges are expecting large results from education day, January 21, 1906. A people blessed as ours have been by well trained men can not well say, "No," when the institutes that train them need help to prepare more great men for the Lord's work.

—C. W. Perigo, who has recently located in Granite City, Ill., would be pleased to correspond with churches in easy reach of that place, with a view of visiting them and preaching for them once or twice per month.

—Harold E. Monser, and Charles E. McVay, song evangelist, will begin a meeting for the church at Petersburg, Ill., December 31, where W. M. Groves ministers. Brother Groves is planning well for the meeting.

—J. W. Butler, formerly president of Abingdon College, passed away at his home in Fall River, Kan., December 13, 1905. Fuller notice next week. Our sincere sympathy is extended to his bereaved wife who survives him.

—S. W. Traum begins his third year with hte church at Madison, Ind., on January 1. He writes, "We are planning for union meetings conducted by local ministers. Our town has the lid on. It bids fair to help us in our meeting."

—H. A. Long, of Missouri, and Asa Pixley, of Illinois, and the Dorchester, Ill., church have each just given our National Benevolent Association $100. This constitutes these brethren and this church life liners in Christian philanthropy —Great foreign missionary rallies have just been held at Centralia and Du Quoin; splendid audiences and intense interest. Brother McLean is a genius in a missionary rally. He is being helped by Secretary S. J. Corey and C. B. Titus, of China.

—W. H. Book, of Columbus, Ind., reports that a few friends have just expressed their apppreciation of the county evangelist, William H. Chapple, and his wife in the way of a substantial token of the esteem in which they are held for their work's sake.

—Bro. Thos. Hunt, of Illinois, has just given our National Benevolent Association $100 outright and $1,000 on the Annuity Plan. Secretary Geo. L. Snively, of 903 Aubert avenue, St. Louis, will explain to all inquirers the annuity plan of helping this Christlike ministry.

—W. T. Clarkson, of Lawrence, Kan., will hold a meeting for the church at Willmathsville, Mo., beginning December 24. Brother Clarkson organized the church at Willmathsville last August, after the close of a very successful meeting which resulted in thirty-six additions.

—Herbert Yeuell gave his lecture "Ben Hur" to a crowded house on the Y. M. C. A. course at Parkersburg, W. Va., December 3, and repeated it at the Christian church to another crowded house December 15. This is Brother Yeuell's third time on this lecture at Parkersburg within a year.

—E. B. Barnes of Noblesville, Ind., will commence a meeting with the church at Farmington, Mo., Edward Owers, pastor, on January 4. Mr. and Mrs. John S. Zeran will lead the song service. Nothing has been left undone to make this meeting a great success.

—After twenty-one years' ministry in Missouri, James C. Creel, of Plattsburg, has accepted a unanimous call to the church at Jonesburg, Ark., where he begins the work first Lord's day in January, 1906. Thus Missouri loses and Arkansas gains a strong preacher.

—The Commercial Club of Omaha has unanimously elected S. D. Dutcher, pastor of the First Church there, to its membership. We note that Brother Dutcher has just started a little paper to forward the interests of the church work. It is full of news of our two churches in Omaha.

—Referring to inquiries that come to us occasionally from regions of the country where they are still discussing the organ question, we would say that there is a recent book containing a discussion between Brother Stark and Brother Warlick on that question, which can be had by applying to J. Carroll Stark, Hamilton, Ill.

Get Rid of Scrofula

Bunches, eruptions, inflammations, soreness of the eyelids and ears, diseases of the bones, rickets, dyspepsia, catarrh, wasting, are only some of the troubles it causes.

It is a very active evil, making havoc of the whole system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Eradicates it, cures all its manifestations, and builds up the whole system.

Accept no substitute.

—Mrs. H. A. Wheeldon, of Missoula, Montana, reports C. W. B. M. day in the church there as very successful. Miss Mary Kingsbury, a missionary who has spent twenty-three years in India, was present and her addresses were listened to with great interest by large audiences. The church there is still in need of a pastor and is ready for the right man.

—A literary lady correspondent in New York City, writes: "I was pleasantly entertained by Mr. Power's letter last week giving an account of his visit to New York City in company with the Editor. I am glad you made the acquaintance of Mrs. Waldorf and were so hospitably entertained by her!" It was very unkind of Dr. Power to give the Editor away as he did!

—A large number of complaints were received at this office last week because of the delay of The Christian-Evangelist in reaching its readers. While we regret the mishap which caused this delay, we are glad of the evidence it furnishes of how much The Christian-Evangelist is valued as a weekly visitor, and how it is missed when its visit is delayed. We hope to be able to prevent these delays in the future.

—The dedication at Mexico, Mo., last Lord's day was a pronounced success. The building, erected at a cost of over $32,000, is, as the Baptist minister said, "A poem without and a psalm within." Brother Rains was present and made the appeal for funds and received in pledges nearly $14,000 to cover a remaining indebtedness of about $12,000. We hope to give a fuller report next week with a cut of the new building.

—Bro. S. W. Pearcy, church clerk, Saginaw, Mich., writing of Bro. S. M. Martin's meeting, which had just closed, with thirty-four additions, twenty-five of them by baptism, says: "Brother Martin is a great preacher and teacher. Many people have heard truths that they can not get rid of should they live fifty years. No happier company could be imagined than the converts were, seated near the speaker this evening to hear his parting words."

—A men's club has been organized at the Island Church, Wheeling, where C. Manly Rice is minister, and twenty-two members have already enrolled; eight taking membership at the last meeting. The club meets every month and has a literary program, and occasionally light refreshments. Its object is to get men interested in the work of the church and to help the needy and distressed and inculcate the spirit and workings of practical Christian brotherliness.

—Edward Oliver Tilburn, who closed a successful pastorate at Warsaw, Ind., on September 10 and accepted the work at Mishawaka, beginning on September 17, reports a most encouraging outlook in his new field of labor. He has received a cordial rception and the church is in fine condition. He reports large audiences, a number of recent baptisms, and a general spirit of co-operation among all the departments of the church.

—H. W. Hurst, Tarkio, Mo., reports that Bro. C. C. Brelos has just closed his second year's work with the church and was unanimously called for a third year. The church has shown steady growth under his pastorate; all missionary offerings increased, and all departments of the work active. The Sunday school is booming under the efficient service of C. C. Crouch, the superintendent. He reports a good opening there for a live newspaper man of Christian character.

—The American Bible Society, for the first time in a quarter of a century, finds itself in debt and says it must have $50,000 advance over last year's receipts to meet the appropriations already made. This great undenominational organization for the circulation of the Holy Scriptures throughout the world ought to be the beneficiary of every religious movement that bases its appeal upon the Bible as the inspired word of God. Help this old organization in its noble work.

—J. W. Hilton, Bethany, Neb., calls the attention of the brethren to Ed C. Tuckerman, a very earnest and devoted Christian man, and a cultivated and accomplished soloist and choir leader, who united with the University Church of Christ at Bethany (Lincoln) Neb., recently. Brother Hilton speaks in the highest terms of the worth and ability of this young man and predicts for him a splendid future as a singing evangelist. Our Evangelistic Bureau will no doubt take notice and see that Brother Tuckerman has employment.

—D. S. Domer, minister of the Christian church at Beaver City, Neb., writes: "It is with delight and pleasure that I have read your recent book on the Holy Spirit. I have a clearer conception of the office and personality of the Holy Spirit than I had before. No book can steer clear of thoughts subject to criticism, and this may be true of some things in this volume, but these are far outweighed by the good things, and the true things, and the spiritual things. Let every one who desires to know more about the Holy Spirit read the book."

—A. L. Orcutt, president of the board, writes: "The Board of Ministerial Relief has just received from the estate of Mrs. O. A. Burgess a bequest of $1,000. This becomes a part of our permanent fund and is to be known as 'The O. A. Burgess Loan Fund.' Sister Burgess' interest in the cause of Christ is not only to be known by this bequest, but as well by a number of others which she left to other departments of our general work. By these gifts she will still live to serve the cause of Christ. How wise this disposition of her possessions! This is a good example for others to follow. Blessed be her memory."

—How's this for a "territory"? Has anybody any objection to the admission of Oklahoma to statehood? Read: "Updike and Easton are in a meeting here. Last night a beating rain prevented services, but the patrons of the five rural phone lines asked for the sermon by phone, were connected, and heard the sermon distinctly. Easton sang two solos, one before and one after the sermon. At the conclusion of the sermon Updike asked all who were desirous of standing for God and right to say 'Aye,' and a chorus of 'Ayes!' responded. We hope for great good from the meeting.

"Hinton, Okla. HERBERT CALDWELL."

—The Fayetteville, Ark., press reports a very pleasant occasion in connection with the twentieth anniversary of Bro. N. M. Ragland's pastorate in the First Christian Church of that city. A reception was given at the Ragland home in which about 500 people participated. The house was beautifully decorated with flowers and there were music and refreshments. The paper says: "The evening was a most delightful one and many were the congratulations and good wishes bestowed upon the beloved pastor. His life is so entwined among the people of his church that no other could fill his place."

—Sister Sarah Yancey, corresponding secretary of the C. W. B. M. of Kentucky, in a note of thanks for volumes donated to their missionary traveling library and for the illustrated C. W. B. M. number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, says: "I am happy to inform you that through the efforts of Mrs. Luella St. Clair, president of Hamilton College, a gift of 110 volumes has been received from a gentleman in New York. Early in the new year we hope to have our plans perfected and start these books upon their journey, trusting the information that they will give may create enthusiasm for more consecrated missionary effort."

—The seventh year of the work of J. T. Boone at the First Christian Church, Jacksonville, Fla., has just closed. The local paper, in referring to this event, says that in this period, from a little handful of members struggling to pay a meagre salary to a preacher and finding it difficult to keep up the ordinary church expenses, it is now one of the big churches of the city, with a splendid church edifice, a pipe organ to be installed in January, and the outlook for growth excellent. "Brother Boone," says the paper, "has stood in the highest esteem not only of the people of the church but of those outside its membership."

—Mr. R. A. Torrey, the well-known evangelist who has been doing a great work in England and Australia, and who is returning to America this month with Mr. Alexander, his singer, in order to take up the work in Canada and the United States, invites the evangelists of America to meet with him for conference and prayer in Chicago, December 27, 28, 29. The headquarters of the meeting will be the Bible Institute and the Chicago Avenue Church. We trust as many of our evangelists as may find it possible to do so will attend this conference, contributing what they can to it, and receiving what they can from it.

—The Ohio Valley Ministerial Association was recently organized at Wheeling, W. Va., including in its membership the preachers of the plea located in the Ohio valley. Its meetings are held monthly in the lecture room of the Island Church, Wheeling, except once a quarter, when the meeting is held with some outlying church and includes an evening preaching service. The officers are: President, C. Manly Rice; vice-president, Percy H. Wilson; secretary, W. H. Fields; treasurer, J. W. Darby; reporter, E. H. Hart. It is hoped that much good will be accomplished in the way of arousing the churches to a better co-operation.

—George C. Ritchey, minister of the Christian church at Roseburg, Oregon, recently preached a series of five sermons on the Holy Spirit, as follows: 1. "The Holy Spirit of the Old Testament"; 2. "The Holy Spirit in the Ministry of Christ"; 3. "The Holy Spirit's Work as Related to the World"; 4. "The Holy Spirit as Related to Christians"; 5. "Helps from the Holy Spirit." We have no doubt these were greatly helpful to his congregation. We are glad to know that preachers are giving wide attention to this subject throughout the country. It is bringing to the front a neglected theme and one which had large prominence in the apostolic age.

—We regret to learn of the death of Professor D. G. Porter, which occurred at his home in Waterbury, Conn. Professor Porter was a man of fine scholarship and he has left the larger part of his estate for the purposes of education. Though a Baptist by training he was very largely in sympathy with the restoration movement of the Disciples of Christ and was not only a personal friend of the editors of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but a frequent contributor to its columns. The Professor's one peculiarity was that he was a confirmed bachelor and his bequest provides that the course of study in the school he has founded shall be for women during the summer time and men during the winter.

—A. M. Mott, Fontana, Kan., writes: "I have read with much interest what you have said concerning the Federation of Churches, the object of which seems to be to effect the union of churches. What are they to unite on? Are they not already united on the Bible as the word of God? Do they not already preach Christ and the necessity of faith in him in order to salvation, and that baptism is to be administered in his, and in no other, name?" Yes, the churches in that Conference were all agreed upon these fundamental truths and many others, and it is believed that we ought to cooperate on these things in which we agree and see if we can not settle some of the questions about which we disagree and so perfect our union.

—The Christian church at Frankfort, Ind., has just closed a most successful revival. In all there were forty services at which W. J. Russell preached and Mrs. J. E. Powell sang one or more solos, and there was a total of 114 accessions. At the close there was a great love-feast and reception of the new members. At this a surprise was sprung upon Mrs. Powell, who by her singing and directing the chorus has played a most important part in the meeting, two handsome souvenir spoons being presented to her on behalf of the boys and girls of the chorus, while testimonials were presented recognizing the church's ap-

WE CAN SHOW YOU

How to do the Lord's work while having your savings in an absolutely safe investment, upon which there will be no taxes to pay, no change of securities, no personal oversight required, no cost of mortgage records or foreclosures, and upon which you will net a larger rate of interest than in any other investment. preciation of the efforts of both Mrs. Powel, and the pastor, W. J. Russell. The church formally approved the action of the latter taken some days ago in promulgating the doctrine of the primitive church and the Word of God.

—An inquisitive brother asks: "In the oft-quoted statement, 'We are not the only Christians, but we are Christians only,' who are included in the 'we'?" Why, of course, it includes all those who are willing to be designated as Christians, Disciples of Christ, or other Scriptural names. "But if so," our inquisitor asks, "why 'Christians only' any more than 'Disciples of Christ only' or 'Saints only'?" Well, it is an abbreviated form of a general truth, we suppose, that passes more current in that form than it would otherwise. At least that is the best answer we can think of now. "But," our persistent querist continues, "if 'we' are not the only Christians then why should not the 'we' be used to include all who are Christians?" We (this is the editorial we) will be glad to have it so, just as soon as the unity of Christians makes the distinction unnecessary.

—Having advertised in The Christian-Evangelist the "Christian Colony" enterprise of J. P. Dargitz, near Acampo, Cal., and noticing from letters and papers received that there is some dissatisfaction among some of the colonists, at least, who claim that the conditions there have been misrepresented or overstated, and that many good people have suffered therefrom, we deem it our duty to make this fact known, and to ask our readers to make personal investigation of the situation before making any contract or agreement in connection with said colony. We regret that trouble has arisen among the colonists and the local church there, on this subject, and knowing nothing of the merits of the case, and without passing judgment thereon, we yet feel it our duty to give this note of warning to our readers.

—We learn that the American Christian Missionary Society has received $1,000 on the annuity plan from a friend in Missouri. It is wonderful how the annuity plan of our Home Board is growing in favor. If any one desires to help forward the cause of Christ and at the same time receive the income from his money during his lifetime, this to be free from taxation, insurance, rents, repairs, or any other charge whatsoever, we refer them to the annuity plan of the American Christian Missionary Society. It is certainly one of the best plans known to us to accomplish good with our means and at the same time secure the necessary income from it. The society sends out a booklet on the annuity plan and any one desiring information in regard to the matter may have same by writing Benj. L. Smith, corresponding secretary, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

—"The Defender" (a Prohibition paper) severely criticises the Inter-Church Conference for failing to pass a strong prohibition resolution. And yet, strange to say, neither "The Defender" nor its correspondent gives the resolution that was passed. It satisfied many Prohibitionists who were present as being a strong condemnation of the liquor traffic. We have not a copy of the resolution but we remember that it recommended the "utmost restriction that is righteously enforceable," of the manufacture and sale of intoxicants. The language, it was explained, had no reference to license, but to the necessary uses of alcohol for scientific, mechanical and other legitimate purposes. The man who wrote the resolution and presented it believes in the principles of Prohibition, as no doubt a large majority of those who voted for it do also.

—A reader makes this suggestion: "Our literature explaining the New Testament plea and plan for union is too expensive and expansive. Our brethren can not afford to sow booklets broadcast and even if they could the booklets would be read only by those whose interest had been aroused by other means. What we need is a small single sheet set in either two or four pages. They should be so inexpensive that any Disciple could afford to scatter a few and so brief that they would be read. The subject matter should breathe a Christian spirit, should be educational without being abusive, and the tract itself should be entirely devoid of advertising. Seed time must precede the harvest." The suggestion is a very good one. We are not doing a tithe of what we ought to be doing in tract circulation. But, as indicated above, the tracts most needed just now must be written and adapted to present needs and conditions.

—Bro. Marcellus R. Ely, of New Orleans, writes that some of our calendar days should be consolidated. He mentions the appeals of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and the Benevolent Association for Easter, and the Benevolent Association and Ministerial Relief. The first of these has been under consideration for some time, awaiting the opportunity of adjustment, and the consolidation of the latter two was suggested at the meeting of the General Board of the American Christian Missionary Society in San Francisco, but the brethren represented in that board thought there were reasons why this should not be done. No doubt, however, we shall make many improvements in our methods of administration in the interest of simplicity and economy, and if these suggestions are seen to be wise—as they seem to us to be—they will no doubt be carried out in the future. Meantime, our duty is to work for these organizations as they exist.

—Walter M. Jordan, Quincy, Ill., reports 35 additions to the church of which he is pastor at the regular church services since September 1. On December 5 the Business Men's Association gave its annual supper to the men of the church, the ladies' aid serving the supper. Seventy-two men sat down to the tables and after the feast there were a number of toasts on subjects pertaining to church life. Mrs. Jordan gave the C. W. B. M. day address, which was more than satisfactory. The C. W. B. M. auxiliary has gained twenty new members during the past month. A new feature introduced is a central council organized by the women composed of the executive committees of all the women's societies in the church which has proven satisfactory in keeping all the forces working in harmony. The church has become a living link in state missions and will support mission work in the chapel at the corner of Twenty-fifth and High Streets.

—James Small very cordially commends Helen Rhodes, who desires to teach classes in churches and Sunday schools and to lecture on the Bible. She is a woman of splendid Christian character and was baptized by him in Chautauqua Lake, N. Y., after hearing our plea there. The whole course of her life was changed toward the Bible, and the Bible alone. She has had special opportunities for the study of Biblical material, and can give the best of references as to her ability in this field. Her address is 563 E. 62d street, Chicago.

—Harry T. Maston has resigned the pastorate of the Toronto Junction Church, Toronto, Canada, in order to take further studies. He will enter Hiram College at the beginning of the next term.

—J. T. Boone, pastor of the First Christian Church, Jacksonville, Fla., had his sermon on a recent Sunday evening rendered into the sign language on behalf of a large number of deaf people of the city who attended the services. It was the first time such a meeting had been held in Jacksonville.

—E. M. Richmond writes: "Have read Brother Garrison's book on 'The Holy Spirit.' Am delighted with it. Chapters I and II, and also the one on Lessons from Pentecost, are not only sound but I believe as good as anything ever written on the subject. I must differ with the author on the question of baptism in the Holy Spirit continuing in the Church. What he says about the work of the Spirit in converting the sinner, comforting, keeping and perfecting the believer, is entirely sound and ought to be read by every member of our brotherhood." The difference between Bro. Richmond and the author of the work mentioned on the continuation of baptism in the Holy Spirit, is a difference, we take it, as to what the baptism in the Holy Spirit is. Our brother does believe in the continuation today of what the author of the book thinks is the baptism in the Holy Spirit, namely, that we may be "filled with the Holy Spirit," and have our minds and hearts brought fully under the influence of the Holy Spirit. The author does not believe in the perpetuation of the miraculous manifestations of the Holy Spirit, but he thinks these were no essential part of the baptism in the spirit, but only accompaniments for a time for a special purpose.

—In an able article by Charles Clayton Morrison on the "Inter-Church Conference" in the "Christian Century" he says: "The men and the churches involved in the federation movement and the trend toward unity know us only in name and in much prejudice. We are not understood. I have never seen a statement of our position written by one not a Disciple to which a well-informed Disciple would subscribe. Our books do not circulate outside our own brotherhood. We have no newspaper that represents us to any but ourselves. Nor does the voice of our pulpit carry our plea far beyond our own boundaries." This, it seems to us, is an overstatement of the truth involved in it, and an underestimate of the knowledge which the leaders in other religious bodies have of us and of our literature. The fact is, we are continually surprised, these days, to find how widespread among others is the knowledge of the plea we are making. This was especially true of the Inter-Church Conference. On congratulating a widely-known eastern bishop, whom we had never seen before, on his speech, the writer of this mentioned his own name by way of introduction, when the bishop remarked, "Oh, yes, sir; I have read your books, and while I can not agree with you in every point, I do in much." There is room, of course, for much greater publicity of our plea, but let us not underestimate what has been accomplished.

—A brother writing from Oklahoma asks what course a church should pursue towards one who asks admission to church fellowship as a baptized believer, who says in public that "he can dance himself into heaven and that he can go from the dance hall to the communion service." We have never yet met one who believed that he could dance himself into heaven, but we have met with some who held that it was not inconsistent with Christianity to engage in the dance with proper company and under proper conditions. This, of course, is a different proposition. While we do not think that an opinion of this kind should be made a condition of church fellowship where the Christian life in other respects is right, we would have grave doubts as to the Christian character of one who would lay great emphasis upon his right to dance and would prefer to remain outside the church rather than to yield his right to engage in this form of amusement. A little forbearance, on the part of the church, and a little humility and regard for the feelings and opinions of others, on the part of those believing in their privilege to dance, will generally solve the problem. We do not know how it is in the country, but in our cities we have sins so much greater to deal with, in our church members, that the question of dancing does not receive much attention.

Important Announcements.

G. A. Hoffmann, who for many years has been connected with the Christian Publishing Company, and in more recent years as General Superintendent of our Circulation Department, recently tendered his resignation, and becomes president of a bank at Maplewood, Mo., his home. He will continue to preach on Lord's days and maintain his other relations to the work of the church. Brother Hoffmann has rendered valuable service to this Company, and the directors, in accepting his resignation, ordered an expression of their appreciation to be spread upon the minutes.

George L. Snively, who for more than four years has been General Secretary of the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, and who has accomplished so great a work in that line, has resigned his position as secretary, but will retain his connection with the work as a member of the board. Brother Snively has been elected to succeed Bro. G. A. Hoffmann as General Superintendent and Circulation Manager of the Christian Publishing Company, and will enter upon his work the first of January. Brother Snively's phenomenal success in the work which he has resigned, and indeed in every work in which he has engaged, argues his eminent fitness for the new and responsible position which he is now to assume.

Benjamin L. Smith, who for ten years has been our color-bearer as Corresponding Secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society and under whose wise and energetic management home missions have been brought to the front as never before, has resigned his position, to take effect February 1, next, and will resume his work in the pastorate. Brother Smith took the work of home missions at a time when it was at a low ebb, and by his indefatigable industry and energy has brought it to its present prosperous condition. He deserves and will receive from the brotherhood he has so faithfully served the plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" Having been successful as a pastor before his call to the secretaryship, there is no doubt but that, with added wisdom and strength, he is better prepared for successful work in that field than when he left it. Our best wishes go with him for his future success.

At the last meeting of the Advisory Board of the Benevolent Association, Sister H. M. Meier resigned the presidency of the association on account of the condition of her health. Her resignation was accepted regretfully, in view of her able and devoted service to the benevolent work, but in the hope that her release from the responsibility of her position would tend more speedily to restore her health. The work of the association was never more prosperous than it is at present, and a number of new enterprises are under consideration.

Successful Use of Oils in the Cure of Tumor—What the Rev. G. B. Crinklaw Says About It.

Rudd, Iowa, May 23.

Dr. D. M. Bye Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

Gentlemen—In answer to your enclosed letter I am glad to report success in using your treatment for tumors of the rectum. I began your treatment on Nov. 4, 1903. In one month the tumors were removed and I have been well ever since, except that I have some trouble with constipation. Yours thankfully,

GEORGE B CRINKLAW.

All forms of cancer and tumor, internal and external, cured by soothing, balmy oil, and without pain or disfigurement. No experiment, but successfully used twelve years. Write to the Home Office of the originator for free book—DR. D. M. BYE CO., Drawer 105, Dept. 411, Indianapolis, Ind.

Evangelistic Notes.

Ben. F. Hill, California, Mo., has decided to re-enter the evangelistic field. He will be available after January 1.

James Bobbitt has just closed a meeting which was very satisfactory to the church at Lake, Ind. There were 13 additions.

C. A. Freer can hold meetings in March. He prefers working in central states; he has succeeded in many meetings. Write him at Painesville, Ohio.

Claris Yeuell, pastor of Randall Street Church, Baltimore, Md., can no longer lead the forlorn hope. The church is to be sold to satisfy a mortgage. Brother Yeuell is ready to work either as pastor or evangelist.

J. J. Taylor, Connersville, Ind., and Arthur Haley, Butler, Ind., are in a meeting with a view to constituting a church in Montpelier, Ohio. Interest is intense and many are making the good confession. The prospects are good for a strong church.

Harvey Stoner, Massillon, Ohio, is entering the evangelistic field. He has succeeded as pastor and evangelist. He is highly commended both as to character and ability by churches and well-known preachers. Write him for dates.

R. W. Stevenson, provincial evangelist, Toronto, Ontario, wants two substantial men for pastorates in that province. Of course none but men of good records and willingness to work hard are desired.

A business man with a big heart has about decided to sustain J. V. Coombs and several assistants in a special evangelistic campaign for at least one year at a cost of not less than $6,000 to himself. We have many men in our ranks who could sustain such a work. Who will follow this good example?

R. H. Fife, 3740 Wyandotte Avenue, Kansas City, has held successful meetings in Little Rock, Ark., Knoxville and Pittsburg this autumn. He is a good man and should receive all the calls he can answer. He is in a meeting in Bethany, Mo., with 38 additions in 14 days. The interest increases.

M. B. Ingle, Harper, Kan., is re-entering the field as an evangelist. He knows the work thoroughly, having been state evangelist both in Florida and South Carolina, as well as having been engaged in the work as an independent. Those who know his record will doubtless keep him busy.

Harry K. Shields, Rochester, N. Y., has done very satisfactory work as singing evangelist for more than a year. After January his time is not taken. If you need a singer try him. He will more than satisfy you.

J. J. Taylor, evangelist, Connersville, Ind., will be ready for meetings after January 1. He holds uniformly good meetings in difficult fields.

Few men among us have organized so many good churches in difficult fields as has Harold C. Monser, Champaign, Ill. He ought to be called to the large, difficult fields, for none can doubt his success in the smaller, and this argues his fitness for the large.

J. W. Webb, Modesto, Cal., who preaches and lectures, can be had for an occasional meeting. He is well known on the Pacific coast where he speaks several times weekly in schools and colleges chiefly on temperance and hygiene.

James A. DeMoss, M. D., Thayer, Kan., will give up his profession and on January 1 enter the work of an evangelist. We trust that he will be given every encouragement by the brethren in his own and nearby states.

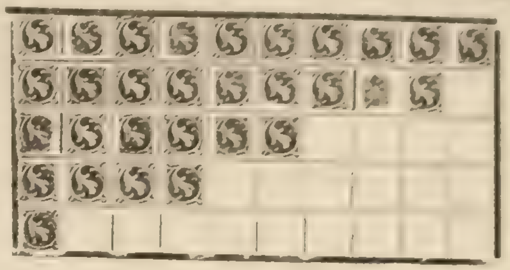
C. H. De Voe, Rochester, Ind., has held splendid meetings in Wilkesbarre, Pa., and Augusta, Ky., in the past few weeks. In the former place it is reported as the best meeting ever held by that church. He has a singer when desired.

Bro. J. M. Mapes, 75 North Street, Newark, N. J., has revived the work at Norwood, Long Island, and is doing good work.

W. J. WRIGHT,
Superintendent of Evangelism.

Hot Springs Lot.

From the present outlook I believe that by next week we can erase one of the dark squares. We can if all of those who are going to assist the Hot Springs work will remit their offering at once. We have written to a number of ladies' aid societies. Some of them have kindly responded, why not all? And why not those to whom we are unable to write join in the movement and send us aid also? There are many Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies which also ought to have part in this work. Read what Bro. H. O. Breeden, says:



To THE BROTHERHOOD: Having some knowledge of conditions and possibilities for the cause in Hot Springs, I am glad to give a word of testimony: First, as to the need, the urgent need, of that heroic and sacrificing church. Nothing in our whole American field challenges the co-operation and generous gifts of the brotherhood as does the church at Hot Springs.

Second, the opportunities for scattering the seed of the kingdom, the possibilities of gaining a wide hearing for the Gospel, are there multiplied. Thousands of tourists every year visit the famous resort who surely need the Gospel, if ever souls needed it. I believe that no investment could be made by Christians of means and grace that would yield quicker or larger returns. Help the Hot Springs church in its herculean and laudable endeavor.

Des Moines, Iowa. H. O. BREEDEN.

We will hold our financial statement until we are able to knock out one of the black squares. We hope to be able to do this next week. Send all remittances to T. N. Kincaid, 132 East Garland Avenue, Hot Springs, Ark.

"The Victory of Faith."

A volume of sermons from the pen of E. L. Powell is an event of more than ordinary interest, and as such I ask for space in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to make note of "The Victory of Faith, and Other Sermons," which has just come from the press.

To those of us who have heard this gifted preacher in his own pulpit, in the grand old First Church, which stands amid the din of the city a symbol of that Christianity which is also a civilization, these sermons have a peculiar power and charm. And thereby hangs a bit of reminiscence.

It was in 1896 that the present writer, then a young theologue in Louisville, went with a number of his Baptist fellow students to the Walnut Street Baptist Church one Lord's day. Dr. Eaton was not in his pulpit that day, and, somewhat disappointed, we strolled across the street, up the great stone steps into the First Christian Church, to see what we could hear.

It was a new experience. Of course we were critics, most young men are, especially theologues who fancy they are wise, and our attitude of mind was somewhat biased by sectarian prejudice. But something in the preacher, perhaps it was his splendid enthusiasm, captured us and carried us quite away.

As I look back from this distance it seems

The Making of Man, by Rev. Daniel Hughes. London. Arthur H. Stockwell, 3 Amen Corner, Paternoster Row, E. C. 1902.

The author of this little book of strong sermons is the brother whom we introduced to our readers last week as the present pastor of the Church of Christ at Upper Parliament street, Liverpool. He was formerly pastor of the Baptist church at Chester, which was founded by our Brother W. Durban, our London correspondent, in the days when he was also associated with the Baptists. We have been impressed with the strength of thought and vividness of expression in these sermons. There are ten of them and each one is marked by originality of thought and beauty and strength of diction. One of the sermons is marked "canceled," owing to the author's having changed his interpretation of the text since the sermon was written. Another one is marked for modification of one part of it where it can be strengthened and improved, showing that the author has the windows of his mind open for new light, and is growing continually into a larger apprehension of truth. Evidently Brother Hughes is a strong addition to the ranks of our ministry and it would be well for our ministers in this country to form his acquaintance by purchasing a copy of his book of sermons, which can be ordered, if desired, through this house. The price, including postage, would be about forty cents in our money.

Deerfoot on the Prairies, by Edward S. Ellis. Cloth, 12mo. Illustrations in black and colors by J. Steeple Davis. 366 pages. Price, $1. The John C. Winston Company, Philadelphia.

"Deerfoot on the Prairies" is the second volume of the new Deerfooot series in which Edward S. Ellis, the popular writer for boys, has yielded to the demands of many readers and brought back to life the wonderful Indian hunter. In this volume he makes a long and dangerous voyage from Ohio to the Pacific coast with two young friends and a guide. Deerfoot's courage and resourcefulness bring the little party safely through every one of the dangers which fall thick and fast on them, and some of his feats seem almost miraculous. Their adventures take place about a century ago, when every species of wild beast and tribes of hostile Indians menaced their path. A thrilling story.

The Messianic Message of the Old Testament, by Clinton Lockhart, A. M., Ph.D., late professor of Biblical Literature, Drake University, Des Moines, Ia., author of Principles of Interpretation, etc. Price, $1.50.

This, the latest volume of Professor Lockhart, is intended to be "a convenient manual on Messianic Prophecy for use in college." The author's estimate of the value of the message of the prophets he states as follows: "The time has come when no Biblical seminary can afford to omit from its course of instruction this fundamental branch of Old Testament study. The thought of the prophets is the very soul of the Hebrew Scriptures. Neither a teacher nor a student can feel that the study of the Old Testament is complete without it. With the desire to adapt the book to the growing demand for a text book on the subject, certain features of arrangement have been planned, and the treatment has been made as concise as comprehensiveness and perspicuity would permit." We have not yet had opportunity for a careful or critical examination of this book, but we are glad to make mention of its appearance, and to call attention to it. Professor Lockhart's reputation for conscientious, reverent, and careful investigation, together with his scholarly attainments, fits him for such a work as this, and we have no doubt that he has performed his task in such manner as to make the book exceedingly helpful to one who wishes to acquaint himself with the content of the Messianic prophecies, and especially useful as a text book in Bible colleges and seminaries. The new interest now felt in Old Testament prophecies makes the appearance of this work timely, and in the present revival of Bible study from the modern point of view, such a work ought to be in demand. The author of the book seems to be the publisher, also, though any orders for it can be filled through the Christian Publishing Company.

The Foundation of Christian Hope, by Eugene W. Herndon, Nashville, Tenn. McQuiddy Printing Company, 1904.

The author of this book passed away before the completion of the last chapter and the work has been brought out by his wife, Anna H. Herndon. The work contains chapters on the "History and Authenticity of the New Testament;" "Is Jesus Divine?" "The Mission of Jesus," and these are followed bv chapters on "Faith;" "Repentance;" "Baptism;" "Prayer and Special Providence," making a book of 184 pages. The chapters on the New Testament and the divinity of Christ follow the old lines of argument concerning the authenticity and dates of the various books and their authors, with arguments pro and con about the body of Jesus. The more modern method of presenting Christ's character, his teaching, and the results of his work, as proof of his divinity, is practically ignored. The other chapters dealing with what we generally call "First Principles" follow very strictly along the literalistic lines of argument, which have long since become unsatisfactory to the great body of our thinkers and writers. We are told in the last chapter that, from the time when Jesus went away until the death of the last apostle, "Christians were under the direct guidance of the Holy Spirit, because the New Testament Scriptures were just then being written, and they were conscious of it and the apostles insisted upon it. Since the New Testament canon has been completed, the Holy Spirit has exerted his influence through the word that he gave to the world." (P. 174.) This gives the author's point of view, and will enable the intelligent reader to form his idea of the value of the treatment.

The Endless Life, by Samuel McChord Brothers. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. 75 cents net.

This little book aims to furnish suggestions rather than a proof of immortality. Its view is not based upon the faith of a visionary, nor upon the ecstatic confidence of a soul filled with a sudden glory, but rather upon the confidence which grows and is steadied by the experience of the plain man who recognizes a power within him that enables him to transcend his limitations, who in his integrity stands undaunted before death and takes for granted that he is going on. Confidence in the integrity of personality, that in death the habits of a lifetime can not be changed, that the soul's struggle and achievement constitute its guarantee to larger and more efficient service—these are some of the grounds of "The Endless Life." His conclusion is: "Conscious of the divine quality of the present life, one can afford to wait for the things which do not yet appear." The book is suggestive and helpful and certainly deserves a wide reading.

Patriotic Studies.

The Reform Bureau, whose central office is at Washington, D. C., issues a book under the above title, which is made up of speeches, bills, acts, and documents of the United States Congress, from 1888 to 1905, upon subjects that are of deep interest to all who are seeking to uproot the great moral and social evils in our land, including the nonobservance of Sunday as it particularly affects the government, the liquor question, and other kindred themes.

The Saloon Problem and Social Reform, by John Marshall Barker, Ph. D. Everett Press Company. $1.

Books heretofore published on this subject have been either largely historical or partisan in character. Dr. Barker's book states the problem and sets forth the philosophy of social reform in a manner hitherto unattained. It is the work of an expert; is packed with information; deals with the economic, political, social and criminal aspects of the problem and considers practical methods of its solution. Of course it is this latter portion of the book that is the crux of the question, for it is not a difficult matter to convince any sensible man that there is a saloon problem. The author lays great stress on the federated movement of moral force and the formation of public sentiment. It is along this line and the establishing of rival substitutes that he sees the greatest signs of promise. The book is eminently helpful and suggestive.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Ohio Letter.

W. W. Whitmer will come from Indiana to the church at Jackson, O., as pastor, with the new year. We extend a cordial welcome to him.

E. S. DeMiller will change locality early in the year, coming from Nelsonville to Doan Street, Cleveland. This was the Glenville church, but now that Glenville is a part of Cleveland it is the Doan Street Church of Cleveland. They will find Brother DeMiller one of the best preachers and most faithful pastors that ever served any church. We are glad to have him in this corner of the state.

The new house of worship has been dedicated at Xenia. It is a modest chapel, seating about 250. Secretary Bartlett preached at the opening. J. N. Johnson followed with a meeting with several added. I. J. Cahill, with several of the Dayton brethren, attended the dedication and gave sympathy and money.

We are sorry to lose one of our good Ohio preachers in the person of G. W. Moore, of Akron, who goes January 1 to Ionia, Mich. The Ohio man pleads guilty in recommending Brother Moore to this field, but, nevertheless, we do not like to see him leave Ohio. But Michigan will gain a strong man. We congratulate them.

Allen Wilson and Singer Lintt are with Brother Vawter, the new pastor at Shelby, in a meeting. Brother Vawter is another Hoosier preacher we have recently acquired.

December 3, the church at Wellsville had a mortgage burning, when paper to the value of $9,452 was burned. They now have an excellent property worth $16,000, free from debt. It was a jubilee day, with house full and a great sermon at night by President Cramblet, of Bethany. W. C. Prewitt, the present bishop, has been at Wellsville nearly four years and has twice had his stipend increased. May prosperity continue.

The meeting at Painesville resulted in 21 added to the church, and was a great revival as well. Miss Ida Mae Hanna has very few equals as an evangelistic soloist. Not one word of criticism was heard on her work.

S. H. Bartlett will hold a meeting with Brother Hostetter and the Lorain church in January.

J. W. Kerns began his ministry at Massillon Sunday, Dec. 10.

L. R. Hotaling will leave Ashtabula Jan. 1. They already have a new man in view for his successor.

The Warren church will begin a meeting Jan. 21. Mr. Lynn will do the preaching and Miss Ida Hanna will sing.

The Central Church at Marion will occupy their new building the first of the year and will hold a meeting following.

C. M. Arthur, of Iowa, has come to New Straitsville and Shawnee to minister to the saints and convert the sinners.

Any church wanting a meeting in March with a pastor-evangelist and one of the very best singers can be put in touch with such by addressing the Ohio Letter.

Great preparations are being made for the inauguration of Governor Pattison on Jan. 9. The word has gone out that he has already used the veto power, in that he has vetoed the inaugural ball and the use of wine. The next House will stand 59 Democratic and 61 Republican, while the Senate will be even, with one man independent. As to what temperance legislation will be introduced we are not yet informed, but one bill will no doubt be a county option bill. It is also quite probable that the W. C. T. U. will push a bill to give women the right to vote at local option elections. It will be one of the most interesting sessions of the Ohio Legislature that we have had for many a year.

North Carolina.

We continued our meeting at Winston two weeks. One was received by letter and one was baptized. Others seem interested that we hope will come later on. The offering on Boys' and Girls' Rally Day was $17.58. A part of our Christmas entertainment will be a liberal offering on our church debt. We must get out by 1909.

I regret to learn of the death of W. G. Walters, minister at Bluefield, W. Va. He was formerly minister here, and brethren here speak their regrets at learning of his passing away.

I had the privilege on a recent Lord's day of addressing the men's meeting at the Y. M. C. A.. I talked on "The Ideal Man," from Phil. 4:8. A man in our city who believes in keeping the seventh day, was put into jail for selling from his store on the first day unlawfully. Some of the people wanted to buy cigars and soft drinks on Sunday, and the "city fathers" got liberal and made provision for this. The W. C. T. U. asked the preachers to give a sermon on "Sabbath Observance," and also on a recent Sunday afternoon held a meeting at the Y. M. C. A. at which a number of the ministers spoke, and also a member of the Episcopal Church.

Tom, the man just out of jail, was present. This week I had occasion to go into his store, and I handed him D. R. Dungan's ' Sabbath or Lord's Day—Which?" and asked him to read it, and I thought he would see we do not need to live two thousand years behind the times. He seemed to appreciate it and be anxious for the truth. He said, "I was at the meeting and noticed you spoke differently from the rest." I hope the seed sown may do good.

Kentucky—A Month's Mission Work.

Edgar C. Riley held a meeting at Belleview, Boone county, and added four. The work is reported to be steadily improving there under his labors, and help is earnestly asked from the board for next year.——Chestnut Grove has had the services of W. R. Mains one Sunday.——L. N. Early spent one-fourth time at Chatham, and work about as usual.——L. B. Haskins was at Erlanger two Sundays; added two and work in excellent condition.——R. B. Neal is again in Big Sandy Valley at Paintsville and Pikeville. He was at Fullerton a day or two and helped G. W. Adkins in his great meeting there.——D. C. McCallum was at Irvine two Sundays, and reports that he will close his labors there with the first of the year. He has done a good work there.——James E. Thomas was at Beattyville two Sundays. Collected for building debt $105, and hope to increase it to $150 before the close of the year.——J. W. Edwards did some good work during twenty-seven days in Hardin and Grayson counties. There were thirty baptisms and three other additions. He desires to continue with the board during 1906.——Wren J. Grinstead reports seventeen additions. The work on the house of worship has begun. Outlook promising; $900 for building fund. Jellico must succeed.——Latonia is being greatly blessed in a meeting. H. C. Runyan had the help of Edgar C. Riley. At last report there had been forty-two additions.——D. Earl D. Barr reports the work in a good condition at Bromley, where he preached two Sundays. House painted and otherwise improved.——S. J. Short added four and raised $35 for local work.——J. P. Miller was in Pike county all of November. Added eleven and did much general work.——W. J. Dodge was at Jackson two Sundays. Raised $159.59 for house of worship; house to be under roof this month.

H. W. Elliott was at work all the month in the interest of the work. He received $342.32 for Kentucky missions. This is the smallest amount sent in during November for years. None of the congregations contributing large amounts have yet remitted. Three out of four Sundays were unfavorable for taking the offering, and yet the reports received thus far during the month are indicative of good results. We urge the brethren everywhere not to allow the weather, or anything else, to prevent them from giving our state work a fair deal. Remit as soon as possible to— H. W. Elliott, Sec.

From the Buckeye State.

The church at Shelby is fortunate in securing the services of C. R. L. Vawter, of Indianapolis. This church has a very fine building but a heavy indebtedness, but the abounding energy of Brother Vawter will take care of that. He has already begun a meeting and expects Allen Wilson to assist him.

The pastor recently called by the Ashland Church died of typhoid fever before reaching his new field.

A foreign missionary rally will be held in the Mansfield Church Feb. 12. Two representatives of the Foreign Society, besides a returned missionary, will be present. We hope to have every church within a radius of fifty miles represented by delegates and preacher.

There has been a great meeting at Canton. P. H. Welsheimer, the pastor, is a man of remarkable and enduring powers, and this was perhaps the greatest meeting that any man ever held in his home field.

I began another meeting at Mansfield, Dec. 10. H. A. Northcutt is expected by Christmas to finish it. There have been 150 additions so far this year at Mansfield.

The little church at Galion has had a weary struggle for many years. Once it disbanded, and after being reorganized at another date it was again reorganized. For three years Charles A. Pearce, a choice spirit and a splendid preacher, has served this church. His work has been greatly hampered by the little box-like affair of a church building. Recently he was called to a strong church. He agreed to continue at Galion if I would assist in a meeting. I have been over sixteen nights. There have been twenty-four additions—twenty-two confessions. Many more are to come. A new church must and will be built. With a new building and Brother Pearce to preach in it, that will become a strong church.

The Y. M. C. A. Convention at Sedalia.

It was my good fortune to attend the state convention of the Young Men's Christian Association at Sedalia, Nov. 23-26, and I believe it worth while for our people to know something more than they ordinarily know concerning this very live and aggressive movement.

There were in attendance something over two hundred delegates, of whom more than two-thirds came from the various college associations of the state, and the remainder from the railroad and city associations. Besides regular delegates, a number of men from college faculties and several ministers were present. The sessions were marked by intense spirituality and enthusiastic devotion to the principles of the movement. The various subjects discussed were all included under the general topic, "Missouri Men." Our own C. M. Chilton delivered two thoughtful and inspiring addresses as follows: "Missouri Men; Their Relation to the Religious Life of the State," and "Their Responsibility in the Use of Money." None of the addresses of the entire convention was of a higher order than these.

Governor Joseph W. Folk honored the convention by his presence and participation, speaking upon "Missouri Men; Their Relation to Social, Business and Political Life." The address was just what one would expect from the man whose actions have always been more eloquent than his words. His utterances were received with the utmost enthusiasm.

The central feature of the convention, however, was the great Bible study campaign, now being conducted by the association throughout the world. Clayton S. Cooper, of the International Bible Study Department, and F. S. Goodman, of New York, both of whom are giving their entire time and splendid talent to this campaign, were present and made several addresses. Not many of us, I fancy, realize the magnitude and far-reaching importance of this Bible study movement as conducted by the Y. M. C. A. It contemplates the enlistment of all men in definite, systematic Bible study according to a plan with the definite purpose of reaching ideals of character and service. The movement is supplied with an ideal equipment as regards courses of study, methods of class organization, recruiting agencies, etc. The success of the movement thus far is commensurate with the plans, and the enthusiasm with which it is being pushed. Remarkable progress has been made particularly in the colleges. This year, 1905, there are reported 572 institutions using the Y. M. C. A. plan with a total of 30,199 students studying the Bible daily in the regular courses. The tide of interest is just beginning to rise. All classes of students are being enlisted. A special movement is on foot to place Bible study groups in every Greek letter fraternity organization, with every prospect of success.

The most popular of all the courses prepared for students is that in the "Life of Christ," by Edward I. Bosworth, of Oberlin College. It is almost an ideal guide book in the study of this chief of all themes. This course is the first and is made fundamental to all succeeding courses of the college cycle.

In the University of Missouri we now have enrolled in these Y. M. C. A. courses about 300 young men, and the number will soon be brought to 400. These are divided into groups not to exceed ten men in each, and these groups meet weekly under the leadership of some competent student for the discussion of the previous week's study. These student leaders meet once each week in a training class for the more thorough preparation of the lesson material and for training in pedagogic method. The writer has the pleasant task of conducting this training class and thus contributing his mite to the value and effectiveness of the entire scheme.

In view of the enthusiasm of the convention just past it is safe to predict the speedy remarkable extension of this Bible study campaign throughout the entire state.

A Glimpse of the Indian Territory.

Lying between the great Red river, which is the northern line of Texas, and south of Kansas, and west of Arkansas are five Indian reservations, known as the Cherokees, Creeks, Chickasaws, Choctaws and Seminoles. This is called the Indian Territory. Its area is 31,300 square miles. Its population is 800,000 souls. Its principal water courses are the Arkansas, Cimarron, Canadian and Washita rivers, whose valleys are the most fertile in the southwest. Six great trunk lines of railroad cross the Indian Territory, besides many branches, spurs and feeders. Its natural resources are many. Running from the northeast to the southwest there is the greatest oil and gas belt in the union. Vast fields of bituminous coal have been in successful operation for years. There are millions of acres of magnificent forests, containing pines and hard woods of the finest quality. It has granite, marble, lead, zinc, iron, fire clays, splendid brick-making shale, and every kind of building stone. It produces wheat, as good corn as Illinois, oats, rye, flax, as good cotton as Texas, as good apples as Arkansas, as fine goobers as Georgia, and all the fruits and vegetables known to the Temperate Zone. It is splendidly watered, with abundance of rainfall and a fine climate. It is on the dividing line between the rigorous winters of the north and the long, burning summers of the south. Its population is composed of enough of the north to give it thrift and business push, and enough of the south and west to make it hospitable and sociable. We expect to be admitted to statehood the coming session of Congress. If we are, the unprecedented will happen. The country will improve as no country has ever done. There are many enterprises that are lying quietly waiting for the restraint of Federal government to be lifted. And this development will be permanent, for there is something substantial to maintain it. It will be the most resourceful state in the southwest. It will be a land of homes. She will rise with such magic rapidity that the civilized world will look on in surprise. In less than a quarter of a century she will stand head and shoulders above her neighbor states.

The moral and religious tone of the country is of a high type. The towns are all well supplied with good schools and churches. The people are religious, sociable, informal and friendly. The Indians are all civilized and wear citizens' clothes, and many of them are well educated.

The Disciples of Christ number about ten thousand souls here. Notwithstanding their unsettled condition they have done a good work. Though there are many weak churches, and the work is not on her feet well, the foundation has been laid. We are getting more organized and will soon be doing a more systematic work. It will be a great thing to live, work and grow up with this country and the churches. There is no field around us that will return a greater harvest for the sowing than this. Young men are needed who can divide their time with weak churches until they are on good footing. This will be a great country. Let us make it a great country for Christ.

O. M. Thomason, Evangelist.

Quizzing the Missionary.

Dr. C. C. Drummond, who has charge of the medical work at Hurda, India, returned for his well earned furlough last July. He had been upon the foreign field nearly eight years. Being the medical missionary of the Maryville, Mo., church, which entered the living link list last March, he arranged for his first work in missionary meetings with his own church. It was a unique meeting, and the plan worked so well I want to give it to the brotherhood in the interest of world-wide missions.

He held a four days' meeting. The first meeting was on Sunday night. At this meeting he addressed a very large audience, giving a popular presentation of his work in India. The three nights following, the lecture room, which seats over two hundred, was used. No effort was made to get any one but members of the congregation to attend. We wanted a meeting larger than a class, and yet we did not want the outside and the formal address that would needs come with the larger hearing. Dr. Drummond would take up a different phase of the field each night, and, after talking about thirty minutes, would give opportunity for questions. The result was wonderful. From an hour to an hour and a half was taken up each evening after the address, and then the meeting had to be shut off. I never saw a congregation learn more of missions in any time, long or short. In this form of missionary meeting Dr. Drummond certainly has a unique and a most successful plan.

On Sunday afternoon and at night he addressed the three Endeavor Societies of the church, following much the same plan as in the night meetings mentioned above. Nothing unusual happened at Y. P. S. C. E. and Intermediate meetings addressed by him. But when he had told the Junior Endeavorers something of the work, and had given them an opportunity to ask him questions—our Junior ranges in age from ten down—it was quite a different thing. I took down the questions they asked him, twenty-four in all. I wish you could have heard those questions. It was a study in psychology worthy of the observation of some doctor of philosophy. After telling them how the Indians eat a meal without knives, or spoons, or any such thing, one small boy asked, "How do they cut their bread?" Following him a little girl wanted to know if they ate gravy. You will see the drift of the American mind to catch up a public speaker showing itself quite early in these questions. One asked, "Do they have candy over there?" Another queried, "Do they have soda fountains?" Another, "Do they have counters to put their things on?" One wanted to know if they had furniture in their houses. One budding Rothschild asked, "Is their money anything like ours?" One little girl wanted to know what they did for the boys and girls at the mission station. Upon hearing of the schooling and good treatment and food one shrewd boy observed that he should think they would all want to become Christians to get something to eat. They were deeply moved when told that the price of a day's work for a common laborer was but a few cents, and that some of their money was in pieces of not more than a tenth of a cent value. From this on the questions assumed a more serious drift, and the meeting was closed only when the superintendent interposed to deliver the good doctor from these youthful disciples of Socrates.

This plan of a four days' meeting is the best thing that could be used to give a church a stirring up on missions. The same plan could be extended in time, and used to advantage in all our Bible colleges. What could be more delightful and more profitable than a missionary meeting of a week, beginning on a Sunday and closing on a Sunday, in every one of our Bible colleges between now and the coming commencement? One hour or more at the close of each day's work could be devoted to this. When those young men went out after commencement they would carry into hundreds of places and to thousands of people more knowledge of India and more zeal for her salvation than would otherwise go out from ten years of formal addresses. Dr. Drummond should be kept busy through all the spring months in our Bible colleges.

One person should be ready to give the questions the necessary drift into the channels needing attention. Just a question now and then by this watchful observer will assure a close working over of the field under discussion. One will be surprised at what opportunities for deepening the spiritual life the short devotional services at the opening each evening will afford.

None of us will forget the last night, when we sang "God be With You," and said good-bye. Might we not follow some of our great evangelistic efforts with these missionary meetings by Dr. Drummond?

Dr. Drummond's address is 2525 Vine street, Lincoln, Neb. H. A. DENTON.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Dedications.

Lampasas, Texas.

Sunday, November 19, was a high day for the Christian church at Lampasas, Tex. It was dedication day of the lovely new stone church home, just completed. Homer T. Wilson, of San Antonio, Texas, who held us a splendid meeting two months ago, delivered the dedicatory sermon. Eighteen hundred dollars were raised on the indebtedness, leaving the church practically out of debt at its completion. With wide-awake young people's organization, ladies' aid and other departments of work, the church is now ready to do encouraging work. W. A. BOGGESS, minister.

Dedication at Jonesboro, Ark.

Lord's day, November 26, was a red-letter day for the church at Jonesboro. It was the occasion of the formal opening and dedication of their new and beautiful house of worship. There was an indebtedness of $2,600 to provide for, and some $2,900 was easily and cheerfully raised.

To make the occasion still more enjoyable, five persons joyfully accepted Christ. It was a happy day to have the house dedicated; to hear the name of Jesus confessed, and witness the obedience of the penitent believers in the ordinance of holy baptism. L. L. CARPENTER.

Wabash, Ind.

Mobile, Alabama.

The dedication of the elegant new First Christian Church, November 19, was in all respects a grand success, F. M. Rains and B. L. Smith participating. The $3,500, the balance due on building, was raised. Claude E. Hill, our minister, was in the best of humor, and the entire congregation was happy at the results of their united effort. It was truly an ideal southern November day, and the greatest that has ever occurred in Mobile for New Testament Christianity. J. L. Haddock begins a meeting at once in the new church, to last indefinitely. Talmage Stanley has charge of the music. Let all who have helped us, and all the brotherhood, rejoice with us.

J. W. HENRY.

Dedication at Marshall, Ill.

The congregation of Disciples in Marshall, Ill., have rebuilt, refurnished and beautified their house of worship until one not knowing the facts would mistrust but that it is an entirely new house. It is now by far the handsomest church house in the city. It was a brave band who met in this beautiful place of worship on December 3, and faced a debt of $2,000. But it was a happy band who rejoiced on Lord's day night in offering this temple to God with all the debt provided for. It was a great joy to help these brethren raise their money, and in their name offer the house to the Lord. The church at Marshall is now on the road to great success.

Ministerial Exchange.

J. J. Limerick is open for engagements as evangelist or for a regular pastorate. Address him at Carrollton, Mo.

D. D. Boyle, evangelist, can hold meetings in February, 1906. Address him at Minco, I. T.

W. T. McLain writes that he can put churches into communication with an evangelist of experience and culture who wishes to hold meetings beginning January 1. Address, W. T. McLain, 1314 South Emporia avenue, Witchita, Kan.

The church at Neosho, Mo., wants a first-class singer and personal worker to assist them in a meeting in January. Address F. F. Walters, the pastor.

J. W. Monser desires work for one quarter or one-half time within fifty miles of Kansas City, Mo. He gives as reference T. A. Abbott, Century building, Kansas City, Mo. Address, J. W. Monser, 514 Quincy avenue, Kansas City, Mo.

Wanted.—For new town in South California, brethren to engage in following lines of business: General merchandise, livery, barber, doctor, blacksmith, skilled mechanics; small capital required. Good farms with water cheap. The opportunity is now. Address, George Ringo, minister, Riverside, Cal.

The congregation at Ada, I. T., is without a minister and invites correspondence. Splendid opportunity—a town of 5,000 people and our brethren have the best location in town. Congregation able to pay about $70 per month. Address, L. T. Walters, Ada, I. T.

Would like to correspond with a vocal teacher in regard to taking a class; one who would be willing to take charge of the choir. Send references, etc., to Ernest J. Bradley, minister, Smithville, Texas.

Wanted.—An all-round printer; member Christian church. State salary. Ernest J. Bradley, minister, Smithville, Texas.

Thomas Martin is open for an engagement as evangelist. Address him at Sandy Lake, Pa.

H. H. Saunders, singing evangelist, can assist in a February meeting. He may be addressed at Noblesville, Ind.

Wanted: The addresses of four preachers for Louisiana who have no families and can work for $500 to $600 a year. Good lively old men preferred. The work is not very hard or difficult. Let no man apply who cannot give the best of references. John A. Stevens, corresponding secretary, Alexandria, La.

I am open for March meeting. Charles E. McVay, song evangelist, Benkleman, Nebraska.

The church at Grant City, Mo., where W. L. Harris ministers, is in need of a good chorister, also a teacher of stringed instruments. There is a splendid opening also for a tailor, as there is no tailor in Worth county. A first-class dressmaker could do well here. Address, W. L. Harris, Grant City, Mo., with stamp.

There is an excellent opening at Winchester Ill., for a thoroughly competent male teacher of vocal and instrumental music. One who can manage a chorus and orchestra would have a great advantage. An earnest member and worker in the Christian church would have good backing from the start. Any one who is competent may write E. O. Sharpe, Pastor Christian Church, Winchester, Ill., with references and stamp.

I will be open for engagements after January 1, 1906, as chorus organizer, leader and soloist. Address Miss Mayme Eisenbarger, gospel singer, Bethany, Mo.

The congregation at Poteau, I. T., is very anxious to employ an enthusiastic pastor. They have a church building, no debts, and a membership of twenty-six. They can pay a salary of $35 a month. Address, Jerry McKenna, Poteau, I. T.

I should like to correspond with churches wanting meetings, with or without a singer. S. J. Vance, evangelist, Eldon, Mo.

Splendid opening for a tailor shop: town of 3,000, railroad division. Member of the Christian church preferred. Address Ernest J. Bradley, Smithville, Tex.

A brother can buy good stock of groceries for about $3,000, fine stand; sales about $30,000 a year. Ernest J. Bradley, minister, Smithville, Tex.

The church at Hamilton, Mont., desires the services of a pastor. Salary $800 per year. No application will be considered unless accompanied by first-class references. Address Lock Box No. 382.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ARKANSAS.

Harrison, Dec. 13.—J. A. Deatherage has just closed a meeting resulting in 2 additions, by primary obedience.—Mrs. L. C. Clendenin.

CALIFORNIA.

Ukiah, Dec. 11.—The yearly report of the church at Ukiah shows 53 added—46 by baptism, 31 from Sunday-school. The pride of the church is the pastor's class of 64 young people in Sunday-school. Eleven offerings for benevolent and missionary work, with a gain of over 60 per cent in receipts; all debts paid and money in treasury of every department. The church is united and happy, beginning third year with hopeful lookout.—Otha Wilkison, pastor.

College City, Nov. 20.—I have just closed a few days' meeting at Sycamore, with 2 additions. The church building has been repaired.—J. Durham.

COLORADO.

Rocky Ford, Dec. 8.—Our meeting moves on nicely; 15 additions to date. Good crowds and interest growing. Will continue up to Christmas. Brother Nelson is an indefatigable worker.—John T. Stivers, evangelist.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, Dec. 11.—Two accessions to the Church Street Church since last report.—T. Henry Blenns.

ILLINOIS.

Fairfield, Dec. 11.—Seven additions last night.—G. W. Thompson, evangelist, Allen T. Shaw, pastor and singer.

Normal, Dec. 11.—There were 9 additions yesterday—4 by confession, 3 by statement, 2 from the Baptists; 24 to date. Brother Marshall is doing the preaching.—R. H. Newton.

Farmer City, Dec. 11.—We have just closed our meeting with 53 additions—34 by baptism and 19 by letter and statement. The church has been much strengthened and encouraged. Andrew Scott, of Danville, did the preaching. Frank M. Charlton, of Bloomington, was our singer.—A. Immanuel Zeller, pastor.

INDIANA.

Fort Wayne, Dec. 12.—Our meeting resulted in 25 additions. C. C. Crawford, of Elmira, N. Y., did the preaching, and Miss Allie Dean, of Hiram College, was the singer.—E. W. Allen.

Portland, Dec. 4.—We have concluded a three weeks' meeting, resulting in 21 additions—12 by baptism, 1 from the Baptists, 1 from the Adventists, one reclaimed and 6 by letter and statement. The congregation has been greatly encouraged and built up.—C. H. Trout.

Columbus, Dec. 4.—The Tabernacle Christian Church will establish a church in the northeast part of this city. Joseph I. Irwin has given a lot 100 feet square.—W. H. Book.

Terre Haute, Dec. 10.—Central Church is having a great revival—80 additions thus far. Bro. T. E. Sellers, the pastor, is preaching great sermons. We conducted three factory meetings this week and over 600 men attended.—Le Roy St. John, Gospel singer.

Elkhart, Dec. 13.—We are just entering upon the sixth meeting, with home forces; 9 accessions to date. All departments are prospering.—W. W. Denham.

Indianapolis, Dec. 14.—Earl Wilfley has just closed a great meeting at the River Church; 43 added—14 by confession, 29 by letter and statement. C. B. Newnan.

Huntington, Dec. 11.—Five confessions Dec. 10. Our new building will be one of the best churches in Indiana and will have a seating capacity of 1,400.—Cephas Shelburne.

Lowell, Dec. 12.—Eight additions by primary obedience last night; 12 to date. Meeting continnes.—A. M. Hootman.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Bartlesville, Dec. 14.—One addition last Sunday—2 one week before. Outlook for our work good.—R. E. Rosenstein.

Holdenville, Dec. 9.—Our meeting continues with good interest; 25 additions to date.—Campbell and Bentley.

Checotah, Nov. 20.—The work has been developed from a little interest and small attendance to great enthusiasm and splendid congreations. Last evening we filled the largest hall in town, despite the fact that there were services in all the other churches. The work could not have been at much lower ebb. Lack of leadership the principal cause. Thirty-three added to date. This is a fine field, and a great work will be established. We will probably locate a good man for full time. We have put a baptistry in the church which has added very much to the interest and efficiency of the meeting. Some fine workers. Will continue.—Frank L. Van Voorhis.

Davis, Nov. 21.—There were more confessions in our meeting last night. This is a rich little town, with a large church and the most loved and efficient pastor I have met in many thousands of miles of travel this fall. O. M. Thomason is yet young, but has many good meetings to his credit, and his pastorate here is his first. It could hardly be more successful.—T. M. Myers.

IOWA.

Milton, Dec. 14.—Our cause is prospering nicely. We recently baptized 29, one reclaimed and one by statement.—P. D. Holloway.

Riverton, Dec. 12.—Six added last night.—J. A. McKenzie.

Shenandoah, Dec. 10.—Our six weeks' meeting has just closed with 63 additions. The pastor did the preaching and was assisted by Miss Lucille Park as singer. All departments of the church at work in unity.—A. Rhodes

Moorhead, Dec. 16.—We are just closing the second week of our meeting; 11 added to date. We continue.—Joel Brown.

KANSAS.

Asherville, Dec. 11.—Two added last night from the Baptists. We are looking forward to a meeting in February with J. W. Garner, of Perkins, Okla., as our evangelist.—G. P. Clark, minister.

La Fontaine, Dec. 11.—Our meeting is one week old, with 21 additions.—J. P. Haner.

Beloit, Dec. 12.—Our meeting has just closed with 54 additions. The future of the church appears bright indeed. H. A. Northcutt did the preaching.—H. F. Ritz.

Harper, Dec. 16.—Just closed a week's meeting at Hazelton, with 17 added—11 confessions, 5 statements, 1 baptized Methodist.—M. B. Ingle.

Lebo, Dec. 9.—This is the close of the second week with a weak church here. Seven additions to date—4 by confession and baptism, and 3 by letter. Good audiences, and the church is waking up. They will locate a pastor here for another year, and perhaps build a parsonage.—Wallace M. Stuckey, evangelist.

KENTUCKY.

Eminence, Dec. 15.—We had H. C. Garrison, of Danville, with us in a two weeks' meeting, resulting in 24 additions—21 by confession and baptism.—Ernest W. Elliott.

Latonia, Dec. 11.—Six additions yesterday. Need a larger house—for which we are planning now.—H. C. Runyan.

OHIO.

Youngstown, Dec. 14.—Five additions at the Third Church last Lord's day; 4 by baptism and 1 by relation.—F. D. Draper, minister.

Eldora.—Bro. T. J. O'Conner is the pastor, and is diligent in the Lord's business. Our new house, worth $8,000, and dedicated last July, is regarded as a very satisfactory and handsome building. The church is preparing to bear its part in union evangelistic meetings to begin soon. Brother O'Conner is proving a pastor of the genuine and right kind.—C. L. Hays.

Leipsic, Dec. 11.—Two additions at West Belmore yesterday—1 confession and 1 ordained. We reached our apportionment of $20 for Ohio missions. All departments of our work in excellent condition. We began our meeting December 31.—H. C. Boblitt.

Akron, Dec. 12.—An excellent meeting has just closed at the First Church, resulting in 50 additions. George Darsie, the pastor, did the preaching, assisted by Prof. Leonard Daugherty, of Louisville, Ky., as soloist and choir leader.—B. C. Caywood.

Athens, Dec. 11.—Brother and Sister Frost, late of Hiram, spoke on C. W. B. M. work, and the offering was $43—or twice as large as last year. Three additions yesterday.—T. Lowe.

MARYLAND.

Baltimore, Dec. 4.—Baltimore churches are newly manned by the importation of four new preachers from the west. Charis Yeuell, Lewisvill, Minn., at the Randall Street Church; A. Randall Lookabill, Crawfordsville, Ind., at the Fulton Avenue Church; C. M. Kreidler, Milwaukee, Wis., at the 25th Street Church, and the writer at to me that the sermon of that day was one of the noblest sermons I ever heard. The preacher forgot himself and remembered only the sublime object of his ministry, to lift men out of the mire of sin and materialism into the higher air of God; to refine and exalt their lives; to turn them from the dazzling and devious paths of the world to the Way, the Truth, and the Life of his Master. That day was a new day in my young and troubled life.

And to this hour I can see him as he stood, not a graceful man, his gestures angular at times, his face aglow with the old unearthly phosphorescent light, uttering his high message in words simple, full of grace, and surcharged with living fire—it is a vision unforgettable.

The sermons in the volume before me are characteristic of the man in his ministry. They are the words of a man familiar with the most perfect fruits of culture, and sensitive in high degree to the charms of literary form. Not merely in the palpable allusion, but in the choice phrase, the brilliant epigram, the modulation of his sentences and the most chaste verbal reserve are to be discerned the master of speech.

As sacred compositions, they captivate by a beauty that is as natural to them as tints to a rose. They are logical without any display of argument, and poetical without any sacrifice of directness and sincerity. There is none of that flowery emptiness which is the besetting sin of the poet-preacher. Reason is appealed to all along, but the language of the appeal comes up all blossoming and fragrant with the sweetness of the heart.

No one can read these sermons without recognizing their catholicity of spirit, their gracious aim, and their helpfulness to minds that recoil from the formal and arbitrary in religion. They are worthy of the best traditions of the pulpit, because in them there is a faith in the divine constitution of things, a respect for human nature, a fine Christian optimism, and a plea for the religion that is a life.

Clearly, the preacher feels those noble and fruitful intellectual agitations which in our day have frightened many, but which are in truth a second coming of the Christ into the tangled and turbulent thought of this great age. Only the commanding vitalities of Christianity and its heroic enterprises engage his heart and inspire his ministry. He cares nothing for hair-splitting theories, but only for those heavenly truths which overarch all creeds, and that life of the spirit which underlies all sects. He is an authentic messenger of great truths.

May his days be many and his ministry an apostolate. May his glowing sermons lead many out of the drifting fogs into the Light of the world, out of the shadows of doubt to "The Victory of Faith."

Christian Endeavor.

By H. A. Denton.

December 31, 1905.

LOOKING BACKWARD.—Deut. 8:8-20.

For the Leader.

Endeavorers, we have come to the end of a measured portion of time. Once more we have finished a certain portion of the trip allotted to us between the cradle and the grave. We pause for a time to think upon what we have done. Soon we shall pass on into another measure. The past will be by us largely forgotten. But with God not a word shall fall to the ground. He will remember all. Some day, on the other side, we shall meet all the words and deeds that made up this life. May it not be far better for us to look backward and review this past tonight, and to profit thereby, than to go thoughtlessly on until it is too late? That, then, is the object of our meeting. May each one here lend us a hearty sympathy, and may all have some part in the meeting to the helpfulness of all.

For the Members.

1. What has come into our lives the past year that would make them worth reviewing? Why, God has been in our lives. We have been associated with him in the greatest work ever known by men or angels—an effort to think and to live God's thoughts after him. Is this not a great work? What greater could any one undertake? Now, if this work has been well done, there is reason in the rejoicing that we should go back and look it over. If this effort has resulted in failure, then for the sake of the future, and what we should do in the way of improvement, we should look backward over the past twelve months.

2. If any one wonders that we should value the past of man to this extent, let him remember that he is the object of the fatherly care and solicitude of the Infinite Father. What God regards, no man may spurn as unworthy his attention. If some one argues the small part man plays in this universe, let him think again. He may be small as to bulk, if we are going to cast this estimate up in the material. But, if we are to regard spiritual values, he aggregates more than all the continents. And when we take a closer look at the natural world and man's relation to the same, we will see that all eternity, past and future, is connected with man and his destiny and place in the age. Thus we are looking at no mean thing.

3. We all need to have a greater regard for the blessings of God. We are secularized. There are too many things that we do not count as from God. We say, "I did this; it is the result of purely my own effort." We have gradually let the secular encroach upon the dominions of God until there is very little left him in the reckoning of many people. God has been put out of his own world. And we are not able to see that in this ejection man has been the sufferer. One has been thinking that in getting God out of his territory he has been getting himself into it more and more, not knowing that the whole thing has been a most clever deception—a self deception. Put God more fully into the happenings of our lives and we shall have more in them for which to rejoice and give thanks.

4. It will doubtless be so that the hardest thing for many of us to do will be to look upon the sorrows that have come the past year and recognize the hand of God there. That question of sorrow and suffering has never been satisfactorily answered. There remains much that pertains to this subject that must be answered on the other side. Have we the faith, the patience, to wait until that day? We can get, however, this on the subject that will help us: It is God's world. He is managing it for the best. Some bad things go on in this world contrary to his will. These very things make up the necessity for Christianity. But to those who are doing the best they can to live the good life, nothing will come that will defeat the ends of their toil. God will carry us through. Only ourselves can defeat us. If we are willing, all will go well. Our efforts to bear up under the hard things that come upon us have a strengthening effect upon us. We can not say we are the worse for life's sorrows if we have kept ourselves true to the Father.

BABY'S TERRIBLE HUMOR

Causing Untold Agony. Professional Treatment did no Good. Cured in Two Weeks by Cuticura.

"My child was a very delicate baby. A terrible humor, breaking out on his body, caused him untold agony. Professional treatment did no good, and I became discouraged and took the matter into my own hands, and tried Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment with almost immediate success. Before the second week had passed the soreness was gone, not leaving a trace of anything." Mrs. J. H. Block, 281 Rosedale St., Rochester, N. Y.

Midweek Prayer Meeting.

By W. F. Richardson.

December 27, 1905.

A NOBLE ENDING AND ITS SECRET.—2 Tim. 4:6-22.

The last prayer meeting of the year is a good time to think of the outcome of life's plans and labors, that we may remind ourselves of forgotten duties, and brace ourselves anew for the struggles that are certain to be encountered by every earnest Christian. And no example can be more instructive and inspiring than that of the apostle Paul. He was so human in his disposition, and has opened his heart so frankly in the letters he wrote, that to read the story of his spiritual conflicts is like listening to a soldier friend telling of his battles. Let us close the good year 1905 by a brief study of these last words of brother Paul.

1. He stood at the end of his earth-life. "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand." He was in prison at Rome, condemned to die. The sword of Nero would soon bring to a close the life that had been spent so faithfully in the Master's service. Had his days been squandered in selfish pleasures, or spent in achieving worldly ambitions, the thought of eternity would have filled his soul with dread. But he meets death with the calmness of his Master before him, and welcomes the sword, as Jesus did the cross, as if it were his best friend. Such behavior makes even death glorious and beautiful.

2. The secret of such a death is two-fold. There is, first, the past, with its memories of duties faithfully done, hardships patiently endured, good generously wrought. "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith." Long years of loyal and loving following of the Christ had made the soul rich in spiritual possessions, such as death could not take away. The consciousness of having lived nobly made it easy to die bravely. So did his Master meet death, saying, "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do" (John 17:4; 19:30). Paul could never have forgotten the death of Stephen, and the triumphant joy with which he met his cruel fate. (Acts 7:55-60.) A ripened life will not dread the harvest, even though death wields the sickle. It is the life which has resisted the sunshine of God's truth, and the showers of his grace, and has brought no fruit to perfection, that needs to shrink from the reaper. If we fear to die, it is because we have dared to live, not as God willed, but as we pleased.

3. The second secret of the wonderful death of Paul is his outlook into the future. "Henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give to me at that day." Death was to the apostle, not a blind alley, but a thoroughfare. It was not a going forth into darkness, but a passage through a well-lighted doorway into heaven. To be absent from the body was to be at home with the Lord. (2 Cor. 5:6-9; Phil. 1:21-24.) He feared not man, who could not do more than kill the body. He trusted in the Lord, who was able to kill or to preserve both soul and body. He had been kept from the lion's mouth before, and he would be immortal till his work was done. (Vs. 17, 18.) This same assurance may be ours, for we, too, may love and serve the dear Lord with such self-abandonment that the crown that awaited the brave apostle shall be ready for the brows of "all them that loved his appearing."

FOURTH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Golden Text.—Thou crownest the year with thy goodness.—Psalm 65:11.

The lessons for the quarter cover a difficult and obscure period of history. Of the documents from which our knowledge of the period is derived, some lack much of being contemporary with the events narrated, some were perhaps not intended to be historical, and nearly all are anonymous. We know less about this period than we do of the age of Isaiah or even the age of David.

And yet it is a period of vast importance in the history of the chosen people and it serves well to indicate the unique character of the nation and its religious guidance. The exile ended the last human hope of independence for the nation. For a long time before the exile Judah had been practically under the suzerainty first of Assyria, then of Babylon. The carrying of the tribes into captivity was a deliberate attempt to destroy the conquered nation by amalgamating it with the great conglomerate of tribes in Western Asia over which Assyria had ruled, Babylon was ruling and Persia was about to rule. Such attempts had been successful with the conquered tribes. With Judah it failed. It was not her power of military resistance, for that was long since gone; it was not a racial tendency to separateness, for the Hebrew people were constantly lapsing into intimacy with their neighbors and requiring to be warned against this course. But something saved them where others had perished. Something rendered them incapable of being swallowed up in the general mass of mingled tribes which came under the successive empires of western Asia.

What was it? It could have been nothing less than a unique faith. They had often been blind and sinful, but in spite of it all they had a grasp on some eternal thing that reached beyond the changing fortunes of war and politics. This faith did more than deliver Daniel and vindicate Esther. It delivered and vindicated a nation beset by perils as imminent as those which are connected with the names of these characters.

The exilic and post-exilic period of Judah's history witnessed the growth of certain ideas and tendencies which controlled the Judaism of the time of Jesus. Some of them were:

1. The exaltation of the law, the written record of past revelations, to a higher place than ever before. As Judaism became more completely the religion of a book, the function of interpreting the book became more important, and the order of scribes came into existence.

2. With the new superstitious reverence for the letter of the law came a narrowly legalistic attitude to religion. The tendency was to consider religion as a series of technicalities by which one could secure divine favor. By shrewd management one could do this without forfeiting any of the practical advantages of the worldly life. Subtlety was called for rather than sincerity.

3. The institution of the synagogue was introduced to give opportunity for worship when the Temple and Jerusalem were unavailable. It embodied the new idea that the reading and exposition of the law was itself an acceptable act of worship.

4. The Messianic idea took increasingly definite form in the minds of those who were sincerely interested in Israel's future. Changing political conditions brought changing ideas as to the exact nature of the needed deliverance, but the nation's leaders never acquiesced in the status quo, never gave up hope that, at some time and in some way, the religious destiny of the nation would work itself out in the establishment of a new regime in which their faith would find vindication in the eyes of the whole world.

Conference Notes and Comments.

In the excellent report in the "Christian Century," of this Conference, the editor thinks the Disciples present must have been disappointed and depressed by the fact that the work which we have been doing for Christian union for lo, these many years, received no recognition whatever by any speaker. This fact the editor thinks is not attributable to any prejudice against us, for they were too large-minded men for that, but to the fact that our work in this respect had not attracted their attention; and that we ourselves are in part to blame for that. We can not agree that the intelligent men who spoke on that platform were ignorant of our steadfast advocacy of Christian union from the beginning of our history. Nor do we believe that it was prejudice against us that accounts for the absence of any public recognition of our service in this cause, for there was, in private conversation with many of these men, generous recognition of our work in this behalf. Is it not more probable that in a meeting of this kind, where the effort was to interest all the Protestant bodies in this movement, it was deemed good policy not to mention any one religious body as leading, but to emphasize the movement of all toward Christ's will and prayer? The time is not yet for mutual congratulations. When this union is consummated, then the impartial historian will trace to its sources the influences that have made success possible. The attitude we shall take toward the union provided for in this Conference will have much to do in deciding what place the future historian will assign us as a factor working for a united church.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

Reports are in from the following auxiliaries: Golden City, Belton, Pleasant Hill, Troy, Lebanon, Central, Moberly, Lathrop, Farmington, Barry, Kahoka, auxiliary and circle, Excelsior Springs, Bunceton, Sweet Springs, Bolivar, Bethany, Buffalo, Norborne, Lawson, Webb, Hannibal, Laplata, Canton, Neosho and Clearmont. None of these will receive a green letter card this quarter.

The Union Avenue auxiliary, St. Louis, is called upon to give up a beloved sister in Mrs. John Burns, who passed to her heavenly home on December 1. Our prayers and love are given to the faithful partner of Sister Burns, who grieves as one not without hope.

We note that Mrs. G. C. Rippy, of Lawson, has taken a life membership. This is splendid. Excelsior Springs observed C. W. B. M. day, the offering was $11. Sweet Springs, offering was $16.20; Norborne, $8.87; Bethany, $5; Lawson, $4.54; Webb, $10; Hannibal, $50; Laplata, $5.25; Canton, $4; Farmington, $3.65; Lebanon, $6; Pleasant Hill, $2.19. Others report offerings on special, not specifying whether or not they did observe the day. This is the last letter that will reach our auxiliary sisters before the dawning of Christmas day. To each and all, the secretary wishes a happy Christmas, that shall be full of joy, and of that peace from above of which no man can rob us. Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

McGarvey on "Gloria in Excelsis."

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I have just read Brother McCarvey's review of the new hymnal, "Gloria in Excelsis," and I wish to briefly notice one or two paragraphs only in this reply, and leave the others to more competent hands, if, indeed, anything need be said concerning them. We thank Brother McGarvey for his words of commendation, though few they be.

He says, "The weight is exactly two pounds—heavy enough to make many a worshiper's arms ache before he gets through a service." I have heard of weak-kneed Christians, but this is the first time I have heard of weak-armed Christians. We suppose there are some of this kind and we advise all such to place the hymnal in the book-rack, except for the few minutes in which they are engaged in singing the hymns, and reading from the Responsive Selections. They might use the Abridged Edition until they gain strength!

The hymnal is intended to be comparable with other leading modern hymnals. In this respect it does not fall short in a single instance, and it is superior in many features, if we are to judge by commendations received from many of our leading brethren who have carefully examined it. Of course we do not claim that the hymnal is perfect, but its imperfections have not been touched by Brother McGarvey, as we see them.

"Gloria in Excelsis," is not as large as other leading hymnals now in use in this country. The new hymnal just issued by the Methodist Church contains more pages. This is also true of "In Excelsis," "Sursum Corda," "Laudes Domini," and a dozen others we might mention.

Brother McGarvey says, "I am convinced that there are not more than 300 hymns in the English language which deserve a place in a Christian hymn book." This might make a hymnal that would fill the wants of Brother McGarvey, but to treat amply the different subjects that should be treated in an up-to-date hymnal no less than 750 to 1,000 hymns are required. Many hymnals contain more than 1,000 hymns, some running as high as 1,400.

Much has been written concerning the characteristics of hymns that are worthy of a place in our hymnology. Little has been written that is of any particular value, for each writer has set up his own peculiar opinion as a standard by which he proceeds to select what he supposes to be the best hymns. Consequently there are as many standards as there are writers, and the selections thus made are as variant. This is the mistake Brother McGarvey makes. A careful study of church hymnody will reveal what we think is a very much safer tribunal than the preferences of any one person, viz., the Church universal. Its standard is the highest, truest standard, for the hymns upon which it has placed its approval have become catholic, no matter what their source, and, like true spiritual music and fervent prayer, they are above and beyond the theological bickerings of a divided church, just as Christianity itself is above and beyond the whims and vagaries of sectarian partisans.

There are at least 10,000 hymns out of the 1,000,000 hymns, and paraphrases and versifications of the Psalms that have been written since the Reformation (when Luther gave us back our hymnal) that are considered by the Church universal as worthy of perpetuation. The difficult task was to know what to omit when selecting from this vast treasury of approved hymnology. All the different phases of Christian work and experience had to be treated, and amply so, in order that the varying tastes of those who are to use it in both church and home might be fully gratified. A careful study of the "Order of Arrangement" will reveal the wide scope covered by the hymns, which is absolutely necessary to a comprehensive hymn book intended to meet all the requirements of our churches. The committee had in mind the large churches in preparing the Complete Edition. The Abridged Edition is for the use of smaller churches whose varying needs are not so great. The abridgement, however, is not in the subjects treated, but in the number of hymns allotted to each subject.

Brother McGarvey says his name is on the advisory committee, but that he contributed no suggestions, although he was requested to do so; that he commenced to prepare a list of hymns, but that other duties prevented his finishing the work. It is often true that one of a small committee of only four or five persons fails to do his part. It would be wonderful indeed if every one of a committee of 133 would be able to fulfill his part. We are glad to say that all but about a dozen did comply with all requirements made of them, and all of these, with one or two exceptions, wrote us of their interest in the matter, and promised assistance later.

The lists submitted by the two divisions of the general committee contained many, if not all, of the hymns included in the hymnal under the topic, "The Holy Spirit, the Comforter." Brother McGarvey condemns all these hymns as a whole. If his premise is true, that it is unscriptural to offer prayer and praise to the Holy Spirit, there may be some ground for his condemnation. We leave this to the theologians. In the meantime we will keep on singing:

> "Holy Spirit, faithful Guide,
> Ever near the Christian's side,
> Gently lead us by the hand,
> Pilgrims through a desert land."

The Ritual Services and the Responsive Readings were put in with the universal consent of both committees, so far as we know. The large number of our leading churches that have adopted the hymnal, together with the hundreds of gratifying commendations that have been received from our leading brethren everywhere, and the splendid reviews written for our papers, many of which speak of these special features, all go to show the wisdom of the committees, and the almost universal desire for them, upon the part of our wide-awake churches.

BURNS.

Our dear Sister Burns, after an illness of six weeks, passed into God's beautiful beyond on Dec. 5, 1905, aged 84 years. Since her early life she has been an active, faithful member of the Christian Church, and was one of the charter members of the C. W. B. M., joining in January, 1878. Her maiden name was Rachel G. Hendrickson. She was married to Bro. John Burns in New York City, and soon thereafter moved to Independence, Mo., coming to St. Louis a few years afterward, where she has been actively identified with church work ever since, and a member of Union Avenue C. W. B. M. Auxiliary since its organization. She was also a faithful member of the Christian Orphans' Home Board and remarkably active for one of her years. She was beloved by all for her modest, self-sacrificing ways, and we, as a church and society, will ever cherish her memory as a loving friend and co-worker, and we extend to Brother Burns and son (Bro. Walter Burns, of Philadelphia,) and to the grandchildren and relatives, our deepest sympathy.

MRS. H. W. CARVIN.
MRS. HENRY MUN.
MRS. JOHN Q. MCCANNE.

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 9, 1905.

In memory of Sister Burns, who passed away Dec. 5, 1905, leaving us to mourn her loss, but rejoicing in the rich legacy she has left us of a godly life.

Out of life's unrest into His rest,
Free from all sorrow and pain;
Oh, sister beloved, this surely is best,
Our loss is her heavenly gain.

She has fought the good fight—finished the race,
The crown of the victor has won;
Oh, the joy to behold him, her Lord, face to face,
And to hear his applaudit, "Well done!"

Her sun has gone down in beauty we know,
To rise where there is no more night;
Yet to us there is left the rich after glow
Of a life most Christlike and bright.

"A mother in Israel" truly has gone,
Church and home most sorely bereft;
Ours in loving submission to still follow on,
And treasure her legacy left.

St. Louis, Mo. MRS. P. R. GIBSON.

KEITH.

It was my sad duty Thanksgiving day to visit Bethany and share with President Cramblet and Professors Taylor, Moos and Wynne, the funeral services in honor of one of the late members of the Bethany College faculty, Professor James Crawford Keith. The remains were borne just across the street to the old Bethany church and thence across the bridge and along the avenue of locusts past the Campbell mansion and up the hill to the old rock-walled cemetery where lie the ashes of Thomas and Alexander Campbell, W. K. Pendleton, Dr. Richardson, W. H. Woolery, J. M. Trible and other honored dead of Bethany. He was a strong and neighborly man, held in the highest respect by his associates and students and enjoying, in the full measure, the teacher's honor of unselfishly working out the achievements of his life through the careers of others. James Crawford Keith was the eldest of the large family of William and Rebecca Keith, and was born in Crawford county, Tennessee, March 12, 1836. His ancestors came from Scotland to Pennsylvania, finally drifted south, and William Keith settled in Tennessee. When a lad the parents moved into Kentucky, where the childhood of James Crawford was spent. When approaching young manhood his father died, and James became the head of the family, assisting his mother, a woman of strong character, to raise and educate his eleven sisters and brothers, and at the same time preparing himself for college. He got a late start in life in securing an education, but finally overcame all difficulties and graduated from Kentucky University, at Lexington, with the honor of his class. He then began preaching in Louisville, Kentucky, where he met and married Miss Carrie Ford. They started at once for California, and there Professor Keith worked in church and college for many years. Fourteen years were given to building up a college and town in Colusa county, California. This was Pierce College. Later he became president of Washington College at Irvington, California, spending about four years there. Soon afterwards he returned to his Alma Mater as professor in the Bible College of Kentucky University. For the last four years he has worked in Bethany College. A year ago his health failed, and although every one realized absolute rest was imperative, still he could not be persuaded. The habit of work was too strong. In his first illness he earnestly prayed to be spared a little longer that he might do more earnest work for the Master. During the past summer, when old Bethany's church was not able to hire a preacher, he bravely, eagerly, embraced the opportunity to fulfill his promise to his heavenly Father. He would have them help him to a chair, and, sitting in the pulpit, would give some of his best Bible talks.

The Father called him on the evening of Nov. 28, 1905. W. R. WARREN.

MORGAN.

Sister Urania Morgan was the daughter of Bro. A. L. and Sister Ida Jones and wife of Arthur Morgan. She died of pneumonia at her home in St. Cloud, Minn., Nov. 22, 1905. She leaves one little son, her young husband, parents, and many friends to mourn their loss. She grew to womanhood at Princeton, Ill., where she was one of the noblest members of the church while I ministered there. She superintended the Junior Christian Endeavor Society with rare skill and ability, and in every way was one of the noblest of the household of faith. She died in the triumphs of the faith in which she lived, and her memory is blessed. J. G. WAGGONER.

Eureka, Ill.

MOREY.

On Dec. 4, 1905, at Beloit, Wis., occurred the death, by drowning, while saving a college mate, of Orla Morey, aged twenty-six. As a boy of seventeen he confessed his Savior, and united with the church in this place, of which he has ever since been an exemplary member. Father, mother, two brothers and a host of friends mourn his untimely death.

ODLE.

Mrs. Lura Briggs Odle, daughter of Elisha and Mary E. Briggs, and companion of William C. Odle, was born near Williamsport, Ind., Nov. 13, 1874. She united with the Christian Church under the pastorate of M. V. Grisso, and she was intensely devoted to her church and its interests. October 19, 1905, she was united in marriage to William C. Odle, and after five weeks and one day of married life, she passed from the scenes of earth. Funeral services were held in the M. E. Church at Williamsport. A. L. West, of Carlinville, Ill., her former pastor, preached the sermon, assisted by Rev. E. C. Waring, pastor of the M. E. Church of Williamsport.

ROGERS.

At the home of her son in West Hebron, N. Y., Margaret Rogers, aged 79. For many years a faithful member of the church at West Rupert, Vermont.

TRAVER.

Samuel C. Traver, an esteemed member and chairman of the board of the Church of Christ at Highmore, S. D., passed away at his home in that city on Thanksgiving evening. He was a very prominent man in his county. He was postmaster for a number of years, elected and re-elected to the office of auditor, and at his death was serving a term as deputy auditor of Hyde county. Brother Traver first joined with the Congregational people, and when the Church of Christ was organized he became a Disciple. He was sixty-seven years, nine months, twenty-eight days of age. He was a member of the G. A. R. and Odd Fellow orders. We all join with his beloved wife and family in sympathy for their loss.

Her Santa Claus Letter.

She wrote a note to Santa Claus,
The queerest note that ever was;
'Twas naught but scrawls and dots and rings,
But, oh, it meant so many things!
For little girls, strange to believe,
Want many things on Christmas eve.

She asked for dolls all dressed in blue,
And red and pink and purple, too;
She asked for dogs and cats and toys,
And instruments that make a noise;
She asked for candies, cakes and things;
And pop-corn strung in lengthy strings.

She sent her note to Santa Claus,
The queerest note that ever was.
Her papa mailed it early, so
'Twould surely off to Santa go.
'Twas naught but scrawls and dots and rings,
But, oh, it meant so many things!

A Plea for the Children.

J. B. Groves.

It is not so much the future man, or woman, who inspires our interest, or solicits our sympathy, as it is the child of today. If the child of today receives the attention, the thoughtful consideration, to which it is entitled, the future man and woman will be all right—will be the powers for future good. I am partial to the children.

Many thoughtless people are wont to laugh over the troubles of childhood (having forgotten their own), but I do not believe the troubles of mature years are ever more poignantly felt than are those of tender, inexperienced childhood. We of us who have not forgotten, know that a child often feels deeply, that unpleasant or painful circumstances impress themselves upon the susceptible brain of young children with greater intensity than upon an older, more fortified mind.

My observations would lead me to speak particularly upon "The Courtesy of the Home."

It is really quite painful sometimes to witness the discourtesy, the ungracious manners, of the various members of otherwise lovely families toward one another. Sometimes it is the brothers and sisters, and not infrequently—the shame of it!—it is between the parents themselves. But perhaps more often, and more lamentable, because more unreasonable, is the almost cruelly ungracious way in which many thoughtless parents treat their little ones. No parent has the right to be habitually flinging harsh thrusts or stinging reproofs unmerited upon their children, any more than have these same children to indulge in this kind of warfare among themselves. And where children show a growing tendency to follow this style, the cause is not far to seek—they see and hear more of it than they see of sweet, gentle courtesy.

We show great discourtesy to the children sometimes; we should not do it, we resent it ourselves; we must not think that the child does not feel it, too. And while the little child is more forgiving than we, we should not abuse this beautiful truth, nor the child, nor our opportunity to be a helpful, comforting influence in the life of every child whose life touches our own with its pure love and confidence. Indeed, the love and confidence of an innocent child is a rich blessing not to be lightly treated.

There may be a glaring inconsistency in the way a mother demands a "reverential" attitude on the part of her children toward her without ever giving them anything in her own conduct as an example.

When parents begin to realize that the first and most impressionable period of a child's life is an imitation of those around it; that its education must be made up of the repetition of the acts of its elders, and that in proportion to the beauty and strength of characters shown forth in their own lives is the loveliness of their children's characters enhanced or diminished, they will surely turn their minds more seriously upon the subject and teach themselves to be what they wish their children to be

Parents lamenting ungraciousness, unloveliness, harsh-voiced-ness, etc., in their children, may pertinently ask, and keep on asking, until they get the correct answer—Where did they get those undesirable mannerisms? We think they must sooner or later come to see that had those children never witnessed anything of the kind in their home, it would never have become so much a part of their lives.

Harshness, or scolding over trifling faults or mistakes, until it runs into a continuous strain of faultfinding, or scolding, in any case, for that matter, is always detrimental to a child's finer instincts, and is never a proper mode of punishment. It can never take the place of firmness and good government. Scolding in the home, as elsewhere, is harmful to those who indulge in it as well as to those who must hear it; it hardens; it stultifies; it never yet made a bad child good, nor a good child better; if it causes it to obey through dread, or fear of stronger punishment, be assured it does make it love to obey, or love the thing thus compelled to do, but to hate it, rather, through the unpleasant feelings excited. The scolding parent is always a weak parent, who seeks to gain by fear what he or she can not gain by wisdom. We must first learn to control self, and to know what beautifies or harms our own character before we try to compel beauty of character in our children; it cannot be compelled, but it may be re-pelled until it flees from the home for refuge.

Let gentle courtesy be always practiced by father and mother toward the little ones, as they themselves value it each toward the other, and they will have sons and daughters who will love and revere father and mother from babyhood to old age, and there will be no place in all the world to compare with home, sweet home, to them. Humanity is not weakened by a lack of sternness, so much as it is strengthened by a preponderance of sweetness and kindness. I do not mean that children should never be corrected or punished, but if we give the matter more attention, it will often be seen that in a home where parents merit no censure, the children seldom deserve punishment.

I am persuaded that the little ones do not receive enough of our consideration. With minds all unformed, they do not understand why their wishes are not as important as

DEAR MADAM: Please Read My Free Offer

Words of Wisdom to Sufferers from a Lady of Notre Dame, Indiana.

I send free of charge to every sufferer this great Woman Remedy, with full instructions, description of my past sufferings and how I permanently cured myself.

You Can Cure Yourself at Home Without the Aid of a Physician.

It costs nothing to try this remedy once, and if you desire to continue its use it will cost you only twelve cents a week. It does not interfere with your work or occupation. I have nothing to sell. Tell other sufferers of it; that is all I ask. It cures everybody, young or old.

If you feel bearing down pains as from approaching danger, pain in the back and bowels, creeping feeling in the spine, a desire to cry, hot flashes and faintness, or if you are suffering from any so-called female complaint, then write to Mrs. M. Summers, Notre Dame, Ind., for her free treatment and full instructions. Like myself thousands have been cured by it. I send it in a plain envelope.

Mothers and Daughters will learn of a simple family remedy, which quickly and thoroughly cures female complaints of every nature. It saves worry and expense and the unpleasantness of having to reveal your condition to others Vigor, health and happiness result from its use.

Wherever you live I can refer you to well-known ladies in your neigaborhood, who know and will testify that this family remedy cures all troubles peculiar to their sex, strengthens the whole system and makes healthy and strong women. Write to-day, as this offer may not be made again.

anybody's—they often are really more so. They see no reason why they must so often be humiliated, and before others, too! A child's humiliation is not soon forgotten. I have seen the glowing countenance fall, and the sweet, innocent lip tremble when a mother, more thoughtless, perhaps, than unfeeling, rebuked her child in harsh, strident tones, causing it to shrink back in fear, over some trifling mistake that should instead have called forth her gentlest sympathy and counsel.

Of course there may be exceptions to what I have said, but no one can deny that it is all too true in many cases. I do not wish to be understood as approving of the smart-beyond-their-elders, rude and unlovable disposition of a vast multitude of children, or of lacking sympathy with parents and teachers trying to mitigate these faults, but I do say, if we want our children to be sweet-tempered, cultured, respectful, lovable, let us be careful to set them the example in our own lives, we, who have lived longer, and had time to learn what is needed to sweeten up this troubled old world of ours.

A Song of Christmas.

Oh, heart of mine! from the store divine
  Of memories that you hold,
Sing me a song that is sweet and strong
  Of the Christmas days of old.
Sing of the eager heart and eye
  As the season of joy drew near;
And we marked the lessening days go by,
When the sun rose late in the winter sky,
With never a backward thought or sigh
  For the waning year!

Sing of the morn when our Lord was born,
  As it came in the days of youth,
When the bells rang sweet down the village street
  Their tidings of joy and truth!
Sing of the drifted fields of white,
  Of the crisp and buoyant air;
Of the country roads packed hard and white,
Of the loaded sleighs and the faces bright,
Of the rosy girls and the laughter light,
  And the greetings fair!

Sing of the hall where we gathered all,
  With never a vacant place;
Father and mother and sister and brother,
  And each with a smiling face!
Sing of the thankful hearts sincere
  For the board so nobly laid;
Of the boundless cheer of the garnered year,
Of the ample toasts and the home-made beer,
Of the stingless jest and the laughter clear,
  And the joy we made!

Sing of the night and the rare delight,
  Of the dance and the romping game!
Of the moments fleet, and the twinkling feet
  In the light of the pine-log's flame!
Sing of the memories now as keen
  As the poignant sense of love;
Of the berried boughs and the evergreen,
The last cup round and the parting scene,
Of the last guest gone, with the miles between,
  And the stars above!

Good Gifts.

BY FLORENCE MILNER.

Christmas time opens the heart wide for Christmas giving. Each seeks a fitting gift for the near and dear, and the world warms to Christian charity. By the light of this genial illumination, one may catch glimpses of possible wider giving, of a truer Christmas spirit, which shall not end on Christmas day.

Few will ever possess superfluous millions, but there are needs which gold cannot satisfy, gifts which are above price, and the bestowal of such gifts is within the power of every one. You may not be able to build churches, establish libraries, or endow colleges, but there is always a chance to give of your courtesy, your thoughtfulness, your love—gifts the world most needs. Give kindly words, not impatient ones; give happy greetings, not surly commonplaces; give a cheerful answer, not a grudging growl; give thoughtful care, not careless indifference; give the story of your joys, not a rehearsal of your woes. "What the world claims from us is not our thirst and our hunger, but our bread and our gourd." Keep joy strong in the heart and you will do much unconscious giving.

When you feel your poverty, either in this world's goods or in spirit, then it is high time to sit down and count your blessings. If you do this honestly, you will be surprised at your great wealth; your heart will warm to Christian charity and you will hasten out upon humanity's highway eager to scatter your good gifts.

Guarding the Czar's Life.

One of the most interesting features of official life in St. Petersburg is the intricate system by which the Czar's life is safeguarded. Since the tragic death of the Grand Duke Sergius the spy system has become more complicated than ever, until now there are whole regiments of officials and carefully picked men and women whose duty it is to guard the Czar. An interesting description of this spy system is contained in an article by L. S. Farlow in the current "Harper's Weekly." These officials, says L. S. Farlow, are scattered through the Ministry of the Interior, the Secret Police, and the Ministry of War. The inner circle of the system is the dreaded "Third Section" of the Secret Police—the men who are charged with the guardianship of the Czar's person. These men are highly educated, are artists in disguise, and possess extraordinary knowledge and power. "High officials, nominally their superiors in rank, dread the vicinity of one of these men, lest their most innocent act—a call on a friend, a journey for health or pleasure—be construed into a sinister act demanding explanation."

The Old Subscriber.

We sometimes wonder if newspaper men in general appreciate the old subscriber at his true value. We mean the old standby, who takes the home paper year after year, through evil as well as through good report, and pays his subscription regularly, just the same as he would any other honest debt. As a general thing, the old subscriber is patient and slow to wrath.

He will overlook many little slights from the editor—slights which the man who borrows his reading would not stand for a minute. If one of his calves gets its leg broken, and the fact isn't mentioned in the next issue he doesn't seem to feel the slight in the least, or if a dozen of his hens die with the cholera morbus and the editor doesn't set out a $2 ad in order to make room to herald the news to a waiting world, he just worries right along as though he hadn't been mistreated at all. He is always jolly—never fails to ask "How's tricks?" when he comes into the office, and drops a word of praise for the paper upon taking his departure. God bless the old subscriber! We love him, and if we sometimes slight him to make space for some saphead who is not worthy to buckle his shoes, it is because we know he is so broad-minded and charitable that he will never mind it.—Exchange.

A Week with the Woodneys.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

THE WEEK ENDS.

In the last published chapter of "A Week With the Woodneys," we saw Bonaparte successfully carried out of Mr. Woodney's residence, almost in the sturdy arms of some of the characters. I am very glad Old Bone was rescued from his embarrassing position at the ill-prized pump in the front kitchen. If he had not been delivered last week, we would have been obliged to leave him permanently in the house, and I will tell you why: The last chapter of this story is lost.

I didn't lose it. Brother Garrison didn't lose it. Brother Moore, who usually takes care of my end of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, left the last chapter in a certain drawer. At least, he says he left it in the drawer. The manuscript is not in that drawer. At least, Brother Garrison has looked, and his ability to find things is shown by the fact that the last chapter was not found. If I had not taken the horse out of Mr. Woodney's house in the next-to-the-last chapter, how unpleasant we must all have felt to know that he was staying in there to the end of time! As to how the story turned out in other particulars, there is no way to discover. The week ended, and it ended in the last chapter. The last chapter being lost, the end of the week is lost; so, whether Mace ever got to liking that young Enderthorpe, or some other character, how are we to know? I liked the blacksmith particularly. Indeed, Worth Acre is a great friend of mine. I should like to know if he married Miss Lizzie Day. I think they might just as well marry as not. It seems so unsatisfactory, not. But whether they did or did not, and whether the saloon closed or kept open, and whether the church got built or came to nothing, all these things are in that last, lost chapter.

There is one thing I am glad about. Nobody can say the story "ended bad." Some didn't like the way the "Green Witch" turned out. But nobody can complain of the way "A Week With the Woodneys" turned out, because it hasn't turned. As for me, I was interested in the little musician. I wonder what ever became of him. Maybe he died. So many people are dying, it looks like! Well you and I are still here, so what does t matter how the story ended? It's told, anyhow. Presently I may tell you another. If so, I will make a copy of the last chapter, so if Brother Garrison loses it, I'll have another to take its place. A jolly, green Christmas to every one of you! Next week I will tell you of some new plans for our page. Look out for them; they are full of interest.

Marion Harland in Bethlehem.

The little city of Bethlehem is set upon a hill which is crowned by the Church of the Nativity, writes Marion Harland in the December "Lippincott's." The Grotto, which all sects of believers have agreed upon as the birthplace of our Lord, is directly under the church and entirely dependent for light upon artificial means. A silver star is let into the pavement of a semicircular niche, above which is an altar adorned with the usual churchly symbols. By the light of fifteen colored lamps suspended under the altar we read the inscription in Latin: "Here Jesus Christ was Born of the Virgin Mary."

The long line of pilgrims prostrated themselves, one by one, and kissed the star, some with dropping tears—all silently—solemnized beyond the range of speech. It did not add to our solemnity to be shown the manger decorated with lace and an embroidered altar-cloth, and defended from sacrilegious fingers by a gilded railing. The really impressive things were occasional glimpses of the rough stone walls and roof of the ancient stable, visible here and there between the gaudy decorations.

The service of Christmas eve began at half-past ten at night and concluded at half-past two in the morning! At midnight a lullaby from the organ preluded the supreme moment of the occasion—the sudden folding back of the curtain above the altar, revealing a manger-cradle and a big wax doll. The exultant outburst of organ and choir in a magnificent Gloria in Excelsis accompanied the stately processional of the entire staff of priests and acolytes, chanting and swinging censers while they bore up one aisle and down another, back to the high altar, the same doll, dressed in cambric and lace, and nestling in the embrace of the richly appareled bishop.

Every incident of our last night in Jamal's camp in Bethlehem recurs to me with peculiar distinctness. How, as the darkness deepened, the red, blinking eyes of the charcoal craters of the wonderful portable stove presided over by our accomplished chef in the door of the kitchen-tent—the night being breezeless—shone upon the under side of the olive boughs over our heads, while our quiet talk went on of what had happened in the old town behind us.

We spoke longest of David's Greatest Son, and of the Birth that was to draw the eyes and thoughts of all nations to the little city on the hilltop in the land of Juda.

At midnight, kept wakeful by the rush and burden of thought, I arose to look from the tent door upon the watchful stars that here have a conscious majesty I had never recognized elsewhere, and wondered anew where, amidst the glittering hosts "marshaled on the nightly plain" had flashed the Star of Bethlehem. For the last time in our eventful series of journeyings we saw the dawn redden the Mountains of Moab, the thin crescent of the waning moon dying, while we gazed, before the brightness of the coming sun.

I shall always be grateful that that night of ineffable calm and the beauty of the new day are prominent among the pictures conjured before my mental vision, as at the wave of an enchanter's wand, by the name of "Ephrath—which is Bethlehem."

A Riddle.

The Christmas gift she gave to me
  You cannot see at all;
It ne'er before existed,
  'Twas neither large nor small.

She gave it and she took it;
  There's nothing left to show;
And yet it made me happy—
  Beneath the mistletoe.

A Christmas Prayer.

By remembering our kinship with all men,
By well wishing, friendly speaking and kindly doing,
By cheering the downcast and adding sunshine to daylight,
By welcoming strangers (poor shepherds or wise men),
By keeping the music of the angel's song in this home;
God help us every one to spread abroad the blessings of Jesus,
In whose name we keep Christmas,
And in whose words we, Thy children, pray together:
Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name.

A Few Timely Suggestions.

Christmas giving is defined by the pessimist as spending more money than one can afford for things that people do not want, but the optimist is happy in giving any trifle that will suggest to the recipient the pleasure of "remembering."

An interesting item regarding the mistletoe is that it is the only plant whose roots refuse to shoot into the ground—a peculiarity possessed by no other parasite. It is found on the fir, the lime, and the apple tree as well as on the oak.

If one really can not afford the expense, or, living in limited quarters, has not the room for a doll house, the small girl will get a vast deal of comfort from a set of "furnishings" that can be packed in a basket or cretonne covered box to be carried to whatever room is selected for the playing.

The pretty custom of decorating house and church with evergreen is undeniably a relic of paganism. It came directly to the English races from the Druids of ancient Britain, who believed that if a house were garlanded with holly, laurel, or by the good sylvan spirits that loved such growths and kept them green by their protecting care during winter frosts, would surely protect the dwelling from harm.

Especially at Christmas time let us make our charity not merely a question of money; charity is not the synonym of coin, but of love—a fact we too often forget. Let us use our brains as well as our purses, being careful that what we give, just because it may be limited, will be appropriate to the recipient and be accompanied with love and sympathy. Remember it is not so much what we give, but the spirit in which the gift is made, that counts.

For fairs or sales there is nothing quite so "salable" as cakes and aprons. Cakes of all kinds and flavorings are sure to have purchasers when fancy articles and the ordinary knicknacks are left unnoticed. The majority of aprons should be of the serviceable kind—for household use—with bibs and without, in a variety of colorings and material, and be sure there are plenty of white ones with embroidery or hemstitching as well as some fancy, dainty ones so popular now for afternoon wear, and a few for children.—Louise Lewis, in The Pilgrim.

Christmas At Grandpa's.

'Twas the night before Christmas in our house, too;
But of noise there was plenty, and sounds quite a few;
Sudden shutting of doors, quick steps on the stair.
What is it? They're preparing for Santa Claus there.
All of the babies from far and from near,
Little cousins and sisters, and wee ones most dear,
Have come up to grandpa's. Over night they must stay
And watch for the Santa Claus, reindeer and sleigh.
"Didn't he promise, the very first thing he would do
Was straight from the North Pole to come and see you?"
There's a mystery about. Hush! what can it be?
It must be—it is—Santa Claus with the tree.
Back to the nursery and hop into bed,
Breathe first a prayer out of each little head.
"God bless my dear mother, and father, and all,
And, dear God, don't forget those skates and that ball."
Each little head cuddles into its nest:
Each one is loved, and kissed, and caressed.

—James Fraser in Leslie's Weekly.

The Good Children.

Once upon a time there came a great famine in Russia. No rain fell for months; the seeds in the earth could not grow. Many people died, and the cattle perished.

The ruler of the empire was a young man. Instead of asking advice of the older men, he foolishly consulted the younger ones. These advised him to drown all the old people in the empire. And the order went forth.

In a certain place were three brothers and their aged father. When the father heard of this command, he said: "My sons, such is the will of God and the will of the emperor; let me perish at once, that you may live."

"No, our own daddy! We may die, but we will not give you up," cried the good sons, throwing their arms around his neck "We will take from our own mouths and nourishing you.

Then the boys took their father into their cottage, dug up the floor, made up a bed under it, and placed the old man there. Giving him a loaf of black bread, they covered him over with the floor. There the old man lived, his sons secretly bringing him a share of all they had.

A year passed, and spring came again. It was time to sow, but there was little seed. When people cast it into the earth it rotted there.

Then the three sons went to their father, and asked him, "Daddy, what shall we do?"

"My sons, strip the old roof of the house, thresh the bundles, and sow the chaff!" The lads stripped the house and barn, and threshed the bundles. When they sewed, God gave his blessing; in a week's time green plants appeared; in two month's time there was corn, ever and ever so much, and all manner of seed was found. There was rye, there were wheat and barley; yes, perhaps there was a plant of buckwheat. Wherever else the people looked the plain was overgrown with grasses and weeds and thistles, but with the good sons the corn was like a forest. How the people marveled! News of the wonder went over the whole land, until it reached the emperor himself. He ordered the three brothers to appear in the royal presence.

The brothers heard of it and said, "It will be all up with us!" They went again to the father.

"Daddy, advise us what to do!"

"Go, my sons, and tell the pure truth."

When the brothers came before their emperor, he inquired, threateningly:

"Why, villains, did you hoard up corn when there was such a famine that many people died of hunger? Tell the truth; if not, I shall order you to be put to death."

The brothers told the story, just as it had been, from beginning to end.

The emperor's brow became smooth, his eyes less stern. He ordered the old father to be brought to sit beside him on his throne, to give him counsel. The sons he rewarded handsomely. The corn he ordered collected ear by ear, and to be rubbed out in men's hands. It was then sent about for seed corn, and the people suffered no more from the famine.

Christmas Table Decorations.

Holly is essentially a Christmas green, and its glossy leaves and brilliant berries make it particularly effective. A very pretty table decoration may be made from this green. For the center of the table a star-shaped mat may be made from the holly by cutting a large star from cardboard and covering it with the same. Upon this mat place a tall vase, and in this a few flowers.

At each end of the table two smaller stars may be made, and upon these smaller vases or flower-glasses may be placed. Arrange a wreath of holly all around the table just inside the plates. A sprig of holly may be placed at each plate as a boutonniere. Over the center of the table suspend a large star covered with white flowers, to symbolize the star which the shepherds saw when the angels sang, "Peace on earth, good will toward men."

The Kind of Ink.

Week after week, month after month, year after year, I use the same fountain pen. It would look like advertising, or I would like to tell you what kind of pen it is, for it is an old friend. It is ever the same, an unchanging, smooth, ready point.

But my writing is not ever the same—far from it! Sometimes it is bold and black, a John-Hancock-y script to be proud of. At other times it is weak and dish-watery. That is the way it is just now.

And the reason? Of course, the ink. The fluid I am now using I bought at a bargain, the label torn off, at "a great reduction." A poor bargain it has proved for me, however pleasing to the seller, and its feeble gray tracings do no credit to my pen or my character. And yet I hate to throw that ink away.

Even thus—for you will accept a moral, won't you?—I have seen a stalwart fellow, with a splendid physique, and the inheritance of a good brain from thoughtful and acute ancestors. But when I come to talk with this Hercules-Apollo, when his fountain pen begins to write—bah! what paltry and ignoble sentences! They can scarcely be distinguished from the level of flatness on which they lie outspread.

The trouble with our broad-shouldered friend is that he has filled himself up with poor ink—trashy novels, frippery jokes, political gossip, sporting news—and has left the good black ink untouched in the inkwell. He got his ink cheap and easily, but it will be a dear bargain before he is done with it.

A Christmas Sermonette.

"There was no room for them in the inn."

What thoughts do these words awaken in the mind? Perhaps the first may be this, that no wonder in so great a concourse of people of all ranks, going up to be registered for taxes, there should be no room in the inn for the poor and unpretending Mother of the Savior to be delivered of her firstborn child. But the second thought may be that the world is like that inn, that amidst its pomp, its magnificence, amidst the whirl and hurry of its business, amidst the marble edifices of its gigantic triumphs, amidst its enterprises, amidst the crowd and pressure of even its neediest inhabitants, there is not room for the Savior of mankind.—W. E. Gladstone.

Two Pretty Christmas Entertainments for the Children.

A TRIP TO THE NORTH POLE.

A Sunday school teacher entertained her class of ten little girls on Christmas eve by a novel plan, which she called "A Trip to the North Pole." This is how it was done: She cleared a north room in her home of all the furniture, then trimmed the ceiling with strings of pink and white pop corn. A large silver moon was placed near the center of the ceiling, around which were arranged a number of gold stars. Cotton batting was laid over the carpet, to represent snow, and two large inverted tubs covered with the same material were the snow houses of the Eskimos. A large pole which had been surrounded with cotton was brought in and secured in a vertical position in one corner of the room; then the pole was dotted with small stars, and ten little white cloth shoes, labeled with the names of the pupils and containing the gifts of the teacher for them, were attached to it. When the children had all assembled in a warm room across the hall from the "North Pole," one of the girls was asked to recite her Christmas poem, which she had been previously required to learn. After reciting she made her trip to the "North Pole" alone, and brought back the shoe inscribed with her name. Then another recited, and went to the "North Pole" for her gift. The ten girls, having recited and brought their shoes from the "North Pole," listened eagerly to a charming Christmas tale related by their teacher. After this each child told in her own language what she saw at the "North Pole" in the land of Santa Claus.

A CHRISTMAS FERRIS WHEEL.

A Christmas Ferris Wheel for the little folks is novel, interesting and inexpensive. The hind wheels of a buggy may be utilized for the purpose by putting them side by side on a pole, making them stationary, and leaving them far enough apart for a shoe-box to swing horizontally between them. Each end of the pole may then be placed on the back of a tall chair, with just enough room between the chairs for the wheels to turn easily. Wind the spokes of the wheels and the pole holding them with white cotton cloth, and decorate the chairs with cedar branches. A number of shoe-boxes can be swung from strong cords tied from one wheel to the other. Be careful to attach them so that when the wheels move around the boxes will remain right side up. In the boxes are placed the presents for the children, each box being labeled with the name of a child. When the wheel and boxes are all arranged, a Santa Claus enters with a flourish, and after a short but merry speech to the children, begins to move the wheel slowly around, reciting:

> "My Ferris Wheel turns 'round and 'round,
> And here fine gifts for all are found.
> For children all I bring good cheer,
> Though Christmas comes but once a year."

After the children have watched it go around for a time, he stops the wheel, and cuts away the boxes, and delivers them to the happy children.

A Christmas Thought.

Bright Christmas morning of my soul's delight! Chime all the bells! Wreathe all the garlands! Rouse all the anthems! Shake hands in all the congratulations! Merry Christmas! Merry with the thought of sins forgiven, merry with the idea of sorrows comforted, merry with the raptures to come. Oh, lift that Christ from the manger and lay him down in all our hearts! We may not bring to him as costly a present as the Magi brought, but we bring to his feet and to the manger today the frankincense of our joy, the pearls of our tears, the kiss of our love, the prostration of our worship. Down at his feet, all churches, all ages, all earth, all heaven! Down, all worlds, at his feet, and worship! "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men!"—De Witt Talmage.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Needed Every Day in 1906.

THE NORMAL INSTRUCTOR, by W. W. Dowling, in connection with the International Lessons on The Life of Christ.

Every teacher should have these booklets this year for use and reference. They are the best of their kind, are pointed and clear, simple and concise.

The seven booklets are 15 cents each, postpaid, or the set $1.00. Any of the seven at $1.50 per dozen, prepaid.

Part I is on "The Book," containing a general view and analysis of the books with helpful diagrams and questions for review.

Part II, "The Christ," has a general view of his names, offices, symbols and types, followed by an analytical view of the prophecies relating to him, then a series of lessons giving an outline of his life and ministry.

Part III, "The Church," is considered in all its phases, such as the church in prophecy, the church in type, the church's name, head, foundation, beginning, membership, ministry, mission, unity and future glory.

Part IV treats of "The Land," or Bible geography.

Part V is on "Bible Institutions," as patriarchal, Jewish and Christian.

Part VI is on "The History of God's Chosen People," and of those coming in contact with them.

Part VII has to do with the people brought into prominence in Bible times both the chosen and contiguous.

Congress.

Most of the time between the opening of Congress and its adjournment for the Christmas holidays is usually spent in organization. It has been so in the present case. The committees have been appointed, the caucuses organized, recess appointments confirmed, and about four thousand bills filed with the clerk, and of course there has been a good deal of miscellaneous speech-making, but the serious work of the session will not begin until after the two weeks' vacation which began Thursday. The appropriation of $11,000,000 for carrying on the canal work gave occasion for the critics to cry "Extravagance!" but the House passed it, and the Senate will. The amount is less than was asked for. Senator Morgan, who has grown old fighting any and every canal scheme, asserts that the first three years of our canal enterprise have shown as much reckless extravagance as did the first three years of the De Lesseps company. Senator Gorman has again been selected as Democratic leader in the Senate, and Mr. Williams will continue as minority leader in the House. Senator Beveridge's statehood bill for Oklahoma-Indian Territory and Arizona-New Mexico is encountering much opposition even in Republican ranks.

Rebaters Indicted.

The war upon givers and receivers of rebates on freight rates continues vigorously. A federal grand jury at Chicago has brought indictments against the Chicago and Alton Railroad and two of its officials on the testimony of the employes and officials of the Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Packing Company, who recently pleaded guilty and paid fines aggregating $25,000. At Kansas City a federal grand jury has returned fourteen indictments against railroads, shippers, agents and brokers, including the Chicago & Alton and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroads, and the packing firms of Swift, Armour, Cudahy and Nelson Morris. Six indictments were found by a grand jury at Philadelphia in cases involving the Great Northern R. R. The Pennsylvania, B. & O. and Reading roads escaped indictment only because their officials and employes gave evidence. It is perhaps unfortunate that the Elkins Act, under which the department of justice is proceeding in these cases against the rebaters, provides that the giving of rebates shall be punishable only by fine. It is possible that the assessment of fines may become only a sort of tax on the practice, still leaving a handsome margin of profit. Attorney-General Moody has instructed the district attorneys wherever possible to secure indictments also on the charge of conspiring, so that the offenders may be punished by imprisonment.

Insurance.

The testimony of Thomas F. Ryan and E. H. Harriman before the insurance investigation committee last week, reveals the unpleasant situation of two great financiers squabbling and maneuvering for the "control" of the Equitable. When asked if he did not derive his political influence from his association with ex-Governor Odell, Mr. Harriman said: "It would be more correct to say that Governor Odell derives his political influence from his association with me." This is very likely true. Mr. Harriman is a much richer man than Governor Odell, and of course that is what counts. Charles A. Peabody has been chosen to succeed Richard A. McCurdy as president of the Mutual Life, and the salary of the office has been cut from $150,000 a year to a beggarly $50,000. George W. Perkins, who is a partner of J. P. Morgan and had often been held up as a splendid pattern of success for the emulation of ambitious youth, has resigned as vice-president and chairman of the finance committee of the New York Life, and his place will be taken by Alexander E. Orr.

Russian Revolution.

In the "Nineteenth Century and After" for December, Prince Kropotkin traces the rapid movement of events in Russia from the constitutional agitation, and the Congress of the Zemstvos, through successive stages to the present advanced stage of the revolution. The turning point in Russian history and the destiny of the Czar, was when he refused to meet the 200,000 working men who, led by Father Gapon, marched to the winter palace to unroll before the "Little Father," as they had affectionately called the Czar up to that time, a monster petition asking for certain constitutional guarantees and for some economic changes, but instead, sent armed troops to shoot them down like sheep. That was an awful revelation to the Russian people, and from thenceforward they knew what to expect from the autocracy and have acted accordingly. If the Czar had met them and offered them cheerfully the guarantees they asked for, Russian history would have been different from what it is likely to be. The day of opportunity was not recognized, and afterwards it was too late for the manifesto to satisfy the people. Labor is the most prominent factor in the present revolution. Prince Kropotkin says of the present trouble: "The years of disturbance will pass, and Russia will come out of them a new nation; a nation owning an unfathomed wealth of natural resources, and capable of utilizing them; ready to seek the ways for utilizing them in the best interest of all; a nation averse to bloodshed, averse to war, and ready to march toward the higher goals of progress."

Fighting at Moscow and St. Petersburg.

From the latest dispatches as we go to press, it would seem that Christmas day and the angel song of "peace on earth and good-will among men," was forgotten in Russia. One of the dispatches reports a battle at Moscow December 25, in which five thousand were killed and fourteen thousand wounded. The fighting continued throughout Monday. The people are terror-stricken and are hiding in stables and cellars, and many are suffering from hunger, as the lack of provisions is already becoming manifest. A state of civil war now exists, and the outlook for the immediate present, at least, is full of violence and bloodshed. At St. Petersburg fighting also took place, and sixty-four were wounded and eight killed. At Moscow it is stated that the fighting assumed the nature of a butchery by the machine-guns of the artillery, grape and canister being employed mercilessly against the ill-armed insurgents. Drunkenness among the Cossacks added to the terrors of the situation.

Life Insurance and State Rights.

There are indications that the legislation proposed and to be proposed in Congress to regulate life insurance and put an end to abuses which have been revealed during recent investigations, will revive once more the discussion of the old question of State rights. The minority party in Congress, it is reported, is likely to oppose any bill that would place life insurance under Federal control. Given the right to control life insurance, it is claimed, the government could extend its power over other industries and thus eventually obliterate the line between State and Federal control. It is believed that the revival of this question will make it difficult to pass the proposed bill on this subject. It is not at all probable that this government will ever absorb the proper function of the state governments. There are some kinds of business, however, which by common consent belong properly to the control of the national government, such as the currency, the post office department, etc. The proper question, to be decided by the facts in each case, is whether any particular industry extending itself through several states, can be properly controlled by state legislation. If so, that would seem to be the simplest and most natural method of control. Do the railroads and the life insurance companies, because of the interstate character of their business, constitute an exception to ordinary industries, so that we must look to the national government for the necessary legislation to prevent abuses which now exist? To affirm this would not be a denial of the doctrine of state rights, but only an assertion of the necessary limitation of such doctrine.

Gov. Folk and Civil Service.

Since the recent escape of some of the convicts from the Missouri penitentiary and the killing of one of the guards, Gov. Folk has been seeking to ascertain where the responsibility lies for this unpleasant episode. At last he seems to have laid the responsibility on the Board of Prison Inspectors, and he has enjoined upon them the duty of establishing a system of civil service examination for applicants for positions at the penitentiary. The Board of Prison Inspectors has replied to Gov. Folk's letter, claiming that they cannot be held responsible for the management of the penitentiary, unless they are to have something to say in the appointments which, they claim, was denied them at the beginning of Gov. Folk's administration. In their reply the Board says:

> "We did, with your approval, prepare a form of civil service examination for applicants for appointment, but while the warden may have observed this in form, he has so far disregarded it in substance that over one-half of the guards appointed have had no experience in the handling of prisoners or the apprehension of criminals, and of the twenty-six men who, according to the testimony of the deputy warden, the assistant deputy warden and the yardmaster, are incompetent, over one-half have been appointed during your administration. If this does not indicate that the patronage of the penitentiary has been used to pay political debts, then the warden has been very unfortunate in the selection of his appointees."

The board thus places back the responsibility for any inefficiency in the management of the penitentiary on the state administration, and it remains for the Governor to point out, not in word only, but in deed, that his action is controlled, not by political considerations chiefly, but by the desire to secure men who will best serve the public interests. The Governor's friends will not readily believe that he will prove false to a principle of official action which he has so often advocated.

Export Trade with China and Japan.

According to the Bureau of Statistics no feature of the export trade of the United States in 1905 has shown a larger growth than that of the trade with China and Japan. In the ten months ending with October exports to China are more than $50,000,000 in value, against $20,000,000 in the same months of 1904 and $13,000,000 in the corresponding months of 1903; and those to Japan are $46,500,000, against a little less than $22,000,000 in 1904 and $16,000,000 in the corresponding months of 1903. Thus, in the case of Japan exports have more than doubled as compared with 1904 and practically trebled as compared with 1903, while in the case of China exports are two and one-half times as much as in 1904, and have practically quadrupled since 1903. No other countries of the world to which our exports are sent show gains approximating those of China and Japan. To Cuba there is an increase of approximately 40 per cent and to Argentina about 33 per cent, but China and Japan are the only countries in the long list of those to which our exports are sent which show a gain of 100 per cent or more. Should the rate of growth continue until the close of the year, total exports from the United States to Japan in the calendar year will be practically ten times as much as a decade ago, in 1895, and those to China fourteen times as much as in 1895. This upward movement in the figures of exports to China and Japan began to be apparent in 1904, the exports to China from the United States in that year being practically $28,000,000, against $15,0000,000 in the immediately preceding year, and those to Japan $31,500,000, against a little less than $21,000,000 in the immediately preceding year, but the growth in each case in 1905 has been even more striking than that of 1904.

The President and the Post Offices.

President Roosevelt has stirred some of the Republican Congressmen to the fighting point by declining to honor their requisition for the appointment of postmasters in their respective districts. It is customary for the recommendations of Congressmen to be accepted in filling presidential post offices, and the distribution of these favors has played no small part in the maintenance of their political organizations. A Congressman with no patronage wherewith to reward his faithful friends is a poor creature indeed. The President, with characteristic heartlessness, takes less account of this fact than of the desirability of having capable men in public office. Some of the disappointed Congressmen threaten reprisals. They show signs of opposing all legislation desired by the President until he capitulates. They can scarcely be foolish enough to carry this threat into execution, for public opinion is against them on this point and in favor of appointments based on no consideration of past and future political services. As a matter of fact, however, the President ought to be able to rely on the Congressmen for honest advice as to the best men for appointment in their respective districts. Even under civil service rules the appointive offices are too many for any man to fill on his own responsibility. It would help to a solution of the difficulty if we would hold the Congressmen responsible for their recommendations as rigidly as we hold the President responsible for his appointments.

A Christmas Greeting.

Admiral Dewey flashed this message to the U. S. Navy around the world on Christmas morning: "My Christmas greetings to the officers and men of the navy. Let us have neither cliques nor grudges, but all stand together for the good of the country and the service." Pass it along to the army. Let Congress accept the message as equally appropriate. Indeed we would pass the Christmas greeting along to the church universal. "Let us have neither cliques nor grudges, but all stand together for the good of the country and of the service"—for the advancement of the kingdom of God. The time past suffices to have wrought the will of our great Adversary in mutual recriminations and misrepresentations. Let us henceforth make common cause against common enemies, closing up our divided ranks that we may present a united front to the opposing forces. We are sure that the Great Head of the church is sending out his Christmas message to his erstwhile divided members: "Let us have no schisms or sects, no enmities and strifes, but all stand together for the glory of God and the good of men."

The Price of Sport.

Since the reformation or abolition of football has become a national issue, and the discussion of it is raging almost as fiercely as the game itself was raging a month ago, perhaps the following Kiplingesque contribution (for which the "Indianapolis News" is responsible) may be worth the space it takes:

A SONG OF THE UNREFORMED.

[With proper respect for the Admiralty.]

We have gridirons fed for several years,
  And they call us wanting more,
Though there's hardly a yard of all the field
  But that is stained with gore.
We have given our brawn to the game long drawn,
  To the 'rah and the root and the pull.
If this be the price of college sports,
  Great Scott, we ha' paid in full!

There's never a yell from the bleachers now
  But tells of a bloody down;
There's never a roar from the grandstand now
  But marks some caved-in crown—
But slinks our maimed on the marked-off ground
  From the side lines to the goal.
If this be the price of college sports,
If this be the price of college sports,
Great Scott, we ha' paid it whole!

We have paid the price of the bloody tale,
  For that's been our doom and pride,
Chalked up by Harvard, Princeton, Yale
  And the rest in the country wide.
We have watched the surgeon's knife and splints,
  With the evening lights aflare—
If this be the price of college sports,
If this be the price of college sports,
If this be the price of college sports,
  Great Scott, we ha' bought 'em fair!

Conditions in the Congo State.

The Dublin (Ireland) "Daily Press," in a recent issue says: "No one can deny that the whole system of Congo administration is bad; how really bad and abominable it is the British public has only a faint idea. It is true that quite recently a Commission was appointed by King Leopold to inquire into the administration of the Congo. But, unfortunately, the only version of its report hitherto supplied to the British public was the summarized one sent out by a mysterious body calling itself the West African Missionary Association. Very grave doubts were felt as to whether this summarized version was accurate or whether it was really a whitewashing report; and these doubts were accentuated when it was found that a member of the committee living in Dublin, when interviewed by a representative of the 'Daily Express' admitted that he knew nothing of the administration or objects of the West African Missionary Association. But even the report issued by that body sufficed to show that grievous cruelties and abuses existed; a further summary, issued by the British Congo Reform Association, shows that these abuses are part of a system, callous and barbarous, before which the mind recoils with horror."

Exit, the Old Year!

The year is old. In a little while it will have taken its everlasting exit. Like all its predecessors it has run its brief race and will soon be buried in the gulf of the irrevocable past. In this it symbolizes the life of man on the earth. Indeed, one can not well approach the close of the year without being reminded of human mortality and the brevity of life. The period calls us to meditation and to self-examination. The flight of Time has been the theme of the poet, the artist and the orator. It often suggests thoughts and feelings too deep for utterance.

One of the most solemn reflections associated with the close of the year is the reminder which it is sure to give of our unfinished work. As Time in its remorseless march pauses not for man to complete his task, so in most cases, at least, we pass from the limitations of time into the eternity beyond while our life plans and purposes are yet unfulfilled. So, at least, it seems to our human eyes. But God knows best. Besides, who knows that our work ends with this mortal life? May there not be great activities to engage our thoughts and our energies beyond the point which men call death? This would seem to be in consonance with all we know of God's dealings with us, and with the desires and aspirations which he has planted within our souls. Just as we do not expect to end our labors with the year that is soon to pass away, but are already projecting our plans into the unknown future that lies before us, so we cherish the hope that with the laying down of these our mortal bodies, we shall enter upon the higher activities and into the nobler and sweeter fellowships of the life unseen and eternal.

The year now approaching its demise has been an eventful one in human history. Many great and important changes have taken place which have affected the life of nations and the map of the world. But not less significant than these outward events which have marked the history of the year, are the steady advances of those silent and unseen forces which make for the world's betterment. Within the year whose shadows are now falling about us, the vital forces to which we must look for the moral advancement of the race and for the regeneration of society, have greatly increased and have been asserting themselves in higher moral and spiritual ideals both in the State and in the Church. Beneath the outward movements of reform and spiritual advancement there are always the unseen moral forces which accumulate, under the educational processes of life, until they are ready to embody themselves in concrete outward forms.

The two chief events of the year, from our point of view, are the conclusion of war between Russia and Japan through the gracious mediation of the President of the United States, and the recent Inter-Church Conference in New York City of all the great Protestant bodies. The one was a triumph of peace in the realm of international politics, and the other marks a triumph of peace and unity among the aggressive religious forces of the nation. Neither of these was a final consummation, for war between nations is not yet an impossibility, and perfect unity has not yet been attained within the Church; but both are steps in the right direction. As a religious journal The Christian-Evangelist will give its influence, and devote much of its space, to the furtherance of the cause of union among Christians and a more aggressive campaign against the forces of evil.

We believe the next few years to be pregnant with important events in the kingdom of God. Our own religious movement is passing through one of those crucial periods in its history which will test its quality, its power of adaptation to present conditions and needs, and which will influence, in a large measure, its future course. It is a time for deepest heart-searching, for cleansing ourselves from all false motives and ambitions, and for renewal of our devotion and fealty to those great fundamental truths which fired the hearts and controlled the lives of men who, under God, inaugurated, many a century ago, this movement for the unity of a divided church. Most of all, it is a time for renewing our allegiance to Him whose prayer for unity we are seeking to have answered. It is only as we keep in closest fellowship with Him, and are controlled by the Spirit whom He has sent to be our Guide and our Advocate, that we can accomplish the great work to which He has called us.

Thanking God for whatever grace and strength he has vouchsafed to us for the duties of the year now closing, and for whatever good may have been wrought in His name and for His cause within these columns, and thanking our increasing host of readers throughout the country and the world for their generous appreciation, and no less generous forbearance, we commit ourselves, The Christian-Evangelist, and the cause which is dearer to our heart than life, to Him whose guiding hand has led us in the past, and who, we are sure, will not forsake us in the years to come.

"A Simple Truism."

The "Christian Standard," commenting on the co-operation of our churches in the union movement proposed by the recent Inter-Church Conference, says:

> "It is a simple truism to say that only bodies who recognize each other's legitimacy may enter into a federation compact. The Protestant denominations may federate because they mutually recognize each other as legitimate religious organizations, as alleged 'branches of the church,' and there is nothing therefore to hinder them entering into a federation compact. But while both the Roman Catholic and the Evangelical Protestant churches hold in common the true divinity of Christ, they can not federate, because the Roman Catholic refuses to regard the Protestant denominations as any part of the church, or as branches of the church of Christ, while all true Protestants regard Rome as an apostate church."

Now, all that our neighbor can mean by "a federation compact" is the proposed agreement of the churches to co-operate together under the Lordship and leadership of Jesus Christ, so far as they are able, in the accomplishment of those objects which can be better accomplished by united action than otherwise. The editor's "simple truism," then, is, that only those bodies which can fully endorse each other's plan of organization, can enter into such an agreement, and co-operate together for the glory of God and the good of men. What sort of a "truism" is this? Where did the editor get it? Not from the Bible, we are sure. Least of all did he get it from him who prayed, "That they all may be one," knowing as he did that there must ever be differences of opinion about a hundred things connected with the nature and the ongoing of his kingdom.

Brother Lord is mistaken in supposing that the religious bodies represented in that Conference propose to co-operate with each other "because they mutually recognize each other as legitimate religious organizations." They may or may not endorse each other's method of organization, but such endorsement, if it exists, is not the basis of their co-operation, but, as the preamble clearly states, the ground of their co-operation is their oneness in Christ Jesus, our divine Lord. The Roman Catholic Church can not enter into this Federation, as the "Standard" correctly explains, because it "refuses to regard the Protestant denominations as any part of the church, or as branches of the church of Christ, while all true Protestants regard Rome as an apostate church." Are we to understand, then, that the "Christian Standard" would have the churches of this Reformation place themselves in the same attitude toward these evangelical Protestant religious bodies as the Roman Catholic Church holds? That can not be. The "Standard" puts it this way:

> "The contention of the disciples of Christ in the Restoration movement is that while a host of people in the denominations are Christians, the denominational organizations themselves are not churches of Christ or branches of the church of Christ. These disciples believe denominationalism to be utterly condemned as carnal by the word of God. This being the case, these brethren, as churches of Christ, could not federate with denominational churches without surrendering a most distinctive principle of their plea."

But why compare the denominational organizations with our local churches? We have some national organizations that are neither "churches of Christ or branches of the church of Christ." Are there not local Churches of Christ, within these various Protestant organizations, that deserve that name quite as much as many of the local churches which are listed as churches of Christ among us? Some of the Protestant bodies, it is true, have their local churches so organized into a collective body as to designate the entire group as a Church, for instance, the Presbyterian Church, the Lutheran Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, etc.; but still others hold to the congregational form of government, just as we do, and speak of their churches as Baptist churches, or Congregational churches, or Free Baptist churches, etc. It is not necessary, however, that those of us who hold to the congregational form of government should endorse the legitimacy or scripturalness of these denominational organizations, or that they be required to endorse our theory of congregationalism. The question of organization does not figure in the proposed basis. The only question is, are the people that make up these several religious bodies Christian in their faith and character? If so, they are "Christian bodies," as they are designated in the proposed basis of federation. Not to recognize the Christian faith and character and works of the people who make up these great evangelical Protestant bodies, and to refuse to co-operate with them, because we do not approve their methods of denominational organization, would be a species of religious bigotry absolutely intolerable in this century, and for which the Editor of the "Christian Standard" could have no sympathy. Instead of its being true that we of this Reformation "can not federate with denominational churches without surrendering a most distinctive principle of our plea," we are compelled, by the very principles we hold, to recognize the unity which now exists among Protestants, and to give it visible expression, by co-operating, as far as possible, with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ and acknowledge his supreme Lordship, in furthering the interests of his kingdom.

The issue is very clearly drawn. We are either to stand aloof as Amalekites, waging warfare against our Protestant brethren, and having no part in the great union movement that is now setting in, and to which we have helped to give impetus, thereby inevitably degenerating into a sect while ostensibly fighting sectarianism, or we are to lift high the banner of Christian union for which we have always contended, and enter fully into every movement for the unification of the churches, seeking to guide it along Scriptural lines, teaching others what the Lord has taught us about Christian unity, without compromising an essential truth or principle, and learning from others what the Lord may have taught them, that we have not yet learned, and so fulfilling our divine mission as unifiers of the body of Christ. Is it a matter of doubt which one of these two courses we shall pursue? We can not for a moment believe it. He who has directed our course in the past, will lead us still aright, and guide us, as we believe, by his gracious Spirit, into an enlarging and victorious future.

A Brief Forecast.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, now closing its forty-second volume and about to enter upon its forty-third, submits its past as the best evidence of what it is to be the coming year. Experience has taught us not to make a very definite and complete outline for a year ahead. The world moves too fast for that, if a paper is to adapt itself to current issues and tendencies. It will be our aim to furnish the best thought on the most important topics of current and of perennial interest, and to give the latest news of what is going on that is worth while.

Beginning with our next issue the Editor will contribute an editorial serial on the history of Christian union, dealing with the subject from the apostolic age to the present time, which may run several months. It is believed that the present time calls for a re-study of this subject in the light of the New Testament and of church history. There are not wanting evidences that many among us have lost the spirit of the fathers, and have departed from the breadth and catholicity of their teaching. The interest on this subject is now so wide-spread among all Christians that the time seems propitious for an irenic statement that will contribute something to a clearer understanding of what Christian union is and what it involves, among the various bodies of Protestants, now entering into a closer co-operation with each other.

We bespeak the co-operation of our ministers and others in bringing this discussion to the attention of a large number of ministers in other religious bodies. An arrangement for an exchange of church papers between ministers living in the same town or community would be productive of great good in breaking down prejudices and in bringing about a better understanding of each other.

Notes and Comments.

Referring to the status of the members of our own churches who were present and participated in the Inter-Church Conference in New York City, and quoting from the "Interior" the statement that "the actual distinction of the Federation Conference from all such predecessors was in the official appointment of its delegates," the "Christian Standard" says:

> "Then, we are at a loss to understand how these brethren became 'official' delegates and some of them members of the Executive Council, while the Episcopalians present remained simply visitors and were not regarded as 'official' representatives of their church. Evidently somebody, through misguided zeal, has attempted to put the people whom the federation management designate as the 'Disciples of Christ' in a false position. Will not the brethren who have written in our columns approvingly of the meeting tell us how they came to be regarded as 'official' delegates of the churches of Christ, and explain the seeming partiality operating in their favor and against the Episcopalians? It is due their brethren and due their fellow members of the Federation Conference that this matter be set forth in its true light. We are sure that they will disavow being 'official' delegates for those disciples of Christ who plead for the restoration of the Christianity of the New Testament."

Now, if the Editor of the "Christian Standard" had only been a careful reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST he could have had this mystery cleared up before the conference assembled. In answer to an inquiry coming from Texas the explanation which the "Standard" asks for was given in our issue of November 16, in an editorial entitled, "Who? When? and What?" We refer the editor to that editorial for a complete explanation of the status of these brethren. From the reading of that editorial he will see that his conclusion that "evidently somebody, through misguided zeal, has attempted to put the people whom the federation management designate as the 'Disciples of Christ' in a false position," is a mistaken one as well as an uncharitable one. It was there explained that no convention had appointed these brethren, but that the Executive Committee of the federation movement which called the Inter-Church Conference, invited a number of our well-known brethren to be present and participate in the conference, representing the people whom they designate, and whom Alexander Campbell designated, and whom most of us designate, as the Disciples of Christ, or Christian churches.

This courteous invitation was no doubt based on the fact that our national convention at Omaha had passed a resolution favoring the principle of federation, or co-operation among Christian bodies, as far as possible, as a means of promoting that unity for which our Lord prayed. The Executive Committee would have been almost justified, in the absence of any such resolution, however, in taking for granted that a Christian union movement like ours would not withhold its endorsement and co-operation from any movement that looks toward the unification of the divided forces of Christendom. The managers of this conference were not in any way "deceived," but understood perfectly the capacity in which these representatives were there. Nor was there the slightest discrimination against them because of the lack of any officialism in the method of their appointment. The fact is, the men who constituted that conference were far less concerned about formalities of appointment than they were about the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples.

"What a hopeless and helpless condition we are in," writes a correspondent, "if we are not to have the divine Helper in us, and with us, and for us all the time, and in greater measure, and how can we get it without prayer?" There is no mistaking the mind and temper of the great mass of the brethren on this vital subject. If men were guided more by their heart and less by their mere intellect on such a topic they would be led nearer the truth. We doubt not that every one of these brethren who has written against praying for the Holy Spirit, tramples down his own theory when he kneels in the presence of God, alone, to ask for wisdom and strength in the preaching of the word, and in bearing up under the trials and burdens of life. Thomas Munnell once wrote on this subject: "Some theories take a front seat in our sermons, but a back seat in our prayers. I have always noticed that Christians, the most ultra on the word-alone while in discussion, always imply the agency of the Spirit in their prayers." It is well that men's lives are often better than their theories and their prayers better than their sermons.

Editor's Easy Chair.

This last Easy Chair sitting for the Old Year is the time for our annual council. It will be remembered that a year ago we threw on an extra back-log, enlarged our circle, and in the glowing light of the ruddy fire, talked over the memories of the past and the hopes of the future. Since that time our circle has been increased by the admission of several thousand new members, so that we are now a great host stretching across vast states and territories, from ocean to ocean, crossing over the seas and girdling the globe. But in imagination we are all together tonight, brothers and sisters all, without a missing member. True, many of those who sat with us in council a year ago have passed on into a higher sphere; but we count even those as present with us, in spirit, sharing with us in our joys and sorrows, and interested in all that relates to human welfare and happiness. Tonight finds us all a year's march nearer home. We have one year less of temptation and trial, but we have also one year less in which to serve our Master and our fellow men. Life is simply opportunity, and it all depends on what use we make of the opportunity as to whether life shall be to us a blessing or a curse.

Not enjoyment and not sorrow,
Is our destined end and way,
But to live that each tomorrow
Finds us further than today.

If we were to ask each one of you tonight, one by one, the question, "What has been the most valuable experience in your life the past year?" what would be your answer? Face that question till you answer it for yourselves. Suppose we should ask you, "What is the chief mistake of your life during the past year?" You would not probably care to answer either of these questions for the Easy Chair or for anyone else. We care to have you answer them only to yourselves, for the answer to the first of these will be the white light marking the path of safety, and the answer to the other will be the red signal light of danger. We may profit by our mistakes as well as by our successes. A slip from the path of rectitude often renders one conscious of his weakness and leads him to fortify his character at that point. On the other hand, sometimes success or popularity, or even a moral triumph, may prove a snare to us if we allow ourselves thereby to overestimate our own strength. The spiritual pride of the Pharisees was a greater offense to Jesus than the conscious sinfulness of the outcast. If we fail we must cultivate courage; if we succeed we must cultivate humility.

* * *

What a year this 1905 has been! What political upheavals! What sad revelations of dishonest methods in politics and in business! What investigations have been carried on, uncovering to the gaze of the world selfish greed, disregard of others' rights, and dishonest methods which ignore the law of God and of man. But to see all this and not to see that, behind it all and beneath it all, is a rising moral public sentiment which is demanding better things, is to see only half the picture and to become pessimistic. The year marks substantial progress in commercial and political reform, higher ideals, greater freedom from party dominance in the face of moral issues, and a deeper purpose to make our political life in the city, state, and nation more worthy of the people who have been so signally blessed of heaven. In the religious sphere the progress has been no less marked. Indeed, so great has been the modification of old religious ideas and customs, and so rapidly have old-time prejudices and sectarian bigotry given way before the advance of light and truth, that a large part of the people are unaware of the present religious whereabouts of each other. Every coming together of the representatives of different religious bodies is a revelation of the oneness of feeling and of sentiment manifested upon questions about which they once differed so widely.

An illustration of what we have just said about the rapid movement of thought is seen, occasionally, in the work of some belated skeptic, who seizes his pen and makes a furious assault upon some musty dogmas which have long since been remanded to the theological scrap-pile! Now and then an editor of a religious journal, or a preacher set for the defense of "the faith once for all delivered to the saints," opens fire on an intrenchment that has long since been vacated by the enemy! The fact is, one must keep wide awake and watch closely present-day movements to know whether he is fighting a living or a dead foe. One of the greatest surprises, as well as one of the greatest sources of joy and satisfaction, at the late Inter-Church Conference in New York City, was the mutual discovery of how much alike were the representatives of the various religious bodies. But is not this just what we ought to expect, and is it not just what is bound to occur, if we are all headed toward Christ as our common goal? Among the characteristics of the year we would mention, therefore, the rapid growth in Christian union sentiment. It is this that is making possible union evangelistic efforts. The coming year we predict will be marked in a larger degree by these union evangelistic meetings both in cities and in towns. Our evangelists are to take a prominent part in these union meetings in the future, because Protestants have reached a degree of freedom and toleration of differences that makes this possible.

Now, we are going to make a suggestion and a request of all our Easy Chair readers. It is a very important one and we wish you to think over the matter very carefully before you say us nay. During the coming year the Sunday schools of Christendom will be largely engaged in studying the life of Christ, as it is presented in the first three Gospels. It is an opportunity not often presented for a systematic study of the life of Christ. We wish to request all our readers to enter upon that study. If it is possible for you to enter the Sunday school, and become a member or a teacher of some class, do so; if that is not practicable take up the study at home and follow the lessons in the Sunday school. All the real religious progress that is to come to this world must come through a better knowledge of Christ. If we are more united today than we were a generation ago; if we have more charity for each other, place a lower estimate upon the things which divide, and a higher estimate upon the things which unite us, it is because we have a better knowledge of Christ and have entered more deeply into his Spirit. What the whole Church universal needs today, then, to heal its divisions, its backslidings, correct its errors and send it forward, a united and conquering force, is a better knowledge of Christ and greater allegiance to his will. We can do nothing, therefore, to promote Christian union more effectively than to sit at the feet of Christ for a whole year, that we may learn his will and imbibe his Spirit.

Today the great snowflakes are coming down like so many white-winged messengers of peace from a higher sphere. They are not more numerous than the mercies of God which have crowned the year now closing. As these pure white crystals, softly falling, cover with their mantle of purity all the uncleanness and ugliness of the earth, so God's blessings, which come down unceasingly from the "Father of lights," are designed to make this earth the abode of peace and righteousness. But how have we responded to all these tokens of divine love? That is a question which comes to us as we sit by the embers of the dying year. Truly, "it is a time for memory and for tears." When memory recalls the tender way in which God has shown his love to us, in "healing all our diseases" and in "forgiving all our iniquities," and then reminds us how forgetful we have been to seek his face, and to do his will, is it any wonder that our eyes are dimmed with penitential tears? We can only say with the psalmist—

"Surely goodness and loving kindness shall follow me all the days of my life,
And I shall dwell in the house of Jehovah forever."

* * *

The clock is soon to strike the knell of the departing year. Our circle will soon be broken. Ere we separate, what word of hope and cheer can we give you? Let it be the Master's word: "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you." The world gives material wealth as its legacy. But Christ gives peace to his disciples. Have we received it? Do we fret and worry about what we shall eat and drink and wear, just like the world? Are we anxious and careworn about material things, just as if we had no legacy of peace which we can appropriate if we will? If so, let us resolve to trust our heavenly Father more and fret less. He careth for us. He loves our children better than we do. He knows what is best for us. Why should not we enter upon a life of real faith and trust? Why not accept his proffered legacy of peace—a fruit of that divine Paraclete, or Comforter, whom he sends to all who will receive him? So shall our lives be happier, sweeter, and far more effective in winning others to the love and service of Christ. . . . The clock strikes twelve! Good-bye, Old Year! A happy New Year to all our readers!

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

We have come again in the circle of the year to the time when the old angelic story of peace and good will to men is retold in all its freshness and beauty. It is always new, joyous, helpful. It always brightens the home, gladdens the children, inspires youth, lifts the cares of manhood, quickens the blood of old age. It is announced to us in the most exquisite idyl that ever fell upon mortal ears. It is the only thing that ever broke out of the stillness of heaven into the din of this world that men call Gospel, the Gospel.

A mile from Bethlehem, on a December night, a few humble shepherds are caring for their flocks. The announcement comes not to the great world at Rome, nor even to the grave ecclesiastics at Jerusalem, but to a handful of obscure laborers in an open field under the stars. Filled with wonder they say one to another: "Come, let us go unto Bethlehem and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us," and they take their way up the terraced hill, through the moonlit gardens of the little town, till they reach the village inn. From Nazareth, eighty miles away to the north, Joseph, the carpenter, had come with his wife Mary to be enrolled in the Roman census, and because of the crowded condition of the inn, amid the straw spread for the cattle, without appearance of worldly comfort or splendor, Jesus is born, the King of the Jews, the Lord of the universe. The poor shepherds make their way to the rude caravanserai and to the ruder cave or enclosure assigned to the cattle, and there they find Joseph and Mary and the Babe lying in a manger. This is the incarnation, the event which called forth the angel song, the beginning of the joy of all ages and of all peoples.

What is there in the Christmastide that should occasion rejoicing? Christ is announced as a Savior, the Savior of the world. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." For centuries the harps of heaven had sounded promise of his coming as a matter of exceeding and universal joy. It was the theme when the morning stars sang together. It was heard in Eden and among the patriarchs and breathed in the songs of prophets and in the psalms of David, and was the hope of Zion in bondage and exile and persecution and death. And this was the ground of rejoicing, that Messiah at his coming should redeem Israel. He is announced, however, as the Savior of the whole world. As Noah's flood prevailed over the tops of the mountains, so the flood of Christ's redemption was to cover the mountains of sin. "He tasted death for every man.' "He gave himself a ransom for all." "He is a propitiation for the sins of the whole world." This sweet story was to be glad tidings of great joy unto all people—"all people." Apostles were commanded to go into all the world and preach this Gospel unto every creature—"every creature." Men no longer need walk the earth with bare feet on iron spikes, or agonize under self-inflicted stripes, or chain themselves on mountain rocks, or sit as Simeon Stylites for thirty years on top of a pillar, clothed in goat skin and wearing an iron collar and holding a cross in his arms, suffering cold, heat, fever, aches and cramps, and day and night, in all weathers, rain, wind, frost, hail and sleet and snow, crying, "Mercy, Lord Jesus, mercy!" "The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth from all sin"—all sin. Shall not a Gospel like this be a source of eternal rejoicing? Shall any peace of the year be to us like the peace of Christmas, any joy of our holy religion be like the joy which fills and thrills us at the coming of this all sufficient, all prevailing Savior?

Then Christ comes as a loving, joy-giving friend. It is not simply deliverance from spiritual bondage that endears Christ to us today, but his presence with us as an elder brother, the fellowship which we have day by day with him. Not only is he a mighty Savior, a glorious Redeemer, a King of kings and Lord of lords, whom we are to adore, but he is a close and sympathizing and familiar friend whom little children do not fear, and poor and helpless and humble people may approach. He comes a babe and his first friends are shepherds. What a picture the manger furnishes of his humanity, humility, accessibility! Here is occasion for universal rejoicing. The great gift comes not to kings only, nor philosophers, nor men rolling in wealth and exalted in splendor, but poor men find him, wise men worship him, the wealth of the Orient flows to him and angels from heaven do him homage. Like the sunlight that floods alike the palace and the prisoner's cell; pours its glory upon the mountain and wave, yet gives joy to the insect and the wayside grass and touches the tiniest thing with a gladness that makes it great; so does this Savior's love come to the meanest and the lowliest. He restores the bruised reed. He revives the weakest natures beneath his smile. He lifts to his bosom in deepest tenderness the little child. Shall we not be glad then at the announcement by angels of this great Dayspring from on high?

Most of all there is joy at the Christmastime because Christ comes to reveal the existence of our heavenly home and to prepare us for it. The chief joy of the season is with loved ones in the family, in the remembrance of father and mother and brothers and sisters, in the beautiful happiness of childhood. And men who are old and gray, off on the plains or away out at sea in ships, or wandering in foreign lands, or whose old homes have long since been sold under the hammer or gone to ruin, and whose parents have lain for many years under the sod, and whose childhood days are away back in the past, at such a time are filled with thoughts of the home and touched to tears by the flood of memories that come over their spirits. But dearest of all thoughts is that of the Father's house where all shall some time gather and never more go out, where the loved ones who have kept the season with us in days gone by, and whose voices now are silent, are already safely housed, and where this same Jesus whom the angels heralded on the plains of Bethlehem shall in the great day receive his people to dwell forever with himself. Men and women are made glad and strong forever more by this knowledge.

The emperor of Constantinople became greatly offended with the saintly Bishop Chrysostom. One day, violently enraged, he said in the presence of his courtiers: "I wish I could be avenged on that bishop." Each of the courtiers gave his opinion as to what would be the most effective mode of punishing one to whom their master had such great aversion. The first said: "Banish him to such a distance that you will never see him again." The second said: "No, confiscate his property." The third exclaimed: "Throw him into prison!" The fourth asked: "Are you not master of his life as well as of his property? Why do you not get rid of him by putting him to death?" The fifth speaker shrewdly said: "You are all under a great mistake. The emperor may find a better way of punishing the bishop. If you were to send this man into exile he would take his God with him. If you confiscate his goods you rob the poor, not him. If he were thrown into a dungeon he would be all the better pleased as he would then have time and solitude for communion with his Maker. Condemning him to die would be to open the gates of heaven to him. No, if the Emperor really wishes to be avenged upon Chrysostom he must force him to commit some sin, for he is a man who fears neither exile, poverty, chains nor death, being afraid of nothing but sin." So Christ takes away all fear; fills men evermore with joy and peace that passeth understanding, and opens to us all the riches of heaven as our reward.

Is he not then indeed the light of the world? Have men not received as their Christmas present the "unspeakable gift"? Are not these glad tidings "glad tidings of great joy unto all people"? Again the Christmas season has come and gone; again the joy of his coming has filled the earth; again the angel song has thrilled the world like a great glad anthem, and shall not the principles he taught be mightier in their sway in our hearts and homes, in our society and among the nations of the earth because of the renewal of the festival? Who can realize the true secret of Christmas rejoicing and yet refuse to be a follower of this Savior or withhold from him for an hour his obedience?

An old legend says that Joseph of Arimathea established a church at Glastonbury, England, and that from his staff which he stuck in the ground there sprang up a miraculous hawthorn bush which ever afterwards blossomed on Christmas in memory of his sanctity and labors. Shoud not we as "trees of righteousness" produce at this season blossoms of praise, thanksgiving, benevolence and love?—John Gordon.

None of Us Liveth to Himself By Cephas Shelburne

"For none of us liveth to himself." This is the statement of a universal principle, the general law that binds all together. God has grouped atoms in particles, particles into worlds, worlds into systems, systems into cycles and epicycles. Astronomy states this general priciple in Keplar's three great laws of planetary movements, and in Newton's grand law of gravitation. Every particle of matter in the universe influences every other particle and is in turn influenced by every other particle.

A pebble dropped into the still lake ripples in concentric circles until it affects the whole surface and beats upon the entire shores. A sound may disturb the air surface of the globe, one little deflection of the planet earth would disturb our whole solar system, and this, every other system. So that it were possible, yea, certain, that the stepping aside of this one seemingly isolated member would disturb the whole universe of God. The same law and rule of action extends to human kind and to mental and spiritual states.

M. Renan has said that "a nation is a spiritual family, bound together by mental and spiritual ties," and states that the essential of a nation is that all her members should have many things in common. The essential rule of the early church was, "And they that believed were together, and had all things common." This should be the grand law of spiritual gravitation for the family, the state, and the church today, as much as is possible the "together and all things common."

It is possible for one act or thought, one independent course or stepping aside, to influence a whole family, neighborhood, state or nation, and disturb the entire surface of society. Even a thought unexpressed may influence another mind and direct another's course in life. This is mental telepathy—even thoughts can not live to themselves. The man of the inner life, one who like Cassius thinks much, may be far more dangerous or influential for good than the man of the outer life, the man of affairs like the great Caesar. Nothing is simple, exclusive; all is complex. Neither thought nor action, pleasure nor power, living nor dying is self-contained. It is not possible for any one to occupy a neutral or indifferent position. There can be no force in all nature, or any gift or talent of man, or any thought or act of his that is self-contained and non-communicative, that liveth to self. From the very highest attribute of God, Christ, angel, saint, to the ultimate particle of matter, do you find anything great or small shut up in itself, beginning and terminating upon self? Not a sun but pours out its light and heat—not a star but reflect it; not a flower but sheds it in fragrance or beauty; not a cloud but fringes itself with its silver and gold; not a blade of grass but throws back its color. Shall man alone of all God's creatures, on whom has been bestowed more abundantly, withhold his blessings and refuse to distribute to others? God never meant man to be selfish, religion to terminate with self. He gives that we may distribute, he concentrates upon us that we may scatter, he enlightens that we may shine, he loves that we may bestow love.

There is, there can be, no such thing as a selfish, unconsecrated Christian in God's world of bounty and of beauty There is nothing under the stars that is not intended to be like God, and fill its mission in the kingdom of heaven. The being who is always receiving, but never giving; who is always being blessed, but never distributes blessings; who is always being loved but is neved lovely—is out of place in a world of beauty and bounty, love and peace.

Do you know what makes beauty in the natural world? It is every object, grass, flowers, sky and sunset, taking up the clear, white light of the sun that is poured out in generous tides and separating it into its primary colors and reflecting them back to us—making themselves and all things beautiful. So the clear, white light of God's love is poured out in channels of his providence and grace, and we, upon whom they fall, separate them into the elements of the Christian graces and fruits of the Spirit, and throw them abundantly outside of ourselves, making the world better and happier for our having lived in it. An object is black that absorbs all the sun's light and gives back none. The Christian who is dark, not sunny and bright, simply absorbs all the good and gives nothing back, all ending with self—selfish. God never intended it so.

Just as the spider, crouched at the center of its intricate, wide-stretching and woven-together web, by its movement vibrates the whole to its uttermost extremity, "So," says Mr. Beecher, "is it with man. He stands at the center of a vast web of wide-reaching influences, and every one of these outrunning lines thrills and vibrates at his very touch and thought." And the great problem of life is how to regulate yourself amid all this intricate network of which you are the center, so as to get the most and best out of life and put the most and best into the lives of others. The art in living is how to carry yourself through this intricate network of God's weaving and ours; this seeming competition and clash, this good and evil, riches and poverty, education and ignorance, wires and traffic, trade and commerce, pleasure and pain, life and death, and at last come through it all with credit to your manhood, having kept your equilibrium, faith, and with justice and charity toward all.

If I had to say what one spirit, disposition or rule of life would carry a man safely through this complex mechanism that we call life, I would say the unselfish spirit, the altruistic, the other-self spirit. This is the spirit that will come into any crowd and leaven, reconcile, harmonize. This is the "peace, be still," spirit that brings all the strings of the complex instrument into harmony I know of no spirit that will harmonize society in all it varied dispositions so much as the unselfish, altruistic spirit; shall I say, Love? The spirit of love not only distributes joy, but thrills its own heart with joy and happiness. The spirit of love is its own blessing and happiness; its desire is to throw this element abundantly outside of itself, and become a blessing and happiness to all around it. It stops not at friend or kindred, but goes out to its enemy and foe. To live soberly righteously, honestly, justly, charitably, is to live in peace and harmony with our- environment. Any thing like envy, malice, competition, strife, hatred, temper, sin in any form, is conflicting, destructive, and breaks up the peace and harmony of things. But the opposites of these bring all into the same pitch and tone with themselves, and when struck the result is music.

> "Love takes up the harp of life
> And smites on all the chords with might,
> Smites the chord of self that, trembling,
> Passes in music out of sight."

Such a spirit is William Penn, the Quaker, as he stands with his little band of brethren, all unarmed, under the wide-spreading elm, in the "clear sweet air of Pennsylvania," making a treaty of friendship with the wild, untutored Indians, "not to wrest their lands by violence, but to obtain them by peaceful purchase." Without hostile weapons, but with good faith, good will, which provoked like spirit in the red men of the forest, they "entered the land and inhabited therein as safe as if there had been thousands of garrisons." To live in such a way that there shall proceed from your life influences for good, that comfort, cheer, instruct; that love, heal, bless; that dispel doubt and gloom, trouble and suffering, and give faith, hope, sunshine—this is the no-man liveth-to-himself spirit.

I once saw a great orchestra getting ready—tuning their instruments. There was much discord and jar, breaking of strings and unpleasant sounds. But in half an hour Theodore Thomas stood before the hundred players, and with one movement of his hand every instrument was in play and beautiful accord, like Milton's heaven's gate, "harmonious sound on golden hinges moving."

Something like this is life with its jars and discords, breaking of strings, tuning of instruments, efforts to harmonize—until in a better day and more glorious, all the strings shall be brought into sweet accord, and all in tune with the Infinite. Then shall the Master Player and Director of all stand before the redeemed and faithful, and under the moving of his spirit and word of welcome plaudit, there shall be struck the "chord of music like the sound of the Great Amen!"

My Bible is all the dearer to me, not only because it has pillowed the dying heads of my father and mother, but because it has been the sure guide of a hundred generations of Christians before them. When the boastful innovators offer me a new system of belief (which is really a congeries of unbeliefs) I say to them: "The old is better."—Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

Other "Business in Christianity"

By Flournoy Payne

The most trenchant criticism directed against the Church is one which the writer heard when he was a young Christian, and which has gathered force as the world grows more fraternal and more practical. The criticism is put in this form: "You Christians talk beautifully about love and charitable deeds, but you do not live up to your sentiments. Your charity is too spasmodic and unreliable. You have no system for helping in a practical way. After a few paltry gifts and a few sympathetic visits, you forget us. We join lodges or we take insurance and we are aided in a palpable way. Now and then a good man or woman from among you relieves the distress of the sick or poor. But upon the whole the church is too busy with its own affairs to consider us in our physical straits. For tangible, present good, the lodge seems to offer more than the church. And since the demands of the lodge upon us are heavy, and since we are unwilling to lose the benefits of the lodge, we are obliged to do less for the church—sometimes nothing at all." This feeling, tacit or expressed, has drawn from the church multitudes of people and untold volumes of strength and influence.

The aptest answer to this criticism, that I can recall, was that of a wise old Christian. He said, "You pay to the church with the same regularity, and for the same purpose, the same fees you pay to other organizations, and we can and will do the same things for you." It was well enough to say this; but in the church, there has been no provision for the reception and use of such funds so that benefits might be returned to the individual in his hour of distress. No church has provided a plan for insurance of its members against the time of sickness and poverty. Other Christian organizations may be called in to bring relief, but the church gained little influence from this indirect method. Few churches have an adequate charity fund; and even when they have, only those families reduced to extremity or loss of self-respect receive aid from it.

To E. F. Harris, of Longmont, Colorado, a modest preacher, well known and much loved in the centennial state, belongs the honor of formulating a complete plan by which the church through a special organization may become the channel of the specified temporal blessings, in addition to all its benefits spiritual and eternal. Brother Harris calls this organization, "The Society of Applied Christianity." The plan is copyrighted. The national society is incorporated. Leading preachers of Colorado, from the stronger denominations, as well as from among our own people, have examined into the merits of this plan, and have consented to become national officers. B. O. Aylesworth, president of the State Agricultural College, and the executive board of the Colorado Christian Missionary Society are giving countenance and encouragement to the movement. The oldest local society is but a few months old, but it has already done some notable work of a benevolent character, such as few churches have undertaken in the past, and such as would add immeasurably to their influence over the masses if they would do it.

For an idea of this society, fancy a lodge minus its secrecy, minus paraphernalia, plus a disctinctively Christian management and Christian purpose. Sick benefits, funeral benefits, and benevolences are the features of the society. Dues are about equal to those in the average lodge where similar ends are obtained. From the failure to have paraphernalia, expensive banquets, special halls, salaried officers, etc., savings accrue over and above the amount necessary to pay the benefits bargained for. This surplus is devoted to charity. Five cents each three months from the dues of each member go to the national orphanage work of the church. A like amount is given to ministerial relief, local beneficences are administered out of a fund still remaining in the local treasury. A careful distribution of all money into appropriate funds and its protection there are required. By this method, it is surprising what an amount of good can be accomplished by a society which pays no more for benefits than do the lodges, and yet it has means to aid many outside its own membership.

A local society has been recently organized in the Berkeley Christian Church, Denver, where I minister. I have written this article because I believe there are Disciples in all parts of the country who will be glad to know of the existence of such a movement as this. And there may be ministers who have been neediing just such a plan as Brother Harris has worked out. The writer believes that the church should come into a relationship to the people the most friendly and helpful possible; and that there should be no unnecessary occasions for comparisons unfavorable to the church.

Have We All Truth?

By F. M. Wiley

A brother writing of "Christian union" thinks the "denominations" have no intention of abandoning their beliefs and organizations and joining "our movement" en masse, and that "union" with these great bodies is yet in the distant future. He is probably right. The mountain does not appear to be moving toward Mahomet. That the Christian world shall ever be merged into one organization is not probable, if desirable, though federation or coalition of kindred bodies for practical purposes, may greatly promote the unity of Christians, and result in the organic union of such churches.

It seems certain that the evils alleged to have resulted from "divisions" of the church have been largely imaginary. The church has been divided since the days of the apostles. A large part of its membership has always been indifferent, if not disloyal. Its battles have been fought and won by minorities. Despite this it has made wonderful progress. If it has not converted the world it has done more than any other agency to enlighten and civilize it.

How was the church "divided"? The first great schism, that between the eastern and western churches, was from political rather than doctrinal causes, as was also the separation of the English Church from the Roman.

It is difficult to estimate how much the world owes to Martin Luther. His reformation restored Christianity, when it had been almost lost, and made liberty, religious and political, possible. Yet from it came the greatest of all "divisions" of the church. Then followed that great constructive thinker, John Calvin, so largely instrumental in holding the ground gained by Luther, by giving to the Protestants a positive system of belief. With the help of his great pupils, John Knox and Andrew Melville, who wrested Scotland from Rome, the Presbyterian Church was organized. Thus another division was made.

To these men also the world owes a great debt. In religion Calvinism tended to absolute despotism. In politics it led directly to radical democracy. Ascribing all authority to God, it left none whatever to temporal rulers. Motley says, "To the Calvinists more than to any other class of men, the political liberties of Holland, England and America are due." Hume says, "It was to the Puritans that the English owe the freedom of their constitution." Our own great historian Bancroft says, "He that will not honor the memory and respect the influence of Calvin, knows but little of the origin of American independence."

John Bunyan and Roger Williams are perhaps the best known of the early leaders of another great division, our Baptist brethren. Their origin is somewhat obscure. Their central idea has always been loyalty to the word of God as "the only and sufficient rule of faith and practice," and to the example of the primitive church in baptizing by immersion only.

John Wesley tried to reform a church which had "the form but not the power of godliness," and which had lost all influence over the common people of England. The church cast him out, but finally his movement became a success and his enthusiastic followers have carried the banner of the Cross all over the world. But again the church was "divided."

Alexander Campbell and his associates undertook to restore the simple faith and ordinances of the New Testament as the only terms of admission to the church of Christ, and the only tests of fellowship therein. While their work resulted in another division of the church it also brought great gain in the direction of simplicity and freedom of faith. They did much to discredit formal "creeds" and "confessions of faith" as of authority in spiritual things.

A study of church history will show that most divisions have been caused by these great revivals and reformations carrying those who became possessed by some great idea or emotion up to some higher ground, and leaving behind the indifferent and conservative who always cling to the old forms and traditions. The new wine has broken the old bottles, the new cloth parted from the old garment. And this process has been vital to the life and growth not only of Christianity, but of civilization as well.

None of the leaders of these great reformations intended to divide the church with which he was connected. Their aim was to recover and apply the principles of Christian life announced by the Christ, and the doctrines taught by his Apostles.

Who, outside the Roman church, regrets these reformations and "divisions"? Where would the church be to-day if they had never occurred?

What the ultimate form of Christianity shall be does not yet appear. That great changes will occur, as the centuries pass, can hardly be doubted. Perhaps most of these organisms will, in time, be eliminated. That they once accomplished the purpose of God is no valid reason for their continued existence.

That "our movement" is to be the last forward march of the Christian army, or that we have set up the sheaf to which all the others shall make obeisance, is very improbable. We have not discovered all truths. We have not spoken the final word. Certainly, in many things, Mahomet might go far toward the mountain and yet be on holy ground.

Joint Meeting of the Committees on Union Between Free Baptists and Disciples

By R. MOFFETT, Secretary

The two committees of Free Baptists and Disciples to consider the matter of union between the two religious bodies, met at the First Free Baptist Church in Brooklyn, N. Y., at 7:30 p. m. Thursday, Nov. 14, and continued their sessions in the forenoon and afternoon of Nov. 15, and for one hour in the afternoon of Nov. 16. There were present, on the part of the Free Baptists: A. W. Anthony, H. M. Ford, George H. Ball, J. W. Mauck, L. M. Webb, Z. A. Space, G. F. Mosher, R. D. Lord, Thomas Stacy, and E. W. Van Akin. On the part of the Disciples: Regular members, S. H. Bartlett, J. M. Van Horn, R. Moffett, M. E. Harlan; as proxies for absent members, J. H. Garrison, F. D. Power, M. L. Bates, B. F. Ferrall, J. P. Lichtenberger, S. T. Willis, C. C. Rowlison, W. T. Moore; as invited guests, H. L. Willett, C. A. Young, M. L. Streator and Dr. E. A. Long. Several of these were delegates to the Inter-Church Conference held in New York the same week. After a brief season of prayer S. H. Bartlett was chosen to preside over the joint meeting, and H. M. Ford as secretary.

R. Moffett, secretary of the Disciples' committee, presented a brief statement recognizing:

1. The limitations binding the Free Baptist committee, viz.: That no final action on the subject of union can be taken except by their general conference—their denominational and incorporate head—the next appointed meeting in the fall of 1907; that no overture for union could be considered that did not include the entire denomination, and that did not conserve all legal and moral obligations entered into by the general conference.

2. That the Disciples, as a religious body, were not incorporate, and probably never would be—that their local churches were incorporate, as also their colleges, benevolent associations and missionary organizations—that the only incorporate body represented by the Disciples' committee was the American Christian Missionary Society, constituted in such manner as by general consent enabled them to speak for the Disciples as a whole; that the Disciples had their origin in a desire for union of the Lord's people by a return to the church of Christ as planted and trained by the apostles of our Lord; that this religious body, now numbering over a million in the United States, came into this fellowship by a full and hearty confession of faith in "Jesus as the Christ the Son of the living God"; that this proposition carried with it all other important Bible truth, and that as a people they were as closely united in doctrine and practice as any other religious body. The statement closed asking the joint meeting to discuss three questions:

1. Is union between the Free Baptists and Disciples practicable at the present time?
2. What are the obstacles to such union?
3. How may these obstacles be removed?

The joint meeting accepted these questions as covering the ground to be canvassed. The president announced that these questions were open to discussion. Dr. Ball said he thought the greatest obstacle to union was the fact that the two religious bodies knew so little about each other. This remark led to many suggestions, by different members, as to how such a condition might be changed—by interchange of pulpits, union conventions, and by tracts and by other literature. Dr. Anthony suggested that in order to the fullest acquaintance, the Free Baptists, and especially their committee, must know, 1. The doctrine of the Disciples. 2. Their polity. 3. Their genius and spirit. 4. Their organization. 5. The legal aspects of these organizations.

It was suggested that all these elements can readily be furnished by published literature. After much discussion it was finally agreed that a committee to consider each of these elements be formed and report after a recess of 15 minutes. It was evidently too great a task to perform in so short a time. At a subsequent meeting it was agreed that these committees should report at the next joint meeting. No time or place was set for this joint meeting. We hope it may be in connection with the general convention in Buffalo next October.

The committees formed were, viz.: On Doctrine—Garrison, Ball and Moffett. On Polity—Space, Lord, Power, Bates, Ferrall and Harlan. On Genius and Spirit—Van Horn, Lichtenberger, Ford, Stacy and Bartlett. On Organization—Mohorter, Mauck, Van Akin, Rowlison, Moore and Willett. On Legal Aspects—Streator, Willis, Anthony and Young.

It was agreed that regular members of the committees might be substituted for proxies, if thought desirable and that the several committees might gain the necessary facts for their several reports by correspondence.

This meeting was held in a true, fraternal spirit and with a desire to effect the best results. The pastor of the Free Baptist Church complained that they had not received ample notice so that they could prepare for the fullest and best entertainment. But the ladies of the church spread for us a splendid meal the second day, and the banquet at the Cumberland Hotel on Thursday was all that could be desired to add to our already brotherly fellowship.

Since the above was written the following letter from Dr. Ball is of interest:

"The result of our meeting with the Committee of Twelve appointed by the Baptists was a great surprise. We found them more than ready to declare for perfect liberty, in each local church, to regulate the matter of communion, and all other local affairs. They also freely express a wish for a conference with your Committee of Twelve on the question of union, and express the hope that the Disciples and Baptists might speedily become one body. This entirely changes the order we have been pursuing. Our hope and expectation has been that the first union effected would be between the Disciples and the Free Baptists, but now it appears that the first union will be with the Baptists and then with the Disciples. Since our meeting in Brooklyn I have seen several leading Baptist ministers not on the Committee of Twelve, and they ardently desire that this consummation should be speedily reached.

"The Baptists will act on the basis unanimously adopted at Brooklyn next May at their general convention in Philadelphia. My hope is that an extra session of our general conference will be called immediately after their May meeting in case the basis is adopted. The indications are that our general conference will adopt the basis at once. If it does, the united body of Baptists will be in good shape to negotiate with your Committee of Twelve. If you should confer with their committee before the May meeting it might be useful."

We sought an interview with the Baptist Committee of Twelve, but it was agreed that neither of the two committees, could possibly remain in New York to a suitable day, largely because so many were delegates to the Inter-Church Conference, and could not give the matter close attention. The meeting of the Baptists' Committee, and the Free Baptist Committee was held more than a week later than the one chronicled here. If Dr. Ball has correctly represented the facts, it would seem that the union of Disciples and Free Baptists will not be further considered until all the possible facts referred to by Dr. Ball shall have been determined. Dr. Ball was the first promoter of this last movement for union more than a year ago. It will not be possible to proceed with any certainty to realization in the near future without his voice.

[The union of Baptists and Free Baptists, if it shall be accomplished, would certainly open the way for the union of Baptists and Disciples of Christ. Every step in the direction of union makes a further step easier. There will come such a blessing to those seeking to fulfill the desire of Christ's heart, that they will wish to go as far as the New Testament will permit, in securing uch union.—EDITOR.]

Our Budget.

—Good-bye, 1905! Welcome, 1906!

—The King is dead! Long live the King!

—What is written is written and no power in heaven or on earth can unwrite it.

—God can forgive, but he can not undo what is done. His grace will enable us to write more nobly on the white pages of the New Year.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST extends its greetings and wishes for a happy New Year to all its readers and to all its contemporaries and wishes them the greatest prosperity.

—H. H. Peters, minister at Rossville, Ill., writes that Dr. Frank G. Tyrreli, of Chicago, delivered a series of sciolological lectures in the Christian church last week, much to the delight of the community.

—J. F. Rosborough, minister at Centralia, Ill., writes that his sainted mother, Mrs. B. M. Rosborough, went to her eternal home on the 15th inst., aged 85 years, having been a follower of the Master about seventy years. Eight of her children survive her. Brother Rosborough adds: "Mother did much for her children's faith."

—Dr. B. B. Tyler, of Denver, is to dedicate a new church at Sterling, Col., December 31. J. K. Hester, the minister, writes: "We have done things in this good county seat of Logan." The property will cost about $2,400. The church there contains some of the most influential people in the county.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

BETHANY, MO., Dec. 25.—Closed 27 days' meeting with 132 additions; 117 adults; 88 baptisms. Reached 34 new families. Church greatly strengthened.—R. H. FIFE, evangelist.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

VERSAILLES, ILL., Dec. 23.—One hundred and fourteen additions; 100 adults.—G. H. BASSETT, pastor; A. P. COBB, evangelist.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

HARRODSBURG, KY., Dec. 24.—Closed Thursday night with 141 additions; best meeting in the history of the church.—M. G. BUCKNER.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

DECATUR, ILL., Dec. 24.—Fifty-eight to date. We continue.—THOMPSON AND KENDALL.

—L. L. Carpenter will dedicate at Plainville, Kan., December 31.

—Rutland, Ill., has increased the salary of its preacher.

—A new church has been dedicated at Fate Texas, and all indebtedness raised.

—A. L. Chapman seems to be doing great things for his new charge at Seattle, Wash.

—Geo. A. Campbell, of Chicago, has been lecturing before the Missouri State University.

—R. N. Simpson has begun his work with the Chestnut Street Church, Lexington, Ky.

—Extensive repairs and additions to the church building at Bryan, Texas, are contemplated.

—J. H. Beard, of Buckland, has entered upon the pastorate of the First Church, Marion, Ohio.

—Lewis F. Fisher has accepted a unanimous call to remain with the Mt. Olivet church near Clarence, Ill., for another year.

—H. E. Luck, who has for some time been located in Dallas, Texas, is giving his attention to lecture work, having a series on "The Founding of Christianity," which he is giving with good effect, as opportunity presents.

—H. G. Hill delivered his sermon-lecture, "Unused Power," at the Springfield, Ohio, Y. M. C. A., December 17. This is his second call to this place in three months.

—The Church Avenue Church of Christ, Roanoke, Va., is now practically out of debt and has a bright outlook before it. To W. G. Johnson, its pastor, much credit is due.

—The C. E. Society of the Central Christian Church, San Antonio, has just been reorganized. It is hoped by this church that the services of Homer T. Wilson may be retained next year.

—The church at Columbus, Ind., of which W. H. Book is minister, will soon establish a mission in the northeastern part of the city, a lot having been donated for that purpose by Joseph I. Irwin.

—A. S. Morrison, of Indiana, filled the pulpit of the Central Church, San Antonio, Texas, for several Sundays. Last Lord's day Homer T. Wilson was back and delivered a Christmas sermon.

—The Clarion Bugle, of Snohomish, Wash., volume 1, number 1, reprints for its leading article a contribution from THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which it credits, at the close, to "Christian-Evangelist, Columbia, Missouri." What is fame!

—A great amount of evangelistic news has reached the office Tuesday, as we are closing up the paper, which we are compelled to omit until next issue. We beg our readers and contributors to be patient with us, as our columns are unprecedentedly crowded.

—The "H," St. Church, Washington, D. C., has called A. E. Zeigler, who was the former minister of the First Church, Wheeling, W. Va., to supply for them indefinitely. Brother Zeigler is with the Millsaps Mfg. Co., of that city, and practically gives his services to the church on Sundays.

—Paul Moore, our assistant editor, has been prolonging his visit in Texas since the lectureship and spent Christmas with his brother, Landon, at Greenville, but is expected home this week. His report of the Texas lectureship has been received, but too late for publication in this week's paper.

—Harry Grannison Hill recently gave popular lectures in Sumner, Louisville and De Land, Ill. He also lectured at Forest Grove, Mich., Hebron, Ind., and Greenfield Ind. The people of De Land have invited him to return in February and lecture for a week, eighteen of his former audience providing the expenses of the series.

—George Darsie, Akron, Ohio, writes: "I have been in Akron about three months now, and the work seems to be opening up well. Have had 72 additions to the church—54 by confession and baptism, 18 by letter or statement. Every department seems to be doing well. It is a large church, and the calls are many and varied."

—Mrs. N. E. Atkinson, National President of the C. W. B. M., spoke for the Auxiliary of the Central Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, on a recent Sunday evening on "Our Responsibilities." Profound attention was given the address by the large congregation present and the auxiliary was greatly encouraged and strengthened by its results.

—We regret to learn that the home and practically all the personal effects of Ellsworth Faris and family have been completely destroyed by fire. Bro. and Sister Faris and their little child escaped in their night apparel. The loss most felt of course, is the books, papers, and African curios. The fire prevented the attendance of both the senior and junior editors of the "Christian Courier" at the lectureship, with whom in this trial much sympathy was expressed. A cheque with money value is a good expression of such sympathy.

A Bad Stomach

Lessens the usefulness and mars the happiness of life.

It's a weak stomach, a stomach that can not properly perform its functions.

Among its symptoms are distress after eating, nausea between meals, heartburn, belching, vomiting, flatulence and nervous headache.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Cures a bad stomach, indigestion and dyspepsia, and the cure is permanent.

Accept no substitute.

—Brother Warren, our Centennial secretary, reports a fine meeting of the executive committee on the 16 inst. Our well-known brother, Thomas W. Phillips, of Newcastle, was elected chairman, William H. Graham, treasurer, and O. H. Phillips, recording secretary. All contributions intended for the Centennial propaganda should be sent to secretary W. R. Warren, 205 Bissell Block, Pittsburg, Pa.

—Chicago Disciples have just tendered a banquet to W. G. Sickle and wife, who are about to remove to New York. Brother Sickle has been chairman of the Executive Board of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society and has done a great deal of the work in Evanston. He is a prominent young business man and is a son-in-law of J. H. Allen, of St. Louis, president of the Business Men's Association.

—A prominent minister writes: "It has been in my heart a long time to write and thank you for the graceful little book on The Holy Spirit which I have read with the greatest interest, profit and pleasure. From the adverse criticism it is receiving from certain quarters I am more than ever convinced that it is an up-to-date book and one thoroughly in harmony both with the spirit and the teachings of the New Testament."

—In reporting the meeting of Brother Fife at Bethany, Mo., last week the number of additions was given as eleven, whereas it should have read 118. Since then, however, the meeting has closed, as reported in a telegram elsewhere, with 132 added. Brother Fife writes that the hand of fellowship was extended to 115 at one time, and that it was the greatest scene he ever witnessed. Brother Fife returned home to celebrate his silver anniversary on Christmas day.

—Thomas Curtis Clark, who is known to our readers as a contributor of verses, has entered the field as an evangelistic singer and helper. Bro. F. G. Tyrrell, associate editor of the Christian Century, says concerning Brother Clark:

"It is a pleasure to bear witness to the ability of Thos. Curtis Clark as an evangelistic singer and helper. He is a man of superior gifts, of careful training and deep moral earnestness. I am confident that his work will prove more and more effective, and that he is destined to a career of extraordinary usefulness."

—The Christian Lesson Commentary for 1906, being the twenty-first consecutive volume, is of special value because the lessons for the entire year are in the Synoptic Gospels, following as nearly as possible the chronological order of events in the life of Jesus. Brother Dowling's long experience and study in this department of work have enabled him to prepare a most valuable volume of lessons which the teachers in our schools can not afford to be without. It is a good thing, too, to have the whole volume before you so that you may see the entire scope of the lessons for the year. We trust that the army of Sunday school teachers among us will avail themselves of the benefit of this exceedingly helpful volume.

—A correspondent writes: "I do not see how the Holy Spirit can convert and keep a poor man from the dread power of rum if the words of warning and love, of pleadings and promises, from an all-loving God can not do it." Here is a mistake that is too often made—the contrasting of the word with the Spirit, and separating them as if the Spirit of God was not in the word and truth of the gospel. Being "born again of incorruptible seed" and being "born of the Spirit" do not imply different acts or different agents. It is the same truth stated in different ways. This will help to clear up a good deal of the confusion that exists in the minds of many people about the Holy Spirit. While we can not limit the operation of the Spirit to the written word, neither can we separate the Spirit from the word.

—We learn through some corespondence which has been furnished us by Bro. A. Flower, now of Worcester, Mass., that the churches in Tampa and St. Petersburg, Fla., are prospering under the labors, respectively, of Bro. J. P. Rowlison and Brother Montgomery. The church at Tampa has gotten into its new brick chapel, which will be the Sunday school room when the main building is completed, and Brother Rowlison is loved by all and the work is prospering in his hands. Brother Montgomery is having to enlarge the seating capacity of the building at St. Petersburg to accommodate the people. Friends of Brother Flower will be interested in knowing that he is in usual health and is staying with his son-in-law and daughter—Brother and Sister Willis—at Worcester.

—C. C. Peck, minister, Arkansas City, Kan., writes: "The Disciples of Christ at Arkansas City, Kan., are rejoicing because they own their home. About seven years ago they saw their building sold for debt, and they were left homeless. It was only through the timely assistance of the Church Extention Board that they were enabled to again purchase the building. They feel grateful to the Church Extension Board because it helped the helpless and brought hope in the hour of discouragement. On the evening of December 10 the members and friends assembled to witness the burning of the old mortgage and rejoice together because they 'owe no man anything but to love one another.' The church is in good condition and the field is promising." Our hearty congratulations are extended.

—A Parkersburg, (W. Va.) paper reports that the churches of that city are talking of securing Evangelist Herbert Yeuell, who is now preaching there for the Christian church, of which Bro G. F. Assiter is pastor, to conduct a union revival service. The paper reports that "every night the capacity of the Christian church has proved inadequate to accommodate the throngs who are attracted there by Mr. Yeuell's preaching. Those who have been attending and seeking to attend are of all denominations, and there can be no doubt that there are great numbers who would be glad of the opportunity to hear." The paper reports that Brothers Assiter and Yeuell are favorable to such an arrangement, as well they might be. Such opportunities should everywhere be embraced as a means of breaking down prejudice and promoting the spirit of unity and co-operation.

—In an editorial paragraph last week we called attention to a report of the joint meeting of the committees on union of Free Baptists and Disciples, which, it was said, was to be found elsewhere; but in the final "make-up" the report was crowded out along with a great deal of other matter which had to be left over. The report will be found elsewhere in this issue—provided it is not crowded out again! Our readers have little idea of the perplexing problem that comes to us each week of what to leave out. We have editorial matter that we have been carrying in galleys for several weeks, waiting for room, and this is true of every department of the paper. We plead with our friends to write short articles and not to complain when we find it necessary either to omit an article entirely or to condense its most important thoughts into a paragraph, as we often have to do.

—It was a matter of deep regret to those of us who were present as representatives of the Disciples of Christ in the Inter-Church Conference in New York City that the Editor of the "Christian Standard" was not there to hear and see the things said and done in that great gathering, and to share with us the joy which must have thrilled his heart, as it did ours, to see what the Lord hath wrought in these days. Many of the "Standard's" friends were there, however, and some of its special correspondents, and they have reported to the paper their impressions of the meeting. The "Christian Standard" admits that they are "good and true men and would never approve anything that had the appearance (to them) of hostility to the unity which is in Christ Jesus," but still it is inclined to doubt, and thinks it probable that these men were deceived by outward appearances, and are not so well able to judge of the real character of the meeting as others who were not there. It was Sydney Smith, we believe, who said he never read a book before reviewing it lest the reading of it should bias his mind!

—A special program is being prepared for the Young People's Department of The American Christian Missionary Society, for use in the Christian Endeavor Prayer Meetings on January 28, 1906. The topic is "Home Missions in our Cities." These programs will be furnished free to all our Endeavor Societies on application to The Young People's Department of The American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O. A special effort is being made to raise $5,000 by our young people for Idaho before September 30, 1906. The offering taken on January 28 may be applied on the pledge for Idaho missions.

—J. H. Allen, president of the Business Men's Association of the Christian Church, desires to enter into correspondence with some consecrated business man who is willing for the next few years to give himself to the organization of local leagues of business men, and to the solicitation of funds in the form of donations, bequests or annuities, for the various interests of the brotherhood. The Association will give employment to such a man with proved capacity and fitness for such work. Address J. H. Allen, 104 Main Street, St. Louis, Mo. Brother Allen has been serving on the grand jury for two months, and this has delayed his efforts in completing the organization, and in raising the $5,000 to assist in the Centennial propaganda.

—In another place we publish an obituary notice by Bro. A. P. Aten of Bro. J. W. Butler, a brief mention of whose death at Fall River, Kan., we gave last week. The Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST became personally acquainted with Brother Butler in the year 1865, when he went from the army to enter Abingdon College at Abingdon, Ill., of which institution Brother Butler was then, and for many years afterward, the president. It was under his ministry at the old Abingdon church that he heard for the first time a presentation of the principles of our plea that won his intellect, his heart, and his conscience to the cause of religious reformation which we plead. Brother Butler possessed a clear, logical mind, strong convictions, and a warm, sympathetic heart. As a speaker he was not what might be called fluent, or eloquent, but he was often very earnest and convincing in his reasoning, and thoroughly Scriptural. He was a man of unimpeachable character, of good executive ability, a devoted husband, an affectionate father, an honored citizen, and a faithful friend. Many of the old students of Abingdon College, as they read this notice, will recall the old Abingdon days and the president's Bible lectures at the morning hour, and the hospitable hearth-stone of himself and his good wife, where the students were always welcome. Their only child, a son, preceded the father to the spiritual world a year or more ago. Brother Butler leaves his wife, who has walked by his side lovingly and faithfully for so long a time, to mourn his loss. We were wired to be present and preach on the occasion of our brother's death, and were exceedingly sorry that a combination of circumstances made it impossible for us to comply with the request. His old friend and former associate in the faculty, Professor Aten, now of Oklahoma City, was present and preached the funeral discourse. We lay this brief tribute on the grave of our old president, and drop a tear of sympathy for the venerable widow whom he leaves behind.

WE CAN SHOW YOU

How to do the Lord's work while having your savings in an absolutely safe investment, upon which there will be no taxes to pay, no change of securities, no personal oversight required, no cost of mortgage records or foreclosures, and upon which you will net a larger rate of interest than in any other investment. If you are a Christian and want your money to work for Christ while at the same time it supports you, write, mentioning this paper, to

A Christmas Gift.

It may not be altogether the fashion, in fact it may be clear out of style, for a man to ask for a Christmas gift, but I am willing to risk it, especially as I am not asking it for myself. What then? You know that our State Day, the first Lord's day in November, was one of the worst days in the whole year, and our collection was knocked clear out. We fear that unless extraordinary efforts be made we shall not recover our lost ground during the entire year.

This, then, is the cause of this writing. Many, very many, churches have not yet taken their offering. Why not take it now and make it the biggest ever, as a Christmas gift to State Missions? Then there are many who could make this work a personal gift. Several years ago our personal list was a great one. Why not in this emergency, in this day of great need, revive it? You can make your secretary much happier by sending a good large Christmas gift to state missions than you can by sending him one personally.

How many churches and brethren and sisters will send us a gift of good cheer?

Yours in His name,
T. A. Abbott, Cor. Sec.
Century Building, Kansas City, Mo.

Education Day.

No day in our missionary calendar is more important than the third Lord's day in January, the day set apart for the presentation of Christian Education among us as a people. It is becoming more and more apparent that to this branch of our work we must look very largely for success. We must train men and women for the mission field, for pastors and for lay workers. Nowhere can we look for such supplies if not, in the main, to our own institutions. As in every other cause among us, everything depends upon the interest taken in presenting the matter to our churches by pastors and evangelists.

In absence of any other arrangement it seems to be best that each institution should advertise the work of Christian Education in its own region and receive reports directly from the churches. We crave the united efforts of our papers to push this paramount interest. It is to be hoped that many directly interested in this important appeal—college men and others—may send a word to general, and especially local publications relating to the matter.

W. P. Alysworth,
Secretary Federation College Presidents.

Dedication at Mexico.

The church at Mexico, Mo., A. W. Kokendoffer, pastor, assisted by Bro. F. M. Rains, of Cincinnati, and the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist, dedicated their new church building on December 17, free of debt. It was an ideal day, and the throngs which attended the three services—morning, afternoon and evening—filled the house to overflowing, many people standing during the entire services. The building and lot cost about $35,000. There was an indebtedness of $12,000 remaining to be provided for, and this Brother Rains succeeded in raising without much trouble, and even beyond. The people gave with a will. The building is well designed and beautifully finished. The main auditorium will seat 600 people, and, together with the Sunday school and class rooms opening into it, will seat about 900 people. The windows are very beautiful, two of them being put in by the Senior and Junior Endeavorers, the Workers' Society and the Sunday school, and one by the C. W. B. M. in memory of Mrs. Kokendoffer. The other churches of the city assisted in the dedication, two of the ministers being present, and many of the contributions for the church debt were from members of other churches. This spirit of union was very beautiful. In the afternoon meeting congratulatory addresses were made by President J. B. Jones, of Fulton, Mo.; W. B. Taylor, a former pastor, and Brother Truex, minister of the Baptist church and president of the ministerial alliance, representing the other churches of the town. This meeting closed with an impressive communion service. At the evening service the Editor of this paper delivered the sermon to a large audience. A formal dedicatory service was conducted by Brothers Rains and Taylor. Thus a splendid building was set apart to the service of God, free of indebtedness. Brother Kokendoffer, the beloved pastor, has wrought a splendid work for the church and community, and is loved both inside and outside of the church. We are glad to print a cut of the pastor, though the photograph of the building reached us too late to prepare a picture for this week. We hope to give it next week.

A. W. KOKENDOFFER.

The church is equipped with a new pipe organ costing $2,500, which was built by Geo. Kilgen & Son, of St. Louis.

Independent Native Church.

Some years ago the Presbyterian, Cumberland Presbyterian, Southern Presbyterian, German Reformed, and Dutch Reformed missionaries working in Japan all united under the name of "Nihon Kirisuto Kyokwai" (Japanese Church of Christ). They have 172 missionaries and about 14,000 native converts. At the annual convention of the natives, held recently, it was decided to sever all official connection between the native churches and the missionaries. This is probably the first attempt in the history of modern missions to establish a native church and the movement is being carefully watched by the missionary body.

A Book for the Times.

So far as the Disciples movement is concerned, one of the most gratifying and helpful signs of the times is the increasing literary output and deepened interest on the subject of the Holy Spirit. For a long time we had little to say on the question except by way of criticism on the doctrines of others. Mysticism was ruled out of court, without any very clear conception of what it was or what it had done in the history of Christianity, and it has yet to be shown that literalism has any advantage over mysticism. If we have ever had a constructive theology, the Holy Spirit and his operations have found no place in it. If our traditional interpretation of Scripture in relation to the work of the Spirit has found anything for the Spirit to do except to inspire the Bible, the writer has not been able to find it. The Spirit indites the Word, and so constructs and reveals the plan of salvation; but he is not allowed in any way, except by the stereotyped method of word communication, to bring home to the heart of man the significance of its truth. Alexander Campbell set the pace by affirming, in his debate with N. L. Rice, that the Holy Spirit in conversion and sanctification operated only through the truth. Robert Milligan, of sainted memory, struck out the adverb only, suggesting, as he did so, that there was no authority in Scripture or elsewhere for limiting Omnipotence where Omnipotence had not limited himself. Has the Holy Spirit no other function in human redemption than the inspiration of a few men to write a book, a long time ago? Does not a deeper study of the book make it impossible for such inadequate and limiting views to be maintained? Did God retire from the world in all of the known forms of divine activity at the close of the canon of revelation, and has the Church been living all these centuries on belief in an absentee God? Are we to believe in a transcendent, but not in an immanent, God? A contemporary observed recently that the Holy Spirit was in the Church, but not in individual believers. Is this not like saying there is life in the forest but none in the trees; life in the army, but none in the soldiers? If the Holy Spirit is not in men now, he never was in them, and never will be.

The work of J. H. Garrison on "The Holy Spirit," just issued from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, is a timely contribution to a fundamental question. It is a well-written, vital, up-to-date book on the subject which it treats. It is just such a book as our people need at this stage of their spiritual evolution. It is both conservative and progressive in the best sense of these much-abused words. The work is soundly evangelical and Scriptural, and yet in line with the best modern thought on the subject. The old mechanical conceptions of inspiration and Spirit-indwelling are set aside as no longer tenable. We are glad that the traditional interpretation that confines the baptism in the Holy Spirit to the apostolic age, and limits it to two instances for temporary purposes, finds no favor with our author. The limitation of the witness of the Spirit to the revelation of the terms of salvation is very properly rejected as an inadequate explanation of Rom. 8:16. The old popular distinction between the promises of the Holy Spirit to the apostles as inspired men, and to other disciples then and now, finds considerable modification in this work. The Holy Spirit did guide the apostles into all truth essential to revelation and salvation. He did take of the things of Christ and show them to these inspired men, but has the leadership of the Spirit entirely ceased in the Church? Has God no representative presence and power in the world except the Word?

Brother Garrison has opened the way for a fresh investigation of this neglected factor of spiritual progress. He deals with such vital themes as the Tri-Personality, the Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, Function of the Spirit in Conversion, Relation of the Holy Spirit to Christians, Blessings from the Holy Spirit, Jesus and the Holy Spirit, Significance of Pentecost, Symbols and Metaphors of the Holy Spirit, Spiritual Gifts, Perfecting Holiness, Christian Union and the Holy Spirit, Perpetuity of the Spirit's Guidance. The first chapter has been criticised by those who deny the eternal Sonship, and are much frightened at trinitarian metaphysics, and the last chapter is under fire by men who shut up the Spirit within the confines of the canon of holy Scripture. The practical spiritual man, who reads for edification, and not for criticism, will peruse and linger over the fifth chapter, "Blessings from the Holy Spirit." This is the most important and useful, because it is the essence chapter of the book. Here the root and heart of the whole matter is reached. What the Holy Spirit does for the Christian, in the Christian, and through the Christian is luminously brought out in this chapter. If the book contained nothing else than this most satisfactory treatment of the illuminating and consecrating inward movements of the divine Spirit, the life of God in the soul of man, it would richly deserve to be read and re-read by every Disciple of Christ. So much depends, in the next few years, upon our people, reading and studying literature of this kind, that they may be driven back upon the great literature of life and power, the Word of God, that we have no hesitation in commending this book to their serious attention.—J. J. Haley, in "Christian Monthly."

The New Church at Canton, Ohio.

The Christian church at Canton, Ohio, which was recently dedicated, is one of the best buildings we have in the state. It has been a little over one year since ground was broken. P. H. Welsheimer went to Canton from Millersburg three years ago last January. The church then met in a very moderate house on Ninth street. There was a debt of $1,200. There were 400 members and a Sunday school of about 120. After a year this property was sold to the school board for educational purposes for $5,000. A lot in the very best part of Canton was bought for $8,000. In June of the second year of Brother Welsheimer's ministry Miss Katherine Staub of the School of Pastoral Helpers came to Canton. She has been with the work since and has been of untold service. For two years the congregation met in the Opera House, which was procured at a very low rental. Under these conditions the church has about doubled in membership and the Bible school has been pushed with much vigor till they have had an average of over 900 the past year. Z. T. Sweeney was the preacher for dedication day and asked for a collection of $8,000 to finish paying for the church. The people readily gave the sum of $8,571, to be paid within one year.

The house is of Massillon pressed brick trimmed with stone. It covers the entire lot which is 63x109 feet. The auditorium and Bible school room, with class rooms, pastor's study, choir room and an open baptistry, are on the first floor. All this part is trimmed in oak and can be thrown together, making room for 1,300 people. There are ten rooms in the basement, such as parlors, lecture room, kitchen, kindergarten, toilet and furnace rooms. These are so arranged that 500 can be seated. The basement is finished in hard pine. The entire building is heated by steam and lighted by electricity. The building, with furnishings and organ, cost $40,000 and the lot $8,000, which makes a $48,000 property. Of course there have been other churches that have been selfish enough to want Brother Welsheimer to leave Canton, but he has the right ambition, and that is to be a fixture in Canton. The church is in perfect harmony and naturally very happy. They have just closed a great meeting with Brother Welsheimer doing the preaching and P. M. Kendall doing the singing. With the great Bible school and the enthusiasm and prestige of a new building we reasonably expected a great ingathering in this meeting, and the result was more than 570 additions. We are glad to present herewith a picture of the new building and the face of Brother Welsheimer. The Ohio Disciples congratulate the brethren at Canton, one and all.

The Great Canton Meeting.

On Sunday, October 1, began, and on November 27 closed, the Canton meeting, the greatest ever held in Ohio, and in some respects the greatest ever held in the brotherhood of the Christian Church. For fifty nights and nine Lord's day mornings were services held, within which time there were additions to the church of five hundred and eighty-six.

NEW CHRISTIAN CHURCH, CANTON, OHIO.

Canton, once the home and now the resting place of all that is mortal of the great and gentle McKinley, is a beautiful city of 40,000 population, churches in number some forty, religious prejudice, intolerance indifference, just the same as in all other cities and communities. In other words, we had, and now have, about the average of people, good, bad, careless, indifferent, neglectful.

More than a year prior to its beginning, preparation therefor was commenced. The pastor and pastoral helper prepared a "Hopeful List," several hundred in number, on which they recorded the names of all persons, who they felt could be reached. This plan is continued, names being added thereto constantly. About every three months, the ladies of the church were given the names of hopeful people and new members in the church, upon whom they called; and this practice also continues. The men were also kept in constant touch with men who were hopeful. For two months prior, the prayer meetings were devoted to discussing plans and praying for the revival. The week before its beginning, three meetings were held to complete arrangements for the work.

The street cars carried banners; neat window cards with the picture of pastor and singer adorned the windows of store, offices and shops; streamers stretched across the main streets; hand cards distributed in great numbers; bulletins posted in public places; distribution of 6,000 tracts prepared by the pastor on the teachings of the First Christian Church of Canton; distribution of 3,000 tracts on baptism prepared by the pastor; daily reports in city papers on the meeting—these were some of the forms of advertising employed.

In spite of much opposition the members of all churches came; the people discussed religion everywhere and came in great numbers; listened, were convinced and obeyed. The audiences were magnificent. On Sunday evenings hundreds were turned away, and in an auditorium with a seating capacity of 1,300, as many as 1,500 found room. The attention was of the best.

There was never an invitation given without some one responding. The last night (Monday) 10 came. Never less than 1, sometimes 20 and 30, and as high as 42 came at one time. Of the 586 people, 48 were children under the age of 13. 188 males, 398 females, the number of baptisms 501; the number of Disciples received, who came from other places, 56; received from other denominations 181, of which number 29 had theretofore been immersed.

Everybody kept sweet. No one threw mud. No unkind things were said of other churches or of church members, or other people. Every one was willing to work to follow out any suggestions made, to do all possible for the success of the meeting.

Every one, old members and new members, was willing to do, and did do, a large amount of personal work. No better corps of personal workers was ever known. The new members did great things. Some members were so situated that they had great influence and exerted it in the right direction, with the result that they were enabled to bring large numbers. In a word, they all realized that in this way, and this only, could success be obtained.

Bro. P .M. Kendall and wife, of Columbus, Ind., had charge of the music. He at once organized a choir of about forty voices. Under his superb leadership, this choir did great things. They know how to sing and they sang. They were on hand at every service, faithful in all things. There was never better. Yes, and the audience sang. Brother Kendall has wonderful power in getting people to sing. The solos sung by Brother Kendall and other songs were illustrated by stereopticon views by and with the assistance of Mrs. Kendall, and the effect was marked.

Miss Catherine Staub is our pastoral helper—resourceful, gentle, tactful. From the School of Pastorial Helpers at Cincinnati, having graduted under the teaching of the gifted Harvuot, she came to us about three and one-half years ago. Her life has been, and is now, a benediction, and she has done, and is now daily doing, a great work, without which the meeting of which I am writing would not have been possible.

P. H. WELSHEIMER, CANTON, OHIO.

No unbiased person has ever come in personal contact with P. H. Welsheimer who has not felt that he was with a great man. Thirty-two years of age, a graduate of Hiram College, his first pastorate at Millersburg, Ohio, for a continuous period of five years, he came from that place to Canton four years ago next January. He is a man with a great vision, possessed of great faith and, over and above all, a born

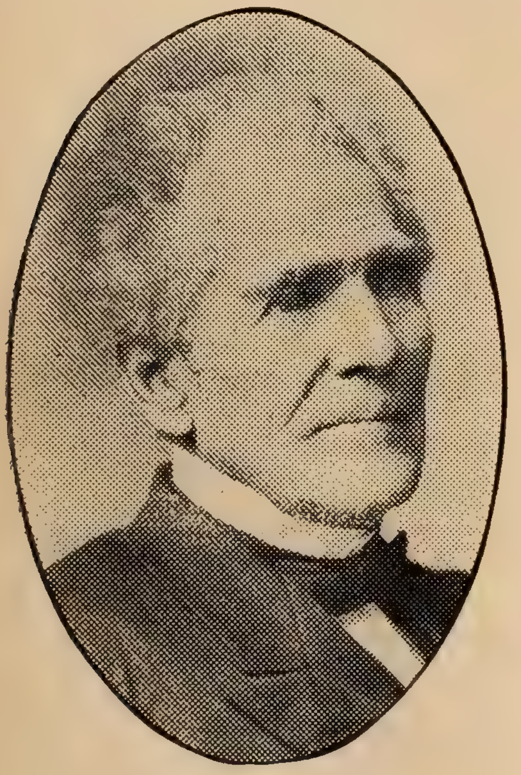
Oldest Preacher in the World

On November 22, 1905, there was celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of a most remarkable man—the Reverend John Schaeffer, of North Benton, Mahoning county, Ohio—a man whose life and deeds are altogether too little known among the Disciples of Christ. He is without doubt the oldest minister of the Gospel amongst us now living. The following sketch of his life was prepared by Bro. F M Green, a lifelong associate and friend:

"Mr. Schaeffer was born of sturdy German parents, November, 22, 1805, in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania. His parents were poor and their son was subjected to the usual privations incident to pioneer life. At the age of twenty he was placed for instruction in theology in the care of Rev. John Wagenthals, a prominent minister of the Lutheran church, a fine scholar and a gentleman, as Mr. Schaeffer describes him, in 'the true sense of that word.'

"At the end of a year, after an examination, he obtained a license to preach in the Lutheran church, though 'he was denied the right of administering the Lord's supper and a voice in the synodical and ministerial sessions.' But this was the beginning of a ministry that has lasted for eighty years and, so far as I know, he is the oldest preacher in the United States, perhaps the oldest in the world. Until 1834 he preached for the Lutheran church, but in that year he identified himself with the Disciples of Christ and is now the oldest living contemporary of Alexander Campbell. His mental equipment was of fine order and in his native tongue he was a strong preacher. He was a brother-in-law to Rev. Jonas Hartzell, one of the strong men among the Disciples in those early days, and well known to the people of Akron fifty years ago.



JOHN SCHAEFFER.

"Like many preachers in his day, Mr. Schaeffer preached without any stipulated salary. His income, such as it was, came from a little farm of thirty acres 'less than half paid for and without team or means to cultivate it.' But friends helped over the 'hard places' and his family did not suffer want.

"Mr. Schaeffer well describes the financial condition and prospect of most Disciple preachers 80 years ago in these words: 'I preached for them, but they never seemed to consider that I lived just like themselves by eating and drinking, and that my time was the only means of support. Consequently I had to 'dig.' I was not ashamed to 'dig,' but one thing I plainly discovered and felt most seriously, that my sun had forever set so far as time for suitable preparation to hold forth the word of life was concerned. One of the congregations agreed to pay me one dollar a visit every four weeks, or one-fourth my time. A certain brother and sister who always appeared to have a very high regard for me, were exceedingly hurt because Brother Schaeffer was receiving a salary for preaching. I received only thirty-seven dollars of the amount, and, unwilling to give further offense, I never asked for the balance.'

"Mr. Schaeffer has lived to see a mighty change in the respect of the renumeration of preachers among the Disciples of Christ, and to see the body of religious people with whom he identified himself grow from a hundred churches and a few thousand members in 1834 to 11,110 churches and 1,238,515 members; 8,761 Bible schools with 850,500 members, and 6,675 ministers, in 1905. These churches contributed for local work, missions, education and benevolence for the year ending September 30, 1905, the aggregate sum of $7,907,540.

"Mr. Schaeffer has lived a long and well spent life and in the serene glow of the setting sun he yet lingers surrounded with kind friends and with such comforts as his extreme age requires, amply provided for him. For one of his age he is yet strong and hearty and his mental faculties not seriously impaired. As a personal friend I would breathe this prayer for him:

"When your lessons and tasks are all ended,
  Your life work and journey are done:
May you mount to the throne of your kingdom,
  When the morning kisses the sun."

At the celebration about two hundred people sat down to a most substantial repast, prepared by the neighbors, and during the day about five hundred people called to pay their respects. Of the living children, five were present, and during the afternoon one son, Mr. Hartzell J. Shaeffer, of Bloomington, Illinois—father-in-law of the writer, read a most beautiful and eloquent tribute to his father. It was the happy privilege of the writer, together with his wife and children, to spend the Fourth of July this year with Grandfather Schaeffer and a more delightful day was never spent. We talked of the great problems in the political and religious world, and we found Father Schaeffer thoroughly posted on current events and eager to discuss them. His mind is clear, his heart warm and filled with love towards God and man. It was like a benediction to sit at his feet and hear him discourse of the early days of our great movement. It was worth the journey to look into his face. The world is all the better for the long and useful life of John Schaeffer, minister.

leader of men. His sermons during the meeting and at all times are plain, simple, practical, helpful and winning. First principles, faith, repentance and baptism, Christian living were by him emphasized in every sermon. New Testament obedience, and that alone, he constantly taught. Without excitement or noise or confusion, or demonstrations, he presents the teachings of the new Testament in a most attractive manner. Never an unkind word or criticism or suggestion came from his lips. Never a reply to abuse of others, except in a most kindly spirit. Success never turned his head and never will. He isn't built that way. Neither he nor Miss Staub is content with anything; it is always a plan for the future; some arrangements for greater things to be done.

The Christian Lesson Commentary.

For twenty-one consecutive years I have been pleased to examine and use "The Christian Lesson Commentary," by W. W. Dowling. It has been good from the first, but each year has added some new feature which has added to its usefulness. The increasing information in regard to Bible manners and customs and the better knowledge of the topography of the "land where Jesus trod" have tended to establish faith in the Biblical story, and also to remove many erroneous notions from the minds of students. This volume for 1906 is of the very best of the entire series. The lessons are clearly analyzed, and as the author lays every source of information under tribute the lessons are well illustrated and command a well sustained interest. The Christian Publishing Company has, as usual, done its part well.

Akron, Ohio. F. M. GREEN.

"The Christian Lesson Commentary" for 1906 is mechanically a beauty, while in its treatment of the year's lessons it furnishes the Bible student with a store house of information and suggestion hardly possible to surpass. It ought to meet with a quick and wide demand. J. H. HARDIN.

AN OPEN LETTER TO W. F. RICHARDSON

Dear Brother Richardson: I have read with a great deal of interest your candid and suggestive review of my book on "The Disciples of Christ" in The Christian-Evangelist of December 7. Because of the sincere respect in which I hold anything that may come from your pen, I have given the review some serious reflection, the results of which I desire to submit to you. The question you raise with respect to the propriety of narrating the story "of the bigotry and sectarian conceit that marred our noble plea" in certain periods of the history, moves me to state the considerations that governed me in the writing.

I assure you, Brother Richardson, that the story of our "bigotry and sectarian conceit" grieves me quite as much as it does you; but next to the recording, the discovery of it gave me the most pain. I debated with myself, when I sat down to write the story, whether I should construct an expurgated history that would please the Disciples and commend the movement to the outside religious world, or simply record it as I found it, and offer the best explanation in my power; whether, in other words, I should write the history as I wish it had been, or as it actually was. Conscious of the historian's province, as well as his duties, it did not take me long to decide which course I should pursue. I simply tried to tell the truth as I found it—the worst truth, with disapproval; the best truth, with commendation. I think I omitted nothing that was praiseworthy. and did not incorporate everything that was blameworthy.

Perhaps I see more than you of the "permanent effects" upon the movement of certain "vagaries" and extremes into which some of its advocates have fallen. I am perfectly persuaded in my own mind that the movement has not yet recovered from certain vargaries of the early period. What went into the movement as literalism between 1823 and 1830, came out as legalistic conservatism between 1860 and 1880, and continues to crop out in well-known regions. What went in as textual correctness and inerrancy at first, has been coming out in spots ever since as Gospel infallibility and denominational glorification.

My conception of history is that it should be our teacher. If we have made mistakes in the past in the interpretation and application of principles, we ought to know what they are that we may avoid them in the future. If we tear out of our history the page that contains our mistakes, coming generations are likely to go on repeating errors and failures. To indicate what I mean: The way we have tried to achieve Christian union in the past, and failed, is just the way not to try it again. How are we to know what has been tried with failure, if we close our eyes to those disagreeable chapters in our history?

I must frankly avow that my purpose in writing the book was not to make it the "medium of indoctrinating the religious world in our position," but rather of showing the Disciples and all people how our principles have worked in their practical application to religious conditions. I was writing a history, not an apology or a panegyric. The task of presenting the "fundamental principles involved in our plea" in the light of my personal, idealized conception of it, would be very pleasant, and may claim my attention some time. But the result would not be a history but rather an apology. Perhaps our history should not be the medium of commending our principles to the outside religious world. The history of the universal Church during the last nineteen centuries does not make the pleasantest or most convincing reading, and would not make the best tract or commentary upon the Christian religion to put into the hands of an inquiring heathen. I am interested, as you are, in making a good impression upon outsiders, but I doubt the utility of our history for that purpose.

As to my "losing admiration for the movement" as the narrative advances, I desire to testify that I am in complete sympathy with its purposes, ideals, and principles as unfolded by the most spiritually minded of our leaders; that I am proud of the material and organic achievements of the body; but that, believing as I do in the supremacy of our mission as a Christian union movement, I believe the Disciples have yet to justify their separate existence by what they may achieve on the side of Christian liberty and unity. Their achievements in the interest of either liberty or unity have not been important either inside or outside of their ranks. The value of their bigness of size will depend upon whether it can be turned to spiritual account in the moral and social betterment of the communities in which they exist, or can be thrown into the balance on the side of fraternity, unity, and cooperation wherever the opportunity is offered.

Fraternally,
Errett Gates.

University of Chicago.

REPLY.

I believe that the surest justification of my brief review and criticism of Brother Gates' history would be the reading of the volume itself. I think Brother Gates hardly appreciates my criticism. I would not have him write an "expurgated" history of the Disciples, any more than I would write an "expurgated" review of his book. I would have him treat our people with the same kind yet candid spirit that I tried to exhibit in my review. If I failed in my effort, I regret it. But my short and unimportant article will be forgotten in a few weeks, at the most, while his volume will take its place with the permanent literature of American church history. There was every reason why he should have treated his subject with that sympathetic spirit that would not antagonize those in whose name he professed to write.

My criticism does not assert the falsity of Brother Gates' statements, but their lack of proper proportion and sympathetic treatment. He says in his open letter, "my purpose in writing the book was not to make it the 'medium of indoctrinating the religious world in our position,' but rather of showing the Disciples and all people how our principles have worked in their practical application to religious conditions." Judged by this principle, Brother Gates' volume must prove pessimistic in its effect. For, in the first half of his volume (roughly speaking) he sets forth the fundamental principles of our movement in attractive and convincing way, and in the latter half tries to show that they have failed of realization. If, as he says in his open letter, "I [he] believe the Disciples have yet to justify their separate existence by what they may achieve on the side of Christian liberty and unity. Their achievements in the interest of either liberty or unity have not been important either inside or outside of their ranks," then certainly they have failed in their great purpose, pursued for nearly a hundred years. This is not the standpoint from which a really worthy history of any people can be written. I repeat what I said in my review, that Brother Gates ought to rewrite the latter half of his volume, treating the later history of our people in the same sympathetic spirit as he did their earlier. Then his history would be worthy of its subject, and of his abilty as a student of the religious movements of all Christian times.

W. F. Richardson.

Our Ebeneezer.

"The most signal social and religious success ever held in Emporia—in that it attracted and satisfied more people—was the Christian union banquet held in the newly finished basement of the Christian church, under the auspices of its women. The church was brought into close fellowship with the people of this community and Rev. Willis A. Parker, pastor of the church, gained a hold on the admiration of the town that will not only strengthen him and his church, but will weld all the honest people in town together in the common cause of righteousness. The banquet in its civilizing effect was worth as much as a new railroad."

Such is the comment of William Allen White in the Emporia "Gazette" of November 15, 1905, concerning an event which marks an epoch in the history of the Christian church of Emporia, Kansas. "Here we raise our Ebenezer" in token of past mercies and signal blessings.

The lots on which the new house of worship has been erected, were purchased March 9, 1902. In April, 1904, ground was broken, the corner stone was laid September 12, 1904, November 12, 1905, marked the formal opening of the basement of the church, a beautiful, commodious room with a seating capacity of 400 people. This was followed by the Christian union banquet, 230 guests, representing the various religious bodies and their friends, sitting down together to enjoy the rich feast spread for the delectation of the physical-spiritual man.

The responses to the toasts were deliciously crisp, the garnishings being of a "new" variety, possessing scarcely any flavor of antiquity. With a bill of fare containing such elaborate dishes as "Christian Union," "Our Ideals," "The Church Universal," "Christian Womanhood," "Ebenezer," a sober attack of indigestion might momentarily be expected; but a plentiful sprinkling of merry wit, pungent humor, mixed with a goodly measure of earthly knowledge and heavenly wisdom, rendered the whole delightfullly appetizing, an experience to be cherished as one of the inspirations of a lifetime. The ministers or representatives from the Congregational, Methodist Episcopalian, Baptist and Presbyterian churches expressed the congratulations of their people, William Allen White speaking on behalf of the city of Emporia.

If the full chord of Christian union was not clearly sounded by all the speakers, the dominant seventh was struck by each in turn, a herald of the glad new day whose dawn is even now causing the distant mountain tops to blush with expectancy.

It was deeply regretted that Bro. T. P. Haley, of Kansas City, one of the invited guests of honor, was detained at home because of illness.

Rev. Elmer Ward Cole of Hutchinson, Kan., in happiest vein, expressed the felicitations of the brethren of the state.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

South America.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

We arrived at Buenos Ayres Oct. 23, after a voyage of twenty-five days from Liverpool. We were met at the landing by Brothers Smart and Brown, of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, who helped us over the preliminary difficulties. The next day we came to La Plata, a city of 75,000 people, thirty miles east of Buenos Ayres. Brother Smart has been a missionary here for many years. He took us to his home till we could find a suitable place to board. We are now established in a rented house in the southern part of the city, with the study of Spanish for our chief occupation. Miss Embree, the other member of our mission, has been in the country for two years, working with the alliance people, and has a fair command of the language. Outside of our mission there is one member of our body on this continent, Mr. Warner, the Y. M. C. A. secretary at Loa Paulo, Brazil, who came from Ohio.

I have been here too short a time to know much about conditions. Where our mission will be located I do not know, but probably in Buenos Ayres. La Plata is an especially difficult place for Protestant missions. It is of sufficient importance to justify any amount of effort, as it is the capital of the province of Buenos Ayres and a great educational center. Protestant work is small. There is a very small congregation of the Church of England, a little Methodist church, a station of the Salvation Army, and an independent Baptist church of about 100 members, under the charge of Brother Smart. The latter has a good building owned by Brother Smart, the others meeting in rented quarters. None of these missions is very aggressive. There are no mission schools here, as the school system apparently makes them unnecessary. The members of the Protestant churches, except, perhaps, the English church, are poor people.

Several things have impressed us as worthy of note. First, the immersionist missionaries, Plymouth Brethren, Independent Baptists, sent out by the missionary alliance, and now the Missionary Baptists, are more successful than those bodies which accept sprinkling as baptism, except in a few of the large cities. This success has come in spite of the fact that most of the immersionist missionaries are men without college training, and with inferior financial support.

Another thing worth thinking about is the wide separation between Protestantism and education. The Protestants have no college, and there are peculiar difficulties in the way of establishing one. No serious attempt has been made to reach the students of the national universities and colleges. This I learned from Dr. Drees, the chief Methodist missionary. The educated class, though nominally Catholic, is really infidel. Last week the bishop of Parana accused a professor in the National Normal at Parana of "attacking the Bible." The paper reports that the people almost unanimously took the part of the professor, and no doubt he can hold his chair and continue his attacks. This is the best educated of all Spanish lands. The people who determine public opinion come from the colleges. This class must be reached in some way if a strong Protestant church is to be established. This is a tolerably good country to live in. I do not want my friends to think that I have left civilization behind. The postman passes my door four times a day. I am half a square from the street-car, and there is a mounted policeman on the corner. On the next block is a large public school. In this city there are half a dozen public buildings that would attract attention in Indianapolis or Des Moines. There are two national colleges, a large public library, and a public museum of great interest. The Southern Railway is building a fine station, and the foundations of a great university are being laid. I trust many of our younger brethren will feel that this great southern republic has a claim upon their lives. At any rate we are glad to be here. W. J. Burner.

Where Roses and Violets Bloom.

From the city of Joplin, Mo., where "Jack" is king and where the landscape is picturesquely cumbered with mining derricks and mountains of "tailings," or punctured with old shafts or drill holes, down to the beautiful crescent city of New Orleans, where the roses and violets bloom all the year round—'tis a wondrous transformation. Out of a cold and gloomy rain into the bright, beautiful, balmy Decoration Day of the Sunny South. Snow was falling in Kansas City; here the Panama hat lingers on despite the dictates of fashion.

My way led through the lumber camps of Arkansas, across the great river at Memphis through eastern Tennessee, through beautiful tree and hill blessed Mississippi. (I think I should like to live in Mississippi if Governor Vardaman would move out.)

Back to the land of live oaks and palms. Back to the land of the far-famed stegomyia fasciata. Back to the fields of cotton and corn and rice and sugar-cane. Back to the country of magnolias, myrtle and jasmine. Back to the city of open gutters where the bull-frog croaks his tuneful lay at your front door; where the double-decked open cistern breeds destroying angels of death. Back where the people shake hands going and coming and where kissing and hugging are done openly and generously. Back to the dirtiest, prettiest city in the whole United States.

Glad to get back? Well, I guess, yes! Who isn't glad to get home? Preachers, if you want to be where the people treat you handsomely come to the Sunny South. The right kind of men are needed here and the right kind of men will enjoy it. I do.

The Soniat Avenue Church voted me a month's vacation before this fever scare broke out, and then when I had gone the wouldn't let me come back till Yellow Jack was gone. Although over one-half the congregation was out of the city the remainder carried on the regular Sunday morning and midweek services. O. E. Hawkins preached for the church in my absence. Some one of our southern churches should give him a call to regular work—no others need apply. Not a single member of the Christian churches in this city had the yellow fever during this epidemic.

We are planning for great things the coming year and hope to keep up our record. If we could have the help of all our brethren who locate in this city, we could become a great power for good. Send us the names of your friends and we'll find them. The Soniat Avenue Church raised $50.75 for church extension although half the members were away on account of the fever.

My "vacation" was spent in and near Joplin. I preached 48 sermons and baptized 21 persons; organized the Reding school house congregation with 32 members and started a building fund; preached eight times for J. W. Baker in the South Joplin Christian Church and twice for W. F. Turner at the First Church. I began a three weeks' meeting for the Central Church, Eldorado Springs, Mo., W. G. Hearne, pastor, and closed suddenly on the eighth day. This congregation is made up of the seceding members of the old First Church. Each congregation has a good building and there is said to be considerable zealous rivalry between them. Eldorado Springs has about 2,500 inhabitants, augmented during the summer by several hundred health seekers. It is a beautiful place and the waters taste bad enough to be good medicine. There are twelve churches of variegated tints in the village. "I in them and thou in me, that they may be perfected into one; that the world may know that thou didst send me, and lovedst them even as thou lovedst me."

My last Sunday in Joplin I heard my father preach one of his best sermons in J. W. Baker's pulpit. Brother Baker was holding a meeting for the Duenweg congregation. At night I listened to that prince among pastors, W. F. Turner. At the close of the services the congregation gave to me as their "minister in New Orleans" a very gratifying, encouraging ovation. The living link idea is a splendid bond of union between brethren.

The Mississippi annual convention met at Water Valley. The program offered good things galore.

All Saints Day is a legal holiday in this state, and it was observed by thousands of our people. Aside from the usual services in the Catholic and Episcopal churches and the blessing of the graves of the saints by the priests, the chief part of the celebration consisted in decorating the resting places of the dead with flowers. Thousands of dollars worth of flowers were displayed in honor of the dead and in token of the faith in the resurrection which is the hope of Christianity. Nearly every grave, Protestant or Catholic had its tribute of flowers. Roses and chrysanthemums prevailed. The cemeteries of New Orleans are not excelled in beauty by any in the country. Not even classic Mt. Auburn excels Metairie of New Orleans. On All Souls Day prayers were being said in the cathedrals of superstition for the souls of the dead which have not yet been redeemed from purgatory.

The greatest ravages of the fever were among the citizens who have most implicitly relied on their priests and saints for protection. Why should one who is taught that Saint Dominic is the protector against all fevers pay any attention to health officers and physicians? If the "blessing" of the priest will effect a cure, what could be better? Today indulgences for sin are sold openly in New Orleans. And Protestants sleep.

New Orleans is rapidly recuperating from its attack of fever and will now forge ahead as never before. Here we should have a number of mission churches, schools and orphanages if we would save this people from Catholicism. We should have missions among the colored people, the Italians, the French, the Spanish, the Chinese, etc.

Nebraska.

David City has called Lee Ferguson, of Iowa, and he is already at work. We hope that this may prove a long pastorate and a successful one. The outlook is bright.——There was one confession at Auburn on Nov. 26, where Bro. F. L. Pettit preaches.——Three added at Kearney on the same date. F. D. Hobson is the preacher.——The Beaver City meeting, led by S. V. Williams and wife, of La Porte, Ind., closed Nov. 29. There were 17 baptisms, 9 by letter and statement. D. S. Domer is the regular minister and reports that the church now has over two hundred members.——B. H. Whiston has located at Minden. State evangelist Whiston has been at Wymore since Nov. 19. There have been good audiences, and up to this time 13 additions. The work is hampered by internal conditions. A. L. Ogden has been preaching there every other Lord's day, but has closed his work with them. The evangelist will go to Table Rock from Wymore, and will probably begin there about Dec. 13.——F. L. Pettit held a two weeks' meeting at Pawnee City. One added. Brother Lindenmeyer reports two added since the meeting.——A. W. Henry is in a meeting at Liberty Ridge.——The state secretary was at Nelson over Lord's day, Dec. 3. This church is looking for a preacher.——H. S. Gilliam, state superintendent of Bible schools, held an institute at Nelson on Saturday, Dec. 9, and preached on Dec. 10.——Hastings is in the midst of a union meeting in a large tabernacle. The Christian church will follow it with a meeting, led by O. E. Hamilton. Brother Gilliam reports several additions to Hastings church by letter and one by confession since his last report.——D. C. Kratz held a short meeting at Nora, one of his regular preaching points, resulting in three reclaimed.——R. A. Schell delivered his stereopticon lecture, "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," at Belvidere on the evening of Dec. 3. Prof. H. T. Sutton spoke at Hebron the same evening.——The Lexington meeting, led by Joel Brown and Mrs. Floy Hormel, resulted in 36 additions to the church. D. B. Titus is the preacher there.——A Brother Lemon has been called to preach at Rising City and Summit. He lives at David City and is engaged in county temperance work.——Oscar Sweeney has just moved his family to Ord, where they are now located.——E. C. Tuckerman, Lincoln, General Delivery, is open for work as singing evangelist.——Wilson and Lintt will begin a meeting at Fairbury early in January. The genial preacher at that place, H. C. Holmes, is making large preparations for a great meeting. This congregation has one of the most beautiful church houses among us in the state.——J. E. Davis, of Stanberry, Mo., has accepted a call to the work at Beatrice, and will be on the field after Jan. 1. Brother Davis comes highly recommended to Nebraska.——Edgar Price, formerly at Beatrice, is now happily located at Bedford, Iowa.——Brother De Vol, of Missouri, has been called to the work at Fairfield, which D. F. Snider resigned recently. He will be on the field about Feb. 1. D. F. Snider has temporarily gone to Hiawatha, Kan., for a rest.——The church at Hendley has called a Brother Mitchell as preacher. This congregation has been doing very little work for some time, and it is hoped that they may now press forward.——Earl E. Boyd has resigned the pastorate of the Eastside Church, Lincoln, to take effect Jan. 1. Brother Boyd will finish his course of study in Cotner Medical College next May, and will then be a full-fledged M. D. Until then he is available as supply for some nearby church.

The Missouri Valley State Secretaries' Association met at Lincoln, Dec. 13. This association consists of Missouri, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska. It represents over three hundred thousand Disciples. The meetings are purely in the interest of state missions, and have hitherto been held in St. Joseph, Mo. T. A. Abbott, of Missouri, B. S. Denny, of Iowa, W. S. Lowe, of Kansas and this secretary make up the personnel of the association. The meetings are held quarterly, except the fall quarter, which is taken up with the national secretaries' meeting at the national convention. They have proven very profitable.

The returns from Nebraska day during the month of November are very gratifying. Fifty-one churches, 21 Bible schools and 13 Christian Endeavor Societies sent in offerings. This was a gain of 15 churches, and a total of $226 over the same period last year. The total amount sent in by churches was $671.14. There is a loss of one Bible school and one Christian Endeavor Society, but the amount sent in was in both cases an increase of over four dollars in each department. Seventeen churches gave more than the apportionment. Sixteen gave the full amount, and the others fell below. One congregation, Bethany, paid over $100. Information from other churches shows that the apportionment has been fully pledged, and in one instance nearly $100 is in sight. These are yet to come in. Since the first of December the remittances have been falling off. But we hope that the churches that have taken the offering will be sure to send in the amount during this month. Let us not fail in this. And those churches that can possibly get to it in December should take the offering without fail.

Volume I, No. 7, of the "Omaha Christian" is on my desk. It is a four-page paper devoted to the interests of the Omaha churches. It has a nice, clean make-up, and is full of matter pertaining to the work in that city. S. D. Dutcher, 5016 Cass Street, and H. J. Kirschstein, 1817 Spencer Street, are responsible for it.

New Church Building at Atlanta, Ga.

The First Christian Church of Atlanta, Ga., has begun the erection of a splendid new building on the lot recently purchased for that purpose, at the corner of Trinity and Pryor Streets. This is only about two blocks away from the present location of the church, but the site is preferable in every way. The lot was purchased at a cost of sixteen thousand dollars, and the building is to cost fifty thousand dollars. When completed it will be perhaps the finest and most complete house of worship owned by our brotherhood in the entire south, and will rank well with the very best among our church buildings anywhere. The foundation and copings of the building are to be granite, the walls of granite brick, and the trimmings of terra cotta. Outwardly the building is impressive and imposing; the interior arrangement is very nearly perfect. The basement will contain a club and reading room, an exercise or drill room, a social and dining room, ladies' parlor, kitchen and toilet rooms.

By means of flexible partitions the exercise room, social room and ladies' parlor may all be thrown together, making a room with a floor area of 4,800 square feet. On the main floor is the auditorium with a seating capacity of six hundred and twenty-five, the Bible school room with a capacity of eight hundred and a "welcome room," where friends and visitors may be met and greeted. The auditorium and Bible school room may be used as one vast auditorium by means of the folding portion between them, thus making it possible to accommodate an audience of more than fourteen hundred people, should occasion require it. There are provided in the plans kindergarten and primary rooms as well as fifteen class rooms, choir platform, pastor's study, etc. A large pipe organ will be included in the equipment.

The lot on which the building will stand is 100x140 feet; while the extreme measurements of the building itself are 80x117. Brother H. K. Pendleton is the energetic, wide-awake pastor, and he has as helpers an earnest, loyal, enthusiastic congregation.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

I am writing on board the train enroute for Prescott, Wash., where we are to hold a meeting. Prescott is a new field and we hope to be able to plant a church of Christ there before the year closes.

We closed the meeting at Cunningham; we organized with thirty-three and succeeded in raising enough money to warrant a good building. The lots were a gift; and we hope the building will be ready for dedication by Christmas. W. M. Roe is looking after our work at Greenacres.

Brethren Dean and Gerking report twelve in the meeting at Diamond. This is a good work. Can not more of our pastors volunteer to hold meetings for some nearby point or some weak congregation? We need a lot of such work done.

Brother McCallum is soon to begin with Brother Benton at Pomeroy. We are sorry to record the death of our much loved brother, F. M. Minnick, formerly of Anaconda, Mont., but for some months past a resident of Spokane.

Let all the churches of the Inland Empire push the work and make report to us of the progress from time to time, that we may get reports into the papers.

The new church houses at Waitsburg, Washtucna, Waverly, Prosser and Cunningham are being pushed and will all soon be ready for dedication.

Brethren, watch the Inland Empire grow! Brother Utz is slowly recovering from the attack of typhoid, but will not get to his pulpit for some time yet.

Virginia.

G. W. Remagen has accepted a call to Fredericksburg and Bowling Green. He gives three Sundays to the former place and one to the latter.

C. H. Poage has begun work at Radford and East Radford. There is a great opportunity with these churches, and Brother Poage expects a good work.

The watchword of the Virginia Christian Missionary Society is $10,000 for Virginia missions this year.

E. L. Powell will hold a meeting with H. P. Atkins in West End Church in February.

H. J. Seaman held a meeting with home forces at Sharon Church with 30 accessions.

H. D. Coffey, under the auspices of the V. C. M. S. has recently reorganized the church at Paint Bank with 40 members, and raised enough money to call a minister one-fourth time.

Milo Atkinson, having returned from Cincinnati, is again filling his pulpit in Newport News.

A. J. Renforth has resigned at Hampton after eight years of splendid service. He will move to the country and give himself to evangelical work. He will do good service in this new work.

Marshall Street Church raised over $90 recently for state missions. It is expected that the whole amount will reach $125.

Virginia needs a number of good preachers. Address H. C. Combs, 104 S. 5th St., Richmond.

Indian Territory Ministerial Institute.

The work in this territory, under the able supervision of S. R. Hawkins, is growing rapidly. He is not building for display, but for permanency. He is getting the right kind of material for leaders. It was my good pleasure to attend the third session of the Christian Ministerial Association held in the First Christian Church at Roff. The attendance was not large, but the personnel was surprisingly excellent. The addresses were par excellence. The spirit could not have been better. Bro. Geo. P. Fooley's paper on the Holy Spirit was especially good. He was conservative as well as sane, deeming it better "not to know so much than to know so much that ain't so."

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Randolph Cook, president; Geo. P. Fooley, vice-president; J. Crockett Mullins, secretary and treasurer. Just keep your eye on the territory.

Word from Brother Bentley.

It has now been a month since we arrived here from China. The doctors, osteopaths, say they can cure me in a few months. I am giving them an opportunity. They think curvature and consolidation in the spine is at the base of all the trouble. One month of glorious California climate has helped much in a general way. While I will not be equal to a heavy strain on my nerves for a good many months, I hope to be ready for useful work, perhaps in connection with one of our colleges, by next winter.

You are surely right on the subject of the Holy Spirit, and your writings on that theme have been a help to hundreds.

Recent Victory on an Old Battlefield.

Here where were fought some of the battles of the giant defenders of apostolic Christianity, where was penned the Declaration and Address, where yet stands the home of that humble and sainted man, Thomas Campbell, who little dreamed of the great tidal wave of religious thought he was generating when he wrote that historic document, we have recently seen a great victory for the truth and plea we preach. We began as part of the great simultaneous movement in and about Pittsburg. This is an exceedingly conservative town—a college town, and not easily stirred. With no undue excitement at any time, but with a strong grip upon the whole field, Bro. O. P. Spiegel took hold of this work with us, and led us to a great victory. He preached a plain, scriptural and kindly message to the church and the world. He is fearless but very kind, pointed but patient with those who differ from him, earnest and never discouraged when things do not come his way. A tireless worker in the home, office and shop; discreet and skillful in soul-winning, and withal a most congenial companion in the work. The 123 accessions during the 36 days were only a part of the reasons for our profound gratitude, for the whole work has been greatly benefited. The meeting began in the first month of our fifth year as pastor. We have seen, during that time, some victories for which we are very grateful. A second church and chapel, a fine mission church at Cannonsburg, over which Bro. R. G. White efficiently ministers, and with which we have fellowship, enlarged spirit and work in all our missionary enterprises, 280 accessions, besides those of the recent meeting, are some of the results of faithful, consecrated, diligent labor in the Lord during the four years and two months past. To the Father who hath given us the increase, and by whose spirit we are kept a united, hopeful, buoyant church for the coming year, we would render all the praise, thanksgiving and honor.

Washington, Pa. E. A. COLE, pastor.

A New Church Organized.

The brethren here were disappointed in not having Bro. W. J. Hastie, of Albia, Iowa, hold us a meeting after the national convention, but he was unable to meet his engagement, and in the meantime our settlement has been growing and we have been gaining in members.

Sunday, Dec. 10, we met in the school house and organized an apostolic church, with seventeen charter members, all adults save one.

Those elected to the various offices of the church had had experience in their respective offices. We are planning to hold a short meeting soon and hope the day is not far distant when we can have preaching all the time. We have a fine lot of brethren with which to work, and our faith is great that our cause will grow.

With the exception of Mrs. D. G. Kerr, of Montpielier, five miles east of us, all have come into this excellent part of the valley within the past year, Mr. Lester being the first one to come, arriving Jan. 1.

The ladies have not been asleep at all, but wide awake, as is shown by the fact that an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. was organized Nov. 28, with nine charter members, and six subscriptions to "The Tidings." We are to meet the first Tuesday of each month.

Your excellent paper has many admirers here. MRS. J. N. LESTER.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ARKANSAS.

Hope, Dec. 18.—Fifteen additions yesterday—5 by confession, 4 from the Cumberland Presbyterians, 2 from the Baptists, 2 from the Methodists, 2 by statement.—Percy G. Cross.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, Dec. 18.—Present at ministers' meeting: Pres. J. E. Stewart, Walter F. Smith, W. T. Laprade, F. D. Power, E. B. Bagby and the writer. Reports: Ninth Street (E. B. Bagby), 1 confession and 1 by letter; Vermont Avenue (F. D. Power), 2 by confession and baptism; Whitney Avenue (Walter F. Smith), 1 baptism; H Street (A. E. Zeigler), 2 by statement. Total 7—4 by confession and baptism and 3 by letter and statement. Fifteenth Street is having an anti-saloon revival.—Claude C. Jones, Sec.

ILLINOIS.

Lilly, Dec. 20.—R. L. Beshers, of El Paso, just closed a two weeks' meeting, resulting in 14 conversions and 11 reclaimed.—Mrs. L. N. Ferguson.

Smithboro, Dec. 20.—I closed the Pittsburg meeting Dec. 17, with 26 additions—22 by primary obedience, 4 from the denominations.—J. E. Story.

Fairfield, Dec. 18.—Thirty-seven additions in meeting of 15 days—26 baptisms, 2 from M. E's., 1 from U. B's., 1 from Baptists and 7 by statement. Church never in better condition.—G. W. Thompson, evangelist, Allen T. Shaw, pastor and singer.

Clayton, Dec. 16.—The meeting continues with growing interest. Baptized 20 today. The other churches of the town have joined hands with us in a union campaign against sin. Bro. H. A. Davis, of Sullivan, is doing the preaching, assisted by Sister Mary Bailey, of Angola, Ind., as singer.—Harry Walston, pastor.

Joliet, Dec. 13.—Two additions at First Christian Church last Lord's day—1 by letter and 1 by statement.—Ben N. Mitchell.

Pittsfield, Dec. 13.—Our meeting at Philadelphia, Mo., closed with 12 additions. Begin another this week at Warren.—J. M. Bovee.

INDIANA.

Flora, Dec. 17.—Two confessions tonight. We shall close the year free from debt and with a bright outlook for the new year.—A. B. Houze, minister.

Indianapolis, Dec. 18.—Four additions at Bluff Creek yesterday—2 by confession and 2 by statement.—Clay Trusty.

Columbus, Dec. 17.—We have had 10 accessions since last report. The church will soon establish a mission in the northeastern part of the city, a lot having been donated by Joseph I. Irwin for the purpose.—Ira E. Guthrie.

Angola, Dec. 18.—I have just closed a short meeting at South Milford. At the beginning there were only about a dozen members. They had no regular services, and had been without a preacher for some time; had no Sunday school. We had 10 additions—6 by confession. Money was raised to employ a minister one-half time, and Sunday school is to be resumed. I go to Granger next.—Chas. W. Mahin, evangelist.

Wabash, Dec. 20.—The Wabash congregation loaned me for 14 nights to the Bachelor Creek Church: 16 additions, 15 baptisms. Seven baptisms in Wabash congregation as yet unreported.—E. F. Daugherty.

[Why couldn't hundreds of other churches "loan" their preacher to hold a meeting in some needy field and thus double our evangelistic force?—Editor.]

IOWA.

Fairfield, Dec. 20.—Meeting of 5 weeks closed with 150 additions.—H. C. Littleton, minister, O. E. Hamilton, evangelist.

Woodbine, Dec. 18.—Four additions by baptism yesterday; also one addition by statement at prayer meeting.—B. Franklin Hall.

Mystic, Dec. 20.—Just closed a meeting with the South Side Church of Ottumwa, resulting in 11 additions—6 by primary obedience, and 5 by letter. One addition here since last report.—C. E. Chambers.

KANSAS.

Iuka, Dec. 18.—Our meeting is two weeks old, with 32 additions—22 by confession.—W. A. Morrison, evangelist.

Chanute, Dec. 18.—Three added yesterday. One confession, one reclaimed and one by statement. Five by letter a week ago. Last night we finished raising the money to pay off the old debt, and will burn the mortgage next Sunday night for a Christmas offering—$250. We are looking forward. Must have a new house next.—G. W. Kitchen.

Hutchinson, Dec. 18.—We just closed a meeting at Langdon, resulting in 8 additions—6 by confession, 2 from other religious bodies. Albert Nichols, of Springfield, did the preaching.—C. D. Van Dolah, pastor.

Lafontaine, Dec. 18.—We have been here 13 days and there have been 53 additions, 32 by confession. Expect to continue another week. Brother Ball is the much beloved minister of the church.—J. P. Haner, evangelist.

MISSOURI.

Eldon, Dec. 18.—Three additions last Lord's day.—S. J. Vance.

Carrollton, Dec. 19.—Five additions to the Milan congregation Dec. 17—3 by baptism, 1 reclaimed, 1 by letter.—J. J. Limerick.

Marshall.—G. E. Shanklin, of this place, assisted me in a meeting with the Gilead congregation in Pettis county, in which there were 4 additions by baptism. The work grows steadily at Gilead.—Arthur Downs.

Kansas City, Dec. 18.—One confession, 2 by letter, 1 from the Methodists at my regular appointment at West Linn yesterday. I have accepted a unanimous call to remain with them next year; also have accepted a call to preach at Louisburg.—Clyde Lee Fife.

Laddonia, Dec. 14.—We closed a short meeting today, with 8 additions—1 reclaimed, 1 from Baptists, and 6 by commendation. J. D. Greer is the preacher at Laddonia.—Simpson Ely.

Mendon, Dec. 20.—We closed a two weeks' meeting at Windsor, Col., with 27 added. Began here last Sunday.—J. Bennett.

New Franklin.—I preached a few nights at Booneville recently, with 13 additions; one night at Glasgow and 7 additions. Am in a short meeting at Higbee.—Arthur N. Lindsey.

Princeton, Dec. 20.—Our meeting closed last night with 27 additions. The church called L. W. Spayd to be their minister. They also bought a parsonage.—J. E. Davis.

Gower. Dec. 16.—Just closed a meeting at Eureka, Kan., resulting in 81 additions, 75 being baptisms. A. P. Sherman, pastor at Hartford, Kan., led the song service. G. T. Bradford is the pastor at Eureka. This is practically his first pastorate. Four years ago he found this congregation discouraged and disorganized. Under his earnest and able leadership it soon rallied and today is the foremost church in this city of 3,000 people.—John P. Jesse.

NEBRASKA.

Humbolt, Dec. 21.—Our meeting has been in progress 13 days; 25 additions to date. I will go from here to Mansfield, O., to assist in a meeting.—H. A. Northcutt, evangelist.

Hamilton, Dec. 18.—Have received 9 into fellowship with church since last report—7 by confession and 2 by letter.—Wesley Hatcher.

New Holland, Dec. 20.—The meeting of three weeks held for us by W. H. Boden of Washington Court House, Ohio, resulted in 18 baptisms and 3 reclaimed.—W. W. Harris, minister.

OREGON.

Eugene, Dec. 13.—Our three weeks' meeting closed with 4 baptisms. Geo. C. Richey, of Roseburg, did the preaching, and the work is strengthened. At my last appointment at Drain before the meeting, 1 was added by statement. Two were added to the church at Pleasant Hill a few weeks ago. The work is moving along well at both places.—Marion F. Horn.

TENNESSEE.

Memphis.—The Third Christian Church just closed a great meeting, resulting in 48 additions. The evangelist was Bro. A. P. Finley, of Lexington, Ky.—J. E. Gorsuch, minister.

TEXAS.

Waco, Dec. 16.—President Zollars held a five days' meeting at Texas Christian University with 30 baptisms and 34 by renewal, letter, etc.—Frank H. Marshall.

Austin, Dec. 19.—A two weeks' meeting at Stamps, ten miles east of Gilmer, resulted in 26 additions—20 being by baptism, 4 from the Baptists and 2 by relation. That church has been built up mainly by the efforts of one man—Bro. W. O. Stamps—who settled there three years ago. At that time there was no church house or church organization in the neighborhood. He determined to have a church and Sunday school. A church house was built, a Sunday school organized and an evangelist was called to hold a meeting, and we now have a live, aggressive church there with about 60 members and regular preaching. How many scattered Disciples could do likewise if they would?—B. B. Sanders.

School for Children of Missionaries in China.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I have just been reading what you wrote respecting the treatment of missionaries while on furlough. I am exceedingly glad that at last there seems likely to be something done in this matter that will count. As you say, it is too big a question to be left in the hands of the executive committee. Some of us who came to the field early have felt this most seriously. It is a most serious question with us this matter of furlough. It would be hard enough for most of us to get along and come out clear of debt, were we to be paid the full amount of our salary, while at home, but when it comes to our being compelled to live on three-fourths salary, with all the additional expense necessary to our comfort while in the homeland, it is, I say, a most serious consideration. In some instances some of the missionaries have the old home to retire to without charge to themselves. These are the highly favored ones. Most of us must rent homes and purchase furniture and go to much other expense which we would not have were we to remain on the field. In such cases the furlough becomes a burden rather than a relief. I do not, of course, wish to lodge a complaint against the committee, for they think they do the best for all concerned, but they are simply mistaken, and if the matter were taken up by a larger number of those interested and, as you say, investigated thoroughly, no doubt a better adjustment could be made of this most important matter. We should be better workers on the field, get more out of our furloughs, and be happier than we are, if we were sure that our financial obligations could be met from funds provided by the church at home. I feel sure if the brotherhood understood the whole matter, everything would be made right.

Then again, you speak of the matter of the education of the children of missionaries. Here again I agree thoroughly with what you have said. Much can be done to lessen the burden in this regard, and that with but little sacrifice to the brotherhood at large. This burden ought to be divided. There is a certain amount of it that the missionaries must of necessity bear themselves. Separation from the children can not be avoided, but in whose hands shall the children be placed is a most vital question. I am sure that if you take up this matter with the brotherhood in earnest something will be done. In the meantime, I want to tell you what we have been doing out here. You will see that if the brethren will meet us half way we shall be pretty well provided for. I am sending you herewith an article that I published in the "North China Daily News" and other papers in March last. The proposition made in that article met with most hearty response. When I went to Kuling this summer a meeting was called of those who had subscribed and it was decided to go ahead and finish that list of subscribers, which up to that time numbered about 70. In a few days the number was swelled to 103, and another meeting was called for the purpose of electing directors and going right on with the school. Twelve of the largest missionary societies in the Yangtse valley are represented among the subscribers. Much enthusiasm was manifested. An able board of directors was elected and the school will be opened about April 1, 1906. We shall have the use of the buildings of the China Inland Mission for the three years, and by that time must have buildings of our own. With this all in our minds we were not deterred from going ahead with the enterprise, as there is so great a demand for such a school here that we feel sure there will be no trouble in raising the fund to erect the buildings. Kuling is on a mountain about 40,000 feet above the level of the sea. It is a most healthful locality, and is an ideal spot for a college. The school will be a boarding school of high grade. It is proposed to prepare our children in this school for entering the colleges in England or America. In this way we shall be able to keep them with us much longer than we otherwise could. This will mean more to us than can be expressed in words. We shall be better missionaries, and more happy than we possibly could if our dear children, during their tender years, were torn from us to go home for their primary and high school education. If, then, there is provision made for their college work in the homeland, it will be an inconceivably great blessing to the missionaries and their children. Pray that this work may be a great success.

I shall keep you informed about this school. It is a new departure in China. It is a most popular scheme. The men who have gone into it as subscribers are among the very strongest missionaries in China, not to mention a number of business men and two English consuls. God has been working with us, and I have every confidence that it will be a great success.

Nanking, China. F. E. Meigs.

[The article by Brother Meigs in the "North China Daily News," to which he refers, submits a proposition to rent the buildings of the China Inland Mission at Kuling, with their furniture, for the purpose of a school for foreign children, and calls for an annual backing of $5,000 in the way of a guarantee, which, it seems, has been pledged. This is a new and important step in foreign missions, and it is gratifying to know that it originated in our mission at Nanking, and that our Brother Meigs is its chief promoter. We wish the experiment abundant success.—Editor.]

Golden Anniversary of a Popular Weekly.

It has fallen to the lot of very few of the leading publications of the United States to survive the vicissitudes of half a century. One of the fortunate ones is "Leslie's Weekly," the first illustrated weekly newspaper established in the United States, and which, on December 14, will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary. When the late Frank Leslie started this publication, in 1855, it was questioned whether he would be successful or not. He was an Englishman and believed that if England could support several first-class illustrated weeklies, the United States could support one, and his judgment proved to be correct. Two years after he began the publication of his weekly he had a lively competitor, issued by the Harper Brothers, and still in existence. A unique feature of the Golden Anniversary number of "Leslie's Weekly" will be an exact copy, full size, 16 pages, of the first issue of "Leslie's Weekly." This will afford the reader a fine opportunity, by comparison, to judge of the wonderful progress of the art of printing and engraving during the past fifty years. The Golden Anniversary number of "Leslie's" will contain a number of special features that will make it unusually attractive and valuable.

BELLAMY.

William Bellamy died at his home, Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov. 18, 1905, aged 66. He was charter member of the Church of Christ at Grand Rapids and was an elder in that church for 31 years. He was keenly interested in all religious work. He leaves to his children a sweet memory of unshaken faith in God, loyalty to the Church of Christ, and an unselfish devotion to the cause of righteousness. This rich heritage of character is more priceless than earthly wealth. He was particularly interested in The Christian-Evangelist and labored for its success, believing it represented the hightest type of religious journalism among the Disciples of Christ. He cast the weight of his influence and personality on the side of Christianity, and because of that uplifting, helpful influence his memory will be held the more sacred. W. A. Bellama.

[The editor knew Brother Bellamy intimately for many years. He was a man "full of faith and of the Holy Spirit." His wife preceded him to the better life beyond. They were among God's elect spirits, and have left their children a noble heritage of Christian example. Our sympathies go out to the bereaved family and friends.—Editor.]

BUTLER.

James Whitman Butler was born in Warren county, Ky., Oct. 2, 1826, and passed into the great unknown, Dec. 13, 1905. He was married in 1851 to Mary Ground, who survives him. To this union were born two children, one of whom died in infancy, the other, Seldon H., died a year ago at the age of 52. Brother Butler became a Christian very early in life, and for a period of more than three-score years honored his profession and was faithful to his trust. After a period of preparation at Knox College he entered Bethany College, where he graduated with the honors of his class in 1851, in the same class with Brother McGarvey. After a short time spent in business pursuits he was elected to the chair of Mathematics in Abingdon College, and formed one of that splendid trinity, the other two of whom were Patrick H. Murphy, of blessed memory, and John C. Reynolds, who is yet among the living. In 1860 he succeeded to the presidency of Abingdon College and continued until 1874, thus having been connected with the institution nineteen years. Later he was for something over a year president of Santa Rosa College, Cal. Since 1884 he has resided at Fall River, Kan., where he was for twenty-one years president of the Fall River bank, and for the greater part of this time preached regularly for the church. He preached his last sermon Oct. 22, thus finishing a minstry of about fifty-four years. In all the relationships of life, whether private or public, Brother Butler fulfilled faithfully his duties and obligations to his family, to his church and to the state, and passed away full of honors at nearly four-score years. We shall meet him some glad day on the evergreen shore under the Tree of Life. His funeral sermon was preached by the writer to a multitude of citizens and friends in the Fall River Christian Church from the text, "Know ye not that a prince and a great man is fallen this day in Israel?" Aaron Prince Aten.

COURAGE TO GO ON.—Acts 20:22-24; Matt. 28:20; Ex. 33:14-16.

We turn from the retrospect of the old year to the prospect of the new. If the memory of past failures and neglect tends to dishearten us, let us go to the source of all grace for pardon, and bravely gird our loins for another and more earnest trial. Let us determine to make the year 1906 the best we have yet lived. How may our present lesson bring us the courage needed for this strenuous effort?

1. It gives us an example of courage that must prove an inspiration to every sincere follower of Christ (Acts 20:22-24). It is not easy to walk forward into visible danger, but it is far harder to go ahead, knowing only that some awful peril is to be met. In every city where Paul tarried on his way to Jerusalem, he received the same message through the Lord's prophets, that bonds and affliction were awaiting him. What shape these afflictions should take, how long their continuance, whether they were to end in some horrible death, he knew not. These warnings continued all the way along. (See Acts 21:4, 8-14.) But his heroic soul was unmoved. Not even the prayers and tears of those whom he loved could turn him from his purpose. His life was naught, when put into the balance with his life-mission. He was ready to glorify Christ either by his life or his death (Phil. 1:20,21). In view of such an example, surely we can go forward in the easy way that a kindly providence has set before us, and meet with courage the small trials and temptations that confront us from day to day. Realizing that our lives belong to him, we will not count them dear to ourselves, but commit them to his keeping.

2. It gives us a reason for courage (Matt. 28:20). "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." The unfailing presence of our Lord is an unfailing source of courage. This it was that made Paul so brave. (See Acts 18:9 10; 27:21-25.) The little child loses his fear in the darkness when he feels the strong hand of his father holding his own. Moses could advance in the unknown pathway where the Lord directed him to lead his people, "if the presence of the Lord went with him." How can we fear to face the duties and dangers of life, if we believe his promise? Can we not take to our hearts the sweet words of the sainted P. P. Bliss, the last he ever wrote:

"I know not what awaits me,
God kindly veils mine eyes,
And o'er each step on my onward way
He makes new scenes arise:
And every joy he sends me comes
A sweet and glad surprise.

"One step I see before me,
'Tis all I need to see,
The light of heaven more brightly shines
When earth's illusions flee;
And sweetly through the silence comes
His loving "Follow Me."

"So on I go, not knowing.
I would not if I might;
I'd rather walk in the dark with God
Than go alone in the light;
I'd rather walk by faith with him
Than go alone by sight."

3. It shows how we may testify for God (Ex. 33:16). By their courage in the face of their adversaries, Israel should prove their peculiar relation to Jehovah. And this courage depended, as we have seen, upon his presence accompanying them. So the apostles in Jerusalem were able to witness for Jesus through this same courage (Acts 4:13). So may we in our own time and place testify for the Savior, if, boldly and cheerfully, we meet each day's duties, and thus make the new year upon which we are entering one of happy and helpful service to our fellow men.

THE SHEPHERDS FIND JESUS. —Luke 2:1-20.

Memory Verses, 13, 14.

Golden Text.—For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord.—Luke 2:11.

The lessons for the entire year of 1906 are in the life of Jesus as recorded in the Synoptic Gospels.—Matthew, Mark and Luke. These three gospels, which in general present parallel narratives of the same events, are distinguished by this term from the gospel according to John, which, with relatively few exceptions, includes only matter which is not given in the other three.

The following general statements regarding the contents of the first three gospels and their relation to each other, are substantially accurate:

Mark contains nothing which is not also found in Matthew. Mark gives few discourses or parables, but narrates most of the incidents which are found in Matthew. Mark is the shortest and probably the earliest of the gospels.

Matthew contains all of the incidents recorded by Mark (with one or two exceptions), and adds a few other incidents, including a narrative of the infancy, and some discourses, the most important of which is the Sermon on the Mount.

Luke records few incidents which are not also given by Mark and Matthew and omits several which they give, but gives several very important discourses and parables which the others do not record, chief of which are the discourses of the so-called Perean ministry. Luke gives also an independent series of infancy narratives, including by far the fullest account of the incidents connected with the birth of Jesus.

It is a surprising fact that, of the many incidents recorded in connection with the birth and infancy of Jesus, not one (except the bare fact of the birth itself) is recorded in more than one of the gospels. It should be added also that the annunciation to Joseph (Matt. 1:18-25) and the annunciation to Mary (Luke 1:26-38), although separate incidents, both testify to the miraculous birth. It is equally notable that, although the accounts in Matthew record wholly different incidents, it is possible to combine them in a single consistent narrative.

Luke prefaces his account of the birth of Jesus with the story of the annunciation to Zacharias regarding the coming birth of John the Baptist, the annunciation to Mary, the visit of Mary to Elizabeth, the magnificent hymn of praise (the "Magnificat") which Mary uttered in response to the greeting of Elizabeth, and the prophecy of Zacharias (the "Benedictus") at the time of the birth of his son John. (Compare Mary's song, in Luke 1:46-55, with the song of Hannah, 1 Sam. 2:1-10.)

To Luke we are indebted for the whole of the vivid and beautiful picture of the circumstances under which Jesus was born. The former residence of Mary and Joseph at Nazareth; the journey to Bethlehem for enrollment and taxation; the crowded inn and the retreat to the stable, where, amid the rudest surroundings and in the friendly presence of simple shepherds, Jesus was born—this is the picture which all the world calls to mind when the birth of Jesus is mentioned. It is Luke's picture. There is no earthly splendor there. There were heavenly lights in the field and anthems from the heavenly hosts, but there were no gifts or tribute or wise men of the east. Only shepherds and the vision, which led them to the stable and the manger where the new-born child lay.

It is not a question of harmonizing the pictures presented by Luke and Matthew. It can easily be done, if it must be done, though to a candid reader of the two accounts it would scarcely seem that the scene which Luke depicts is the one which Matthew is trying to describe. But there is not a shred of either story or a glimpse of either picture which we can afford to lose. The greatest figure of all ages beginning in a manger the life which he was to end upon a cross—what a light upon the contrast between true greatness and earthly glory. The beauty of mother's love, of helpless infancy, the sacred joy that comes with the giving of a new life. The adoration of the shepherds, not less welcome and significant than the acclamations of the heavenly host, foreshadowing the reception which the Master was to receive from the simple people. These scenes are a permanent and priceless possession of the Christian world.

HOW FINDING CHRIST CHANGES THE LIFE.—Matt. 13:44-46.

(Consecration Meeting.)

INTRODUCTORY.

As editor of the Endeavor department in another of our great papers for the past eight years the writer has had delightful fellowship with thousands of choice young spirits in all parts of the world. From nearly every American state, from China, Japan, India, Africa and the islands of the sea have come letters expressing deep interest in these Bible studies. We dare to hope multitudes of these friends will continue their helpful, reciprocal relations with us through this new medium of communication. With keen anticipations of delight we contemplate coming into touch with the myriads of Endeavorers to whom this column is already greatly endeared through the capable ministries of Bro. H. A. Denton and his predecessors. Any additional help we can render our readers through personal correspondence or otherwise will be gladly accorded. We shall welcome suggestions and contributions that will aid in this department's becoming a real power under God unto inspiration, salvation and sanctification.

Whatever be the theme, we trust Christ may always be as conspicuous in the study as is the fire in the heart of the gem; that whatever variations there may be from the old standards in the interpretations, our hearts may be warmed by the consciousness of the Father's love manifest there even as they are cheered by the recognition of the familiar strains of an old song among the measures of strange melodies.

With an earnest prayer that it may contribute to our growth in grace and the knowledge of Jesus, to our seeking more earnestly after glory and honor and immortality, to our attainment of higher Christian character and ultimately our coronation at the right hand of the Father in heaven, we begin our exposition of the New Year's Topics.

Paul's "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" as soon as he recognized at the right hand of the Majesty on high the coronated victim of the cross, is a philosophical explanation of his change from the "chief of sinners" to the greatest of the apostles. In doing his will rather than in contemplative adoration even will we find ourselves changing into his likeness and from glory to glory.

Surely as God has given us bodies with tendencies toward self-healing when injured, he has given us spirits with tendencies to become like the better presences. Finding Christ and steadily contemplating him institute spiritual processes making us more like him in character, yes, and even in appearance—our hearts are purer, our loves more universal and helpful, our eyes and all the countenance more chaste and spirituelle.

It is gratifying to find Christ enshrined in the world's best literature and art, but more so to find him feeding the hungry and healing the sick; to see the multitudes throwing their garments before him and hailing him as King, but more so to find him on the cross proving his love for those who loved him not; to find him the beloved guest in Martha and Mary's home, but more so as the lone and silent tenant of Joseph's new tomb; to find him after celestial heraldry in the manger at Bethlehem, but more so to contemplate his coming again on clouds of glory and all the angels with him gathering into heavenly mansions all who have purified themselves in the blood of the Lamb; to hear him say, "I must be about my Father's business," but more so—"I have finished the work thou hast given me to do."

To find in Christ, the swordless founder of a mightier empire than those wonder-compelling creations of Alexander, Cæsar, and Charlemagne, may lend inspiration to an orator or historian to embellish a peroration or a page, but this discovery will never enable the world to contemplate the future with such tranquil assurance nor to approach Jordan's chill tides with such fearlessness as to find in him one who receiveth sinners, who is full of mercy and love, an Intercessor and a Savior.

Finding Jesus to be Christ changes our lives through recognition of new and imperial relationships we sustain to him. He is our King and we must obey him rather than ourselves or all others; our Judge, and his favor means more than man's; our Resurrection, and, if we wear immortelle, he bestows the wreath; our Glory, and if our eternity be among the blest hosts of heaven rather than amidst lurid destruction from the presence of God and the angels, it is through the discipline of his word. Therefore in all things we give him pre-eminence and bring our lives into conformity to his will.

Levi's occupation proves his love for wealth. But in Christ he found a revelation of riches beside which all others seemed worthless. No matter what the bent of one's mind or affections, he no sooner discovers Christ than he finds in him illimitable fullness of that which he only dared hope possess himself in small part. And the quality of that which he finds in Christ is of the best of every sort and as much more desirable than that he formerly sought as eternal life is better than mere multiplicity of years. Thus finding Christ changes our quest from shadows to substance, our ideals from lower to the noblest forms, our conduct from earthly to heavenly standards, our loyalty from man to God, our lives from temporal to eternal essence.

Finding Christ is not so much a blessing as an opportunity. After finding the pearl of great price the merchant could have pursued his way with his relations to the commercial world unchanged. It was making the most of his opportunity, possessing himself of that particular pearl, that enriched and immortalized him. The story does not tell how many others had seen and admired and inquired the cost of the precious pearl and even longed for its possession. History is not concerned with our emotions but with our deeds. So myriads find Christ, some to admire him, others to fear and tremble, many to even hope in him, but the history of judgment day will show that only they who gave up all that was necessary to possess themselves of the Pearl of Great Price, and whose lives are directed by it as truly as was ancient holy priesthood by the lights flashing on the ephod from Urim and Thummim, are enriched and immortalized by their discovery.

Open Letter to J. H. Garrison.

Dear Brother Garrison: At our ministerial meeting last week, held at Roff, I. T., twelve of our twenty-eight preachers of Indian Territory were present. A paper on "The Holy Spirit" was read and discussed. Remembering the issue between yourself and Professor McGarvey as to whether or not we should pray for the Holy Spirit to be given us, I asked the following two questions:

1. Do you understand that under the Christian dispensation the Holy Spirit is promised to the children of God, to be given (or imparted) by God upon our obedience toward God, and that we shall enjoy the presence and comfort and guidance of the Holy Spirit in proportion to a life of obedience to God's commands, actuated by our love for God, and reverence for and loyalty to his word? Or do you understand that we are to receive the Holy Spirit by prayer, it being understood that our prayers are to be backed up by a godly life?

In other words, should Christians in this Christian age, pray for the Holy Spirit, or should they simply obey the Gospel and walk in the commandments trusting to God to give the Spirit according to promise? This last sentence I added verbally by way of amplification that if possible the point at issue might be understood. Ten of twelve preachers present wrote down the questions and handed in written answers the afternoon of the same day.

I explained that I wanted their individual and independent answers. Hence, requested them to not discuss the matter until after the answers were in. Of the eight answers, two took your view, or at least took the position that we should pray for the Holy Spirit to be given us.

Five took the opposite view, that is, that we should not pray for the Holy Spirit to be given, while three seemed to have failed to understand the point at issue, and answered as if the question were relative to the subject of prayer in general and the reception or possession of the Holy Spirit. I consider this one of the most vital questions that has been discussed in any of our papers for many months. Evidently we either should or should not pray for the Holy Spirit.

A mistake here with regard to either of the alternatives can not be otherwise than very serious. I confess that I am on Prof. McGarvey's side of the issue. I reached this conclusion several years ago as a result of an independent study of the subject. I wrote an article setting forth that it is both unscriptural, unreasonable and inconsistent to pray for the Holy Spirit to be given in this age. I believe we may pray God to help us to so live that we shall not grieve the Holy Spirit, nor drive him from us, and that we might so love, honor and serve God that he might through his Spirit, that dwells in us, work out our own salvation, and use us in saving the world.

But I am not dogmatic. I am open to conviction. I am anxious to know my duty and God's will as respects this vitally important matter. It is the Spirit that vitalizes the church or "body of Christ," and whom God sent in answer to Christ's prayer (John 14:16; Acts 2:33)—not to remain for a little while and then leave, as was the case with Christ, but to "abide" with us and in us, as our "Teacher," "Comforter," "Guide," by whom we are "led," "live" and "walk."

I believe you are in error, Brother Garrison, and very seriously so, as respects this issue, but my believing it does not make it so. If you are right, you could do no greater work, I am sure, than to lead this great brotherhood to see and know the truth respecting this matter. I am confident the vast majority, to say the least, of our preachers and laymen, who think for themselves, are opposed to your view, and hence, are in error, if your view is the correct one.

Fraternally,
S. R. Hawkins.

South McAlester, I. T.

[Replying to the above "open letter," which space compels us to do in briefest form, we would say:

1. Brother Hawkins' question to the preachers was very misleading. To put "a life of obedience to God's commands" in contrast with prayer for the Spirit of God, as if the two could be separated, is a very misleading way of stating the question. Every life of obedience to God's commands involves prayer for the Spirit. We pray for what we desire. Every one who hungers and thirsts for God, prays for the Holy Spirit, in some form or other, and every act of self-denial and of obedience to God is but the outward expression of that prayer. The answers to the question, therefore, would not indicate how these brethren stood on the point at issue.

2. Brother Hawkins is right, certainly, in regarding this as a "most vital question." It is vital because, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." It is vital because no man who does not open his soul for the indwelling of the divine Spirit, by faith and obedience and prayer, can receive the divine Guest or be anointed by him for Christian service. To possess the Spirit and to be "filled with the Spirit" are not the same thing. We are sorry, therefore, that one of our ministers can be so far astray in his religious thinking as to argue that "it is both unscriptural, unreasonable, and inconsistent to pray for the Holy Spirit to be given in this age." The hopeful feature, however, is that his mind is open to conviction. That is sure to come. Jesus prayed for the Holy Spirit at his baptism (Luke 3:21, 22) and as we quote his example in baptism, why not follow his example in praying for the Spirit? The fact that the Holy Spirit has been given to the church to abide forever, does not imply that he dwells in our individual hearts, except as we open our hearts to him and invite him in.

What we need to do is to sit down at the feet of Christ and his apostles, once more, and give this whole subject a careful, prayerful, and diligent study, seeking meanwhile the guidance of that Spirit who is still ready to lead humble and inquiring souls into all truth.—Editor.]

Did Not Know He Was Bishop.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I notice in a recent issue of your paper that the Editor of the Easy Chair during his trip east "paid his respects to Bishop Power" of the national capital. I have had the pleasure of hearing F. D. Power, but I never knew before that he was one of our bishops. I am waiting now to learn who is pope and then I'll be ready to quit.

La Fayette, Ind. Sam. J. Ellis.

[We are surprised that any one associated with the churches of this Reformation should be ignorant of the fact that we have bishops. Certainly there were bishops and deacons in the churches of apostolic times, and if we have not restored that feature of primitive Christianity we are falling short of our duty. Bro. F. D. Power, of Washington, is a strictly New Testament bishop, as is also Bro. B. B. Tyler, of Denver, and every other faithful and competent pastor who, by the selection of his church, is acting as spiritual overseer and feeder of the flock. Alexander Campbell used to refer to such men as "bishops" by way of indicating his conception of the New Testament bishop, and we had something of the same thought in our mind. We draw the line on popes, however! Now and then some one has aspired to that office among us, but we are too free and independent a people to take to that sort of thing. We omit the pope.—Editor.]

About Giving the Invitation.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Our old preachers formed the custom of giving the invitation after every sermon. Do you think such a rule is practical now? Some themes do not admit of, or rather prepare the way for, an invitation. I preached lately to a small audience on "The Eldership," and an invitation to sinners hardly seemed a natural conclusion to the sermon. In many of our small village or country churches few confessions are taken except at revivals. What then is liable to be the effect upon the preacher and people who for eleven months in a year give and hear invitations that elicit no response? Will not the invitation degenerate into a mere form?

Pickering, Mo. O. J. Bulfin.

[Each preacher must be the judge as to the propriety of extending an invitation at the close of his sermon. If none but Christians are present, of course the invitation need not be given. The rule of extending the invitation at the close of the sermon, however, is a good one. It is not always the sermon that draws people to confess Christ. Sometimes they go forward to confess Christ in spite of the sermon! The habit of expecting people to unite with the church during only one month in the year, and that during a revival, ought to be broken up. A vital, soul-winning sermon will prevent the invitation from becoming formal.—Editor.]

The Universal Elements of the Christian Religion, by President Charles Cuthbert Hall. The Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25 net.

This is a book that should be of unusual interest to all our readers and to all serious students of religious phenomena. The author's aim, so admirably achieved, is not to advocate a doctrine, but to interpret the signs of the times. That things religious no longer "continue as they were from the beginning," that fundamental reconstructions suggestive of still greater changes are taking place, no thoughtful mind can fail to observe. "I have tried," says Dr. Hall, "to discover the deeper tendency of the religious thinking of our time, wherein the critical movement, the modern view of the Bible, the declining interest in sectarianism, the increased cosmopolitanism, and the larger conceptions of world-Christianization are powerful elements." The Christianization of the world, the church's duty, is not the reproduction in the east of the sects of the west; it is not interdenominational comity; it is not the division of the east into spheres of denominational activity and influence. The cosmopolitanism of Christ shows "no sects, no ecclesiastical polities, no dogmatic systems." It means "to make disciples for him of all the nations," the "bringing of a world to himself," and the "giving of himself, the Living Truth, to the world," whose Light he is. It means the lifting up of the oriental spirit, the breathing anew of the oriental hope, the interpretation and consummation of the yearnings of non-Christian faiths though the absolute revelation of God in Jesus Christ. It means the ultimate development of an oriental type of Christianity, wherein the universal elements of the Christian religion shall localize themselves in terms of thought and modes of practice adapted to the eastern conceptions of life. This in turn shall re-act upon the west, and thus shall the world have "a more complete and full-orbed interpretation of Christianity."

To the Christianization of the world the post-reformation sectarian movements have contributed a "liberalization of religious thinking, a distribution of authority, a counteraction of erroneous accent on particular beliefs, a humanizing of Christianity, and its restoration to the hands of the common people." Having made these the permanent possessions of every Christian the sectarian movements have served their end and must in turn give way to a re-interpretation of the idea of the church that shall in larger measure satisfy the religious consciousness of the present.

Among other agencies the modern critical movement has contributed directly to present conditions "the recognition of Revelation as progressive, a profounder sense of the nature and evidence of inspiration," and "an enriched conception of the Person of Christ"; while indirectly it has given an "increasing sense of brotherhood in the truth, an enlarged conception of the missionary function, a diviner estimate of the meaning and value of the world, and a broader understanding of the immanence of God and the universal activity of his Spirit." Such conditions demand an ideal of the Christian Church on larger and broader lines than those of the past.

How shall this larger and broader Church be constructed so as to satisfy the needs of the present? The author answers, by a return to the apostolic theology, whose central figure is that of "Christ crucified and risen, the Savior of the world," by a return to "the evangelical tenderness and simplicity that are in Christ." This "re-interpretation of the idea of the Church on grander and simpler lines" is to be none other than a recovery "in its original power and simplicity of that vision of Christ which, as a matter of plain, historic fact, was the foundation of the Church and the making of Christianity." This larger Church of Christ shall be broad enough to take up into itself "the ideals of a regenerated Orientalism" and shall assimilate them with the truth found "in the essence of all western ideals."

Rational Living, by Henry Churchill King, Ph. D., of Oberlin College. The MacMillan Co., New York. $1.25 net.

President King presents here and emphasizes the following four facts recognized by recent scientific psychology, viz.: The complexity of life, the unity of man, the supreme significance of will and action in this unity, and the concreteness of the real. In each case the psychological implications of these facts are very clearly set forth and followed by most important deductions for practical living. Thus life, personality and the growth and development of character are placed upon a scientific basis and are no longer to be regarded as chance products. The book's distinctive aim is to make generally available for practical living the most valuable suggestions afforded by scientific psychology. While it is not written particularly for the specialist, yet it is not without much of interest to him. This application of psychology to life places all readers under obligations to President King.

The International Quarterly. Fox, Duffield & Company. New York.

Though it makes no popular appeal, this periodical is one of great value to those who are interested in a wide outlook upon affairs, for by means of its editorial advisory board it is able to secure the best experts abroad to write on subjects that may be of special interest at any particular time to readers in this country. In the latest number there are but two foreign contributors, but they are specialists in their subjects, and what they have to say about the Supremacy of Greek Art and the Mythologies of the Indians, is for us to heed. On practical questions before the American people at the present day, "Public Ownership in New York," "The Chicago Traction Question," "The Concentration of Financial Power," "The Next Step in Life Insurance," are discussed by men who have given special study to these subjects. Essays of a more literary character are those on "The Vicar of Morwenston," "The Later Miracle Plays of England," and "The Worlds of Salimbene."

The Altar At Mother's Knee.

By Charles L. Mayberry.

At the far-away dawn of my childhood's morn,
'Twas perhaps at the age of three,
I found the caress I so tenderly sought,
I was taught a prayer I have never forgot,
From the altar at mother's knee.

Amid childish joys and mirthful romps,
Over woodland, vale and lea;
No brighter visions before me start,
No thought more dear to my youthful heart,
Than the altar at mother's knee.

As childhood merged into years more mature,
From its haunts I was still not free;
When in dire dismay or deep despair,
I would steal to this solace and whisper a prayer,
This altar at mother's knee.

As the fleeting years bade me quit the shore,
And launch upon life's troubled sea,
While stemming the tide, the waves beating high,
Came a sweet recollection of days gone by,
And the altar at mother's knee.

When conflicts assailed me from right and from left
And shipwreck my lot seemed to be,
A slight retrospection dispersed all my gloom,
And filled me with visions of childhood and home,
And the altar at mother's knee.

When pressed by the tempter, till ready to yield,
And err from the straight, narrow way,
A heaven-sent messenger beckoned me on,
And pointed me back to the way I had learned
From the altar at mother's knee.

When tottering and bowed 'neath the burden of years,
Near the close of my dark, evil day,
My sight dim and treacherous, my voice weak and low,
I hear, though but faintly, that sweet voice of yore
From the altar at mother's knee.

Alas! When affliction has smitten me low,
I succumb, nevermore to be free,
But a soft, gentle whisper breathes in my ear,
Saying, "Christ is your shepherd, be of good cheer,"
From the altar at mother's knee.

The Advance Society.

J. BRECKINRIDGE ELLIS.

Another year just ahead of us! What shall we do with it? As far as it goes, it is just as much yours as mine. You own just as much of it as the richest millionaire on earth. I, for one, am determined to enjoy it as much as the lucky individual just referred to. But I wonder if he is really a lucky person? Would you like to be the richest man in the world? I would. But I couldn't hold the job very long. There are so many things that one wants to spend his money for! All he needs is money to spend. If the richest man in the world opened his eyes and saw the foreign and home missionary societies and the church extension and ministerial relief organizations struggling and fighting to keep abreast of the times, how could he help getting rid of his money? And when he heard about orphans without homes, and missionaries who do not depend upon organizations but who go forth alone—but not alone since God is with them—could he stay the richest man in the world? I couldn't. So I'd be right where I began. So let's be satisfied!

There's one thing: because we are not rich, some of us feel that we can't do much for the world. I'm glad I'm not that way. One reason I can go around and look the world in the eye and feel at home almost anywhere—yes, even in Arkansas—is because the world owes me a debt. The debt is this: that I am trying, in my way, to help it, and am helping it. This isn't said because I want to boast and brag, although, of course, it's pleasant to boast if you can get somebody to listen to you. But all this is said to induce you to feel the same way. Aren't you helping the world, too? Here is this orphan of the Advance Society; haven't you sent something toward his support? Here's our missionary, the young girl who left her mother and brother and all home ties to tell about our Savior, over in China. Haven't you sent something to keep her at her post? Then the world owes you a debt and you ought to be on good terms with it; for, after all, the debt is just one of love.

Do you ever feel, when you are with rich people, that you ought to take up less room than when you are at home—observe that I take for granted you are not rich; not so much because you are reading a religious newspaper as for the sake of my argument. Well, I will tell you how I feel when taking my dinner de luxe off of their snowy damasks; I am thinking—"How can you be rich!" Not that I mean how could they have the brains and industry to accumulate their money, but how can they withhold it from the needy, the miserably needy, the destitute, the starving. How can they be rich! They might say—in fact, they do say—"We are not going to be imposed on; we don't know of cases that are really worthy." Wonder how they got so old without finding them? I've lived in little towns all my life, little and rather slow (my apologies to Plattsburg), where my field of vision was rather limited. But worthy cases were always coming to my notice; in fact, they crowded upon me. They hunted me. And if they don't find you, I'm sure it isn't my fault. I've told you about Charlie and Drusie. I ask God's richest blessings upon all of you who have helped in their cause. And I ask his most saving blessing upon those who haven't; perhaps they need the blessing most.

Now, have any of you heard of a home for Charlie? Or have any of you thought of a solution to our difficulty? He is too old for the Orphan Home. Being crippled, he can't make his own living until he has some sort of a practical education. Don't cast this problem from you. It belongs to you. I want you to have his trouble on your mind and on your heart. Write to me about it. What can be done? I wrote to President Johnson of the Kimberlin School of Evangelists, hoping to find Charlie a home there where he could go to school and work some way—as clerk in the mailing department, for instance. At first President Johnson was inclined to consent; then he said, and I think very properly, that as his college was only for young men who intended to become ministers, it would not be right to use people's money to help one who had no such intention. So I wrote to Charlie about it.

PLAYING WITH THE KITTENS.

Perhaps you would like to hear from our orphan. Here is his letter from St. Louis:

"Thanksgiving will be here to-morrow, and I hope you will have lots of turkey." (This was written, you understand, in November.) "I hope you like your new home in Arkansas all right." (It is delightful.) "I received your letter day-before-yesterday and one from Terrell Marshall the same morning. (Terrell is the boy of the same age whose society Charlie enjoyed so much on his visit last summer.) "I got out of bed Sunday. I had been sick all week. I hope you arrived all right at Bentonville." (We arrived all right, the trouble was getting here.) "It snowed here a little this morning but you can't tell it now." (It is strange to hear about snow, down here in this climate! I expect I'll forget what snow looks like if I ive here long enough.) "It is turning cold." (You can trust Missouri to do that!) "I am glad you met Terrell Marshall and his mother on the street just before you left Plattsburg. I have never had any thoughts about being a preacher, but I think I would rather be a typewriter or a stenographer.

am getting along in school all right so far. I have fun in different ways. I have the time out of school-hours to read and most of Saturday. This leaves me well and I hope it finds you the same." (I am the same. Charlie is quite right to stick to the idea of being a business man. He has had that intention for several years. I should have liked for him to be a preacher, if he had felt called to that life; but I think a person must feel compelled to preach, to become the right kind of a preacher. In a word, I believe it would be better for the world if there were no preachers in it except those who feel that they can be nothing else. When a person is aware of a talent for public speaking, and feels that he can make a success as a preacher, or lawyer, or teacher, or lecturer, and hardly knows which line to take up, it's a great mistake when he decides to preach. Religion isn't business, or making a living, or showing off, or having a position in the world. It isn't owning a deep, full voice. It isn't knowing how to organize. It is the breath of the soul. The very breath of the soul should cry out, "I must preach!" That's what I think about it. As for me, I am not a preacher, although, in spite of everything I've said, I received a letter yesterday addressed "Rev." That's for Reverend, a word meaning "deserving reverence." Which I do not. If you must call me something, spell it "Reverent." (Which I hope I am.)

THE ANGELS AND THE SHEPHERDS.

Here comes a note, just a few lines, and with it a ten-dollar bill. Reader, I want you to stop and think about that; a ten-dollar-bill! Did you ever own that much at one time? You laugh and say, "Ha! ha!" Did you ever invest that much at one time in the cause of one helpless orphan? I thought you'd stop saying "Ha! ha!" pretty soon! This sender who did not care to have his name given is from Missouri where so many good things come from, for instance, J. B. E. He says: "Enclosed find ten dollars which please apply toward Charlie's education. You might start a fund calling it 'Charlie's Educational Fund,' or something like that, keeping it distinct from the other expenses, and call for contributions. I inclose a card for your receipt." (Which I receipted. Now, members and readers of the Av. S. what do you think of this plan? Do you want Charlie educated? And do you want to help in his education, so that you can feel for all time, that whatever he becomes in life will be owing to you? Did you ever have such a chance before to do so much good for one who can't possibly get educated unless he is assisted? I feel he will pay us back by a good life of usefulness and contentment. I sent Charlie a book for a Christmas present; I sent Drusie one, too, They were "Stork's Nest' and "Adnah." I wrote both of them. They are fine, very interesting and elevated in style. I don't see how I ever wrote them. "Stork's Nest" has four handsome illustrations. It is my newest story. I hope Charlie may enjoy it as much as I did.)

Now you may be sure I rejoiced to receive the ten-dollar bill and the good suggestion. But "I want to say to you," as the preachers begin (just as if anybody could stop them) that I took just as much delight in the following letter, from Opal Johnson, Cotulla, Texas: "I am a little girl ten years old. My mamma died when I was a baby. I feel so sorry for Charlie because he has no good papa to care for him, like I have. I send 50 cents for him." (I want the reader to notice how Opal came into possession of this half-dollar.) "I carried milk for Aunty to a neighbor's. I hope Charlie is a nice boy. I don't like rude and rough boys." (I think there are no more troublesome animals, except girls.) "I have no brother or sister. Aunty sends 50 cents for Drusie, and she wishes she could send more. We think our missionary must be a brave, good girl." (And I am sure you are!)

My plans for our department are not quite perfected. There is some talk of enlarging the Family and Home Department. I do not know if our department will be made larger or not. I can tell you next week. I have a story to be published during 1906. It will run a good while before it sits down to rest. I have a very interesting letter from Drusie for next week. I am sending her another $5 from you (and from me) this very day. New Honor List: Bertha Beesley, Huff, Mo., (28th quarter); Nannie D. Chambers, Richwood, Ky., (27th and 28th quarters); Grace Everest, Oklahoma, Okla. (fourth quarter); Ruth Sampsel, Warrensburg, Mo. (11th and 12th quarters).

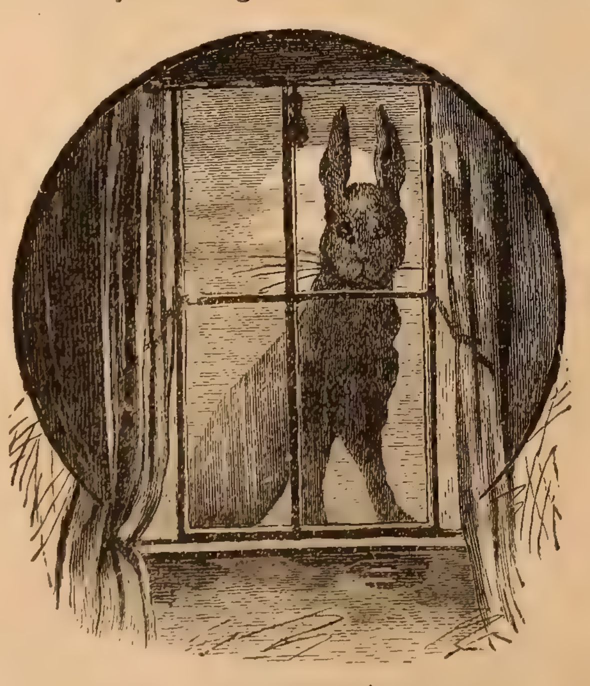
Bunny Cotton.

"Oh, my, what a funny, ridic'lous name—Bunny Cotton!" cried Midget.

"Well, Bunny Cotton was a 'funny, ridic'lous' thing. She ought to have been named Funny Cotton!" said Uncle Jack. "She always dressed in something snow-white, and soft as down."

"Not when she played every day? She didn't wear white dresses then, I s'pose?"

"Always! I never saw her in anything else. And they didn't get soiled either; but that was because she washed them so often—every day, and sometimes twice a day."



LET ME IN!

"Washed 'em herself—twice a day? Oh, my!"

"With her little pink tongue—"

"With her little pink tongue, oh, Bunny Cotton! She was a bunny rabbit!"

"Yes, Midge, now you have been introduced. She was a little Angora rabbit with the longest, silkiest, softest hair. Her eyes were like little pink jewels, and her tail was just a tuft of wool, that's all. Now I will tell you the story about her.

"Once upon a time, Bunny Cotton had some little pink babies, more like tiny, tiny pigs than anything else. Now mother bunnies always make little cosey nests for their babies, usually deep down in the hay. But poor little Bunny Cotton happened to be in a big, empty room where there wasn't a wisp of hay—nothing but a pile of boards and a bare floor. What do you suppose the tender little mother did, Midge?"

"Oh, I don't know, Uncle Jack; I just wonder!"

"I went to see her one day, and oh, such a Bunny Cotton! She was all shorn of her beautiful white dress. She was quite bare in spots, and torn and shaggy everywhere else, and there were tiny drops of blood here and there. She had pulled out her pretty, soft wool, bit by bit, to line her babies' nest. It was a beautiful, soft, white nest for them, but oh, what a Bunny Cotton was left!"

Midget burrowed her golden head in Uncle Jack's sleeve and kept quite still a moment. Then she sat up very straight.

"Dear little Bunny Cotton—I love her," she said softly.

A Memory Picture.

By Mrs. E. W. Jones.

While today in looking backward
  Over memory's pages true,
I have found some pleasant pictures,
  One, I would unfold to you.

Once into my humble dwelling
  Came a stranger, plainly clad,
Came for rest and entertainment,
  And I gave him what I had.

Oh, how meager was the favor
  That my willing hands bestowed;
But how lasting was the blessing
  That into my earth-life flowed!

His words were like an inspiration,
  Lifting me from earth away
To the mount of holy vision,
  Where I tasted heavenly day.

Of the many friends of Jesus
  I have tried to entertain,
None appeared so near to heaven,
  Few so free from earthly stain.

Christians, let us be more faithful,
  Though we oft must sow in tears,
Let us build more stately mansions—
  Build for heaven's eternal years.

Looking Toward Home.

MILO ATKINSON.

I slept and dreamed. It was evening time, the time between the day and the night. Afar in the west the lingering light formed a fitting canvas for a picture even more radiant than that which did appear. I saw a cottage, vineclad, and planted in the midst of a garden of roses, whose fragrance arose like love's sweet incense on the dewy air, for the garden was kept by hands of one that loved another. Before that humble cot sat two, an old man and his wife. By his side was his dinner pail, for he was home from work. On their knees was a book, and the book was open. The place where the book was open must have been this, "Let not your heart be troubled. . . . In my Father's house are many mansions. . . . I go to prepare a place for you." Yes, this was the place, for on their faces was the quiet light of peace and joy and holy contentment, and they were looking toward the sunset. I looked with them to the west, and behold, the glittering spires and dazzling domes of the Holy City, the new Jerusalem. They were looking toward home. No voice was heard, but I awoke, and in my heart was the prayer that though other visions of youth might fade, this vision in the sacred chamber of my soul might grow brighter and brighter with the perfect day.

"The Meeting of the Board."

The Hialo church board met as usual.

Minutes of last meeting read and there being no objection they were approved.

Chair called for reports of committees, in their order which came as follows:

Committee on insurance has nothing to report.

Committee on raising minister's salary reports that they could not agree as to plans of work, and therefore there is nothing to report.

Committee on "protracted meeting" reports they could not agree on the night to meet and formulate plans and have nothing to report.

Committee on "church repairs" have to report that they could not agree on nature of repairs needed and beg to ask to be discharged.

Committee on visiting the sick have to report that there are a number of sick in the town, but that owing to press of business none of the committee has visited any of the sick.

Brother Stegall, committee of one on investigating amount of salary past due to minister, reports that he is disgusted. He asked a brother how much he would pay and was told he wasn't able to pay anything. Committee did nothing more and asks to be relieved from this duty.

Committee on janitor reports that there is no funds to pay the janitor, and it has done nothing in that direction and would like to be relieved of further duty.

Committee on "The One Tenth" movement, looking toward urging the membership to pay one-tenth of their prosperity, reports that you must remember that the time the one-tenth was required was when God was assisting his people in their human affairs and since God has withdrawn all his assistance and we are left to "root hog or die" he can not expect so much from us. This committee urges that its number be increased so the field can be well covered as there are a few weak-minded sisters and brothers who are about to separate themselves from one-tenth of their income and these must be shown the error of their way.

Committee on church record has to report that no records have ever been deemed necessary in this church and we mildly suggest to the present minister that this matter be handled with gloves and no stir be made in this direction. It will cost money to put the records in shape and it is a reflection on the old timers to hint that memroy is not sufficient as record. We have ten old timers in the organization who can well recollect just who belongs and who does not belong to the church. This committee asks that its number be enlarged to eight.

Committee on "state work" has to report that it has seen no place for a move. There are several places where work should be done but we don't know where these places are—that is, we don't know officially as a committee, and hence have nothing to report.

Committee on "general ways and means" has to report that nothing has been done as yet.

Committee on "music" has to report that we don't want NO MUSIC.

Religion That Doesn't Count.

"Come out to the meeting tonight, Cal, won't you?" I said as we two met on our way home to dinner.

"Really, I'd like to, but the baby isn't well enough to bring out, and I don't want to leave my wife alone."

As he gave his excuse there came to my mind the time, less than a month before, when he joined me on a trolley car, coming from a lodge meeting in a neighboring city at ten o'clock at night. How about the baby then?

But all I said was, "You are a member of the church, so come out to the union service on Sunday morning. We have a good evangelist." He didn't promise, but as we parted at the corner he said, "You know, Ray, religion never did strike me very hard."

Yes, I knew. At college he was a nomina

DR. PRICE'S
Cream Baking Powder

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder adds to the healthfulness of all risen flour-foods, and makes the food lighter, sweeter, finer-flavored, more delicious.

It is worth while to exercise care in purchasing baking powder to see that you get the kind that makes the food more wholesome and at the same time more palatable.

PRICE BAKING POWDER CO.

NOTE.—There are many mixtures, made in imitation of baking powder, which it is prudent to avoid. They are lower in price than pure powders, but they are made from alum. Alum in food is poisonous.

Christian; he attended the Young Men's Christian Association receptions, but not the prayer meeting; he always had time to get off with the boys, but was "too busy to take up Bible study."

"Religion never did strike me very hard." I pondered over it on my walk home. He had entered business immediately after leaving college, and because the other stores in that seaside town kept open on Sunday, he followed suit. Later he was elected a director of the local Young Men's Christian Association, and accepted for "business reasons," that was all.

When the stores did close on Sunday, he would shoulder his gun and get far from the sound of the Sunday church bells.

Once he was urged to help in breaking up Sunday baseball, for he had organized one of the ball teams, and his influence was great. But he refused, because "it would be no use."

Truly "religion never did strike him very hard." He is dead timber in the church of his choice; a drag to the chariot of Zion; a weight to his fellow church members.

The saddest part of it is that this is not fiction; he is a real young man.—Frank S. Drew.

It "Showed 'Em."

Despite the fact that northern New England is a stronghold of temperance, if not of prohibition, temperance lecturers sometimes go there and encourage the faithful. One such, speaking in Keene, N. H., reminded his hearers of the story of Dives and Lazarus. The lecturer pointed out how when Dives was in Hades he did not ask for beer or wine or liquor, but for one drop of water.

"Now, my friends," said the lecturer, "what does that show us?"

A voice from the back of the hall instantly replied: "It shows us where your temperance people go."

The Bite of the Pretty Girl.

Just at this moment we do not recall the exact number of billions of bacteria Prof. Miller says are to be found in the mouth of a pretty girl—either twenty-seven or thirty-seven, a few billions more or less do not matter—but we are tremendously exercised over his solemn assurance that a pretty girl's bite is more dangerous than the bite of a serpent, no matter what serpent. Now we begin to understand what Dr. Watts meant when he said, "Let dogs delight to bark and bite," though we have an idea that if a pretty girl had offered to bite him good old Isaac would have come up to the scratch like a typical Christian martyr and shouted for more. We gather from the professor's phraseology that the bite of a homely girl is not so dangerous as the bite of a pretty girl or a serpent—it cannot afford to be. Thus we see the noble workings of the law of compensation, and thus we learn how "nature is subdued to what it works in." Meanwhile those of us who never like to offend a lady will go on acquiring bacteria by the billion, and giving agreeable young women the preference over serpents. Yet it should be understood that no true lady will bite a perfect gent save in the way of self-defense and mistaken kindness.—Chicago Post.
